(d) The provisions of this Code section shall not be deemed to affect any of the laws, in whole or in part, that may be applicable to the withholding or withdrawal of medical or health care treatment, including, but not limited to, laws related to a living will, a durable power of attorney for health care, an advance directive for health care, or a written order not to resuscitate. (Code 1981, § 16-5-5, enacted by Ga. L. 1994, p. 1370, § 1; Ga. L. 2007, p. 133, § 5/HB 24.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2007, p. 133, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "(a) The General Assembly has long recognized the right of the individual to control all aspects of his or her personal care and medical treatment, including the right to insist upon medical treatment, decline medical treatment, or direct that medical treatment be withdrawn. In order to secure these rights, the General Assembly has adopted and amended statutes recognizing the living will and health care agency and provided statutory forms for both documents.

"(b) The General Assembly has determined that the statutory forms for the living will and durable power of attorney for health care are confusing and inconsistent and that the statutes providing for the living will and health care agency contain conflicting concepts, inconsistent and out-of-date terminology, and confusing and inconsistent requirements for execution. In addition, there is a commendable trend among the states to combine the concepts of the living will and health care agency into a single legal document.

"(c) The General Assembly recognizes that a significant number of individuals representing the academic, medical, legislative, and legal communities, state officials, ethics scholars, and advocacy groups worked together to develop the advance directive for health care contained in this Act, and the collective intent was to create a form that uses understandable and everyday language in order to encourage more citizens of this state to execute advance directives for health care.

"(d) The General Assembly finds that the clear expression of an individual's decisions regarding health care, whether made by the individual or an agent appointed by the individual, is of critical importance not only to citizens but also to the health care and legal communities, third parties, and families. In furtherance of these purposes, the General Assembly enacts a new Chapter 32 of Title 31, setting forth general principles governing the expression of decisions regarding health care and the appointment of a health care agent, as well as a form of advance directive for health care."

Execution of defendant was not assisted suicide. — Fact that the defendant agreed with the jury's determination that defendant's crimes deserved death did not mean that defendant's execution would constitute assisted suicide. Colwell v. State, 273 Ga. 634, 544 S.E.2d 120 (2001), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 972, 122 S. Ct. 394, 151 L. Ed. 2d 298 (2001).

Constitutionality of assault and battery

16-5-20. Simple assault.

(a) A person commits the offense of simple assault when he or she either:

- (1) Attempts to commit a violent injury to the person of another; or
- (2) Commits an act which places another in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury.

(b) Except as provided in subsections (c) through (h) of this Code section, a person who commits the offense of simple assault shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

(c) Any person who commits the offense of simple assault in a public transit vehicle or station shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. For purposes of this Code section, "public transit vehicle" means a bus, van, or rail car used for the transportation of passengers within a system which receives a subsidy from tax revenues or is operated under a franchise contract with a county or municipality of this state.

(d) If the offense of simple assault is committed between past or present spouses, persons who are parents of the same child, parents and children, stepparents and stepchildren, foster parents and foster children, or other persons excluding siblings living or formerly living in the same household, the defendant shall be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. In no event shall this subsection be applicable to corporal punishment administered by a parent or guardian to a child or administered by a person acting in loco parentis.

(e) Any person who commits the offense of simple assault against a person who is 65 years of age or older shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature.

(f) Any person who commits the offense of simple assault against an employee of a public school system of this state while such employee is engaged in official duties or on school property shall, upon conviction of such offense, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. For purposes of this Code section, "school property" shall include public school buses and stops for public school buses as designated by local school boards of education.

(g) Any person who commits the offense of simple assault against a female who is pregnant at the time of the offense shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature.

(h) Nothing in this Code section shall be construed to permit the prosecution of:

(1) Any person for conduct relating to an abortion for which the consent of the pregnant woman, or person authorized by law to act on her behalf, has been obtained or for which such consent is implied by law;

(2) Any person for any medical treatment of the pregnant woman or her unborn child; or

(3) Any woman with respect to her unborn child.

For the purposes of this subsection, the term "unborn child" means a member of the species homo sapiens at any stage of development who is carried in the womb. ## JUDICIAL DECISIONS

ANALYSIS

JURY INSTRUCTION

General Consideration

Concurrent jurisdiction with federal labor legislation. — Even under situations involving the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq., the state has retained concurrent jurisdiction to enforce O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20 as it directly relates to the prevention of, or incitement to, immediate violence or to the prevention of the threat of immediate violence or violent injury. State v. Klinakis, 206 Ga. App. 318, 425 S.E.2d 665 (1992).

Simple assault defined. — Offense of simple assault is complete if there is such a demonstration of violence, coupled with an apparent ability to inflict injury so as to cause the person against whom it is directed reasonably to fear the injury unless the person retreats to secure that person's safety. Hise v. State, 127 Ga. App. 511, 194 S.E.2d 274 (1972); Hudson v. State, 135 Ga. App. 739, 218 S.E.2d 905 (1975).

Simple assault does not require physical contact with victim. Tuggle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 603, 244 S.E.2d 131 (1978).

Any attempt to do any unlawful act of violence injurious to another was included in former Code 1933, § 26-1401 (see now O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20). Williams v. State, 15 Ga. App. 306, 82 S.E. 938 (1914).

Assault is inchoate violence, with present means of carrying the violence into effect. The intention to do bodily harm is the essence of assault. Mullen v. State, 51 Ga. App. 385, 180 S.E. 521 (1935).

"Person". — State may present a surviving aggravated assault victim for view by the jurors, where, even though the victim does not testify, the victim's presence establishes that the victim is a "person" for purposes of proving the elements of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a). Perry v. State, 276 Ga. 836, 585 S.E.2d 614, rev'd, 276 Ga. 839, 584 S.E.2d 253 (2003).

"Commits an act." — When there was no evidence that defendant performed any act constituting a substantial step toward the commission of a battery, defendant could not be convicted of assault, as the evidence could not satisfy the element of "commits an act." In re C.S., 251 Ga. App. 411, 554 S.E.2d 558 (2001).

"Intent to commit injury" inconsistent with negligence. — Charge of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 based upon the "intent to commit injury" provisions of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1) requires a criminal intent that is fatally inconsistent with the negligence required by a charge of reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Reddick v. State, 264 Ga. App. 487, 591 S.E.2d 392 (2003).

Aggravated assault convictions were affirmed because the defendant accelerated toward officers standing in front of a road-block, forcing them to jump out of the way, and causing one to fall. Williams v. State, 270 Ga. App. 371, 606 S.E.2d 594 (2004).

Intention to commit unlawful act must exist. Woodruff v. Woodruff, 22 Ga. 237 (1857); Dorsey v. State, 108 Ga. 477, 34 S.E. 135 (1899).

Intent is question for jury. Thomas v. State, 99 Ga. 38, 26 S.E. 748 (1896); Robinson v. State, 118 Ga. 750, 45 S.E. 620 (1903).

Apparent ability, not actual present ability to commit injury is necessary.

— There does not have to be an actual present ability to commit the injury. There need only be an apparent ability to commit violent injury upon the person assailed. Thomas v. State, 99 Ga. 38, 26 S.E. 748 (1896).

Mere preparation unaccompanied by physical effort to commit violent injury upon another person is not assault. Fennell v. State, 164 Ga. 59, 137 S.E. 762 (1927); Mullen v. State, 51 Ga. App. 385, 180 S.E. 521 (1935).

Contact proceeding from rudeness is as offensive and harmful as that from anger or lust, and in law constitutes an assault and battery. Brown v. State, 57 Ga. App. 864, 197 S.E. 82 (1938).

Completion of assault. — While a mere threat or menace to commit a violent injury upon the person of another is not sufficient to constitute an assault, yet where the threat or menace is accompanied by an apparent attempt to commit such an injury, and its consummation is prevented, either by the act of the person upon whom the assault is threatened or by the interposition of a third person, the violence has commenced, and the assault is complete. Harrison v. State, 60 Ga. App. 610, 4 S.E.2d 602 (1939).

There need not be an actual present ability to commit a violent injury upon the person assailed but, if there be such a demonstration of violence, coupled with an apparent ability to inflict the injury, so as to cause the person against whom it was directed reasonably to fear the injury unless the person retreats to secure that person's safety, and under such circumstances, the person is compelled to retreat to avoid an impending danger, the assault is complete though the assailant may never have been within actual striking distance of the person assaulted. Harrison v. State, 60 Ga. App. 610, 4 S.E.2d 602 (1939).

Assault is attempted battery. — It is lawful to convict for simple assault even though the proof shows that a battery was committed because by definition an assault is nothing more than an attempted battery. Scott v. State, 141 Ga. App. 848, 234 S.E.2d 685 (1977).

Assault is necessarily included in every battery. Terry v. State, 166 Ga.

App. 632, 305 S.E.2d 170 (1983); Anderson v. State, 170 Ga. App. 634, 317 S.E.2d 877 (1984).

When offense of simple assault is complete. — Offense of simple assault is complete if there is a demonstration of violence, coupled with apparent present ability to inflict injury so as to cause person against whom it is directed reasonably to fear that the person will receive an immediate violent injury unless the person retreats to secure that person's safety. Johnson v. State, 158 Ga. App. 432, 280 S.E.2d 856 (1981).

There must be substantial step toward committing battery before there can be assault since assault is attempted battery. Bissell v. State, 153 Ga. App. 564, 266 S.E.2d 238 (1980).

When two acts charged, State must prove only one. — Indictment charged defendant with aggravated assault by committing two acts, however, the state need prove only one of the two acts constituting the crime of aggravated assault to sustain the conviction. Brown v. State, 242 Ga. App. 347, 529 S.E.2d 650 (2000).

In every assault there must be intent to injure. The test is, was there a present purpose of doing bodily injury? Riddle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 328, 243 S.E.2d 607 (1978), overruled on other grounds, Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

State of mind of either a perpetrator or a victim, including whether a victim has been placed under reasonable apprehension of injury or fear from an event, when in issue, may be proved by indirect or circumstantial evidence. Williams v. State, 208 Ga. App. 12, 430 S.E.2d 157 (1993).

When the language of the indictment did not track the exact language of the assault statute, but did allege that the defendant "maliciously" struck the victim, it properly alleged the necessary element of intent since, given the circumstances of the case whereby the victim did not see the defendant strike the victim, it would have been difficult to conclude that the victim was placed in reasonable apprehension of being injured violently. Gamble v. State, 235 Ga. App. 777, 510 S.E.2d 69 (1998).

Apparent ability to injure is necessary element of assault. — To constitute an assault no actual injury need be shown, it being only necessary to show an intention to commit an injury, coupled with an apparent ability to do so. Reeves v. State, 128 Ga. App. 750, 197 S.E.2d 843 (1973).

There need not be actual present ability to commit violent injury upon person assailed; but, if there be such a demonstration of violence, coupled with an apparent ability to inflict the injury, so as to cause the person against whom it is directed reasonably to fear the injury unless the person retreats to secure that person's safety, and under such circumstances the person is compelled to retreat to avoid an impending danger, the assault is complete though the assailant may never have been within actual striking distance of the person assailed. Reeves v. State, 128 Ga. App. 750, 197 S.E.2d 843 (1973).

Victim's apprehension may be inferred from victim's conduct. — Proof that victim has been placed in apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury need not necessarily be solely by reason of victim's testimony of victim's mental state but may be inferred from conduct of victim such as when the victim retreats to secure safety. Hurt v. State, 158 Ga. App. 722, 282 S.E.2d 192 (1981).

Fear is not the same as reasonable apprehension. — Simple assault is defined as an act which places another in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2), an assault becomes aggravated when it is committed with a deadly weapon, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); thus, if the victim is in reasonable apprehension of an immediate violent injury from a weapon, an aggravated assault has occurred. Because reasonable apprehension of injury is not the same as simple fear, the testimony that the victim was not afraid of the defendant does not preclude conviction. Lunsford v. State, 260 Ga. App. 818, 581 S.E.2d 638 (2003).

Mere threat to commit violent injury upon person of another is not sufficient to constitute an assault. Hudson

v. State, 135 Ga. App. 739, 218 S.E.2d 905 (1975); Johnson v. State, 158 Ga. App. 432, 280 S.E.2d 856 (1981).

Elements of simple assault must be included in definition of aggravated assault. — In every criminal case of aggravated assault, trial judge must include statement as to elements of simple assault within the judge's definition of aggravated assault. Harper v. State, 157 Ga. App. 480, 278 S.E.2d 28 (1981).

"Assault" in aggravated assault is not equivalent to simple assault in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20. Zachery v. State, 158 Ga. App. 448, 280 S.E.2d 860 (1981).

Indictment sufficient. — Because an indictment, which included charging language that the defendant "unlawfully, and with malice aforethought, caused the death of the victim by striking," placed the defendant on notice of a possible conviction of an assault upon the victim with the intent to murder or commit a violent injury, the defendant could be convicted of aggravated assault as a lesser included crime of malice murder; the only difference was that the malice murder indictment alleged that the defendant actually accomplished the murder, in addition to having intended to accomplish the murder. Reagan v. State, 281 Ga. App. 708, 637 S.E.2d 113 (2006).

Failure to include definition of simple assault in charge on aggravated assault. — Trial court does not necessarily err in failing to charge upon the definition of simple assault in charging on aggravated assault as a charge on simple assault need not be given in order to complete the definition of aggravated assault. Willis v. State, 167 Ga. App. 626, 307 S.E.2d 133 (1983).

There is no merit in defendant's contention that a charge on simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20 must be given in order to complete the definition of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 as the latter does not need the former to make it complete. Spaulding v. State, 185 Ga. App. 812, 366 S.E.2d 174, cert. denied, 185 Ga. App. 911, 366 S.E.2d 174 (1988).

Simple assault is lesser included offense of aggravated assault with deadly weapon. — Simple assault under former Code 1933, § 26-1301 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20) and pointing a gun or pistol at another under former Code 1933, § 26-2908 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-11-102) are both misdemeanors and are included in the greater crime of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Morrison v. State, 147 Ga. App. 410, 249 S.E.2d 131 (1978).

Simple assault is not a lesser included offense of terroristic threats. McQueen v. State, 184 Ga. App. 630, 362 S.E.2d 436 (1987).

Defendant failed to show error in refusal to merge offenses because the defendant failed to show that aggravated assault was established by the same facts used to prove simple battery; evidence that the defendant entered a store wearing a mask, that the defendant opened the cash drawer, that the defendant tried to wrangle a key to the drawer from the employee's hand, that the defendant demanded money, that the defendant banged on the register, and that the defendant appeared to have had a gun supported the aggravated assault conviction, but none of this evidence was needed to prove simple battery, which was established by evidence of the defendant's bruising blows to the employee's arm. Lawson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 334, 620 S.E.2d 600 (2005).

Effect of section on offenses under prior law. — Under Ga. L. 1968, pp. 1249, 1280 et seq. (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20), numerous offenses formerly specifically set out are grouped as assaults or batteries. Wells v. State, 125 Ga. App. 579, 188 S.E.2d 407 (1972).

When evidence of circumstances clearly supports guilt of simple assault. — When the circumstances clearly disclose a situation in which the jury could determine that the alleged victim, with a pistol pointed at the victim, was in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, the evidence clearly supports the verdict of guilty of simple assault. Hise v. State, 127 Ga. App. 511, 194 S.E.2d 274 (1972).

Mutually exclusive verdicts. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated assault on a peace officer and serious injury by vehicle based on reckless driving were mutually exclusive as it was reasonably probable that the jury found the defendant guilty of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1) for intentionally attempting to commit a violent injury to the officer. A verdict of guilt under § 16-5-20(a)(1), requiring proof of intent, was mutually exclusive with a verdict of guilt as to serious injury by vehicle predicated on reckless driving. Dryden v. State, 285 Ga. 281, 676 S.E.2d 175 (2009).

Evidence did not require reversal. — Convictions for theft, aggravated assault, and making a terroristic threat was supported by evidence because the defendant admitted to taking gas cans, raised a machete to scare or strike the sibling, the sibling was frightened and ran, and the defendant then threatened the siblings that if either called the sheriff the defendant would return and kill them. Turner v. State, 273 Ga. App. 535, 615 S.E.2d 603 (2005).

Convictions against the defendant for aggravated assault and simple assault did not require reversal because the police failed to preserve the defendant's car after the defendant had engaged in an aggressive car chase, which resulted in the assault charges based on the defendant having used his car as a weapon, as there was no showing that the police acted in bad faith in failing to preserve the evidence and no evidence that suggested that the possible exculpatory value of the car was apparent before its destruction. Ransby v. State, 273 Ga. App. 594, 615 S.E.2d 651 (2005).

Despite the recantation by a juvenile's parent at trial, because sufficient evidence that the juvenile placed the parent in reasonable apprehension of being struck with a hammer, which was in line with the allegations in the parent's complaint filed immediately following the incident, the juvenile court's adjudication against the juvenile for aggravated assault was upheld on appeal. In the Interest of C.B., 288 Ga. App. 752, 655 S.E.2d 342 (2007).

Application

Person aiding and abetting assault is equally guilty. — When two people confederate with the mutual intent of committing an assault on another, and in pursuance of this purpose one commits the actual assault, while the other stands by in a position to assist, if necessary, and thus aids and abets in the commission of the crime, the latter is guilty equally with the one committing the actual assault, even though that person does not inflict a blow. Knight v. State, 52 Ga. App. 199, 182 S.E. 684 (1935).

No fatal variance. — Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was affirmed since there was not a fatal variance between the evidence and the indictment, which alleged that the defendant unlawfully made an assault with intent to rob, with a knife, by holding the knife in a threatening manner while demanding money; the defendant was a conspirator in an armed robbery and the demands for money could be attributed to the defendant as the defendant entered the apartment without permission and held the knife at the defendant's side with the blade exposed as the defendant's partner demanded money, and the victims were afraid that the defendant "would do something." Brown v. State, 281 Ga. App. 523, 636 S.E.2d 709 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0168 , 2007 Ga. LEXIS 99 (Ga. 2007).

Testimony showing subsequent circumstances and natural consequences of act alleged as assault is admissible. — Since the state contended the defendant threw a lighted lamp at the prosecutrix, testimony relative to the fire in the room, the fire's height, the things burned by the fire, and the place where the things were burned at the time when the prosecutrix came back to her house a few minutes after she had fled and when the officers had arrived was admissible in assault prosecution as showing subsequent circumstances that grew out of and were the natural consequences of throwing the lighted lamp. Harrison v. State, 60 Ga. App. 610, 4 S.E.2d 602 (1939).

Unintentional homicide resulting from simple assault. — Because simple assault is a misdemeanor, an unintentional homicide proximately resulting from that unlawful act would amount to involuntary manslaughter and not murder. Norrell v. State, 116 Ga. App. 479, 157 S.E.2d 784 (1967).

Jury determination of assault and battery. — When the defendant refused to leave, the complainant had a right to eject defendant from complainant's property, but with force not disproportionate to that required to eject the defendant. Whether or not force in excess of that necessary was used, giving defendant the right to defend self against an unwarranted assault but not to an extent within itself to constitute an assault and battery on the complainant, or whether the defendant was arbitrarily refusing to leave and was committing an unwarranted battery, were all questions for the jury under the proper instructions of the court. Slaughter v. State, 64 Ga. App. 423, 13 S.E.2d 391 (1941).

Assault within meaning of exclusionary provision of life insurance policy. — In a suit under a life insurance policy, an exclusionary provision which eliminates coverage and liability if loss resulted from the insured's attempt to commit an assault, and where from the undisputed evidence all the apparent circumstances, reasonably viewed, are such as to lead a person reasonably to apprehend a violent injury from the unlawful act of another, there is an assault within the meaning of the exclusionary provision. Quaker City Life Ins. Co. v. Sutson, 102 Ga. App. 53, 115 S.E.2d 699 (1960).

Simple assault merged into assault with intent to rob. — Since the state's evidence showed no assault other than the assault with intent to rob with a shotgun, the simple assault lost its identity and was merged into the greater crime of assault with intent to rob. Alexander v. State, 66 Ga. App. 708, 19 S.E.2d 353 (1942).

Whether pointing or swinging pistol is assault should be left to jury. Kerbo v. State, 230 Ga. 241, 196 S.E.2d 424 (1973).

In resisting unlawful arrest, one is justified in using force as reasonably necessary to prevent arrest, i.e., force proportionate to the force being used in the unlawful detention. Brooks v. State, 144 Ga. App. 97, 240 S.E.2d 593 (1977).

Arrestee is justified in assaulting arresting officer only when officer has assaulted the arrestee first. Brooks v. State, 144 Ga. App. 97, 240 S.E.2d 593 (1977).

Communication of terroristic threat is not punishable under the simple assault statute. Lanthrip v. State, 235 Ga. 10, 218 S.E.2d 771 (1975).

Threat alone. — Plaintiff's alleged threat to "kick" a child's "ass" if the child did not get out of the plaintiff's yard did not constitute a simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a) because the plaintiff made the allegedly threatening statement from inside an open window and had no present ability to injure the child, who was outside and on a bicycle, with the ability to leave the area at will; furthermore, plaintiff's alleged threat to "kick" the child's parent's "ass," where the parent also happened to be the complaining officer who caused the plaintiff's arrest, without more, did not constitute a simple assault, since the parent was also outside the house and in no apparent danger from plaintiff. Payne v. Dekalb County, 414 F. Supp. 2d 1158 (N.D. Ga. 2004).

One may be guilty of simple assault without violating terroristic threats. Lanthrip v. State, 235 Ga. 10, 218 S.E.2d 771 (1975).

No assault when the defendant told the officers the defendant was going into back room to get gun to prevent the officers from arresting the defendant's mother. Hudson v. State, 135 Ga. App. 739, 218 S.E.2d 905 (1975).

Reasonable apprehension of violent injury. — Defendant's conduct did constitute simple assault where there was ample evidence upon which jury could reasonably have found that defendant placed victim "in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury."

McGee v. State, 165 Ga. App. 423, 299 S.E.2d 573 (1983).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), where the defendant fired shots towards the victim, who was "having a good time" with a group of other people in the apartment parking lot; the victim's reasonable apprehensive of receiving a violent injury was sufficient to satisfy the intent element under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2). Thompson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 323, 626 S.E.2d 825 (2006).

Under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2), the evidence established that the victim reasonably apprehended immediate violent injury where, during an exchange between the defendant and the defendant's spouse, the victim, who had accompanied the spouse, asked the defendant to lower the defendant's voice, the defendant came after the victim, and, as the victim backed away, the defendant slammed the door shut, yelling "Stay out of it," walked to the defendant's car, drove around the parking lot, and returned. Wroge v. State, 278 Ga. App. 753, 629 S.E.2d 596 (2006).

Juvenile court's adjudication entered against a juvenile on charges of aggravated assault and terroristic threats was upheld on appeal given sufficient evidence that: (1) the state adequately showed venue; and (2) the victim's testimony described the juvenile's act of pointing a gun, threatening to use the gun, and that such caused fear that something could happen as a result of defendant's acts. In the Interest of J.A.L., 284 Ga. App. 220, 644 S.E.2d 162 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of aggravated assault when after the victim flicked a cigarette that landed on the defendant's car seat, the defendant said "I'll shoot you," and pointed a gun at the victim; although the defendant claimed that the defendant and the victim were just joking around, the evidence presented was sufficient to support a finding that the defendant's act placed the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2).

Violence against a parent. — When the defendant, while cursing and screaming at the defendant's parent, stood near the parent, holding a pot of boiling water and staring at the parent, the defendant's acts constituted aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). They constituted both a substantial step toward committing a battery and a demonstration of violence against the parent, and showed a present ability to inflict injury that placed the parent in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury under § 16-5-20(a)(2). In the Interest of T.Y.B., 288 Ga. App. 610, 654 S.E.2d 688 (2007).

Reasonable apprehension of violent injury in domestic case. — Defendant's convictions for family violence battery and simple battery were supported by evidence from the victim that the defendant had slapped the victim and choked the victim, an officer's observation of red marks around the victim's neck, and evidence of the defendant's two prior guilty pleas to batteries against the defendant's spouse. Evidence of the victim's fear of retrieving the victim's children from the house and the defendant's threats to spread the victim's brains on the wall supported the simple assault conviction. Cuzzort v. State, 307 Ga. App. 52, 703 S.E.2d 713 (2010).

No reasonable apprehension prior to auto accident. — Evidence was insufficient to convict defendant of aggravated assault on facts arising out of an automobile crash that occurred as defendant was fleeing police, because criminal negligence was an insufficient degree of culpability to support a conviction of violating O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1) and because there was no evidence that a police officer attempting to join the chase ever experienced an immediate apprehension of danger before the accident as required by O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2) since the officer never saw the suspect's car. Montford v. State, 254 Ga. App. 524, 564 S.E.2d 216 (2002).

Admission of evidence of drug use proper. — Evidence of the defendant's prior drug use and history of crimes committed against family members fueled by drug usage were properly admitted as relevant to the crimes charged, despite incidentally placing the defendant's character in issue; thus, convictions for both aggravated assault and simple assault were upheld on appeal. Jones v. State, 283 Ga. App. 812, 642 S.E.2d 887 (2007).

Defendant guilty of simple assault. — Because the defendant was aware the victim was the judicial officer responsible for defendant's arrest, had a face-to-face encounter with the victim within 48 hours after the arrest, and because the defendant had made a profane threat of physical violence against the victim, defendant was guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt, of simple assault despite defendant's argument that the threat against the victim was justified because the victim first said the victim would put defendant back in jail. Wells v. State, 204 Ga. App. 91, 418 S.E.2d 438 (1992).

In an altercation where the victim was shot by defendant's codefendant, even though defendant did not hit the victim, there was evidence of defendant's threats against the victim and other actions sufficient to convict the defendant of simple assault; because defendant was acquitted of aggravated assault, however, defendant could not be ordered to pay restitution to the victim for gunshot wounds inflicted by the codefendant. Rider v. State, 210 Ga. App. 716, 437 S.E.2d 493 (1993).

Defendant's aggressive driving, the defendant's act of following the victim, the defendant's estranged spouse, in the defendant's vehicle after the victim left the hospital, yelling at the victim, impeding the victim's movement, forcing the victim into oncoming lanes of traffic, and, on several occasions, bumping the victim's car, constituted at least simple assault in that it placed the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2). Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 413, 579 S.E.2d 809 (2003).

Evidence supported guilt since the defendant tried to steal DVD players from a store, tried to hit an employee, and resisted arrest. Williams v. State, 261 Ga. App. 176, 582 S.E.2d 141 (2003).

Reviewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict, the evidence was sufficient to support the verdicts against the defendant for false imprisonment, aggravated battery, and simple assault in regard to acts of domestic violence against the victim, the defendant's spouse, as the evidence showed that the defendant dragged the spouse down a hallway by the spouse's hair and held the spouse in a bedroom against the spouse's will, that the defendant broke the spouse's nose and arm, and that the defendant beat the spouse with a car-washing brush. Mize v. State, 262 Ga. App. 486, 585 S.E.2d 913 (2003).

Factfinder was allowed to find the defendant's hands to have been deadly weapons depending on the circumstances surrounding their use, including the extent of the victim's injuries; the jury was authorized to find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault where the defendant punched the victim in the face, shattering the victim's nose, and causing an injury so severe that the victim was required to undergo surgery. Lewis v. State, 263 Ga. App. 98, 587 S.E.2d 245 (2003).

Where the record revealed that the defendant and the defendant's love interest went to a party together, that the defendant became enraged when the defendant's love interest and another left the party without telling the defendant, and that upon returning home, the defendant strangled the defendant's love interest, whom the defendant had a history of abusing, and the defendant assaulted the other person, there was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions for malice murder in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1 and simple assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20. Rickman v. State, 277 Ga. 277, 587 S.E.2d 596 (2003).

Testimony about how sound traveled from the kitchen to the den and the victim's comments concerning how the defendant could keep tabs on where the victim was constituted sufficient evidence to authorize the jury to conclude that the defendant knew where the victim was in the small kitchen and intentionally fired the defendant's gun at the victim through the upstairs flooring just above the site the victim was occupying in the kitchen, intending to inflict violent injury upon the victim and, thus, to establish that the defendant committed a simple assault. Chase v. State, 277 Ga. 636, 592 S.E.2d 656 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to show that the defendant committed an assault against the victims where the evidence showed that after one of the victims separated defendant and the defendant's sibling who were involved in a minor altercation, the defendant left and came back with a gun, which the defendant fired into the truck in which the victims were sitting; accordingly, the evidence showed the defendant intended to commit violence to the person of another. Bishop v. State, 266 Ga. App. 129, 596 S.E.2d 674 (2004).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's convictions on one count of simple assault and two counts of battery, which arose from a fight with a romantic friend, as it was within the jury's province to consider defendant's self-defense theory and reject that defense; the jury heard witnesses and observed testimony and was more capable of determining the reasonableness of the hypothesis produced by the evidence or lack of evidence than the appellate court. Thompson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 355, 662 S.E.2d 135 (2008).

Defendant's acts sufficient to cause the victim to retreat and to generate a reasonable fear that the defendant intended to inflict injury upon the victim, authorized the jury to conclude that the defendant committed assault. Holbrook v. State, 168 Ga. App. 380, 308 S.E.2d 869 (1983).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of simple assault after demonstrating violence through verbal threats and damage to property, coupled with an apparent ability to inflict injury, causing victims to reasonably fear injury unless they retreated to secure their safety. Lewis v. State, 253 Ga. App. 578, 560 S.E.2d 73 (2002).

Criminal negligence cannot substitute for criminal intent in cases of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon based on either O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1) or (a)(2). Dunagan v. State, 269 Ga. 590, 502 S.E.2d 726 (1998), overruling Osborne

v. State, 228 Ga. App. 758, 492 S.E.2d 732 (2007) and Jordan v. State, 214 Ga. App. 598, 448 S.E.2d 917 (1994).

Criminal negligence cannot substitute for criminal intent in proving the commission of an aggravated assault. Cadle v. State, 271 Ga. App. 595, 610 S.E.2d 574 (2005).

Evidence sufficient for conviction.

— See Wells v. State, 178 Ga. App. 82, 342 S.E.2d 21 (1986); Larkin v. State, 191 Ga. App. 269, 381 S.E.2d 421 (1989); King v. State, 213 Ga. App. 268, 444 S.E.2d 381 (1994); Richards v. State, 222 Ga. App. 853, 476 S.E.2d 598 (1996); Veal v. State, 242 Ga. App. 873, 531 S.E.2d 422 (2000).

Evidence that defendant shot the victim in the face with a handgun was sufficient to show defendant committed "violent injury to the person of another." Johnson v. State, 225 Ga. App. 863, 485 S.E.2d 551 (1997).

Rational trier of fact could have found the defendant guilty of simple assault beyond a reasonable doubt where defendant's parents/victims both testified that the parents were afraid of the defendant and the defendant had the capability of carrying out threats. Paul v. State, 231 Ga. App. 528, 499 S.E.2d 914 (1998).

When the evidence established more than the defendant's mere presence at the scene of the crimes, the evidence was sufficient to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of felony murder and simple assault; although the defendant was not indicted for conspiracy, the evidence also supported a conspiracy charge. Belsar v. State, 276 Ga. 261, 577 S.E.2d 569 (2003).

Aggravated assault convictions were upheld on appeal, based on the defendant's act of deliberately firing a gun in the direction of another; moreover, the fact that one of the defendant's cohorts also fired a weapon in the direction of the shooting victims was sufficient for defendant to be guilty as a party to said criminal acts. Thompson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 627, 636 S.E.2d 779 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for the simple assault of the defendant's older child. The child and a sibling testified to the defendant's violent behavior on the night in question, and their testimony was corroborated by statements they and the defendant's live-in companion made to a detective and by property damage observed by the detective; furthermore, the older child testified that the child was afraid that night that the defendant might hit the child, that the defendant had previously pushed the child when angry, and that the defendant had a history of abusing persons of the opposite sex. Bearden v. State, 291 Ga. App. 805, 662 S.E.2d 736 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for false imprisonment, simple assault, and criminal trespass with regard to actions the defendant took toward the victim, who was a prior romantic friend, as the evidence established that the defendant went to the victim's home uninvited and entered the home; as the victim exited the bathroom, the defendant was standing in the hallway in front of the victim; alarmed, the victim attempted to flee into an adjacent room at which time the victim and the defendant struggled as the defendant attempted to prevent the victim from passing the defendant; once in the adjacent room, the defendant took the telephone from the victim as the victim tried to call 9-1-1; and the victim ultimately pushed out the screen and successfully exited the residence through an open window despite the defendant's attempt to pull the victim back inside. Port v. State, 295 Ga. App. 109, 671 S.E.2d 200 (2008).

Based on a child's testimony that the defendant hit the child with the defendant's car after attempting to hit the child's parent, as well as the corroborating testimony of three other witnesses, the jury was authorized to conclude that the defendant assaulted the child with the car. Barnes v. State, 296 Ga. App. 493, 675 S.E.2d 233 (2009).

Conviction of assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2), was supported by sufficient evidence because the defendant shouted at the victim in an agitated and angry manner, while standing in close proximity to the victim and blocking the victim's movement, the defendant had the apparent present ability to inflict injury, and the victim testified that the victim feared that the defendant might harm the victim; eyewitnesses also testified that the eyewitnesses feared for the victim's safety. The victim's fear was also shown by the fact that the victim was trying to escape the defendant's immediate presence, but was prevented from doing so by the defendant's actions. Daniels v. State, 298 Ga. App. 736, 681 S.E.2d 642 (2009).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), and assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1), because the victim's testimony that the defendant raped, sodomized, punched, burned, and threatened to kill the victim was sufficient to authorize the defendant's convictions. Harris v. State, 308 Ga. App. 523, 707 S.E.2d 908 (2011).

Conviction of juvenile for assault against school official. — There was sufficient evidence that the defendant, a juvenile, committed acts that would constitute simple assault if done by an adult since while in a vice principal's office, the defendant took off the defendant's outer clothing and watch, made fists, squared the defendant's shoulders, and asked the vice principal, "Now what are you going to do?"; the vice principal testified that the vice principal felt threatened, and there was evidence of a present ability to inflict injury in that although the distance between the defendant and the vice principal was greater than an arm's length, they were standing in a confined office. In the Interest of D.B., 284 Ga. App. 445, 644 S.E.2d 305 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for aggravated assault. — Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault, as: (1) the defendant previously threatened to kill the victim; (2) the defendant pointed a gun at the victim, warned the victim not to give information to the police about what they did, and said, "We own this area"; (3) the frightened victim told the defendant to leave; and (4) the defendant left after further words were exchanged. Husband v. State, 275 Ga. App. 246, 620 S.E.2d 479 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and simple battery because the perpetrator of a robbery entered a business wearing a mask, opened the cash drawer, an employee closed the drawer shut and locked it, the perpetrator and the employee then fought over the key to the drawer, leaving bruises on the employee's arm, the employee testified that the perpetrator had a shirt wrapped around the perpetrator's hand and it appeared that the perpetrator held a gun, the defendant then fled from police, within 10 minutes of the robbery both the employee and a customer identified the defendant as the perpetrator, and later, the defendant admitted that a hat found at the scene of the robbery belonged to the defendant. Lawson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 334, 620 S.E.2d 600 (2005).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for acquittal as a matter of law, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, as the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction on four counts of assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-20 and 16-5-21(a)(2), as the defendant and the perpetrator's codefendant committed two home invasions, whereupon the victims therein were fearful, some were harmed, and during the incidents, the defendant held a night stick and instructed the victims to cooperate with the perpetrator's codefendant, who brandished a handgun. Moyer v. State, 275 Ga. App. 366, 620 S.E.2d 837 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Vergara v. State, 283 Ga. 175, 657 S.E.2d 863 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial on grounds that the state failed to prove that the defendant intentionally threatened two deputies the defendant forced off the road with a car, given evidence that prior to driving directly at the deputies, the car was being used offensively toward others by forcing those individuals off the road, and thereafter, in driving toward the two deputies at 90 miles per hour, a jury could infer that the defendant intended to threaten the deputies in hopes of forcing them from the road. Adams v. State, 280 Ga. App. 779, 634 S.E.2d 868 (2006).

Because the defendant failed to present any evidence that the state ever threatened the victim into testifying against the defendant, and the defendant failed to acknowledge that the victim's statement to police would have been tendered into evidence regardless of what version of events were recounted on the stand, the appeals court rejected the defendant's claim that the state's coercion of the victim warranted reversal of a simple assault conviction. Wheeler v. State, 281 Ga. App. 158, 635 S.E.2d 415 (2006).

Jury was entitled to find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault, charged in the indictment "with the intent to rob," based on the corroboration of the defendant's admission to going on a "lick," which meant to go find someone to rob, and that the defendant knew what a passenger was going to do when that passenger reached out of the car window in an attempt to snatch the elderly victim's purse, resulting in the victim being struck by the car and falling to the ground; hence, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's amended motion for a new trial. Jackson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 506, 636 S.E.2d 694 (2006).

Because the state showed that the victim had an apprehension, reasonable under the circumstances, of immediately receiving a violent injury, this testimony, if believed, together with a finding that the defendant intended to drive rapidly out of the car wash while dragging the victim, was sufficient to authorize the jury to find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault; further, an assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2) did not require that a defendant act with criminal intent in regard to the victim, but did require that an intentional act be shown. Kirkland v. State, 282 Ga. App. 331, 638 S.E.2d 784 (2006).

Because sufficient evidence was presented showing that the defendant cut a correctional officer's face with either a razor blade or other sharp object, requiring more than 150 stitches and cosmetic surgery to repair, the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault and aggravated battery upon a correctional officer were upheld on appeal. White v. State, 289 Ga. App. 224, 656 S.E.2d 567 (2008).

Testimony of both an aggravated assault victim and another witness, which demonstrated that the defendant shot the victim in the leg, coupled with the defendant's flight after the incident, was sufficient to support the defendant's aggravated assault conviction. Jones v. State, 289 Ga. App. 219, 656 S.E.2d 556 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 381 (Ga. 2008).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction based on the victim's testimony that the defendant was the individual who approached the victim's car with a gun and ordered the victim out, causing the victim to be in fear. Kashamba v. State, 295 Ga. App. 540, 672 S.E.2d 512 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to enable the trial court to find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant possessed the intent necessary to commit aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), and felony murder, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1(c), because the defendant used a vehicle as an offensive weapon while the defendant was extremely drunk, and the evidence was sufficient to prove both forms of simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1)-(2) by the defendant against all six of the victims; the defendant engaged in an extended high-speed car chase with a driver, deliberately rammed the other driver's truck, and attempted to smash into the other driver head-on after the truck stalled, and within minutes after the driver escaped, the defendant came upon the other five victims by swerving sharply into oncoming traffic and slamming into a vehicle. Guyse v. State, 286 Ga. 574, 690 S.E.2d 406 (2010).

Probable cause supported arrest for simple assault. — Police officers had probable cause to arrest defendant for simple assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2) based on: (a) the statements of defendant's wife that he tried to force her to have sex against her will, became angry when she rebuffed him, and then threw against a wall the vacuum cleaner that she was using; and (b) evidence at the scene which bolstered the wife's story. The fact that defendant was ultimately acquitted of the simple assault did not invalidate the arrest. Lammerding

v. State, 255 Ga. App. 606, 565 S.E.2d 908 (2002).

Assault did not merge with kidnapping. — Trial court did not err in declining to merge a defendant's convictions for assault and kidnapping with bodily injury because assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2) was established by evidence that the victim was placed in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury when defendant told the victim the defendant had a gun, and kidnapping with bodily injury in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), on the other hand, was established by evidence that defendant abducted and held the victim against the victim's will in the victim's car, driving from one location to another, during which time the victim received bodily injuries. Walker v. State, 306 Ga. App. 16, 701 S.E.2d 523 (2010).

Evidence insufficient. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant juvenile's motion to reconsider, vacate, or modify a delinquency adjudication for the offense of simple assault because the evidence was insufficient to support the finding of delinquency since, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2), the crime of simple assault required proof that the defendant's actions placed the defendant's grandmother in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, but the only evidence of that fact was hearsay; a police officer, who was the only witness, testified that the grandmother told the officer that the grandmother was afraid of the defendant, and that the defendant was perhaps going to hit the grandmother, but the officer admitted that there were no allegations that the defendant attempted to hit the grandmother, nor did the officer witness any of the alleged events. In the Interest of J. L. K., 302 Ga. App. 844, 691 S.E.2d 892 (2010).

Evidence was insufficient to support a juvenile's adjudication of delinquency for aggravated assault because the State failed to prove that the juvenile placed the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury when the juvenile placed the juvenile's hands in the victim's pockets to see what the victim was carrying. The evidence did not show that the juvenile assaulted the victim by attempting to commit a violent injury to the person of the victim, and there was no evidence that the juvenile demonstrated violence through physical acts or gestures. In the Interest of D.M., No. A10A2353, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 239 (Mar. 21, 2011).

Sentence was proper. — Defendant's sentence to 10 years for false imprisonment, 12 months for sexual battery, and 12 months for simple battery, to run concurrently, provided that upon service of four years in custody, the defendant could serve the remaining six years on probation, was not void as the sentence fell within the allowable sentencing ranges of no less than one nor more than 10 years for false imprisonment, and up to 12 months each for sexual battery and simple battery. Rehberger v. State, 267 Ga. App. 778, 600 S.E.2d 635 (2004).

Any error was harmless in light of overwhelming evidence of guilt. — Any error in the admission of a witness's statements under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule was harmless in light of the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt for assault and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, including the exact match of the defendant's blood sample to the blood found at the scene, the location and timing of the defendant's capture, and the fact that the defendant had a recent gunshot wound. Porter v. State, 275 Ga. App. 513, 621 S.E.2d 523 (2005).

Jury Instruction

Charge on simple assault not required. — When, according to the evidence, either the defendant committed a battery or an aggravated assault or did nothing at all, a charge on simple assault is not required. Sheffield v. State, 124 Ga. App. 295, 183 S.E.2d 525 (1971).

Trial court is not required to charge the jury on simple assault where a battery is actually committed. Arnett v. State, 245 Ga. 470, 265 S.E.2d 771 (1980); Sanders v. State, 251 Ga. 70, 303 S.E.2d 13 (1983).

When there is no question of simple assault, the failure to charge simple assault in explanation of the elements of aggravated assault is harmless error because it is highly probable the error does not contribute to the judgment. Wilkie v. State, 153 Ga. App. 609, 266 S.E.2d 289 (1980).

If defendant committed a simple assault with a deadly weapon, the offense is aggravated assault, and a charge on simple assault was not warranted. Stobart v. State, 272 Ga. 608, 533 S.E.2d 379 (2000).

Trial court's jury instructions in the defendant's criminal trial on multiple charges arising out of a domestic dispute were proper, as: (1) there was no requirement that the jury be instructed on the element of assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20) in order to be properly instructed on the crime of aggravated assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21); (2) the methods of committing an aggravated battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), were properly defined based on the methods asserted in the indictment; (3) there was no support for a requested charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b); and (4) there was no possibility of a lesser included conviction for false imprisonment (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41), such that instruction only on the indicted offense of kidnapping (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40) was proper. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in failing to give a charge on the lesser-included offense of simple battery, as the defendant failed to request the same in writing, at or before the close of the evidence, and an oral request to give such a charge was insufficient. Morales v. State, 281 Ga. App. 18, 635 S.E.2d 325 (2006).

In the defendant's prosecution for aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), the defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on the lesser included offense of simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20 because the defendant's spouse could have reasonably apprehended that the black microrecorder allegedly in the defendant's hand was a gun. Dixon v. State, 285 Ga. App. 694, 647 S.E.2d 370 (2007).

Defendant was accused of hitting the victim in the head with a beer bottle, cutting the victim's head and requiring stitches. The evidence allowed the jury to either find that the defendant had not committed an aggravated assault, or to find the defendant guilty as charged; the defendant was not entitled to an instruction on the lesser included-charge of simple assault as there was no evidence to support that charge. Maiorano v. State, 294 Ga. App. 726, 669 S.E.2d 678 (2008).

Because the evidence showed that defendant committed an assault with intent and a deadly weapon, the crime constituted an aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); therefore, a charge on the lesser-included offenses of simple assault or reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-20(a)(2) and 16-5-60(b) was not warranted. Paul v. State, 296 Ga. App. 6, 673 S.E.2d 551 (2009).

During the defendant's trial for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), the trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury on simple assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a), as an essential element of aggravated assault because the record failed to indicate that the defendant submitted a written request to charge on simple assault, and the trial court's instruction was sufficient to define the offense charged and provided a proper guideline for the determination of the defendant's guilt or innocence. Williams v. State, 307 Ga. App. 577, 705 S.E.2d 332 (2011).

Trial counsel's performance was not deficient due to counsel's failure to request a jury charge on simple assault as a lesser included offense of the charged crime of aggravated assault because there was no evidence showing that the defendant committed merely simple assault; the evidence showed that the defendant's assault upon the victim was with a screwdriver within the purview of the aggravated assault statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Davis v. State, 308 Ga. App. 7, 706 S.E.2d 710 (2011).

Charge on battery not required. — With regard to defendant's conviction for aggravated battery of a taxi driver, defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on the lesser included offense of battery based on defendant's argument that the jury could have found under the facts of the case that the gun was not used as a deadly weapon as the evidence showed without conflict that defendant's physical assault upon the taxi driver with the handgun caused the taxi driver to bleed from the head and the entire right side of the face, and the taxi driver testified that, during the attack, the taxi driver was very afraid of being killed. Thus, the pistol in the case, if used in the manner testified to by the taxi driver, was per se a deadly weapon, and the offense was either aggravated assault or no offense at all. Ortiz v. State, 292 Ga. App. 378, 665 S.E.2d 333 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1851, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 928 (Ga. 2008).

Instruction on reckless conduct not warranted. — After threatening to kill the victim, because the defendant's actions in continuing to drive away, as the victim was caught on the outside of the car screaming, supported the crime of either aggravated or simple assault, and not simple negligence, the trial court did not err in rejecting a reckless conduct instruction. Martin v. State, 283 Ga. App. 652, 642 S.E.2d 340 (2007).

Charge on simple assault as element of aggravated assault. — Two charged methods of committing simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1) and (a)(2), as an element of aggravated assault, did not provide an improper basis for the jury to convict the defendant of aggravated assault as the trial court did not charge a separate, unalleged method of committing aggravated assault, but simply defined both methods of committing simple assault, a lesser included offense; because the jury's charge did not authorize a conviction in a manner other than that alleged in the indictment, the charge was not erroneous and the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault with intent to rape was affirmed. McGuire v. State, 266 Ga. App. 673, 598 S.E.2d 55 (2004).

Because the defendant's conduct put the officer-victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately sustaining a violent injury, which satisfied the elements required to prove simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2), the trial court properly charged the jury on simple assault as a lesser-included offense of aggravated assault upon a police officer. Bostic v. State, 289 Ga. App. 195, 656 S.E.2d 546 (2008).

Trial court was authorized to give an instruction on the lesser-included offense of simple assault because some evidence showed that the defendant attempted to violently injure a store manager by stabbing the manager with a pen with such force that the defendant bent the pen; the fact that actual contact occurred did not diminish the fact that there was evidence of a simple assault. Griggs v. State, 303 Ga. App. 442, 693 S.E.2d 615 (2010).

Failure to charge on simple assault not reversible error. — When the accused was convicted of assaulting a female under the age of fourteen years with the intent to rape her, and in the defendant's statement to the jury the defendant denied committing any assault or assault and battery upon the female, while the evidence of the female, if true, proved the felonious assault as alleged in the indictment, failure of the court to charge the jury on the law of assault, or assault and battery, was not error. Finney v. State, 51 Ga. App. 545, 181 S.E. 144 (1935).

Two city police officers who shot at prosecutor's car 12 times, finally causing the prosecutor to run the car off a bridge some 12 miles outside the city limits, after which they arrested the prosecutor, where they had no warrant for the prosecutor's arrest and no crime had been committed by the prosecutor in their presence, were guilty of shooting at another, and failure of the court to charge on simple assault in the absence of a timely and appropriate written request was not error. Hart v. State, 55 Ga. App. 85, 189 S.E. 547 (1936).

When the theory that the defendant could have been found guilty of a simple assault rather than assault with intent to rob and that the judge should have charged thereon was sustained only by the defendant's statement to the jury, without a proper request the judge did not commit reversible error in failing to charge on the law of assault. Alexander v. State, 66 Ga. App. 708, 19 S.E.2d 353 (1942).

Trial court erred in quashing an aggravated assault count against defendant because, in part, the indictment did not need to additionally charge the language of simple assault in order to withstand demurrer. State v. Tate, 262 Ga. App. 311, 585 S.E.2d 224 (2003).

Reversible error in charging jury.

— In the trial of one accused of murder, it is reversible error for the court in charging the jury to assume or intimate that the accused had "assaulted" the deceased when the evidence and the defendant's statement did not demand a finding that an assault had been made. Tyner v. State, 70 Ga. App. 56, 27 S.E.2d 351 (1943).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for the felony murder of the defendant's spouse, with aggravated assault as the underlying felony, the trial court erred by refusing the defendant's requested charge on involuntary manslaughter with pointing a pistol at another as the predicate misdemeanor, which entitled the defendant to a new trial based on the defendant testifying that the shooting occurred inadvertently when, in the course of horseplay with the pistol, the defendant pulled the trigger while pointing the pistol at the victim's head, not knowing there was a round in the chamber. Manzano v. State, 282 Ga. 557, 651 S.E.2d 661 (2007).

Trial court erred by failing to provide the statutory definition of assault, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20, in a jury charge, which resulted in the final charge being fatally insufficient since the charge did not instruct on substantive points and issues involved in the case and allowed the jury to find defendant guilty of aggravated assault based merely on criminal negligence. As a result, defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was reversed and a retrial was ordered since there was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction. Coney v. State, 290 Ga. App. 364, 659 S.E.2d 768 (2008).

Proper jury charge. — When an indictment for aggravated assault alleged the aggravating aspect of simple assault, this was sufficient to put the defendant on notice that the defendant could be convicted for aggravated assault if the defendant committed a simple assault in either manner contained in the simple assault statute; accordingly, the trial court did not err by charging the jury that the jury could convict the defendant for aggravated assault in a manner not alleged in the indictment. Simpson v. State, 277 Ga. 356, 589 S.E.2d 90 (2003).

Two charged methods of committing simple assault, as an element of aggravated assault, did not provide an improper basis for the jury to convict the defendant of aggravated assault, and the trial court did not charge a separate, unalleged method of committing aggravated assault, but simply defined both methods of committing simple assault, a lesser included offense; hence, because the jury's charge did not authorize a conviction in a manner other than that alleged in the indictment, the charge was not erroneous. Opio v. State, 283 Ga. App. 894, 642 S.E.2d 906 (2007).

Charges as to other crimes properly refused. — Requested charges on involuntary manslaughter, pointing a firearm at another, and simple assault, were properly refused, where defendant's testimony (that defendant fired shots with the intention of frightening a group) established as a matter of law the offense of aggravated assault, and the testimony that members of the group were frightened and dropped to the ground was inconsistent with the requested charges. Hawkins v. State, 260 Ga. 138, 390 S.E.2d 836 (1990).

16-5-21. Aggravated assault.

(a) A person commits the offense of aggravated assault when he or she assaults:

(1) With intent to murder, to rape, or to rob;

(2) With a deadly weapon or with any object, device, or instrument which, when used offensively against a person, is likely to or actually does result in serious bodily injury; or

(3) A person or persons without legal justification by discharging a firearm from within a motor vehicle toward a person or persons.

(b) Except as provided in subsections (c) through (k) of this Code section, a person convicted of the offense of aggravated assault shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than 20 years.

(c) A person who knowingly commits the offense of aggravated assault upon a peace officer while the peace officer is engaged in, or on account of the performance of, his or her official duties shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(d) Any person who commits the offense of aggravated assault against a person who is 65 years of age or older shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than three nor more than 20 years.

(e)(1) As used in this subsection, the term "correctional officer" shall include superintendents, wardens, deputy wardens, guards, and correctional officers of state, county, and municipal penal institutions who are certified by the Georgia Peace Officer Standards and Training Council pursuant to Chapter 8 of Title 35 and employees of the Department of Juvenile Justice who are known to be employees of the department or who have given reasonable identification of their employment. The term "correctional officer" shall also include county jail officers who are certified or registered by the Georgia Peace Officer Standards and Training Council pursuant to Chapter 8 of Title 35.

(2) A person who knowingly commits the offense of aggravated assault upon a correctional officer while the correctional officer is engaged in, or on account of the performance of, his or her official duties shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(f) Any person who commits the offense of aggravated assault in a public transit vehicle or station shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than three nor more than 20 years. For purposes of this Code section, "public transit vehicle" has the same meaning as in subsection (c) of Code Section 16-5-20.

(g) Any person who commits the offense of aggravated assault upon a person in the course of violating Code Section 16-8-2 where the property that was the subject of the theft was a vehicle engaged in commercial transportation of cargo or any appurtenance thereto, including without limitation any such trailer, semitrailer, container, or other associated equipment, or the cargo being transported therein or thereon, shall upon conviction be punished by imprisonment for not less than five years nor more than 20 years, a fine not less than $50,000.00 nor more than $200,000.00, or both such fine and imprisonment. For purposes of this subsection, the term "vehicle" includes without limitation any railcar.

(h) A person convicted of an offense described in paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of this Code section shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(i) Any person who commits the offense of aggravated assault involving the use of a firearm upon a student or teacher or other school personnel within a school safety zone as defined in paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of Code Section 16-11-127.1 shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(j) If the offense of aggravated assault is committed between past or present spouses, persons who are parents of the same child, parents and children, stepparents and stepchildren, foster parents and foster children, or other persons excluding siblings living or formerly living in the same household, the defendant shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than three nor more than 20 years.

(k) Any person who commits the offense of aggravated assault with intent to rape against a child under the age of 14 years shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 25 nor more than 50 years. Any person convicted under this subsection shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2.

(l) A person who knowingly commits the offense of aggravated assault upon an officer of the court while such officer is engaged in, or on account of the performance of, his or her official duties shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years. As used in this subsection, the term "officer of the court" means a judge, attorney, clerk of court, deputy clerk of court, court reporter, court interpreter, or probation officer. Ga. L. 1994, p. 1012, § 29, not codified by the General Assembly, provides for severability.

Ga. L. 1999, p. 381, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Crimes Against Family Members Act of 1999'."

Ga. L. 1999, p. 381, § 7, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "Nothing herein shall be construed to validate a relationship between people of the same sex as a 'marriage' under the laws of this State."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

General Consideration

Constitutionality. — Legislature, in not providing for defense of opprobrious language, did not act unconstitutionally. Watkins v. State, 254 Ga. 267, 328 S.E.2d 537 (1985).

Venue. — Adjudication of delinquency was reversed as the state presented no evidence of venue and the juvenile court did not take judicial notice that the location of an aggravated assault described at a hearing was in Sumter County; the county in which the offense was committed was not established and the evidence was insufficient to support the conviction, but retrial was not barred by the double jeopardy clause so long as venue was properly established at retrial. In the Interest of T.W., 280 Ga. App. 693, 634 S.E.2d 854 (2006).

Because the element of venue was sufficiently testified to by the victim's parent, the state adequately proved that element as part of its aggravated assault charges. Boyd v. State, 289 Ga. App. 342, 656 S.E.2d 864 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 498 (Ga. 2008).

Elements of aggravated assault. — Offense of aggravated assault has two essential elements: (1) that an assault, (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20), was committed on the victim; and (2) that it was aggravated by (a) an intention to murder, to rape, or to rob, or (b) use of a deadly weapon. Harper v. State, 127 Ga. App. 359, 193 S.E.2d 259 (1972); Hardin v. State, 137 Ga. App. 391, 224 S.E.2d 82 (1976); Smith v. State, 140 Ga. App. 395, 231 S.E.2d 143 (1976); King v. State, 178 Ga. App. 343, 343 S.E.2d 401 (1986).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 proscribes the commission of assault with the intent to accomplish the more serious crime of murder, robbery, or rape. No more need be alleged or proved. The statute deliberately sets out the offense of having intent, as disjunctive to an assault with a deadly weapon. Scroggins v. State, 198 Ga. App. 29, 401 S.E.2d 13 (1990), cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 401 S.E.2d 13 (1991).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to dismiss the aggravated assault count of the indictment under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a) where it charged that defendant made an assault upon the person of the victim with a pistol, a deadly weapon, by shooting the victim with said pistol; the language was sufficient to charge the elements of aggravated assault. Sallie v. State, 276 Ga. 506, 578 S.E.2d 444, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 902, 124 S. Ct. 251, 157 L. Ed. 2d 185 (2003).

Person commits the offense of aggravated assault when the person assaults another with a deadly weapon which, when used offensively against a person, is likely to or actually does result in serious bodily injury. There is no requirement that the victim sustain an actual injury, and the crime is complete without proof thereof. Turbeville v. State, 268 Ga. App. 88, 601 S.E.2d 461 (2004).

Juvenile court's adjudication entered against a juvenile on charges of aggravated assault and terroristic threats was upheld on appeal, given sufficient evidence that: (1) the state adequately showed venue; and (2) the victim's testimony described the juvenile's act of pointing a gun, threatening to use the gun, and that such caused fear that something could happen as a result of those acts. In the Interest of J.A.L., 284 Ga. App. 220, 644 S.E.2d 162 (2007).

Intent to injure is not an element of the offense of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Ganaway v. State, 282 Ga. 297, 647 S.E.2d 590 (2007).

Aiding and abetting. — After defendant-A hijacked a victim's car at gunpoint, defendant-B's actions in punching the victim in the face while defendant-A waited in the car constituted aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), as defendant-B aided and abetted the commission of the carjacking pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(b)(3) for purposes of the aggravated nature of the assault conviction. Johnson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 182, 630 S.E.2d 778 (2006).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant and the defendant's codefendant of aggravated assault because based on the circumstantial evidence, the jury was entitled to infer that the defendant and the codefendant accompanied their accomplice to a convenience store knowing that the accomplice intended to assault the victim because of their past differences, that the defendant had specifically served as the getaway driver, and that the codefendant had accompanied the accomplice inside the store as a lookout, making both individuals parties to the crime of aggravated assault. Romero v. State, 307 Ga. App. 348, 705 S.E.2d 195 (2010).

Conduct of third parties not admissible to support self-defense claim. — During a defendant's trial for aggravated assault and other charges arising out of a road rage incident, the defendant was properly precluded from testifying about a prior attempted robbery in which the defendant was the victim and allegedly used a pistol in self-defense; because the defendant was asserting self-defense, other specific acts of violence committed by a victim would have been admissible if any such acts existed, but the defendant could not support the defense by the proffer of any evidence based upon the commission of extraneous acts of violence committed by others because it would have been difficult or impossible for the state to rebut, refute, or test the credibility of such evidence. Adams v. State, 282 Ga. App. 819, 640 S.E.2d 329 (2006).

Intent element of aggravated assault was shown by evidence of the victim's fearful reactions to defendant's actions and words when defendant forced the victim to surrender the victim's purse by pointing a gun at the victim's chest. Cole v. State, 232 Ga. App. 795, 502 S.E.2d 742 (1998).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b)(1), evidence that the defendant stabbed another in an incident eight years previously was admissible to show whether the defendant intended to threaten or harm the victim when the defendant brandished a knife, and the evidence was not more prejudicial than probative, given the prior incident's relevance to a necessary element of the current crimes. Ledford v. State, 275 Ga. App. 107, 620 S.E.2d 187 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for felony murder and the underlying crime of aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence because no proof of the defendant's criminal intent to murder was required for the felony murder conviction, and the aggravated assault conviction did not require proof that the defendant intended to injure the victim, as only proof that the defendant intended to do the act which placed the victim in reasonable apprehension of harm was required. Smith v. State, 280 Ga. 490, 629 S.E.2d 816 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial on grounds that the state failed to prove that the defendant intentionally threatened two deputies the defendant forced off the road with a car, given evidence that prior to driving directly at the deputies, the car was being used offensively toward others by forcing those individuals off the road, and thereafter, in driving toward the two deputies at 90 miles per hour, a jury could infer that the defendant intended to threaten the deputies in hopes of forcing them from the road. Adams v. State, 280 Ga. App. 779, 634 S.E.2d 868 (2006).

Trial court did not err by denying a defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on the charge of aggravated assault as the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction on that count in that the state proved that the defendant, while engaging the victim in an altercation, choked the victim so that the victim could not breath and, in fact, lost consciousness briefly. As such, the state proved that the defendant intended to injure the victim. Hall v. State, 292 Ga. App. 544, 664 S.E.2d 882 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1841, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 926 (Ga. 2008).

Victim's apprehension of receiving a violent injury was not an essential element of aggravated assault in which the defendant intentionally fired a gun at the victim; sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, despite the failure of the victim to testify, because witnesses established that during a dispute with the victim over drugs, the defendant pointed a gun at the victim, struck the victim in the head, and shot the victim. Anthony v. State, 276 Ga. App. 107, 622 S.E.2d 450 (2005).

Simple assault becomes aggravated when it is perpetrated by use of a deadly weapon. Gentry v. State, 212 Ga. App. 79, 441 S.E.2d 249 (1994).

Defendant could not be convicted for "criminal attempt to commit aggravated assault" where the victim was asleep or passed out; there is no law authorizing conviction for an attempt to commit a crime which itself is a particular type of attempt to commit a crime. Patterson v. State, 192 Ga. App. 449, 385 S.E.2d 311, cert. denied, 192 Ga. App. 902, 385 S.E.2d 311 (1989).

Neither simple nor aggravated assault requires physical contact with victim. Tuggle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 603, 244 S.E.2d 131 (1978).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) does not make a battery an essential element of the offense of aggravated assault. Watkins v. State, 254 Ga. 267, 328 S.E.2d 537 (1985).

Physical contact is required for simple battery but not for aggravated assault, and hence the crime of simple battery is not necessarily included in the crime of aggravated assault. Tuggle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 603, 244 S.E.2d 131 (1978); Anderson v. State, 170 Ga. App. 634, 317 S.E.2d 877 (1984).

Indictment charging the defendant with making an assault "with [the defendant's] hands and fists, objects which when used offensively . . . were likely to result in serious bodily injury" contained all of the essential elements of the crime, even though it did not expressly allege that the defendant's hands were used as deadly weapons. Moore v. State, 246 Ga. App. 163, 539 S.E.2d 851 (2000).

Aggravated assault does not require that injury be in fact inflicted. Radford v. State, 140 Ga. App. 451, 231 S.E.2d 365 (1976), rev'd on other grounds, 238 Ga. 532, 233 S.E.2d 785 (1977).

In every assault there must be intent to injure. The test is: was there a present purpose of doing bodily injury? Riddle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 328, 243 S.E.2d 607 (1978), overruled on other grounds, Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Assault against several persons. — After the defendant fired a pistol into a group of nine people, the defendant's act of firing into the group made each individual in the group a separate victim and, thus, the seven aggravated assault convictions of which the defendant was found guilty did not merge. Pace v. State, 239 Ga. App. 506, 521 S.E.2d 444 (1999).

When a defendant intentionally shoots several times into a group of people intending to harm only one of them, a jury would be authorized to find defendant guilty of aggravated assault against each person in the group. Robertson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 649, 538 S.E.2d 755 (2000).

Assault with shotgun. — Evidence supported the defendant's conviction for armed robbery, possession of a weapon during the commission of a crime, aggravated assault, burglary, aggravated battery, and impersonating an officer because the defendant kicked in the door of a home while shouting that the defendant was a "federal agent," fired a shotgun through a door, shooting off a victim's thumb, inserted the barrel of the shotgun in the same person's mouth, and demanded money, which the victims turned over, two codefendants identified the defendant as the user of the shotgun, and the defendant's DNA was found on a ski mask recovered from the getaway car and the defendant's fingerprints were found on the car. Garrison v. State, 276 Ga. App. 243, 622 S.E.2d 910 (2005).

Elderly victims. — Proof that the victim was at least 65 years old was not necessary to establish a prima facie case of aggravated assault, however, such evidence was required to enhance the penalty under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(d). Howard v. State, 230 Ga. App. 437, 496 S.E.2d 532 (1998).

Photographs depicting victim's injuries. — Photographs depicting the victim's injuries were admissible because, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), proving serious bodily injury is a part of the state's burden of proof. Clay v. State, 214 Ga. App. 160, 447 S.E.2d 156 (1994).

Defendant's amended motion for a new trial was properly denied, and an aggravated assault conviction was upheld on appeal as the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting three photographs depicting the victim's knife wounds; the photographs were not inadmissible merely because the photographs also showed alterations to the victim's body made by medical personnel. McRae v. State, 282 Ga. App. 852, 640 S.E.2d 323 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 200 (Ga. 2007).

Injury requiring hospital stay and removal of part of brain deemed "serious." — Defendant's challenge of aggravated assault provisions on grounds of vagueness, in that O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 requires a subjective evaluation by law enforcement personnel as to what constitutes "serious injury," was not viable where injury required removal of part of brain and a month-long hospital stay.

There are wanton or reckless states of mind sometimes equivalent to specific intention to kill, and which may and should be treated by the jury as amounting to such intention, when productive of violence likely to result in the destruction of life. Messer v. State, 120 Ga. App. 747, 172 S.E.2d 194 (1969), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 866, 91 S. Ct. 107, 27 L. Ed. 2d 105 (1970).

Homicide occurring during aggravated assault not accident. — Evidence that the defendant had cocked a gun and pointed the gun at her husband's head in order to scare him, and that the gun discharged when the victim struck the gun with his arm, was sufficient to authorize a conviction for felony-murder and the defense of "accident" was inapplicable. Stiles v. State, 264 Ga. App. 446, 448 S.E.2d 172 (1994).

There was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of aggravated assault when the defendant was seen at a paramour's apartment with a gun in a book bag, a witness stated that the defendant pointed the gun at the paramour's head and threatened to kill the paramour, the paramour was found shot dead a short time later, and the defendant admitted firing the gun but claimed that the shooting was accidental. Jackson v. State, 276 Ga. 408, 577 S.E.2d 570 (2003).

Victim's awareness of danger is not essential element of crime of aggravated assault. Sutton v. State, 245 Ga. 192, 264 S.E.2d 184 (1980).

When the defendant was charged with the offense of aggravated assault by making an assault upon the victim's person with a gun, it was not incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the victim was aware the defendant was shooting at the victim. Brown v. State, 200 Ga. App. 537, 408 S.E.2d 836 (1991).

Appropriate test of mental capacity in trial for murder and aggravated assault is whether the accused is capable of distinguishing between right and wrong at the time the offense was committed. Duck v. State, 250 Ga. 592, 300 S.E.2d 121 (1983).

Intent need not be directed toward person actually injured. — Offenses of murder, voluntary manslaughter, and aggravated assault do not require that the necessary element of intent, to kill or injure as the case may be, must have been directed toward the person who actually was killed or injured. Cook v. State, 255 Ga. 565, 340 S.E.2d 843, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986).

Jury was authorized to find that the defendant intended to assault the first victim with a deadly weapon and that, in the course of that assault the second victim was injured. Similarly, the jury was also authorized to find the original intent was transferred in law to the second victim as well. Fussell v. State, 187 Ga. App. 134, 369 S.E.2d 511 (1988).

Trial court did not err in adjudicating a defendant juvenile delinquent based upon the defendant's commission of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) because evidence that the defendant deliberately fired a BB gun in the direction of the victim and the victim's family established the offense, since, by intentionally firing the gun in the direction of the family, the defendant was likely to seriously injure any of the family members present, including the victim; the defendant's intent to assault any one of the family members was transferred to the victim, who suffered the harm, regardless of whether the defendant knew that the victim was in the line of fire or whether the victim was aware of the shooting as the shooting occurred. In the Interest of I.C., 300 Ga. App. 683, 686 S.E.2d 279 (2009).

Convictions as aider and abettor proper despite lack of personal involvement. — Defendant's contention that the crimes against a stabbing victim were solely committed by a codefendant was rejected, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(a), as ample evidence existed to conclude that defendant either committed the crimes or was a party to the crimes, including that both defendant and the codefendant drove to the stabbing victim's home, that victim was stabbed to death, and the victim's wallet and checkbook were stolen so that both defendants could have money to buy more drugs. Odom v. State, 279 Ga. 599, 619 S.E.2d 636 (2005).

"Intent" aspect of attempted vehicular suicide by colliding with another vehicle. — Evidence supported conclusion that defendant, who crossed center line at 68 miles per hour without braking, intended to injure the occupants of an oncoming vehicle, despite defendant's contention that defendant was attempting suicide and therefore was intending only to inflict bodily injury on self. Anderson v. State, 254 Ga. 470, 330 S.E.2d 592 (1985).

Intent to perform illegal act. — It was unnecessary to prove that the defendant intended to injure the victim to sustain an aggravated assault conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) as long as it was proved that the defendant intended to perform the illegal act which caused the intended victim to be apprehensive of receiving a violent injury. Gray v. State, 257 Ga. App. 393, 571 S.E.2d 435 (2002).

Evidence as to weapon's character. — In an aggravated assault case, since no witness saw a weapon or "sharp instrument" as alleged in the indictment, evidence that as a result of the defendant's attack, the victim suffered a clean cut from the forehead to the lip was sufficient to allow the jury to infer that the wound was caused by a sharp instrument. Evidence as to wounds inflicted was sufficient for a jury to infer a weapon's character. Miller v. State, 292 Ga. App. 641, 666 S.E.2d 35 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 903 (Ga. 2008).

No requirement that assault must be with deadly weapon in order to convict under Ga. L. 1968, pp. 1249, 1280 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21). Thadd v. State, 231 Ga. 623, 203 S.E.2d 230 (1974).

"Assault with a deadly weapon" and "assault with intent to murder" compared. — While an assault with intent to commit murder is usually manifested by the use of some deadly weapon, yet the offense of an assault with intent to commit murder may be committed without a weapon likely to produce death. Wright v. State, 40 Ga. App. 118, 149 S.E. 153 (1929).

Aggravated assault was intended to include former offense of stabbing provided the weapon was in fact of the denominated character. A knife "designed for the purpose of offense and defense" is a deadly weapon almost by definition. Wells v. State, 125 Ga. App. 579, 188 S.E.2d 407 (1972); Johnson v. State, 185 Ga. App. 167, 363 S.E.2d 773 (1987).

Offense of shooting at another is form of aggravated assault. Bentley v. State, 131 Ga. App. 425, 205 S.E.2d 904 (1974).

Offense of shooting at another is replaced by aggravated assault under Ga. L. 1968, pp. 1249, 1280 et seq. (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21). Wells v. State, 125 Ga. App. 579, 188 S.E.2d 407 (1972).

Deliberately firing gun in direction of another constitutes aggravated assault. — When defendant admitted deliberately firing a gun in the direction of a victim to scare the victim, such action constitutes use of a deadly weapon to commit an act which places another in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury and amounts to aggravated assault, absent justification. Williams v. State, 249 Ga. 6, 287 S.E.2d 31 (1982).

Intentionally firing a gun at another, absent justification, is sufficient in and of itself to support a conviction of aggravated assault. Steele v. State, 196 Ga. App. 330, 396 S.E.2d 4 (1990); Belins v. State, 210 Ga. App. 259, 435 S.E.2d 675 (1993); Lewis v. State, 215 Ga. App. 161, 450 S.E.2d 448 (1994); Creson v. State, 218 Ga. App. 184, 460 S.E.2d 83 (1995); Tiller v. State, 267 Ga. 888, 485 S.E.2d 720 (1997); Goodman v. State, 237 Ga. App. 795, 516 S.E.2d 824 (1999).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for directed verdict of acquittal, as direct evidence that the defendant fired at the victim and the defendant's own admission that the defendant fired at the victim was sufficient to submit the question of whether the defendant was guilty of aggravated assault to the jury; no error occurred pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, involving a conviction based solely on circumstantial evidence, as the state offered more than circumstantial evidence to support its case against the defendant. Cobb v. State, 268 Ga. App. 66, 601 S.E.2d 443 (2004).

Because O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 provided that a victim's testimony, standing alone, was sufficient, the victim's testimony that defendant twice shot at the victim was sufficient to find defendant guilty of violating O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) despite testimony to the contrary. Hartley v. State, 299 Ga. App. 534, 683 S.E.2d 109 (2009).

That defendant did not initiate fight does not necessarily show that defendant was not guilty of aggravated assault. Russell v. State, 152 Ga. App. 693, 263 S.E.2d 689 (1979).

Admission of evidence of drug use was proper. — Defendant was properly convicted for felony murder, malice murder, and aggravated assault where the defendant was seen twice beating someone with a pipe and yelling at the person regarding drugs, and where the person died as a result of injuries from that beating two days later. Admission at the defendant's trial of use of drugs was proper because it was not admitted purely to impugn the defendant's character, but was relevant as to motive. Dyers v. State, 277 Ga. 859, 596 S.E.2d 595 (2004).

Because evidence of the defendant's prior drug use, and history of crimes committed against family members fueled by that drug usage, were properly admitted as relevant to the crimes charged, despite incidentally placing the defendant's character in issue, convictions for both aggravated assault and simple assault were upheld on appeal. Jones v. State, 283 Ga. App. 812, 642 S.E.2d 887 (2007).

Pre- and post-Miranda statements properly admitted. — In a prosecution for aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, despite testimony from the arresting officer that the defendant was complaining of physical problems and under the influence of alcohol, both the pre- and post-Miranda statements made, as well as the numerous voluntary and unsolicited remarks which were not made in response to any form of interrogation, were properly admitted. Dorsey v. State, 285 Ga. App. 510, 646 S.E.2d 713 (2007).

Evidence of victim's character properly excluded. — In a prosecution for aggravated assault, to the extent that the defendant sought to attack the victim's character through testimony about the victim's use of alcohol during pregnancy, whether the victim hid the defendant from the police, and the victim's alleged jealousy over the defendant's new relationship, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in limiting the scope of cross-examination to the issues directly related to the incidents. Massey v. State, 278 Ga. App. 303, 628 S.E.2d 706 (2006).

Evidence was properly excluded under rape shield law. — Trial court properly applied O.C.G.A. § 23-2-3 by refusing to allow testimony that a victim of domestic violence had been seen working as a prostitute because that information had no relevance to the aggravated assault and false imprisonment charges for which a defendant was convicted, and further, the defendant failed to produce any evidence that could have provided a nexus between the alleged prostitution and a conclusion that someone else might have inflicted the victim's injuries. Moorer v. State, 290 Ga. App. 216, 659 S.E.2d 422 (2008).

No speedy trial violation. — Convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault with the intent to rob, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon were proper because the defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated by the 20-month delay between the date the indictment was issued to the date of the defendant's actual trial as the delay was due to a higher priority of statutory speedy trial demands, so it was not a deliberate delay on the part of the state, and as the defendant failed to show any prejudice from the delay. Herndon v. State, 277 Ga. App. 374, 626 S.E.2d 579 (2006).

Denial of motion to sever. — In a prosecution on two counts of attempting to hijack a motor vehicle, four counts of aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and criminal trespass, because the offenses committed by a defendant and a co-defendant amounted to a series of continuous acts connected together both in time and the area in which committed, and there was no likelihood of confusion, the trial court did not abuse of discretion in denying the defendant's motion to sever the trial from that of the codefendant; furthermore, the mere fact that the codefendants' defenses were antagonistic was insufficient in itself to warrant separate trials. Diaz v. State, 280 Ga. App. 413, 634 S.E.2d 160 (2006).

State's peremptory strikes were valid. — While defendant made out a prima facie case of racial discrimination regarding the state's use of three peremptory strikes, sufficient race-neutral reasons existed for those strikes; thus, given the court's jury charges and recharge to the jury, the court's responses to questions from the jury, and waiver of improper bolstering objection on appeal, defendant's aggravated assault and armed robbery convictions were upheld on appeal, as was the court's denial of a motion for a new trial. LeMon v. State, 290 Ga. App. 527, 660 S.E.2d 11 (2008).

Jury determinations. — Whether the defendant's means of attack was deadly and whether the defendant's acts were punishable as an aggravated assault or as simple battery were matters properly left to the jury. Guevara v. State, 151 Ga. App. 444, 260 S.E.2d 491 (1979).

Viewed in the light most favorable to the verdict, the defendant's aggravated assault conviction was upheld on appeal as conflicts in the evidence between the defendant's version of the facts and that version offered by the other witnesses were for the jury, not the appeals court, to resolve. Hicks v. State, 281 Ga. App. 461, 636 S.E.2d 183 (2006).

Sufficient evidence was presented to the jury to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, criminal attempt to commit aggravated sodomy, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime because the victim's testimony alone was sufficient to support the convictions; regardless of any inconsistencies in the victim's testimony, it was for the jury to assess witness credibility, and the jury chose to believe the victim's identification of the defendant as the individual who committed the crimes. Williams v. State, 300 Ga. App. 839, 686 S.E.2d 446 (2009).

Guilty plea free and voluntary. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to two counts of kidnapping and two counts of aggravated assault as the trial court was well aware of the medications the defendant was taking when the plea was entered, the medications did not affect the defendant's ability to understand the proceedings, and an expert opined that the defendant was feigning hallucinations and was competent to stand trial; hence, at that point, the trial court had no duty to make any further inquiries into the defendant's ability to competently tender a plea. McDowell v. State, 282 Ga. App. 754, 639 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Double jeopardy since aggravated assault was underlying offense in felony murder. — Second prosecution on an aggravated assault charge was barred by double jeopardy because the assault charge served as the underlying offense to the felony murder charge and was a lesser included offense of felony murder; the court of appeals erred by failing to consider the implications of the modified merger rule when reviewing the defendant's double jeopardy claim because the aggravated assault charge was perpetrated against the victim and was an integral part of the homicide, and the evidence authorized a charge on voluntary manslaughter on which the defendant was convicted. Williams v. State, 288 Ga. 7, 700 S.E.2d 564 (2010).

Aggravated assault is not a capital felony. Jones v. State, 246 Ga. 109, 269 S.E.2d 6 (1980).

State was not required to prove victim's certification as a police officer under the Georgia Peace Officer Standards and Training Act, O.C.G.A. § 35-8-1 et seq., in order to make a prima facie showing that the victim was acting as a peace officer within the contemplation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(c). Cornwell v. State, 193 Ga. App. 561, 388 S.E.2d 353, cert. denied, 193 Ga. App. 909, 388 S.E.2d 353 (1989).

Victim's apprehension of violent injuries. — In a prosecution for felony murder, where defendant was charged with the underlying felony of aggravated assault by stabbing the victim with a knife, a deadly weapon, it was unnecessary for the state to show the victim's apprehension of the violent injuries inflicted. Brinson v. State, 272 Ga. 345, 529 S.E.2d 129 (2000).

Evidence was sufficient to allow the court to adjudicate the defendant a delinquent for committing an act which would have been an aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), if committed by an adult, because a police officer testified that the juvenile pointed a gun at the officer. In the Interest of M.F., 276 Ga. App. 402, 623 S.E.2d 234 (2005).

Because sufficient evidence was presented supporting the jury's determination that the defendant's act of shooting the victim was not an accident and was not justified, the victim testified to knowing defendant had a gun, and the presence of a gun normally placed a victim in reasonable apprehension of being injured violently, the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime were supported by the record. Dukes v. State, 285 Ga. App. 172, 645 S.E.2d 664 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support a finding of juvenile delinquency based on aggravated assault. The defendant committed an act with a deadly weapon, advancing on a deputy with a baton in the defendant's hand, putting the deputy in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury. In the Interest of J.A.C., 291 Ga. App. 728, 662 S.E.2d 811 (2008).

Violence against a parent. — When the defendant, while cursing and screaming at the defendant's parent, stood near the parent, holding a pot of boiling water and staring at the parent, the defendant's acts constituted aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). The acts constituted both a substantial step toward committing a battery and a demonstration of violence against the parent, and showed a present ability to inflict injury that placed the parent in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury under § 16-5-21(a)(2). In the Interest of T.Y.B., 288 Ga. App. 610, 654 S.E.2d 688 (2007).

Prior transaction evidence properly admitted. — Trial court did not err in admitting prior transaction evidence sufficiently similar to the charged aggravated assault offense in order to disprove the defendant's claim of accident and to show intent and course of conduct as proof of the prior offense helped prove an element of the aggravated assault. Mack v. State, 283 Ga. App. 172, 641 S.E.2d 194 (2007).

Similar transaction evidence of an eight-year-old incident in which the defendant robbed two victims at gunpoint was not too remote in time or dissimilar to the armed robbery and aggravated assault charges the defendant was being tried for, and was thus properly admitted to show course of conduct, bent of mind, motive, and identity. Wallace v. State, 295 Ga. App. 452, 671 S.E.2d 911 (2009).

Error in admitting similar transaction evidence required reversal. — While state presented sufficient evidence of the victim's age to support assault charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), because the trial court clearly erred in admitting evidence of two burglaries defendant committed in 1998 as similar transactions to help prove the issue of identity, defendant's aggravated assault, burglary, robbery, theft, and battery convictions were reversed. Usher v. State, 290 Ga. App. 710, 659 S.E.2d 920 (2008).

Prior convictions properly admitted for both impeachment and sentencing purposes. — Trial court properly admitted certified copies of the defendant's two prior convictions of aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony as: (1) the court carefully balanced the competing interests; (2) the prior offenses had a substantial probative value which outweighed their prejudicial effect; and (3) nothing prevented the use of a defendant's convictions for both impeachment and sentencing purposes. Moreover, the court rejected the defendant's claim that by adding the word "substantially" to the balancing test, the Georgia legislature meant to incorporate the standard for admissibility embodied in Fed. R. Evid. 609(b). Newsome v. State, 289 Ga. App. 590, 657 S.E.2d 540 (2008), cert. denied, No.

S08C1042, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 494 (Ga. 2008).

Comment in closing did not warrant new trial. — Aggravated assault conviction was upheld on appeal, and the defendant was not entitled to a new trial, as the prosecution's closing argument, utilizing an analogy between the defendant's case and a similar separate case involving other parties, was within the parameters of an appropriate closing argument. Moss v. State, 278 Ga. App. 221, 628 S.E.2d 648 (2006).

Guilty verdicts were of aggravated assaults of peace officers. — Defendant was convicted of aggravated assault of a peace officer where: (1) the evidence showed that the defendant attempted to run law enforcement officers off the road; (2) the indictment was sufficient to charge aggravated assault of a peace officer; (3) the jury was instructed to determine whether any guilty verdict was aggravated assault or aggravated assault of a peace officer; (4) the jury did not specify whether the guilty verdicts were of assaults against peace officers; and (5) the defendant did not object to the jury's failure to specify whether the convictions were for assaults against peace officers at the time the verdicts were announced. Dupree v. State, 267 Ga. App. 561, 600 S.E.2d 654 (2004).

Mutually exclusive verdict of assault on peace officer and serious injury by vehicle. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated assault on a peace officer and serious injury by vehicle based on reckless driving were mutually exclusive as it was reasonably probable that the jury found the defendant guilty of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1) for intentionally attempting to commit a violent injury to the officer. A verdict of guilt under § 16-5-20(a)(1), requiring proof of intent, was mutually exclusive with a verdict of guilt as to serious injury by vehicle predicated on reckless driving. Dryden v. State, 285 Ga. 281, 676 S.E.2d 175 (2009).

Aggravated assault on security guard. — When, in an obvious attempt to incapacitate an armed security guard, the defendant pulled the trigger of the defendant's own weapon in that direction, an aggravated assault was committed. Lambert v. State, 157 Ga. App. 275, 277 S.E.2d 66 (1981).

Lawful discharge of official duties. — Officers who were summoned to the scene of a domestic disturbance and saw defendant forcibly march defendant's family into their dwelling, quite possibly at gunpoint, had probable cause to effectuate a warrantless arrest for a battery constituting a family violence and, thus, were engaged in the performance of official duties for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. Duitsman v. State, 212 Ga. App. 348, 441 S.E.2d 888 (1994).

Defendant was properly convicted of aggravated assault on a police officer, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(c), when, under the totality of the circumstances, the officer had a particularized and objective basis for suspecting the defendant of criminal activity. Ramirez v. State, 279 Ga. 569, 619 S.E.2d 668 (2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1217, 126 S. Ct. 1435, 164 L. Ed. 2d 138 (2006).

Police officer moonlighting as security guard performing "official duties." — State proved every element of crime charged although indictment charged defendant with aggravated assault on a police officer engaged in the performance of the officer's official duties where the officer was moonlighting as a security guard at the time of the assault, as the officer had an "official duty" to take action when defendant breached the peace. Loumakis v. State, 179 Ga. App. 294, 346 S.E.2d 373 (1986).

Conviction for assault authorized though intended criminal act is completed. — It is the intent of the Legislature that, although an assault may be a criminal attempt, and even though the intended criminal act be completed, a conviction for an assault is authorized. Williams v. State, 141 Ga. App. 201, 233 S.E.2d 48 (1977).

Aggravated assault conviction approved although battery completed. Williams v. State, 141 Ga. App. 201, 233 S.E.2d 48 (1977).

Assault with pistol not completed. — When defendant was arrested, indicted, and tried on three counts of aggravated assault: (1) shooting at another with a pistol; (2) attempting to shoot another with a pistol; and (3) attempting to run over another with an automobile, the assault with the automobile was clearly completed (the car had been stopped and placed in "park") before the assault with the pistol began. However, the evidence did not authorize the jury to conclude that the assault with the pistol was "completed" between the time that defendant fired shots while on the run and the time when defendant caught up with defendant's quarry and attempted to fire additional shots from a stationary position, so that the two charges involving the use of a pistol referred to acts that were parts of a single transaction and defendant therefore could not properly be convicted on both charges. Davis v. State, 186 Ga. App. 491, 367 S.E.2d 884 (1988).

Aggravated assault and hit-and-run are not mutually exclusive crimes. — Aggravated assault with a motor vehicle and hit-and-run with that same vehicle are not mutually exclusive crimes, since an aggravated assault includes a finding of intent which is not an element of hit-and-run. Gutierrez v. State, 235 Ga. App. 878, 510 S.E.2d 570 (1998).

Conduct outside scope of involuntary manslaughter. — Whether the conduct of an accused is lawful at the outset, e.g., in self-defense or unlawful, when what takes place thereafter discloses felonious conduct in committing either an aggravated assault with an instrument likely to produce death or an aggravated battery which causes the death of another, such conduct is not within the scope of involuntary manslaughter. Trask v. State, 132 Ga. App. 645, 208 S.E.2d 591 (1974).

Cruelty to children conviction did not merge with aggravated assault or false imprisonment. — Defendant's cruelty to children in the first degree charge did not merge with the aggravated assault or false imprisonment charge because neither aggravated assault nor false imprisonment required proof that the victim suffered cruel or excessive physical or mental pain. Kirt v. State, No. A10A1933, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 247 (Mar. 22, 2011).

Merger not appropriate. — Trial court did not err in failing to merge an aggravated assault count into a kidnapping with bodily injury count, the aggravated assault count into an aggravated battery count, and the aggravated battery count into the kidnapping count, as each count referred to a separate cut of the victims with a decorative sword that the defendant had pulled off the wall during a domestic dispute with the defendant's spouse and child. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Due to the entry of a guilty plea over 20 years before the filing of a motion to correct alleged illegal sentences, the defendant's merger claim was waived, and since the sentences imposed were not void, the trial court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the motion for correction. Sanders v. State, 282 Ga. App. 834, 640 S.E.2d 353 (2006).

Because the jury could reasonably have concluded that the victim's first two injuries from two non-fatal shots resulted from a separate offense than the third, the earlier shots were sufficient to support the aggravated assault conviction, separate from the third and fatal shot, and there was no merger of the aggravated assault offense with a separate charge of malice murder. Parker v. State, 281 Ga. 490, 640 S.E.2d 44 (2007).

Because separate cruelty to children and aggravated assault counts were based upon acts committed by the defendant on the day preceding the death of the victim, neither of those convictions merged into the felony murder count also filed against the defendant and, accordingly, separate sentences for those crimes were authorized. Christian v. State, 281 Ga. 474, 640 S.E.2d 21 (2007).

Defendant's aggravated assault conviction did not merge into a felony murder conviction because neither the murder nor the underlying felony of criminal attempt to commit armed robbery required the state to prove the element of reasonable apprehension of receiving a violent injury, which was a required element of the aggravated assault count as indicted. Willingham v. State, 281 Ga. 577, 642 S.E.2d 43 (2007).

Defendant's convictions of involuntary manslaughter while in the commission of a simple battery, aggravated assault, aggravated battery, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct were not mutually exclusive, and the trial court did not err in not merging the nonhomicide counts upon sentencing. Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Aggravated assault with a rope and kidnapping with bodily injury offenses did not merge for sentencing purposes as one crime was completed before the other took place, and the crimes were established by separate and distinct facts. McCaskell v. State, 285 Ga. App. 592, 646 S.E.2d 761 (2007).

An aggravated assault conviction did not merge as a matter of fact with a murder conviction because the evidence presented at trial showed that the defendant inflicted a severe, but non-fatal, beating upon the victim that was separate and distinct from the choking and strangling which resulted in the victim's death. Starks v. State, 283 Ga. 164, 656 S.E.2d 518 (2008).

Because the evidence presented against the defendant showed two distinct acts of aggravated assault, separated by time and motive, the two offenses did not merge. Boyd v. State, 289 Ga. App. 342, 656 S.E.2d 864 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 498 (Ga. 2008).

Because charges alleging aggravated assault did not amount to lesser-included offenses as a matter of fact of a charge of first-degree criminal damage to property, and the property offense was not a lesser-included offense of any aggravated assault offense, merger of the offenses was unwarranted. Louis v. State, 290 Ga. App. 106, 658 S.E.2d 897 (2008).

When a defendant pulled out a gun and demanded money from a cab driver, the offense of criminal attempt armed robbery was complete, and the defendant's subsequent acts, including striking the driver on the head, were not necessary to prove that offense; thus, the attempt offense did not merge with aggravated assault offenses for sentencing purposes. Duncan v. State, 290 Ga. App. 32, 658 S.E.2d 780 (2008).

Because: (1) different facts were used to prove an aggravated assault and an armed robbery, specifically, that the armed robbery was complete after the defendant laid a handgun on the counter in the convenience store, demanded that the victim open the register, and a codefendant took money from the a register; and (2) the separate offense of aggravated assault occurred when the defendant struck the victim in the head with the gun, the offenses did not merge as a matter of fact. Thus, the separate sentences imposed for each offense were upheld, and no double jeopardy violation occurred. Garibay v. State, 290 Ga. App. 385, 659 S.E.2d 775 (2008).

As the offense of aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), required proof of at least one additional fact which the offense of robbery by intimidation, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), did not, under the "required evidence" test of O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7, a defendant's aggravated assault conviction did not merge into the defendant's robbery by intimidation conviction. Elamin v. State, 293 Ga. App. 591, 667 S.E.2d 439 (2008).

Defendant's aggravated assault and aggravated battery convictions under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a) and 16-5-24(a) did not merge under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a), although both stemmed from the same act. The aggravated assault charge required proof that the defendant attempted to commit a violent injury with the intent to murder using a deadly weapon, while the aggravated battery charge required proof that the defendant maliciously caused bodily harm to the victim by rendering a member of the victim's body useless; thus, the offenses were distinct, with each requiring proof of a fact which the other did not. Robbins v. State, 293 Ga. App. 584, 667 S.E.2d 684 (2008).

Defendant's aggravated assault convictions under both O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) and (a)(2) did not merge because the state presented evidence that two separate assaults on the victim occurred at separate times and in different ways; from the evidence, the jury could reasonably infer that the defendant used the defendant's hands to choke the victim and that at a separate time and a different location, the defendant also jammed a curling iron down the victim's throat. Lord v. State, 297 Ga. App. 88, 676 S.E.2d 404 (2009).

Trial court did not err in refusing to merge six aggravated assault counts into one count or in charging the jury that it could find the defendant guilty on the six separate counts because the act of firing a weapon into a group made each individual in the group a separate victim and justified a separate count of aggravated assault for each victim. Scott v. State, 302 Ga. App. 111, 690 S.E.2d 242 (2010).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and feticide in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80(a) did not merge for sentencing purposes because the victim of the aggravated assault was the defendant's girlfriend, while the victim of the feticide was the girlfriend's unborn child; the merger doctrine does not apply if each of the charged crimes was committed against a different victim. Carmichael v. State, 305 Ga. App. 651, 700 S.E.2d 650 (2010).

Defendant's guilty pleas for aggravated assault with intent to rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) and kidnapping in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) were not accepted in violation of the constitutional prohibition against double jeopardy because the offenses did not merge as a matter of law since each of the offenses were separate and required proof of different facts; the state asserted that the defendant had dragged the victim from the front of a laundromat facility into a bathroom in the back of the facility, which formed a basis for the kidnapping charge, and that the defendant had sexually assaulted the victim while holding the victim in the bathroom, which formed a basis for the aggravated assault with the intent to rape charge. Shelton v. State, 307 Ga. App. 599, 705 S.E.2d 699 (2011).

Merger appropriate. — Two counts of aggravated assault merge since both convictions were based on the same act. Smith v. State, 279 Ga. App. 211, 630 S.E.2d 833 (2006).

Upon the concession by the state on appeal, the two aggravated-assault counts the defendant was convicted of should have merged because there was no ensuing interval between the defendant's first act of pointing the gun at the victim's head and the later act of lowering the gun's aim and shooting that victim in the leg. Mack v. State, 283 Ga. App. 172, 641 S.E.2d 194 (2007).

Although an armed robbery served as the predicate felony for one count of felony murder, there was a separate felony murder count predicated on aggravated assault; hence, when the jury found the defendant guilty of both counts, it was within the trial court's discretion to choose to merge the aggravated assault rather than the armed robbery into the felony murder count for which appellant was sentenced. Hill v. State, 281 Ga. 795, 642 S.E.2d 64 (2007).

One of defendant's aggravated assault convictions merged as a matter of fact with armed robbery. Fagan v. State, 283 Ga. App. 784, 643 S.E.2d 268 (2007).

When the defendant pulled out a gun and demanded money from a cab driver, put the vehicle in park, hit the driver on the head with the gun and shot the gun into the floor, then ordered the driver out of the cab, the offenses of aggravated assault with intent to rob and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon merged as a matter of fact for sentencing purposes, as the evidence did not support a separate conviction for assault with intent to rob; since any reasonable apprehension of receiving a violent or bodily injury related to the threat posed by the gun, not to the actions of putting the vehicle into park and directing the driver out of the cab, no separate aggravated assault occurred. Duncan v. State, 290 Ga. App. 32, 658 S.E.2d 780 (2008).

Defendant's aggravated assault convictions were to be merged with armed robbery and kidnapping convictions as the same set of facts were used to prove the offenses. Lenon v. State, 290 Ga. App. 626, 660 S.E.2d 16 (2008).

Because a defendant's convictions for armed robbery (O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a)) and aggravated assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)) were based on the same conduct—the defendant's pointing a gun at the victim with the intent to rob the victim—merger was required. Therefore, the sentence for the aggravated assault was vacated. Reed v. State, 293 Ga. App. 479, 668 S.E.2d 1 (2008).

Trial court erred in failing to merge a defendant's offenses of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) and aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), for sentencing purposes, because the assault was a lesser included offense of the battery offense under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(1), given the defendant's single attack on the victim with a golf club. Allen v. State, 302 Ga. App. 190, 690 S.E.2d 492 (2010).

Merger with malice murder conviction. — Trial court did not err in failing to merge the aggravated assault for which the defendant was sentenced into defendant's malice murder conviction because the two crimes were not established by the same conduct; the defendant's conduct did not establish the commission of both the aggravated assault and the murder because the aggravated assault was established by evidence that the defendant and the codefendant beat and strangled the victim, whereas the murder was established by evidence that they killed the victim by stabbing the victim's body. Hall v. State, 286 Ga. 358, 687 S.E.2d 819 (2010).

Separate judgments of conviction and sentences for aggravated assault were vacated because the defendant was convicted of and sentenced for both the malice murders of the two victims and the aggravated assaults of those victims, and although there was no merger of those crimes as a matter of law, the record established that the aggravated assault convictions merged into the malice murder convictions as a matter of fact. Vergara v. State, 287 Ga. 194, 695 S.E.2d 215 (2010).

Defendant's conviction and sentence for aggravated assault was vacated and the case was remanded to the trial court for resentencing because the aggravated assault conviction merged into the defendant's malice murder conviction as a matter of fact even though there was no merger of those crimes as a matter of law. Sharpe v. State, 288 Ga. 565, 707 S.E.2d 338 (2011).

Aggravated assault did not merge with armed robbery. — As the armed robberies and aggravated assaults the defendant was charged with were committed against different victims, the crimes did not merge as a matter of law or fact. Verdree v. State, 299 Ga. App. 673, 683 S.E.2d 632 (2009).

Aggravated assault and armed robbery should merge. — Trial court erred in failing to merge aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), and armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41, counts because the state relied on the same act of assault to establish defendant's guilt of aggravated assault and armed robbery, and although the state would have been able to indict the defendant for aggravated assault based on conduct separate and distinct from the defendant's act of hitting the victim in the head with a baseball bat, the indictment specifically charged the defendant with the offense of aggravated assault; while armed robbery requires proof of additional facts, like aggravated assault with intent to rob, aggravated assault under § 16-5-21(a)(2) does not require proof of a fact not required to establish armed robbery. Taylor v. State, 304 Ga. App. 395, 696 S.E.2d 686 (2010).

Aggravated assault offense did not merge with kidnapping charge. — Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, which was based on the defendant's striking the victim with a pistol, did not merge with the defendant's kidnapping conviction, which was based on the defendant's forcing the victim upstairs, because the assault occurred prior to the kidnapping and was not necessary to accomplish the kidnapping. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

Trial court did not err under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7 in failing to merge convictions for aggravated assault and aggravated battery with a conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury, as each crime required proof of at least one different element, and the state presented independent evidence to prove each individual crime as set out in the indictment. Evidence that the defendant pointed a gun at the victim and fired the gun at the floor near the victim, that the defendant used a wooden stick resembling a baseball bat to repeatedly hit the victim, and that the defendant hit and kicked the victim while the victim was tied up supported the three aggravated assault counts; aggravated battery was established by evidence that the defendant broke the victim's nose, wrist, and shoulder and knocked out two teeth and by evidence that the defendant burned the victim's hand and caused the victim to be bitten by fire ants; and kidnapping with bodily injury was proven by evidence of injuries to the victim due to being bound by rope. Rouse v. State, 295 Ga. App. 61, 670 S.E.2d 869 (2008).

Trial court correctly sentenced the defendant for both aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and kidnapping with bodily injury, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, because the crimes did not merge since each of the two crimes required proof of at least one fact that the other did not, and the state provided such proof. Kidnapping required proof of asportation, holding the victim against the victim's will, and bodily injury, which was not required to prove aggravated assault; and aggravated assault required proof that the defendant used the defendant's hands, with either the intent to cause a violent injury or which placed the victim in reasonable fear of receiving a violent injury, but the kidnapping charge did not require such proof. Mayberry v. State, 301 Ga. App. 503, 687 S.E.2d 893 (2009).

Convictions for aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), and kidnapping, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, did not merge because the aggravated assault was completed when the defendant pointed a gun at the victim and grabbed the victim around the neck, while the asportation for the kidnapping occurred when the defendant then dragged the victim into another room. The movement of the victim from one room to another within the hotel room, even though of minimal duration, created an additional danger to the victim by enhancing the defendant's control over the victim, and it was not an inherent part of the aggravated assault. Williams v. State, 307 Ga. App. 675, 705 S.E.2d 906 (2011).

Merger with involuntary manslaughter. — Defendant's sufficiency challenge became moot on appeal as the trial court merged the involuntary manslaughter count into the aggravated assault count for sentencing purposes.

Ramirez v. State, 288 Ga. App. 249, 653 S.E.2d 837 (2007).

Merger with voluntary manslaughter. — Trial court erred in entering a judgment of conviction against the defendant for aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), because that conviction should have been merged into the defendant's conviction for voluntary manslaughter, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-2(a); the defendant was charged in the indictment with voluntary manslaughter and aggravated assault for the stabbing of the victim, and the undisputed evidence at trial showed that the victim was stabbed one time in the chest, causing the victim's death. Muckle v. State, 307 Ga. App. 634, 705 S.E.2d 721 (2011).

Corroborating accomplice testimony sufficient to support conviction. — Because defendant's four accomplices in commission of multiple armed robberies and aggravated assaults corroborated each other as to defendant's participation in the crimes, convictions on those offenses were upheld on appeal. Hawkins v. State, 290 Ga. App. 686, 660 S.E.2d 474 (2008).

Because of the corroborating testimony from the defendant's two accomplices, the accomplice testimony was admissible to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(3), and aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Scott v. State, 302 Ga. App. 111, 690 S.E.2d 242 (2010).

There was sufficient corroboration of the defendant as a perpetrator of the principal crime, and, ultimately, sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, false imprisonment, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and burglary because there was circumstantial evidence to show that the defendant committed a similar transaction after the first incident, that the same gun an accomplice bought and used in the first crime was used in the second crime and ended up in a car at the house of the defendant's mother afterwards, and that the defendant was nervous and felt guilty about events that the defendant participated in with the accomplice, whom the defendant had only known a short time; that corroborative evidence connected the accomplice to the crimes. Ward v. State, 304 Ga. App. 517, 696 S.E.2d 471 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, burglary, aggravated assault, criminal attempt to commit armed robbery, criminal attempt to commit burglary, and sexual battery because two codefendant's testified that the defendant participated in the home invasion, and that testimony was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction for the crimes committed at the home. Martinez v. State, 306 Ga. App. 512, 702 S.E.2d 747 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendants guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of malice murder and aggravated assault because the independent corroborating evidence in the case was substantial; an accomplice's testimony implicating the defendants was corroborated by the aggravated assault victim, who positively identified one of the defendants, that defendant's own admission to a woman in the defendant's apartment, evidence that the second defendant had sustained shotgun wounds on the evening of the crimes, ballistics evidence tying that defendant to the crime scene, and the presence of that defendant's blood on the first defendant's clothing and in the getaway vehicle. Ward v. State, 288 Ga. 641, 706 S.E.2d 430 (2011).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon beyond a reasonable doubt, and the trial court properly denied the defendant's motions for directed verdict and new trial because the jury could have determined that a witness's testimony provided corroboration for the codefendant's identification of the defendant; further, corroboration for the testimony of the witness and the codefendant was provided by a neighbors' description of the robbery and shooting, by the description of the codefendant's wife of the codefendant's demeanor and behavior that day, and by physical evidence found

Parties to crime. — Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendants were parties to the aggravated assault because the defendants supplied the shooter with the weapons and the bullets knowing that the shooter intended to use those items for a personal avengance against the intended victim and the shooter also attempted to fire at the occupants of the van. Cammon v. State, 269 Ga. 470, 500 S.E.2d 329 (1998).

Evidence that the defendant was seen making notes at the crime scene the day of the shooting, that the defendant accompanied the coconspirator knowing that the coconspirator intended to rob a cab driver, and that the defendant drove the coconspirator away after the shooting of the cab driver authorized the jury to find the defendant was a party to the crime of aggravated assault committed with a deadly weapon, and hence to felony murder. Brown v. State, 278 Ga. 724, 609 S.E.2d 312 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to show that a juvenile was a party to aggravated assault on the victim when the defendant and three other men approached the victim with guns, placing the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediate injury, and the victim identified the juvenile to police as one of the men. In the Interest of M.D.L., 271 Ga. App. 738, 610 S.E.2d 687 (2005).

Despite the defendant's claim of innocence, convictions for armed robbery and two counts of aggravated assault were upheld on appeal, given sufficient evidence showing that the defendant waited at the scene of the robbery and then assisted the codefendants in an attempted escape; hence, the defendant was not entitled to a directed verdict of acquittal and the state was not required to exclude every reasonable hypothesis except guilt as required by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Jordan v. State, 281 Ga. App. 419, 636 S.E.2d 151 (2006).

Defendant's aggravated assault and robbery convictions were upheld on appeal, as evidence including the defendant's admission and flight from the scene authorized the jury to conclude that the defendant went to an apartment complex intending to participate in the robbery, and in fact participated in the robbery by acting as a lookout and an additional show of force; hence, the jury was authorized to infer criminal intent from the defendant's conduct before, during, and after the commission of the crime. Millender v. State, 286 Ga. App. 331, 648 S.E.2d 777 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1717, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 80 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence supported a conviction of aggravated assault with a knife when two codefendants repeatedly struck the victim, the defendant struck the victim and threatened the victim's life, the defendant and the first codefendant entered a pharmacy to buy duct tape, and while alone with the victim, the second codefendant held a knife on the victim where the second codefendant could reach the knife and where the victim could see the knife; this authorized the conclusion that the second codefendant committed aggravated assault and that the defendant was a party. Rhines v. State, 288 Ga. App. 128, 653 S.E.2d 500 (2007).

Evidence established more than the mere presence of the defendant during the commission of the offense of aggravated assault and felony murder predicated on aggravated assault: (1) the defendant assaulted the victim during the drive to the murder scene; (2) the defendant participated in a plot to burn the victim's body and stood lookout while the body was buried; (3) the defendant did not attempt to report the crime; and (4) the defendant watched as another person stabbed the victim before attempting to intervene. Navarrete v. State, 283 Ga. 156, 656 S.E.2d 814 (2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 104, 172 L.Ed.2d 33 (2008).

Evidence that the defendant drove a codefendant away from the crime scene in a subdivision after the codefendant shot the victim and that a box of bullets was found in the defendant's car when the defendant was later arrested did not support the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault and of possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. The defendant's possession of a box of bullets of the same caliber as those used in the murder weapon in no way proved the defendant's possession of the weapon during the commission of the assault; driving the codefendant away with knowledge that the codefendant had committed the crime did not, in and of itself, render the defendant guilty as a party to the crime under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20; and to the extent that the evidence that the defendant's car had been parked at some point with the car's front end facing in the direction going out of the subdivision constituted circumstantial evidence of guilt, the evidence did not exclude every other reasonable hypothesis, as required by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Ratana v. State, 297 Ga. App. 747, 678 S.E.2d 193 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty as a party to malice murder, aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and tampering with evidence because the evidence showed that before, during, and after the commission of the crimes, the defendant was present and shared companionship with the defendant's brothers; the state's evidence authorized the inferences that the defendant, who had assisted the defendant's brothers in attacking the cousin of one of the victims, was not an innocent bystander; that the defendant drove the defendant's brothers to the crime scene knowing that one of the brothers was armed, that the defendant willingly stayed with the defendant's brothers while the brothers tried to start a fight and threatened to kill someone, and that the defendant ran to the defendant's car and drove the brothers away immediately after the brothers had shot one of the victims. Teasley v. State, 288 Ga. 468, 704 S.E.2d 800 (2010).

Coercion defense rejected. — In a bench trial for armed robbery and aggravated assault, the evidence authorized the trial court to conclude that the state had sufficiently disproved the defendant's defense that the defendant had been coerced by one of the defendant's companions into committing the crimes; the defendant had not mentioned coercion in either of the defendant's two statements to police, one in which the defendant had admitted to committing the crimes, and it was not until trial that the defendant claimed coercion. Edwards v. State, 285 Ga. App. 227, 645 S.E.2d 699 (2007).

Identification of defendant. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated assault, as defendant's challenge to that conviction was meritless; defendant's contention that the evidence was insufficient had to be rejected because it was premised on the argument that the victims' identification of defendant as a perpetrator was tainted by an impermissibly suggestive photographic lineup and the photographic lineup procedure was not impermissibly suggestive. Evans v. State, 261 Ga. App. 22, 581 S.E.2d 676 (2003).

Because a burglary victim recognized the defendant before a photographic lineup was introduced, the defendant did not show deficient performance or prejudice based on trial counsel's failure to object to the lineup; in any event, the evidence was sufficient to sustain the convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, making terroristic threats, and possession of a firearm during the commission of the felonies under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(1), (a)(2), 16-7-1(a), 16-8-41(a), 16-11-37(a), and 16-11-106(b)(1). Williams v. State, 270 Ga. App. 845, 608 S.E.2d 310 (2004).

Sufficient evidence supported convictions for aggravated assault, kidnapping, armed robbery, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, even though none of the victims could identify the defendant as the gunman in the robbery due to the fact that the defendant wore a mask, because defendant was found shortly after the robbery with cash, weapons, a ski mask, a car and clothing matching the victims' description; surveillance videotape of the robbery was shown to the jury to determine whether defendant was the person on the videotape. Johnson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 41, 625 S.E.2d 411 (2005).

Defendant's aggravated assault conviction was upheld on appeal, as the victim's identification of the defendant as the perpetrator of the aggravated assault, both during and after the altercation, was sufficient evidence to uphold the conviction, and evidence of a subsequent altercation between the two, like evidence of a prior difficulty, was probative evidence that the victim immediately identified the defendant to police on the day of the incident. Bond v. State, 283 Ga. App. 620, 642 S.E.2d 223 (2007).

Because the evidence showed that the victim sufficiently identified the defendant as the perpetrator of an aggravated assault and armed robbery (1) to officers at the scene; (2) by means of a photographic lineup; and (3) at trial, the appeals court rejected the defendant's sufficiency challenge as to that element. Wallace v. State, 289 Ga. App. 497, 657 S.E.2d 874 (2008).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), and aggravated sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(2), involving four different victims on three separate dates; both the husband and the wife, the victims in the first criminal incident, identified the defendant in court as the perpetrator of the crimes. Two separate DNA analyses testified to by two forensic biologists showed that the defendant's sperm was present in the vaginas of the other two female victims. Robins v. State, 298 Ga. App. 70, 679 S.E.2d 92 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for new trial under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-21 after a jury convicted the defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated assault, and false imprisonment because the evidence was legally sufficient to support the crimes of which the defendant was convicted; the victim was shown a photo array containing six photographs and immediately picked the defendant's photo as the man who held a gun to the victim's head during the incident, and the victim also identified the defendant in court. Delgiudice v. State, 308 Ga. App. 397, 707 S.E.2d 603 (2011).

Trial court authorized to find defendant guilty beyond reasonable doubt. — See McKinney v. State, 166 Ga. App. 718, 305 S.E.2d 446 (1983).

Defendant's admission sufficient. — Defendant's recorded admission to a co-worker that the defendant killed the victim with the assistance of a codefendant was sufficient to support a convictions for murder and aggravated assault. Williams v. State, 280 Ga. 539, 630 S.E.2d 410 (2006).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — See Carter v. State, 168 Ga. App. 177, 308 S.E.2d 438 (1983); Davis v. State, 168 Ga. App. 272, 308 S.E.2d 602 (1983); Hall v. State, 172 Ga. Evidence was sufficient to find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault when the defendant, a passenger in a taxicab, put a knife to the throat of the driver and forced the driver to a different destination, and a struggle ensued resulting in the driver restraining the defendant. Fair v. State, 172 Ga. App. 49, 321 S.E.2d 790 (1984); Black v. State, 261 Ga. 791, 410 S.E.2d 740 (1991), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 839, 113 S. Ct. 118, 121 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1992).

When the defendant was found inside his former girlfriend's broken-into apartment, hid in a bathroom enclosure, with a removed kitchen knife and a letter recognizing defendant's own propensity for violence, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to conclude that the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of burglary since there was sufficient evidence that the defendant intended to commit an aggravated assault. Johnson v. State, 207 Ga. App. 34, 427 S.E.2d 29 (1993).

Rational trier of fact could have found the defendant guilty of murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime beyond a reasonable doubt. Walden v. State, 264 Ga. 92, 441 S.E.2d 247 (1994).

In light of the overwhelming evidence produced at trial, even though one victim expressed some uncertainty regarding defendant's identity, a rational trier of fact could determine defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt of armed robbery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon. Billings v. State, 212 Ga. App. 125, 441 S.E.2d 262 (1994).

Viewed in a light most favorable to the verdict, evidence that the defendant identified the defendant as the person who shot the victim was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated assault. Cyrus v. State, 231 Ga. App. 71, 498 S.E.2d 554 (1998).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of aggravated assault beyond a reasonable doubt. Lattimer v. State, 231 Ga. App. 594, 499 S.E.2d 671 (1998).

Voice identification testimony, along with circumstantial evidence showing invaders were familiar with the internal operations and layout of the store, allowed the jury to reach the conclusion that defendant was guilty of armed robbery, aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Whitehead v. State, 232 Ga. App. 140, 499 S.E.2d 922 (1998).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of robbery, aggravated assault, felony obstruction of a law enforcement officer, attempting to elude a law enforcement officer and driving under the influence of drugs. Chisholm v. State, 231 Ga. App. 835, 500 S.E.2d 14 (1998).

Evidence, which included a positive identification by two eyewitnesses who testified that the defendants kicked the victim repeatedly, was sufficient to support the guilty verdicts. Cox v. State, 242 Ga. App. 334, 528 S.E.2d 871 (2000).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime against a person because: (1) the codefendant jumped out of the car defendant was driving and told the victim and two other men to empty their pockets as the codefendant was robbing the victims and then the codefendant began shooting; and (2) the victim was shot in the head and later died. Thomas v. State, 275 Ga. 882, 572 S.E.2d 537 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 where four victims testified that they either saw or heard shots fired from defendant's truck and were frightened as a result. Tanner v. State, 259 Ga. App. 94, 576 S.E.2d 71 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions for felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime where the record revealed that the defendant was riding in a car, made a gang sign to some people on the street, and in response to their obscene gesture, the defendant took out a gun and fired at them, killing two people and wounding one; the defendant's contention that the defendant was acting to protect the defendant and others in the car, that the defendant fired into the air, and that the defendant did not mean to hurt anyone was found to lack merit. Ingram v. State, 276 Ga. 223, 576 S.E.2d 855 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to allow a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of aggravated assault beyond a reasonable doubt where defendant reached around the victim and cut the victim's throat, and then stabbed the victim twice in the back. Bell v. State, 276 Ga. 206, 576 S.E.2d 876 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated assault where defendant repeatedly hit the victim with a skillet, and knocked the victim unconscious. Lord v. State, 259 Ga. App. 449, 577 S.E.2d 103 (2003).

Evidence, including the victim's unequivocal identification of defendant from a book of 150 pictures and the victim's identification of defendant at trial, was sufficient to allow a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of aggravated assault beyond a reasonable doubt. Baker v. State, 259 Ga. App. 433, 577 S.E.2d 282 (2003), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of malice murder, felony murder, burglary, aggravated assault, kidnapping with bodily injury, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony where the defendant: (1) planned the crimes, and was armed with a gun and handcuffs; (2) broke into the defendant's in-laws' house after severing their phone line; (3) shot and killed the defendant's father-in-law and wounded the defendant's mother-in-law while they lay in bed; (4) handcuffed the defendant's bleeding mother-in-law to the mother-in-law's nine-year-old child and left them tethered to a bed rail in a room with the mother-in-law's dead spouse and the defendant's two-year-old child; and (5) abducted the defendant's estranged spouse and the spouse's 17 year-old sibling to a mobile home where the defendant made them take showers while the defendant watched, and then raped them both. Sallie v. State, 276 Ga. 506, 578 S.E.2d 444, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 902, 124 S. Ct. 251, 157 L. Ed. 2d 185 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions of aggravated assault with a knife, aggravated assault with defendant's fists and feet, and false imprisonment, where the police found defendant's love interest laying on the floor of a hotel room, bruised, with knives in the hotel room, and the love interest testified that defendant had kicked and hit the love interest. Banks v. State, 260 Ga. App. 515, 580 S.E.2d 308 (2003).

Circumstantial evidence supported defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, burglary, armed robbery, cruelty to children, theft by receiving stolen property, and possession of a firearm as: (1) defendant was driving a stolen car that defendant knew was not defendant's own; (2) defendant returned to the victims' house, which defendant had left only a short time before, slowly circling the victims' residence, pointing at the house; (3) defendant appeared to let codefendants out of the car for a specific purpose, since defendant saw them enter the victims' home and waited for them, demonstrating that defendant knew they would return shortly; (4) when codefendants ran back to the car and jumped in, defendant drove off in response to their rapid return; and (5) shortly thereafter, defendant abandoned the stolen car. Parnell v. State, 260 Ga. App. 213, 581 S.E.2d 263 (2003).

Evidence that defendant unlawfully entered the victim's residence with intent to commit assault therein and was in possession of a gun was sufficient for conviction. Simmons v. State, 262 Ga. App. 164, 585 S.E.2d 93 (2003).

Defendant was properly found guilty of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, aggravated assault with intent to rob under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106 where the footprints observed along the path between the crime scene and the area where defendant was apprehended matched the size and soles of defendant's shoes and defendant was identified as the robber based on defendant's clothing, shoes and "build." Mack v. State, 263 Ga. App. 186, 587 S.E.2d 132 (2003).

Even though the store clerk did not testify, the evidence of the store surveillance videotape of defendant waiving a gun at the store clerk was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, despite the defendant's contentions that the videotape was ambiguous as the weight and credibility to be assigned to the videotape was solely within the purview of the jury. Cecil v. State, 263 Ga. App. 48, 587 S.E.2d 197 (2003).

Evidence that defendant, who was seated in the passenger seat of an automobile, and the victim, who was standing outside the automobile, argued, that the victim hit defendant, and that defendant then shot the victim, paralyzing the victim, was sufficient to sustain defendant's aggravated assault conviction. Bailey v.

Defendant was properly convicted of aggravated assault for participating in breaking down the door of an apartment belonging to the victim and the victim's spouse because the spouse was dizzy and crying during the incident in which shots were fired. Meadows v. State, 264 Ga. App. 160, 590 S.E.2d 173 (2003).

Rational trier of fact was authorized to find that both defendants burglarized the victims' residence; that, once inside, they took money, clothing, and other personal property by use of a gun; that the first defendant also committed an aggravated assault on the victim by striking the victim in the head with a handgun and was, therefore, in possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime; and that both defendants, along with their cohorts, had been in possession of the cocaine which was tossed out the vehicle they were riding in and found along the roadway. Davis v. State, 264 Ga. App. 221, 590 S.E.2d 192 (2003).

When defendant robbed victims at gunpoint with two accomplices, the testimony of one accomplice that defendant was involved in the robbery was sufficient to corroborate testimony to the same effect from defendant's other accomplice and sustain defendant's convictions for armed robbery and aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-41(a) and 16-5-21(a)(1), (2). Gallimore v. State, 264 Ga. App. 629, 591 S.E.2d 485 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for arson, felony murder, and aggravated assault, resulting from a fire set at a residence occupied by defendant's sister-in-law, her four children, and her 12-year-old brother where: (1) defendant confronted defendant's sister-in-law at her home, alleging that she had stolen items from defendant's mobile home; (2) a physical altercation ensued between defendant and the sister-in-law; (3) defendant retrieved a gasoline can from defendant's car, poured gasoline onto the back door of the sister-in-law's home, and ignited it; and (4) the sister-in-law's three-year-old child died from the injuries sustained in the fire. Tarvin v. State, 277 Ga. 509, 591 S.E.2d 777 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to affirm defendant's aggravated assault conviction; whether defendant engaged in unprovoked attacks, acted in self-defense, or acted in defense of the defendant's love interest was for the jury to resolve, and it obviously resolved the question in defendant's disfavor. Chalvatzis v. State, 265 Ga. App. 699, 595 S.E.2d 558 (2004).

Since the jury was to weigh the credibility of the witnesses testimony and was instructed on self defense, accident, and criminal intent, its decision to believe the victim's and the victim's love interest's story regarding how a stabbing occurred instead of defendant's version of the events and its subsequent decision related to defendant's intent in the stabbing, were controlling on appeal and was sufficient for defendant's conviction for aggravated assault. Hazelwood v. State, 265 Ga. App. 709, 595 S.E.2d 564 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to show that defendant committed an aggravated assault against the victims where it showed that after one victim separated defendant and defendant's sibling, who were involved in a minor altercation, defendant left and came back with a gun, which defendant fired into the truck in which the victims were sitting; accordingly, the evidence showed defendant intended to commit violence to the person of another. Bishop v. State, 266 Ga. App. 129, 596 S.E.2d 674 (2004).

Evidence of defendant's voluntary and willing participation in the crimes, through providing the use of defendant's car to transport the other three named in the indictment to and from the scene and waiting in the vehicle while two of them committed aggravated assault, burglary, murder, and aggravated robbery, supported defendant's convictions for the same as a co-conspirator. Silvers v. State, 278 Ga. 45, 597 S.E.2d 373 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions as a party to the offenses of armed robbery, kidnapping, false imprisonment, burglary, and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21, 16-5-40, 16-5-41, 16-7-1, and 16-8-41, because: (1) defendant received information from the defendant's love interest, about the victims' house, the location of safes, where money was located, and about the alarm system; (2) the day after the home invasion the love interest saw defendant and defendant showed the love interest a stack of cash, and defendant told the love interest it might be the victim's money; and (3) an FBI informant met with defendant and defendant told the informant that defendant had been shorted money from the robbery, and that defendant got the layout of the house from the former daughter-in-law. Pope v. State, 266 Ga. App. 658, 598 S.E.2d 48 (2004).

Victim's testimony that the victim saw defendant remove what the victim thought was a gun from defendant's waistband, heard a clicking noise, and was so afraid that defendant would shoot victim that the victim jumped from a moving car, after which the victim heard what sounded like a shot being fired as the victim jumped, was sufficient to allow a rational jury to convict defendant of aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Jefferies v. State, 267 Ga. App. 694, 600 S.E.2d 753 (2004).

Defendant's statements to police and the victim's prior inconsistent statements were sufficient to support conviction for aggravated assault, despite the fact that the victim recanted at trial. Wyche-Hinkle v. State, 268 Ga. App. 898, 602 S.E.2d 902 (2004).

There was sufficient credible evidence to support a jury's verdict finding the defendant guilty of committing voluntary manslaughter and aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-2 and 16-5-21, respectively, because there was testimony from three surviving witnesses that the defendant shot at their car as they drove by, killing one of the occupants; there was further testimony that the parties had a history of disputes between themselves, that the victim's brother had fired a shot at the defendant earlier in the day, and the defendant's claim that the defendant thought that as the car drove by, the victim was reaching for a gun, was not found credible. Mullins v. State, 270 Ga. App. 271, 605 S.E.2d 913 (2004).

There was sufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict that the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 and of malice murder in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1, because the defendant saw the victim trying to break up a fight between the victim's sibling and another person, the defendant became angry and followed the victim and the victim's sibling after the fight broke up, the defendant then swore at them and shot at them, and the defendant's claim of self-defense was not found to be credible. Harris v. State, 278 Ga. 596, 604 S.E.2d 788 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support felony murder and aggravated assault convictions because: (1) defendant, after exchanging blows with the defendant's spouse while in a car, left the area but returned shortly thereafter in the car; (2) one eyewitness saw defendant strike the defendant's spouse with the front of the car, back up striking the defendant's spouse again with the rear of the car, and drive off; (3) other witnesses saw two people brought to the scene by defendant beating and stomping the victim; and (4) the medical examiner testified that the victim died from blunt force head trauma consistent with being struck by a vehicle and that the force of the fatal blow would most likely have left the victim unconscious or unable to walk around. Rankin v. State, 278 Ga. 704, 606 S.E.2d 269 (2004).

Sufficient evidence, including testimony from the child victim identifying defendant's vehicle, evidence of defendant's DNA matching that of the victim and expert testimony that the frequency of such occurrence was approximately one in two billion in the Caucasian population, and similar transaction evidence, supported defendant's kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, and first-degree cruelty to children convictions. Morita v. State, 270 Ga. App. 372, 606 S.E.2d 595 (2004).

In addition to the second codefendant's testimony, the state showed that, shortly after the murder, defendant was in possession of the victim's cab, that the victim's blood was found in the vehicle and on defendant, and that defendant made incriminating admissions to others; thus, the evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find proof beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt of malice murder, armed robbery, aggravated assault, hijacking a motor vehicle, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Wicks v. State, 278 Ga. 550, 604 S.E.2d 768 (2004).

Evidence that the defendant's vehicle was seen at the victim's residence around the time the victim was murdered, the defendant's subsequent arrest in a hotel room paid for with the victim's credit card, and the presence of the victim's blood on the defendant's boots when arrested was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Moore v. State, 279 Ga. 45, 609 S.E.2d 340 (2005).

Defendant's multiple convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, kidnapping, possessing a firearm during the commission of a felony, burglary, and kidnapping with bodily injury, were supported by sufficient evidence because defendant and another robbed a store while holding the two owners at gunpoint, the defendant led police on a high-speed car chase, and the defendant broke into and robbed two homes, one of which had an occupant that the defendant beat; only one store owner's testimony was needed to establish the facts to support the aggravated assault conviction. Owens v. State, 271 Ga. App. 365, 609 S.E.2d 670 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for felony murder, aggravated assault, and giving a false statement when the defendant and the codefendant were arrested when the codefendant sought medical treatment for a gunshot wound sustained in the incident, the codefendant gave police a false name and said the codefendant was shot when someone tried to rob the codefendant, the codefendant told a neighbor who saw the wound that someone else was worse off than the codefendant was, the defendant asked the neighbor's niece to tell police the codefendant was at the niece's house on the night of the crime and was robbed when the codefendant left, and, while in jail, the defendant told one inmate the defendant shot someone in the incident and told another inmate the defendant was involved in a robbery of this victim that went bad, and that the defendant and the codefendant had been looking for a safe with money and marijuana. Styles v. State, 279 Ga. 134, 610 S.E.2d 23 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault and burglary, after the defendant threatened and broke a window in the victim's home, reached in and tried to grab the victim, and the victim positively identified the defendant in a show-up identification that was found to be fair under the totality of the circumstances. Taylor v. State, 271 Ga. App. 701, 610 S.E.2d 668 (2005).

Sufficient evidence supported aggravated assault conviction because both the victim and another witness testified that defendant stabbed the victim, and a nurse testified that the victim's injury was serious. Hampton v. State, 272 Ga. App. 273, 612 S.E.2d 96 (2005).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper, even though defendant was acquitted of kidnapping with bodily injury, false imprisonment, and aggravated assault, as Georgia did not recognize the inconsistent verdict rule; further, the convictions were not necessarily inconsistent as the jury could have found that defendant raped the victim, but did not commit the other crimes. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Because the victim's statement of sexual abuse was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to convict defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, the victim's testimony did not have to be corroborated by physical evidence. Gartrell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 726, 613 S.E.2d 226 (2005).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), because defendant willingly participated in a gunfight in a crowded parking lot, which resulted in a fatal shooting of an innocent bystander;

the fact that defendant's codefendant was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, based on the underlying crime of reckless conduct, did not provide a basis for defendant's challenge to the conviction, as these were different acts committed by different defendants. Barber v. State, 273 Ga. App. 129, 614 S.E.2d 105 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for aggravated assault and voluntary manslaughter because: (1) defendant and the victim had threatened to kill each other; (2) the victim died from a gunshot wound inflicted when the victim "stepped in" to a fight between defendant and another; (3) the victim did not have a gun or own a gun; and (4) the fatal head wound was inflicted from at least two-and-a-half to three feet away and rendered the victim unconscious. Hall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 203, 614 S.E.2d 844 (2005).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, because there was sufficient evidence to support the convictions for aggravated assault and reckless conduct, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2) and 16-5-60(b), respectively; defendant and the codefendants were involved in a physical altercation with two restaurant patrons, and a codefendant's testimony that defendant retrieved a gun and shot the victim was sufficiently repeated by the testimony of other witnesses, who also connected defendant with the shooting pursuant to the corroboration requirement in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Baker v. State, 273 Ga. App. 297, 614 S.E.2d 904 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for felony murder, voluntary manslaughter, and aggravated assault, as an eyewitness testified that the defendant was the only person to pull out a weapon in a confrontation at a nightclub, that the defendant fired a weapon at the victim, who had previously struck the defendant's love interest, and at two other victims who were attempting to leave. Rodriguez v. State, 274 Ga. App. 549, 618 S.E.2d 177 (2005).

Because defendant fatally stabbed the estranged spouse's love interest, stabbed the spouse in the head, and then bragged about the actions, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of malice murder and aggravated assault. Henry v. State, 279 Ga. 615, 619 S.E.2d 609 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, kidnapping with bodily injury, and possession of a knife during the commission of a felony, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2), 16-5-24, 16-5-40, and 16-11-106, respectively, were supported by the evidence, as defendant was engaged in a domestic dispute with defendant's spouse and child, wherein defendant argued, threatened to kill them, and locked them in a bathroom, punched and hit the spouse, and stabbed them each multiple times with a decorative sword that defendant had removed from the wall; there was sufficient evidence to show that defendant did not stab them in the midst of a struggle over possession of the sword, but instead, that defendant intended to stab or cut them. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Defendant's convictions of aggravated stalking, burglary, aggravated assault, and false imprisonment, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-91, 16-7-1, 16-5-21, and 16-5-41, were supported by sufficient evidence because, despite the victim's recantation at trial, the victim stated to police earlier that defendant broke into the victim's apartment, scratched and damaged furniture and other property, tied the victim up, locked the victim in the bedroom for several hours, harmed the victim, threatened that defendant and defendant's friends were going to lock the victim in a basement for a few months, and defendant had been waiting for the victim to arrive home. Andrews v. State, 275 Ga. App. 426, 620 S.E.2d 629 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for felony and malice murder, and aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-1 and 16-5-21, as well as a possession of a firearm conviction, because defendant helped a sibling retaliate against the victim, who had previously sold the sibling fake drugs, by going to the victim's place of work, fatally shooting the victim multiple times, and planting fake drugs on the body; defendant's claim that defendant was in another state at the time of the incident was refuted by a copy of the criminal history which showed that defendant was out on bail just days before the incident, as well as testimony from the victim's roommate. Copprie v. State, 279 Ga. 771, 621 S.E.2d 457 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for malice murder and aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-1 and 16-5-21, respectively, as well as for possession of a firearm during a felony, because defendant was identified by multiple witnesses as having fatally shot the victim; defendant and the friends joined the victim's basketball game and when their team lost, defendant took the bet money, pulled out a gun, and started firing at the victim and the teammates. Agee v. State, 279 Ga. 774, 621 S.E.2d 434 (2005).

Circumstantial evidence was sufficient to allow a jury to find defendant committed felony murder and aggravated assault beyond a reasonable doubt when there was testimony that defendant was seen wearing a trench coat, waved down the victim's vehicle, leaned in through an open window in the vehicle, fled after firing two shots, saying, "I believe I shot him," forensic evidence was consistent with this testimony, defendant and a co-defendant were earlier seen trying to sell a gun, a trench coat with missing buttons was found in the codefendant's house, and its buttons matched a button found in the victim's car. Burns v. State, 280 Ga. 24, 622 S.E.2d 352 (2005).

Evidence regarding defendant's holding a knife to a love interest's throat and demanding money sustained defendant's conviction for aggravated assault. Smith v. State, 276 Ga. App. 41, 622 S.E.2d 413 (2005).

After defendant and the victim were engaged in a heated verbal exchange, defendant went to a room and obtained a serrated knife, returned to where the victim was and stabbed the victim in the chest, which resulted in the victim's heart being punctured, and defendant later admitted to the stabbing, the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict of finding defendant guilty of felony murder and aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-1 and 16-5-21, as well as possession of a knife during the commission of a felony, the jury was authorized to find defendant's claim of self-defense lacking in credibility. Delanoval v. State, 280 Ga. 36, 622 S.E.2d 811 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a knife during the commission of a felony were supported by sufficient evidence; while defendant argued that defendant acted in self-defense in stabbing the victim in the chest during a confrontation, the jury was authorized to disbelieve defendant's testimony in favor of the testimony of the state's witnesses. Delanoval v. State, 280 Ga. 36, 622 S.E.2d 811 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for malice murder, burglary, robbery, aggravated assault, and concealing the death of another were supported by sufficient evidence because: (1) defendant broke into the office where the victim was living; (2) defendant hit the victim several times on the head and body with a pair of pliers; (3) defendant choked the victim with the defendant's hands and arms, and with the pliers, until the victim was dead; (4) defendant took the victim's credit card and driver's license; and (5) defendant disposed of the victim's body. Young v. State, 280 Ga. 65, 623 S.E.2d 491 (2005).

Denial of defendant's motions for a directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict was proper as the evidence established the essential elements of attempted arson and aggravated assault; the evidence showed that defendant poured gasoline near two ignition sources (a light bulb and hot water heater) in the crawlspace of the estranged love interest's house and then told the estranged love interest's adult children to light the water heater's pilot flame. McGraw v. State, 276 Ga. App. 607, 624 S.E.2d 232 (2005).

Convictions of murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon were supported by sufficient evidence showing that while the victim was in the process of buying drugs from a third party, the defendant approached the driver's side of the victim's car, demanded the victim's money, and shot the victim several times, killing the victim and injuring a passenger in the car; the seller of the drugs testified that the seller had observed the defendant carrying a gun, and both the codefendant and another witness identified the defendant as the shooter. Major v. State, 280 Ga. 746, 632 S.E.2d 661 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for malice murder and aggravated assault as: (1) when a cab driver arrived to pick up a passenger at the defendant's apartment, the defendant was waiting outside and told the cab driver to wait while the defendant returned to the apartment; (2) the cab driver heard several gunshots immediately before the defendant ran to the cab and told the cab driver to "go"; (3) during the ride, the cab driver observed drops of blood on the defendant's clothing and overheard the defendant state in a cell phone call that the defendant "got the guy who owed (the defendant) money"; (4) the police traced the phone call to the defendant's uncle; and (5) the defendant later confided to a friend that the defendant shot and killed someone, that the defendant left in a cab, and that the defendant made a phone call with the cab driver's phone. Puga-Cerantes v. State, 281 Ga. 78, 635 S.E.2d 118 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of two counts of felony murder under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1, armed robbery under O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41, aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, and possession of a firearm by a first offender probationer under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-131; two witnesses testified that the defendant had told them that the defendant shot the victim, and one of the witnesses testified that the defendant stated that the shooting occurred during a robbery, the defendant discarded a gun that was later found to be the murder weapon while fleeing police on another crime, and the defendant admitted to police that the murder weapon was the defendant's, that the defendant stole $100 from the victims, and that the defendant shot the murder victim. Chenoweth v. State, 281 Ga. 7, 635 S.E.2d 730 (2006).

Evidence that there was an 80 to 90 percent chance that injuries that caused the death of a defendant's 10-month-old child were inflicted within an hour of the child's death, that the defendant left the apartment at 4:10 P.M., that an attending physician was called to the emergency room at 5:46 P.M., and that the child was dead on arrival at the emergency room was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for felony murder while in commission of cruelty to a child in the second degree, aggravated assault, and cruelty to a child in the first degree; the evidence permitted the jury to conclude that the time frame in which the child's injuries were inflicted included the time before the defendant left for work, there was evidence concerning the defendant's actions before and after the child's death that indicated the defendant's guilt, and the jury was not required to accept the defendant's version of events. White v. State, 281 Ga. 276, 637 S.E.2d 645 (2006).

Aggravated assault conviction was upheld, as supported by sufficient evidence, including: (1) properly admitted similar transaction evidence; (2) the indictment charging the defendant was not defective; (3) the court's slip of the tongue did not mislead or confuse the jury; (4) a justification instruction was not warranted; and (5) the defendant failed to support an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. App. 813, 637 S.E.2d 751 (2006).

Because the state showed that the victim had an apprehension, reasonable under the circumstances, of immediately receiving a violent injury, this testimony, if believed, together with a finding that the defendant intended to drive rapidly out of the car wash while dragging the victim, was sufficient to authorize the jury to find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault; further, an assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2) did not require that a defendant act with criminal intent in regard to the victim, but did require that an intentional act be shown. Kirkland v. State, 282 Ga. App. 331, 638 S.E.2d 784 (2006).

Because conflicts and inconsistencies in the testimony of the witnesses, including the state's witness, were a matter of credibility for the jury to decide, and because the defendant cited no authority suggesting that the instructions in question were incorrect statements of the law, and did not explain an assertion that they were confusing, convictions armed robbery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony were upheld on appeal as supported by sufficient evidence. Lattimore v. State, 282 Ga. App. 435, 638 S.E.2d 848 (2006).

Because the victim's testimony, standing alone, was sufficient to establish the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, when said evidence showed: (1) two separate aggravated assaults, one with a knife and one with a hammer; (2) two separate instances of simple battery; and (3) a hours-long detention of the victim by the defendant, said evidence amply supported the jury's conviction on the charges of false imprisonment, aggravated assault, and simple battery. Brigman v. State, 282 Ga. App. 481, 639 S.E.2d 359 (2006).

Even though the victim was the only witness who could testify that the defendant was the perpetrator of the crimes of robbery by force and aggravated assault, said testimony was enough to establish the defendant's identity as one of the assailants; moreover, the lack of corroboration went only to the weight of the evidence and the victim's credibility, matters which were solely within the purview of the jury. Thomas v. State, 282 Ga. App. 522, 639 S.E.2d 531 (2006).

Pictures of a defendant withdrawing money from a victim's ATM account and evidence that the defendant repeatedly asked the victim for the PIN number for the victim's ATM card, held a knife to the victim's neck, cut the cord used to tie the victim, and had cash, an ATM receipt, and the victim's car keys when the defendant was arrested were sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, two counts of aggravated assault, kidnapping with bodily injury, and two counts of possessing a knife during the commission of a crime. Wright v. State, 282 Ga. App. 649, 639 S.E.2d 581 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and first-degree child cruelty pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a), 16-5-24(a), and 16-5-70(b) for participating in a drive-by shooting were supported by sufficient evidence because the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 and it was the function of the jury to evaluate the credibility of witnesses; based on the testimony of the witnesses to the shooting, a reasonable jury could have rejected the defendant's claims and determined that the defendant was a party to each of the crimes. Hill v. State, 282 Ga. App. 743, 639 S.E.2d 637 (2006).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions of felony murder and aggravated assault resulting from an incident when shots were fired from a van at the victims, who were riding in a car that had formerly belonged to a drug dealer; the defendant had argued with the drug dealer the day of the shooting, the defendant's wrecked car was found in the same place as the van, the surviving victim identified the defendant as the driver of the van, the van had been traded to the defendant's brother, and even if the defendant did not actually fire the shots, being the driver would authorize the defendant's conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(a). Yancey v. State, 281 Ga. 664, 641 S.E.2d 524 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions of malice murder and aggravated assault; after an argument at the victims' house over money, the defendant returned to the house with a concealed pistol, demanded money from the first victim, pulled out the pistol after the first victim said that the first victim was not afraid of the defendant, and shot the two victims. Shelton v. State, 281 Ga. 660, 641 S.E.2d 536 (2007).

Given that sufficient evidence was presented that the defendant planned and attempted an armed robbery, and the victim was killed during that attempted robbery with the defendant's gun, when such was coupled with evidence that the defendant threatened the victim with a reasonable apprehension of a violent attack, both an aggravated assault and felony murder conviction were upheld on appeal. Willingham v. State, 281 Ga. 577, 642 S.E.2d 43 (2007).

As the evidence provided by the state at defendants' criminal trial demonstrated that based on information from defendant-B regarding a large quantity of marijuana possessed by a victim, defendant-A and another man forcibly entered the victim's residence while defendant-A was armed, pushed the victim to the ground, demanded to know where the marijuana was, and a physical struggle resulted, the evidence supported defendants' convictions for burglary, armed robbery, and aggravated assault; defendant-B was convicted as a party to the crimes under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(4). Garland v. State, 283 Ga. App. 622, 642 S.E.2d 320 (2007), rev'd on other grounds, 282 Ga. 201, 657 S.E.2d 842 (2008).

When the victim was killed during the theft of the victim's vehicle, the evidence was sufficient for a jury to convict the defendant of felony murder, aggravated assault, and armed robbery; the defendant told others where the vehicle was, then stripped the vehicle; a call was placed from the victim's cell phone to the house of one of the defendant's grandparents; police found some of the victim's belongings at the home of the defendant's cousin; and a witness and two cousins of the defendant stated that the defendant admitted shooting the victim. Paige v. State, 281 Ga. 504, 639 S.E.2d 478 (2007).

Defendant's felony murder and aggravated assault convictions were both upheld on appeal as evidence of the victim's prior violent acts was properly excluded given that at the time of the confrontation with the defendant, the victim was no longer the aggressor, and the defendant failed to show prejudice resulting from the admission of a knife that was not used in the altercation, into evidence, and in fact, the knife had been removed from the scene by police before the incident involving the defendant and the victim occurred. Milner v. State, 281 Ga. 612, 641 S.E.2d 517 (2007).

Evidence of a prior aggravated assault conviction was sufficiently similar to be admissible to show a defendant's bent of mind in initiating the stabbing of a victim and to rebut the defendant's assertion of self-defense. Cockrell v. State, 281 Ga. 536, 640 S.E.2d 262 (2007).

When the unarmed victim advanced on the defendant, who had a baseball bat, and the defendant swung twice at the victim, then hit the victim on the head with the bat after the victim lost the victim's balance, the jury at the defendant's aggravated assault trial was entitled to conclude that the defendant was not justified in using force greater than that necessary for self-defense; the evidence, including the defendant's bragging at a party that night about the incident and telling an acquaintance a few days later that the acquaintance was "riding with a murderer," supported the conviction. Fields v. State, 285 Ga. App. 345, 646 S.E.2d 326 (2007).

Upon the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt provided by the victim supporting a charge of aggravated assault, despite the trial court's erroneous act requiring the defendant to introduce a certified copy of the victim's prior conviction to impeach, the defendant's aggravated assault conviction was upheld; moreover, the evidence in the record revealed that the jury chose to believe the victim, despite the issues involving the victim's prior record. Johnson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 724, 644 S.E.2d 544 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 538 (Ga. 2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault, aggravated battery, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct in connection with the death of the 16-month-old victim since: the defendant repeatedly fed the victim tomatoes despite the victim's allergic reactions to the tomatoes; two days before the victim's fatal injuries, the victim had numerous bruises, a black eye, and a split bottom lip; while the victim was in the hospital for the fatal injuries, the defendant repeatedly asked a babysitter to persuade the defendant's five-year-old child to say that the child had taken the victim out of the bathtub; the defendant asked medical personnel whether it could be proven that the victim was shaken; and medical evidence showed that the victim's death was consistent with violent shaking by a person of adult strength. Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Defendant's claim on appeal that convictions for aggravated assault and kidnapping had to be reversed because the victim's testimony was unworthy of belief lacked merit as it was the role of the fact finder, not the appellate court, to determine whether a witness was credible; moreover, the testimony of the victim alone was sufficient to support a finding of guilt. Bragg v. State, 285 Ga. App. 408, 646 S.E.2d 508 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions of child molestation, kidnapping with bodily injury, kidnapping, and aggravated assault when the defendant, who lived with an ex-girlfriend and her teenage daughter, called them into a bedroom and bound the ex-girlfriend's arms, legs, and mouth with duct tape, threatened the women with a hatchet, and led the daughter to another bedroom where the defendant duct-taped her hands and feet and forced her to have intercourse with him. Phillips v. State, 284 Ga. App. 683, 644 S.E.2d 535 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support the three defendants' convictions of malice murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony after: the victims were shot from a gold SUV and the first defendant owned a gold SUV; the first defendant, who had been robbed the day before, stated that the first defendant "wanted to straighten about the money"; the third defendant met the first two defendants at a hotel and transferred weapons into the gold SUV; the first defendant pointed to a person outside the hotel and said "Let him have it"; and the third defendant later wondered if one of the victims was dead. Stokes v. State, 281 Ga. 875, 644 S.E.2d 116 (2007).

Because the testimony from the aggravated assault victim's girlfriend about observing the defendant stab the victim was sufficient, standing alone, to support an aggravated assault conviction, the conviction was upheld on appeal. Diop v. State, 285 Ga. App. 312, 645 S.E.2d 756 (2007).

In a case when a defendant was adjudicated delinquent based on aggravated assault, the court rejected the defendant's argument that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding that the defendant was the one who shot the victim because the victim was unable to identify the defendant after the incident and because the defendant's gunshot residue test came back negative; an officer testified that the victim's failure to identify the defendant after the shooting was likely due to the victim's medical condition at the time, and the victim identified the defendant as the shooter at the hearing. In the Interest of B.S., 284 Ga. App. 680, 644 S.E.2d 527 (2007).

Given that the circumstantial evidence presented against the defendant sufficiently showed that: (1) the victim shot one of the intruders who committed the burglary; (2) shortly after the burglary, the defendant was treated for a gunshot wound and arrived at the hospital in a vehicle matching the description of the automobile seen leaving the crime scene; (3) the DNA evidence on ski masks found at the scene matched that of the owner of the car and the other passenger, who was also the defendant's brother; and (4) according to the defendant's brother, the driver of the car admitted to shooting the victim, the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony were affirmed on appeal. Sherman v. State, 284 Ga. App. 809, 644 S.E.2d 901 (2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of malice murder, felony murder, armed robbery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony after the defendant went to the victim's laundromat and waited until the victim opened a change machine, pointed a gun at the victim's head and ordered the victim to put the money in a bag, told the victim, "Hell, yeah, I'll kill you," and shot the victim multiple times; eyewitnesses, including two who knew the defendant, identified the defendant as the perpetrator. Cooper v. State, 281 Ga. 760, 642 S.E.2d 817 (2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault even though the defendant claimed that the defendant merely accidentally fired a gun at the victim, the evidence indicated that the defendant intentionally fired at and struck the victim. Winfrey v. State, 286 Ga. App. 450, 649 S.E.2d 561 (2007).

Because sufficient evidence was presented consisting of the victim's identification of the defendant as the perpetrator of a burglary, who threatened the victim with a sharp, knife-like letter opener, forcing the victim into a closet, and stealing the victim's camera upon fleeing, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's burglary, armed robbery, aggravated assault, and kidnapping convictions. Bryant v. State, 286 Ga. App. 493, 649 S.E.2d 597 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of aggravated assault when after the victim flicked a cigarette that landed on the defendant's car seat, the defendant said "I'll shoot you," and pointed a gun at the victim; although the defendant claimed that the defendant and the victim were just joking around, the evidence presented was sufficient to support a finding that the defendant's act placed the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2). Moore v. State, 286 Ga. App. 313, 649 S.E.2d 337 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault when about 15 minutes after arguing with the victim, the defendant returned and shot the victim after the defendant's companion tried to hit the victim with a car; the victim, who had previously known the defendant, picked the defendant's picture from a photographic lineup, and the defendant admitted shooting at the victim. Winfrey v. State, 286 Ga. App. 718, 650 S.E.2d 262 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions of felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and the jury was entitled to disbelieve family members who testified that the defendant was out of state when the crimes occurred; the defendant pointed a handgun at the two victims and told the victims to give the defendant the keys to the van in which the victims were loading scooters, shot one victim in the chest, and ran away, after which the defendant's companions drove the van after the defen-

There was sufficient evidence to support an adjudication of juvenile delinquency based on convictions of aggravated assault and of felony and misdemeanor obstruction of an officer; after threatening to slash the victim's throat, the defendant produced a knife and opened the blade, and when officers arrived at the defendant's residence to arrest the defendant, the defendant screamed obscenities and fled to another home before assuming a "fighting stance," placing the defendant's fists in front of the defendant's face, and yelling obscenities at officers while refusing to obey the officers' commands. In the Interest of D.D., 287 Ga. App. 512, 651 S.E.2d 817 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated assault based on the defendant's attack on a fellow prison inmate when, although an officer who allegedly witnessed the attack was not called as a witness, both the victim and another eyewitness testified that the defendant attacked the victim; even without the actual weapon being introduced into evidence, the testimony that the defendant used a metal knife or shank to stab the victim was sufficient to support the conviction and the jury was authorized to conclude that defendant's alibi witnesses, who gave inconsistent alibis for the defendant and who all had felony convictions, were not credible. Cail v. State, 287 Ga. App. 547, 652 S.E.2d 190 (2007).

Evidence from eyewitnesses that the defendant had been in a heated argument with the victim, the defendant left the scene and returned with a gun, the defendant again argued with the victim, pulling out the gun and shooting the victim three times, and that the bullets recovered from the victim confirmed that the bullets were fired from the defendant's weapon, was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to reject the defendant's self-defense claim and to support the defendant's convictions for felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Bolston v. State, 282 Ga. 400, 651 S.E.2d 19 (2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's aggravated assault conviction when the defendant came to a married couple's home, grabbed the wife and threatened to cut her throat, then struggled with the husband over a gun and tried to shoot the husband and both the husband and the wife identified the defendant as the perpetrator in separate photo lineups and at trial; discrepancies regarding the clothes that the perpetrator was wearing and what the defendant was wearing when the defendant was apprehended were for the jury to resolve, and inconsistencies in a witness's statement regarding time were for the jury to resolve and did not make it impossible that the defendant could have been at the crime scene. Brown v. State, 287 Ga. App. 115, 650 S.E.2d 780 (2007).

Victim's testimony that the defendant forcibly entered the victim's house and accused the victim of sexually assaulting a sibling of the defendant, then beat the victim with a bat and kicked the victim, established the essential elements of aggravated assault and burglary; a single witness's testimony was generally sufficient to establish a fact. Gonzales v. State, 286 Ga. App. 821, 650 S.E.2d 401 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1765, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 70 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony; the two surviving victims testified that the defendant began shooting at the victims after arriving at an apartment, and the testimony of the victims, the location of shell casings, and the evidence showing that the deceased victim was shot from a distance of over three feet, significantly refuted the defendant's claim of self-defense. Jackson v. State, 282 Ga. 494, 651 S.E.2d 702 (2007).

In a case involving a defendant's cohort shooting a man at a gas station, the evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt as a party to the crime of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, since the evidence showed that the defendant willingly drove the cohort to the gas station, waited in a stolen truck while armed with an assault rifle as the cohort pulled the victim out of the victim's car and then shot the victim, and then rescued the injured cohort and fled the police; the defendant's criminal intent was properly inferred from the defendant's conduct before, during, and after the commission of the crime. McClelland v. State, 287 Ga. App. 238, 651 S.E.2d 165 (2007).

Defendant retrieved a loaded pistol from defendant's apartment and returned to the parking lot where defendant pointed the pistol at the boyfriend's head. A bystander then told the defendant to put the gun down, at which point the defendant pointed the gun at the bystander, and the boyfriend snatched the gun from the defendant. These two acts were sufficient to allow a jury to convict defendant of two counts of aggravated assault. Gaines v. State, 289 Ga. App. 339, 656 S.E.2d 871 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 379 (Ga. 2008).

Because sufficient evidence was presented showing that the defendant cut a correctional officer's face with either a razor blade or other sharp object, requiring more than 150 stitches and cosmetic surgery to repair, the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault and aggravated battery upon a correctional officer were upheld on appeal. White v. State, 289 Ga. App. 224, 656 S.E.2d 567 (2008).

Testimony of both an aggravated assault victim and another witness, which demonstrated that the defendant shot the victim in the leg, coupled with the defendant's flight after the incident, was sufficient to support the defendant's aggravated assault conviction and, furthermore, defendant was subject to an enhanced sentence under the family violence provision of the aggravated assault statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(j), since the crime was committed between persons "living or formerly living in the same household." Jones v. State, 289 Ga. App. 219, 656 S.E.2d 556 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 381 (Ga. 2008).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault, two counts of aggravated battery, and possessing a firearm during the commission of a felony; the defendant told the victim, who had walked into a common hallway in the defendant's apartment building, to leave, went inside, retrieved a gun, and shot the victim twice after the victim refused to leave, and then shot at the victim while the victim was fleeing. Johnson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 435, 657 S.E.2d 333 (2008).

Evidence supported defendant's convictions of malice murder and two counts of aggravated assault; witnesses testified that a person wearing a red bandana went into a bar, pointed a pistol at one victim, left, and later returned and began shooting, and other witnesses testified that defendant was the shooter and that defendant was wearing a red bandana. Felton v. State, 283 Ga. 242, 657 S.E.2d 850 (2008).

Evidence supported defendant's convictions of felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Witnesses saw the defendant walk with the victim from a store to the victim's car and later run from the scene following the sounds of a gunshot and a car crash, and the defendant admitted pulling a gun on the victim and said that the gun had gone off during a struggle, after which the victim tried to drive away. Petty v. State, 283 Ga. 268, 658 S.E.2d 599 (2008).

Evidence supported convictions of malice murder, aggravated assault, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime. The victim was struck twice in the head with a pistol, strangled, and shot twice in the head; the victim's wallet and keys were missing; and the defendant, who told police where the wallet could be found, admitted shooting the victim and claimed that the defendant had done so after the victim tried to hug and kiss the defendant and things got "ugly." Brown v. State, 283 Ga. 327, 658 S.E.2d 740 (2008).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions for malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, armed robbery, possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime. The four victims were found dead in two hotel rooms from gunshot wounds to the back of their heads; identification documents belonging to the four victims were found in the defendant's car; there was expert testimony that the defendant's gun had been used to kill the victims; the defendant's baseball cap contained one victim's deoxyribonucleic acid; there was evidence that the defendant and two friends used three victims' tickets to attend a football game after the victims were murdered; the defendant was identified as being in an elevator with one victim; the defendant was seen leaving the hotel with one victim's cooler; and a duffle bag belonging to one victim was in the defendant's car when the defendant was arrested on weapons charges. Dawson v. State, 283 Ga. 315, 658 S.E.2d 755 (2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 169, 172 L.Ed.2d 122 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and kidnapping under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21, 16-5-40, 16-8-41, and 16-11-106 as: (1) a robber ordered two store employees at gunpoint to give the robber money, then ordered the employees to go into a back room; (2) the employees described the robber and the robber's vehicle in detail; (3) the employees positively identified the defendant as the robber 15 to 20 minutes after the crime following a pursuit during which the defendant fled from police first in the defendant's vehicle, then on foot; and (4) the defendant had $281 in a pocket at the time of arrest. Lenon v. State, 290 Ga. App. 626, 660 S.E.2d 16 (2008).

Evidence supported defendant's convictions of felony murder during commission of aggravated assault and of possessing a firearm while committing the murder; after defendant argued with the victim and hit the victim while they were riding in a car, defendant and the victim got out of the car where defendant shot at the victim multiple times, defendant fled the scene but later surrendered to authorities and stated that defendant had murdered the victim, and at trial defendant claimed that the gun accidentally discharged when defendant was trying to return the gun to the victim. Lashley v. State, 283 Ga. 465, 660 S.E.2d 370 (2008).

Evidence supported convictions on three counts of aggravated assault when the first victim testified that after the first victim and the second victim chased defendant, defendant began firing at them, eyewitness testified that defendant was shooting at the two victims' vehicle, and there was testimony that a bystander was hit at the scene where defendant was the shooter. Burden v. State, 290 Ga. App. 734, 660 S.E.2d 481 (2008).

Although victim gave statements that conflicted with victim's own statements and those of others involving a shooting in a parking lot, gunshot residue tests were inconclusive, bystanders each testified that defendant was standing at a different location, and no specific weapon was traced to any participant, evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated assault when the victim testified that defendant shot the victim in the foot, two bystanders testified that defendant shot at the victim, and a third bystander testified that defendant admitted to having a gun at the time of the incident. Banks v. State, 290 Ga. App. 887, 660 S.E.2d 873 (2008).

Sufficient evidence supported convictions of aggravated assault, aggravated assault on a peace officer, obstruction of a law enforcement officer, interference with government property, and criminal trespass when defendant admitted obstructing officers and damaging a patrol car and the victim's vehicle; although the defendant denied assaulting the victim and responding officer, the jury was authorized to reject the defendant's testimony in favor of theirs. Gartrell v. State, 291 Ga. App. 21, 660 S.E.2d 886 (2008).

Under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the victim's testimony that the defendant pulled a knife out of the defendant's pocket with the defendant's right hand and lunged at the victim was sufficient in itself to support convictions for aggravated assault and carrying a concealed weapon under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-11-126. Testimony that the defendant had arthritis in the right hand at most created a conflict in the evidence, as there was also testimony that the defendant, a carpenter, used both hands in the defendant's trade. Carder v. State, 291 Ga. App. 265, 661 S.E.2d 632 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support armed robbery and aggravated assault convictions. Two masked persons entered a restaurant, pointed a gun at the employees, forced the manager to give the persons money, including rolls of change, ordered everyone to get on the floor, and then fled; an officer saw two people running, including the defendant, who were wearing the type of boots worn by the robbers; the defendant had a BB gun and $201 in cash, including several rolls of quarters; two restaurant employees identified the gun as the weapon used in the robbery; and a detective testified that when the defendant was arrested, the defendant was wearing the jacket and boots depicted on the surveillance videotape played for the jury. Williams v. State, 291 Ga. App. 279, 661 S.E.2d 658 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support an aggravated assault conviction when after the defendant and the victim got into an argument that escalated into a fistfight, paramedics found that the victim had five elongated, open wounds that appeared to be stab wounds, bruises, and a bite mark on the shoulder and that one of the victim's lungs had been punctured. Jackson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 287, 661 S.E.2d 665 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and burglary when the victim unhesitatingly identified the defendant as one of the people who attacked the victim with a bat or a pipe; the victim's roommate was about "70 percent sure" that the defendant was one of the attackers; the defendant came to the victim's door earlier in the evening and told someone in the street, "Oh no, not now"; one of the attackers threatened the victim because the victim befriended the attacker's paramour; the paramour, who was a friend of the defendant and who had called the victim to the victim's door before the attack, knew that the victim had come into some cash; and the parent of the defendant's child testified that the defendant and others left the house saying that they were going to get into a fight. Furthermore, the victim sustained a stab wound in the liver, a shattered jaw, a broken foot, a stab to the elbow, damage to the facial nerves, and a double hernia and was in constant pain and could not work. Drew v. State, 291 Ga. App. 306, 661 S.E.2d 675 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support convictions of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 and of third-degree cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70. The victim, who had formerly been romantically involved with the defendant, was leaving a motel with the victim's two children, three other children, and two friends when the defendant approached the victim from behind, put a gun to the victim's head, and told the victim that when the defendant did not care about the children anymore, the defendant was going to kill the victim, and the state introduced prior difficulties evidence about an earlier incident where the victim was asleep at a parent's house when the victim woke up to a punch in the face and saw the defendant running out the front door. McCullors v. State, 291 Ga. App. 393, 662 S.E.2d 197 (2008).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of burglary, kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, and theft by taking when a treating physician stated that the 86-year-old victim's injuries, including blood inside her vagina and bruises and contusions on her vagina, were consistent with forcible penetration; when the defendant admitted entering the victim's home, removing her clothing, restraining her with electrical cords, hitting her, putting a plastic bag over her head, forcing her from one room to another, and taking her money and her car; and when DNA from the defendant matched the DNA of two hair roots found on the victim's living room floor. Smith v. State, 291 Ga. App. 545, 662 S.E.2d 323 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a defendant's convictions of two counts of aggravated assault and two counts of possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-11-106 because the defendant's admission that defendant was holding a rifle throughout the crimes' commission, along with evidence of the defendant's flight, authorized the jury to conclude that the defendant participated in the crimes by acting as a lookout. Gant v. State, 291 Ga. App. 823, 662 S.E.2d 895 (2008).

Defendant's convictions on charges of malice murder, aggravated assault, and obstruction were supported by evidence that showed, inter alia, that the defendant was upset because the victim owed the defendant money, that the defendant got into an argument with the victim that culminated in the defendant shooting the victim, that a shell casing from the gun used to shoot the victim was found in the defendant's room, and that when the defendant was arrested, the defendant lied about the defendant's identity. Williams v. State, 284 Ga. 94, 663 S.E.2d 179 (2008).

Evidence was legally sufficient to convict a defendant on charges of armed robbery, aggravated assault, false imprisonment, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime; the testimony of one of the defendant's accomplices, which implicated the defendant in the crimes, was corroborated by evidence that the defendant was captured with the two accomplices shortly after the robbery, that defendant had a large amount of cash, a gun, and a roll of duct tape, and that the victim was able to identify all three men as the ones who robbed and assaulted the victim. Spragg v. State, 292 Ga. App. 37, 663 S.E.2d 389 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant on a charge of aggravated assault since the defendant failed to carry the initial burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was involuntarily intoxicated at the time of the aggravated assault, and there was at least some evidence before the jury of each element of aggravated assault that the state was required to prove. Stewart v. State, 291 Ga. App. 846, 663 S.E.2d 278 (2008).

Sufficient evidence supported convictions of aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-11-106 when competent evidence showed that the defendant put a gun to the victim's chest and pulled the trigger.

Furthermore, a jury could conclude that this was not the result of an accident. Jones v. State, 293 Ga. App. 218, 666 S.E.2d 738 (2008).

Testimony from two eyewitnesses that the defendant fatally shot the victim with an assault rifle and aimed the rifle at one of the witnesses, and evidence that the defendant then fled and tried to elude authorities, was sufficient to convict the defendant of felony murder, aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. McKenzie v. State, 284 Ga. 342, 667 S.E.2d 43 (2008).

Evidence showed the defendant broke into a victim's home while the victim was asleep and then pulled a knife on the victim in the kitchen and began waving the knife at the victim, who testified that the victim was afraid because the defendant "was looking wild and acting a little wild and I didn't know what he might would do" and that the victim was concerned the victim might get injured. Under these circumstances, there was sufficient evidence for the jury to conclude that the victim had a reasonable apprehension of receiving an immediate, violent injury, to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault. Atwell v. State, 293 Ga. App. 586, 667 S.E.2d 442 (2008).

Since the evidence established the defendant shot three people and took money from one of them, and two of the people survived and identified the defendant as the shooter, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of two counts of aggravated assault. Abdullah v. State, 284 Ga. 399, 667 S.E.2d 584 (2008).

Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, defendant juvenile's statements to the police corroborated an accomplice's testimony that the juvenile struck a woman unconscious, caused her serious bodily injury, used force to steal her pocketbook, and dragged her down onto her front yard; accordingly, the evidence was sufficient to adjudicate the juvenile delinquent under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2), 16-5-40(a), and 16-8-40(a)(1). In re D. T., 294 Ga. App. 486, 669 S.E.2d 471 (2008).

Although the defendant argued that the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, was not supported by sufficient evidence, the facts asserted by the defendant in support of this claim were of no consequence on appeal because the appellate court did not speculate as to which evidence the jury chose to believe; thus, the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction. Jones v. State, 294 Ga. App. 564, 669 S.E.2d 505 (2008).

Evidence supported convictions for aggravated assault, theft by taking, and felony murder when the evidence showed that the defendant pulled the victim out of the victim's car, beat the victim with a pistol, stole the car, and deliberately backed over the victim; before the crime, the defendant told an eyewitness to those acts that the defendant planned to rob the victim; and the defendant used the victim's phone after the victim's death. Lupoe v. State, 284 Ga. 576, 669 S.E.2d 133 (2008).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was proper as several eyewitnesses, including the defendant's sister, testified that the defendant kicked the victim while the victim was lying on the ground. At best, the defendant's arguments were based on disagreement with the credibility determinations made by the trial judge. McDowell v. State, 284 Ga. 666, 670 S.E.2d 438 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support two juveniles' adjudications of delinquency for the offenses of armed robbery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime based on the victim identifying the juveniles and the evidence that one of the juveniles used a gun to intimidate the victim into handing over the cash from the register of a gas station, shot the victim in the face causing severe injuries, and possessed a firearm during the commission of the crimes. In the Interest of R. S., 295 Ga. App. 772, 673 S.E.2d 280 (2009).

Evidence that showed that during an argument with the victim, the defendant dragged the victim off a couch by the victim's hair and threw a table at the victim, that the victim fled on foot and attempted to make a 9-1-1 call, that the defendant pursued the victim in the defendant's truck, reached the victim, and held a knife to the victim, retreating only after another vehicle drove up, was sufficient to convict the defendant of family violence aggravated assault. Stone v. State, 296 Ga. App. 305, 674 S.E.2d 31 (2009).

Contrary to a defendant's contention that the state presented only circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 that did not exclude all reasonable hypotheses except that of the defendant's guilt, the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction for felony murder and aggravated assault; the defendant's infant child died of a massive closed head trauma complicated by blunt force chest trauma, and the defendant had the sole care of the child just before the child suffered rib injuries allegedly due to the defendant pushing on the child's chest while the child was choking and just before the child suffered seizure-like symptoms. Berryhill v. State, 285 Ga. 198, 674 S.E.2d 920 (2009).

As the defendant drove a car slowly by a house where rival gang members were while a car passenger repeatedly fired an assault rifle at the house, resulting in the death of two victims and injuries to two others, the defendant's convictions for felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony were supported by the evidence. Deleon v. State, 285 Ga. 306, 676 S.E.2d 184 (2009).

Convictions of two defendants of, inter alia, malice murder, felony murder, and aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence because eyewitnesses saw the defendants point guns at the victim, shoot, and flee. Daniel v. State, 285 Ga. 406, 677 S.E.2d 120 (2009).

Sufficient evidence was presented to support a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault based on the victim's testimony that the defendant struck the victim in the head, a neighbor's testimony that the defendant stated that the defendant struck the victim in the head for failing to pay the defendant and that the neighbor found the victim lying on the ground, and the fact that, while the defendant claimed self defense, the blow was to the back of the victim's head. Howard v. State, 297 Ga. App. 316, 677 S.E.2d 375 (2009).

As the victim testified that "he pointed it at me," and that "he never pointed the gun at my head, but he did point the gun at me," the jury was authorized to find from the evidence that the victim was placed in reasonable apprehension of violent injury and that the defendant was therefore guilty of aggravated assault. Lewis v. State, 297 Ga. App. 517, 677 S.E.2d 723 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault and aggravated battery. It showed that the defendant and other gang members opened fire on a crowd of rival gang members and that the bullets also wounded two people inside a duplex; the jury chose to disbelieve the defendant's alibi witnesses and to believe that of the eyewitnesses. Lopez v. State, 297 Ga. App. 618, 677 S.E.2d 776 (2009), overruled on other grounds, State v. Gardner, 286 Ga. 633, 690 S.E.2d 164 (2010).

Evidence supported the defendant's aggravated assault conviction when the defendant confronted the victim while holding a claw hammer and the victim defended the victim's self with a baseball bat based on the victim's fear that the defendant was going to strike the victim. Although the defendant argued that the defendant had no intent of hitting the victim with the hammer and that the victim attacked the defendant, the jury opted to believe the victim; furthermore, it was the victim's reasonable apprehension of injury from an assault by a deadly weapon that established the crime of aggravated assault, not the assailant's intent to injure. Crane v. State, 297 Ga. App. 880, 678 S.E.2d 542 (2009).

Defendant's aggravated assault conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) was supported by evidence that the codefendant took a running kick at the victim's face while the defendant was present and that the defendant kicked the back of the victim's legs. Wilkinson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 190, 679 S.E.2d 766 (2009).

Conviction of aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), was supported by sufficient evidence and the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict on this basis under circumstances in which the defendant became angry over some statements the defendant heard about the victim, punched the victim in the face, causing the victim to bleed, and knocked the victim to the ground; as the victim attempted to run, the defendant caught the victim and punched the victim in the side of the face, pulled the victim's hair, drove the victim's face into the defendant's knee, and repeatedly hit the victim in the face with the defendant's fist. The evidence of the extent of the damage inflicted on the victim by the defendant's repeated punches was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict. Walker v. State, 298 Ga. App. 265, 679 S.E.2d 814 (2009).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's armed robbery and aggravated assault convictions because the victim recognized the defendant as one of the people who, while armed with a gun, pushed their way into the victim's home, pushed the victim down, and demanded money when a mask the defendant was wearing fell down; the victim also identified the defendant from earlier occasions when the defendant was visiting the victim's neighborhood. Dubose v. State, 298 Ga. App. 335, 680 S.E.2d 193 (2009).

Because the evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt as a party to aggravated assault with a deadly weapon under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), the trial court did not err in failing to direct a verdict of acquittal. Artis v. State, 299 Ga. App. 287, 682 S.E.2d 375 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, armed robbery, and kidnapping. The victims' in-court identifications of the defendant and the codefendant were buttressed by the evidence that a cell phone in the defendants' possession matched that taken from the victims, that a car of the type used by the robbers contained guns similar to those used in the robbery, and the fact that the codefendant had a key to that car. Wright v. State, 300 Ga. App. 32, 684 S.E.2d 102 (2009).

Evidence supported the jury's determination that the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of aggravated assault and aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-5-24, because although the victim was under the influence of alcohol and in severe pain when making statements to the police and the emergency room physician, it was within the jury's province to find the victim's statements more credible than the victim's trial testimony; the victim's statements in a request to dismiss the charges, which acknowledged that the defendant was the individual who attacked the victim, did not occur while the victim was under any physical impairment. Works v. State, 301 Ga. App. 108, 686 S.E.2d 863 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0458, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 251 (Ga. 2010).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime because a witness identified the defendant as the person the witness saw shooting and running, and witnesses testified that the day of the shooting the defendant told the witnesses that the victim had robbed the defendant; the mother of the defendant's children testified that, on the night of the shooting, the defendant came to her apartment in the same complex where the shooting took place, breathing heavily, and wearing a shirt with bullet holes in the shirt. Allen v. State, 286 Ga. 392, 687 S.E.2d 799 (2010).

Evidence that defendant and another person burst into a home after they had lured the victim brandishing an automatic gun and wearing black t-shirts that said "Sheriff," handcuffed the victim, took the victim's money, and forced the victim to write a bill of sale for the victim's motorcycle was sufficient to support convictions for robbery by intimidation, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), false imprisonment, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a), aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), and impersonating a peace officer, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-23.23. Powers v. State, 303 Ga. App. 326, 693 S.E.2d 592 (2010).

Evidence adduced was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of felony murder, armed robbery, and aggravated assault for attacking six people in a home because one of the victims stated that the victim saw defendant in the doorway after shots had been fired; whether the deal a codefendant made with the state rendered the codefendant's testimony biased to a degree that left the codefendant less creditworthy was a determination to be made by the jury. Mikell v. State, 286 Ga. 434, 689 S.E.2d 286, overruled on other grounds, 287 Ga. 338, 698 S.E.2d 301 (2010).

Because testimony about the circumstances of the victim's visit to a home where defendant was shot was relevant and admissible to explain defendant's motive in shooting the victim, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of malice murder, aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Taylor v. State, 287 Ga. 440, 696 S.E.2d 652 (2010).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, enticing a child for an indecent purpose, kidnapping, false imprisonment, cruelty to children, burglary, theft by taking, and striking an unattended vehicle were authorized because at trial, the defendant was positively identified as the perpetrator of the crimes; a nurse and doctor testified that the victim had an injury that was consistent with the molestation allegation, and a videotape depicted the defendant driving a maintenance truck that the defendant did not have authority to take. Bearfield v. State, 305 Ga. App. 37, 699 S.E.2d 363 (2010).

Since the victim was cut and hit by a shotgun during a struggle with defendant in defendant's attempt to obtain money for drugs, the evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2), 16-8-41(a), and 16-11-106(b)(1). Johnson v. State, 305 Ga. App. 838, 700 S.E.2d 726 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of murder and aggravated assault because the defendant's conduct before, during, and after the crimes supported the finding that the defendant was a party thereto, notwithstanding the jury's acquittal of the defendant on three weapons charges. Allen v. State, 288 Ga. 263, 702 S.E.2d 869 (2010).

Trial court did not err in determining that the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) because overwhelming evidence adduced at trial showed that the defendant was at the scene, that the defendant had a handgun in the defendant's possession, and that the defendant drew the defendant's handgun and pointed the gun at the victim and the victim's companions as they were sitting in the victim's car, thereby placing them in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury. White v. State, 308 Ga. App. 38, 706 S.E.2d 570 (2011).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty of malice murder, armed robbery, and aggravated assault beyond a reasonable doubt because although the defendant denied to police that the defendant had any contact with the silver car that was connected to the robbery, the defendant's fingerprints were found on the outside of the car, and an eyewitness's physical description of the second gunman from the robbery matched the defendant. Carter v. State, No. S10A1999, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 253 (Mar. 18, 2011).

Evidence was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to support the defendant's convictions for malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, financial transaction card fraud, and recidivism because there was evidence placing the defendant at the victim's home during the time of the murder and evidence of the victim's blood on the defendant's shoes, which the defendant intentionally chose not to wear when being questioned by police; the evidence, together with the defendant's own statements regarding the defendant's use of the victim's debit card, was sufficient to authorize the jury to determine that the state excluded all reasonable hypotheses save that of the defendant's guilt and to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the crimes of which the defendant was convicted. Johnson v. State, 288 Ga. 771, 707 S.E.2d 92 (2011).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of armed robbery under O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), burglary under O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1(a)(2), possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b), and conspiracy to possess cocaine under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-8 and 16-13-30(a) as a conspirator because, while the uncorroborated testimony of one accomplice was insufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the evidence sufficed to sustain defendant's conviction when an additional accomplice provided testimony to corroborate that of the first accomplice. Both co-defendants testified that the defendant was present from the robbery's inception through the robbery's execution, that the defendant was aware of the conspiracy to obtain the victim's money and cocaine by armed robbery, and that the defendant willingly participated in the crimes and shared the criminal intent of those who committed the crimes inside the victim's residence by supplying the defendant's car and acting as a get-away driver. Watson v. State, No. A11A0090, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 295 (Mar. 28, 2011).

Slapping is sufficient for aggravated assault. — Allegation alleged that the defendant committed aggravated assault with intent to rape in that the defendant assaulted the girlfriend's daughter with the intent to rape her when the defendant slapped the daughter across the face with the defendant's hands. The evidence supported this accusation, showing that shortly after 6:30 A.M., the defendant threatened and slapped the daughter on the face as the defendant repeatedly attempted to penetrate the daughter. The defendant's argument on appeal that the slapping of the daughter's face did not constitute an assault is simply wrong. Boyd v. State, 289 Ga. App. 342, 656

Evidence sufficient for conviction of aggravated assault with gun. — Evidence supported defendant's conviction for aggravated assault because: (1) defendant thrust a handgun in the door of an ex-love interest's apartment, pointed it at the ex-love interest, and asked the ex-love interest if the ex-love interest was going to call the defendant anymore; (2) the ex-love interest said no and shut the door; (3) defendant then shot two rounds through the door; (4) two shell casings were found on the apartment floor; and (5) a matching shell casing and a photograph of defendant with a handgun were found at another love interest's house. Johnson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 641, 618 S.E.2d 716 (2005).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for acquittal as a matter of law, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, as the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction on four counts of assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-20 and 16-5-21(a)(2), as defendant and the codefendant committed two home invasions, whereupon the victims therein were fearful, some were harmed, and during the incidents, defendant held a night stick and instructed the victims to cooperate with the codefendant, who brandished a handgun. Moyer v. State, 275 Ga. App. 366, 620 S.E.2d 837 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Vergara v. State, 283 Ga. 175, 657 S.E.2d 863 (2008).

Because sufficient evidence was presented that the defendant was provoked by an attack on a sibling, and that the defendant had a history of abusive relationships with several men, the voluntary manslaughter of the male victim was supported by the evidence; moreover, evidence of the victim's stabbing and death also supported the jury's verdict with respect to the aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, felony murder, and possession of a knife during the commission of a felony charges. Breland v. State, 285 Ga. App. 251, 648 S.E.2d 389 (2007).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial, and an aggravated assault conviction was upheld on appeal, as the state was not required to show that the defendant expressed an intent to rob or declared a purpose to carry that intent into effect, for the jury to arrive at the conclusion that such was the defendant's intent; moreover, the defendant's intention could be gathered from the circumstances of the case as proved, and in seeking the motives of human conduct, inferences and deductions could properly be considered when the inferences and deductions flowed naturally from the facts proved. Squires v. State, 286 Ga. App. 141, 648 S.E.2d 696 (2007).

The O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30(b)(8) statutory aggravating circumstance does not require knowledge on the part of the defendant that the victim was a peace officer or other designated official engaged in the performance of official duties. Fair v. State, 284 Ga. 165, 664 S.E.2d 227 (2008).

Evidence that: (1) a sister of one of two shooting victims described the defendant to police; (2) the defendant admitted having held a gun near the crime scene at the time of the shooting; and (3) a victim, who knew the defendant and had seen the defendant from a distance of three to four feet, identified the defendant as the shooter, was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions of two counts of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. Carlos v. State, 292 Ga. App. 419, 664 S.E.2d 808 (2008).

Testimony by a victim that the defendant and an accomplice, armed with handguns, forcibly entered the victim's apartment, raped and sodomized the victim, struck the victim with a gun, stole jewelry, bound the victim, and escaped in a car owned by the victim's prospective spouse, and evidence that 24 fingerprints lifted from the apartment and car matched the defendant's was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated assault. Crawford v. State, 292 Ga. App. 463, 664 S.E.2d 820 (2008).

Brandishing a gun, a masked individual moved a wheelchair-bound restaurant manager to a hidden safe and ordered the manager to open the safe. The manager's identification of the perpetrator as the defendant, a former employee, from the defendant's distinctive voice, and the perpetrator's knowledge of the safe's location, authorized the jury to find defendant guilty of aggravated assault by placing a gun to the victim's head. Johnson v. State, 293 Ga. App. 728, 667 S.E.2d 637 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction based on the victim's testimony that the defendant was the individual who approached the victim's car with a gun and ordered the victim out, causing the victim to be in fear. Kashamba v. State, 295 Ga. App. 540, 672 S.E.2d 512 (2009).

Evidence that the defendant shot the victim at close range; that the victim, who knew the defendant well, identified the defendant from a photo line-up and at trial; and that a witness told police of driving the defendant to find the victim and of witnessing the shooting, was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated battery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of those crimes. Spencer v. State, 296 Ga. App. 828, 676 S.E.2d 274 (2009).

Evidence authorized the jury to conclude that the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of malice murder, armed robbery, and aggravated assault because defendant and defendant's codefendants entered an apartment masked and armed with an assault rifle, and the defendant fired the rifle at the victim and fatally wounded the victim. Zackery v. State, 286 Ga. 399, 688 S.E.2d 354 (2010).

Evidence that a defendant threatened to and then intentionally returned with armed associates to the scene of an unsatisfactory marijuana purchase and participated in a shootout, causing a chest wound to a 16-year-old boy in a nearby house, supported the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Dennis v. State, 304 Ga. App. 510, 696 S.E.2d 333 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) beyond a reasonable doubt because a witness to the incident testified that the defendant intentionally fired the defendant's gun in a guest's direction after the defendant became upset with the guest's jokes; a bullet hole was also found inside the refrigerator where the guest had been sitting. Williams v. State, 307 Ga. App. 577, 705 S.E.2d 332 (2011).

Evidence was sufficient to support the convictions of murder, aggravated assault, and firearm possession in connection with the shooting death of the victim because the evidence showed that: (1) the defendant's teenage children made a cell phone call to the children's parents' home to tell them that the children were being followed by a motorcycle rider; (2) as the children arrived home, the defendant exited from the house with a handgun; (3) the defendant fired two warning shots at the rider when the rider rode past; (4) the rider turned the motorcycle around and when the rider rode past the house again, the defendant fired again as the defendant claimed that the rider swerved toward the defendant; and (5) this shot struck the victim, resulting in the victim's death. Gear v. State, 288 Ga. 500, 705 S.E.2d 632 (2011).

Aggravated assault against grandparents. — As a victim's grandparent was present in the victim's home when the defendant shot the victim three times, the jury could have inferred that the grandparent reasonably feared suffering a violent injury during the shooting. Therefore, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 as to the grandparent. Hollis v. State, 295 Ga. App. 529, 672 S.E.2d 487 (2009).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of aggravated assault upon peace officer. — See Brown v. State, 180 Ga. App. 361, 349 S.E.2d 250 (1986); Reddin v. State, 223 Ga. App. 148, 476 S.E.2d 882 (1996).

Defendant committed aggravated assault on a police officer in an offensive manner, resulting in injuries to the officer; it was a jury question as to whether defendant's testimony that defendant intended no harm was believed or not. Dyer v. State, 261 Ga. App. 289, 585 S.E.2d 81 (2003).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault on a peace officer in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 where deputies testified that defendant was pointing defendant's pistol at all of them as defendant made defendant's way towards a trailer in defendant's backyard and then ran off into the woods; one deputies conflicting testimony as to whether the officer feared for the officer's life was a matter of credibility that was determined by the jury, and there was evidence that the deputies had identified themselves as peace officers to defendant. Logan v. State, 265 Ga. App. 134, 593 S.E.2d 14 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to show that a juvenile was a party to aggravated assault on a victim when one or more of four gunmen including the juvenile shot into another person's residence because the victim's car was parked; the presence of the victim's car at the house was circumstantial evidence from which the court could find the shooters believed someone was in the house and that they intended to commit a violent injury to the victim by firing their weapons. In the Interest of M.D.L., 271 Ga. App. 738, 610 S.E.2d 687 (2005).

Evidence that defendant, who was driving a vehicle being pursued by law enforcement officers' vehicles, after an officer unsuccessfully attempted to arrest defendant for domestic violence, called the spouse and told the spouse to call off the officers or defendant would try to kill them by colliding the defendant's vehicle with theirs and then tried to run an officer off the road was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault upon a police officer, and any conflict in the testimony was for the jury to resolve. Razinha v. State, 273 Ga. App. 583, 615 S.E.2d 649 (2005).

Evidence that a defendant, after bringing the defendant's vehicle to a complete stop and making eye contact with a police officer, accelerated and struck a patrol car, causing damage to the vehicle, supported the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault on a peace officer under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and (c). Branton v. State, 292 Ga. App. 104, 663 S.E.2d 414 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1771, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 873 (Ga. 2008).

On a charge for aggravated assault of a peace officer, the court rejected the defendant's argument that the officer was never in immediate apprehension of harm. The officer testified that the officer was in fear of receiving a violent injury when the defendant suddenly pulled away from a traffic stop, which was sufficient for the jury to find that the defendant committed aggravated assault. Little v. State, 298 Ga. App. 298, 680 S.E.2d 154 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed an assault upon a corporal with the county sheriff's department with a knife while the corporal was engaged in official duties because, while the defendant cited to testimony implying that a deputy had secured the knife by the time the corporal joined the struggle, other testimony indicated that the corporal was lying on top of the defendant and attempting to restrain the defendant while the defendant continued to wield the knife against police officers; even if the Court of Appeals considered the testimony the police officers provided to be inconsistent, conflict in the testimony of witnesses was for resolution by the jury and not the Court of Appeals. Dobbs v. State, 302 Ga. App. 628, 691 S.E.2d 387 (2010).

Knowledge that victim was peace officer as part of jury instruction. — In a prosecution for aggravated assault upon a police officer, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(c), the trial court's instructions regarding the defense of misapprehension of fact, and that intent was an essential element of any crime, were insufficient to convey to the jury the requirement that the defendant had to have known that the victim was a peace officer. The error was not harmless as the entire defense was based on the defendant's alleged lack of knowledge that the defendant's assault victim was a peace officer. Fedd v. State, 298 Ga. App. 508, 680 S.E.2d 453 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1776, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 793 (Ga. 2009).

Aggravated assault with intent to rob supported by evidence. — Identification testimony was sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was the perpetrator of the offenses of theft by sudden snatching and aggravated assault with intent to rob. Tolbert v. State, 180 Ga. App. 703, 350 S.E.2d 51 (1986).

Aggravated assault, possession of firearm, and discharge of firearm sufficient to support felony murder conviction. — Because defendant and an accomplice ordered the victim and another individual against a wall, took the victim's money at gunpoint, and defendant began to point and wave the gun when it fired, resulting in the victim being shot and subsequently dying, the evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of felony murder while committing aggravated assault and of possession of a firearm. Taylor v. State, 279 Ga. 706, 620 S.E.2d 363 (2005).

Aggravated assault and felony murder. — Evidence in support of the state's theory that the defendant killed the victim in an unprovoked aggravated assault, based on expert testimony that the victim died from a deliberate and forceful strike with a knife, and evidence that discounted any possible accident or lack of intent, was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for felony murder during the commission of an aggravated assault. Nichols v. State, 281 Ga. 483, 640 S.E.2d 40 (2007).

Rule against mutually exclusive verdicts did not apply. — Rule against mutually exclusive verdicts did not apply to the verdicts returned by the jury of guilty on a charge of malice murder, but not guilty by reason of insanity on a charge of aggravated assault. Taylor v. State, 282 Ga. 502, 651 S.E.2d 715 (2007).

Conviction for multiple felonies appropriate. — Evidence presented by the prosecution was sufficient to enable any rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty of armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault with intent to rob. Conway v. State, 183 Ga. App. 573, 359 S.E.2d 438 (1987).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions of murder, aggravated assault, armed robbery, burglary, and possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony. Baty v. State, 257 Ga. 371, 359 S.E.2d 655 (1987).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find the appellant guilty of malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon in the shooting deaths of two victims. Burts v. State, 269 Ga. 402, 499 S.E.2d 326 (1998).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find each defendant guilty of malice murder, felony murder predicated on aggravated assault and aggravated assault. Whitaker v. State, 269 Ga. 462, 499 S.E.2d 888 (1998).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to correct illegal sentence, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-1-6 and 16-1-7, as defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and kidnapping, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-5-40(a), respectively, did not merge as a matter of law, as only aggravated assault and kidnapping with bodily injury merged as a matter of law; further, the crimes did not merge as a matter of fact, as they were based on separate and distinct facts, and due to the timing of defendant's actions during the incident, the separate convictions were proper. Walker v. State, 275 Ga. App. 862, 622 S.E.2d 64 (2005).

Testimony of a single witness sufficient. — Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to authorize a jury's verdict that the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of committing aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and that the defendant committed simple battery by intentionally kicking the victim on the ankle, causing a bruise. Ringo v. State, 236 Ga. App. 38, 510 S.E.2d 893 (1999).

Witness's testimony was sufficient to authorize a factfinder to determine that the witness was not an accomplice, obviating the need for the testimony to be corroborated under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, and based on that testimony, a rational trier of fact could have found, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the juvenile had committed the act of aggravated assault. In re A.Z., 301 Ga. App. 524, 687 S.E.2d 887 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0492, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 335 (Ga. 2010).

Prospective juror properly excluded on basis of bias. — When the defendant was convicted of aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in excusing for cause a prospective juror who was acquainted with defense counsel as the juror's statement that the juror worked with a criminal defense firm, and could not give the state a fair hearing clearly established a leaning or bias on the part of the juror, which made the juror subject to being excused for cause. Bell v. State, 276 Ga. 206, 576 S.E.2d 876 (2003).

Verdict of guilty but mentally ill supported by evidence. — When the defendant was indicted for assault with intent to rape and the evidence showed that the defendant was a paranoid schizophrenic with borderline mental retardation at the time of the crime but that the defendant knew the difference between right and wrong at that time, the evidence supported a verdict of guilty but mentally ill. Jackson v. State, 166 Ga. App. 477, 304 S.E.2d 560 (1983).

Inconsistent verdicts. — Fact that jury acquitted defendant of charges of kidnapping and armed robbery arising out of the same incident in which defendant committed aggravated assault did not mean that the evidence was insufficient to convict defendant of the aggravated assault where the other two alleged offenses occurred before the aggravated assault such that the verdicts were not necessarily inconsistent; in any event, the inconsistent verdict rule does not apply in criminal cases. Thomas v. State, 257 Ga. App. 350, 571 S.E.2d 178 (2002).

Jury's verdict finding defendants guilty of reckless conduct against a victim after one of the defendants fired a shot at a car was factually inconsistent with the jury's verdict finding defendants guilty of aggravated assault against the same victim; because the appellate court could not determine if the jury reached inconsistent verdicts, it reversed defendants' convictions for both offenses and remanded the case for a new trial on those charges. Reddick v. State, 264 Ga. App. 487, 591 S.E.2d 392 (2003).

Evidence that the defendant fired a gun in the victim's direction from within a vehicle, thereby frightening the victim, was sufficient to sustain a conviction for aggravated assault as defined by O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(3); the result was not changed by the fact that the defendant was acquitted of aggravated assault under § 16-5-21(a)(2). Hardeman v. State, 277 Ga. App. 180, 626 S.E.2d 138 (2006).

There was no merit to a defendant's argument that a guilty verdict on an aggravated assault charge as to one of the victims was inconsistent with a not guilty verdict on an armed robbery charge as to that victim. The inconsistent verdict rule was abolished; moreover, since the crimes had different elements, the jury could have found that the defendant was guilty of assaulting both victims but robbing only one of the victims. Bethune v. State, 291 Ga. App. 674, 662 S.E.2d 774 (2008).

Insufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a); in superficially wounding the victim after the fatal stabbing had occurred and after the victim was either dead or unconscious, there was no evidence that the defendant intended to violently injure the victim or that the victim was placed in reasonable apprehension of being violently injured. Perez v. State, 281 Ga. 175, 637 S.E.2d 30 (2006).

Convictions of aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24, aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, were not supported by sufficient evidence because, although the defendant's conduct before the crime was suspicious, the circumstantial evidence against the defendant was insufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6; the state did not show that the defendant was anywhere near the scene at the time of the shooting, did not present evidence connecting a weapon used in the shooting to the defendant, and, although a witness testified that three days before the shooting, the witness saw the defendant's brother hand the defendant a gun, the witness could not identify the type of gun involved, and this testimony did not connect the defendant with the shooting. The state also failed to adduce evidence that the defendant intentionally aided, abetted, or encouraged the commission of the crimes of which the defendant was convicted. Gresham v. State, 298 Ga. App. 136, 679 S.E.2d 344 (2009).

Evidence was insufficient to support a juvenile's adjudication of delinquency for aggravated assault with the intent to rob under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 when the juvenile placed the juvenile's hands in the victim's pockets to see what the victim was carrying. In the Interest of D.M., No. A10A2353, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 239 (Mar. 21, 2011).

Evidence did not support self-defense claim. — Evidence was sufficient for the jury to reject the defendant's claim of self-defense and to support the defendant's aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime conviction because, inter alia, two witnesses yelled at the defendant to put the gun away, but the defendant shot the victim a second time, the defendant testified that the defendant believed that the victim was holding a weapon behind the victim's leg when the victim got out of the car and that the defendant heard someone yell "bust," which the defendant understood to mean "shoot," and another witness heard no such statement and did not see anything in the victim's hands when the victim exited the car. Hill v. State, 276 Ga. App. 874, 625 S.E.2d 108 (2005).

Felony murder and aggravated assault convictions were upheld on appeal as the defendant's defense of self-defense lacked merit given evidence that any imminent threat posed against the defendant had passed, the victim was shot in the head after the confrontation ended, and the victim retreated to the victim's car and was being driven away at the time the fatal shot was dealt. Woolfolk v. State, 282 Ga. 139, 644 S.E.2d 828 (2007).

Despite the defendant's claim that the state failed to disprove a claim of self-defense, the appeals court upheld the defendant's aggravated assault conviction, because sufficient evidence was presented to allow the jury to decide that the defendant's act of stabbing the weaponless victim amounted to excessive force. Thus, the defendant's motion for a new trial on the issue was properly denied. Richards v. State, 288 Ga. App. 814, 655 S.E.2d 690 (2007).

Justification defense. — In defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), the trial court did not err under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-64 in precluding the defendant from cross-examining the victim about what the victim meant when the victim said that there was tension in the victim's relationship with the defendant and that the victim was going through a transitional period in the victim's life; while the defendant contended that the defendant wanted to examine the victim about the victim's failure to comply with a drug rehabilitation program in which the victim was enrolled and that the defendant was upset about the possibility that the victim would leave Georgia if the victim failed to complete the program, thereby ending the relationship, such evidence was irrelevant to the defendant's justification defense because it was not evidence either of the victim's general reputation for violence or of specific acts of violence perpetrated by the victim. Evidence about the status of the couple's relationship and the nature of the couple's arguments in the week leading up to their fight would not have shed any light on whether the defendant was in reasonable fear of suffering immediate serious harm personally when the defendant choked the victim and threatened to kill the victim. As such, the trial court did not err in ruling that the evidence was irrelevant. Chambers v. State, No. A11A0034, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 272 (Mar. 24, 2011).

Improper comment on evidence by court was reversible error. — On appeal from an aggravated assault conviction, because the trial judge improperly commented on the evidence in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57 by telling the jury that the parties agreed that there was no gun involved in the incident, the comment amounted to reversible error entitling the defendant to a new trial. Brimidge v. State, 287 Ga. App. 23, 651 S.E.2d 344 (2007).

Claim of error waived on appeal when exclusion of evidence not raised at trial. — On appeal from convictions for murder and aggravated assault, the defendant waived any error regarding the exclusion of a videotaped statement on appeal, which the defendant claimed would have supported a voluntary manslaughter theory, by failing to raise the claim specifically at trial. Johnson v. State, 282 Ga. 96, 646 S.E.2d 216 (2007).

Withdrawal of guilty pleas properly denied. — Because: (1) the facts of the case as narrated by the prosecutor presented a sufficient factual basis for the defendant's pleas to both aggravated assault and two battery counts; (2) the trial court informed the defendant of the consequences of the guilty pleas, waiver of certain constitutional and statutory rights, and the minimum and maximum possible sentences for the crimes charged; and (3) the defendant admitted guilt and to entering the guilty plea freely and voluntarily, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying withdrawal of the pleas. Foster v. State, 281 Ga. App. 584, 636 S.E.2d 759 (2006).

Defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea was properly denied as withdrawal of the plea was not necessary to correct a manifest injustice since: (1) the defense counsel was not ineffective; (2) the state showed that the defendant's plea was knowing, intelligent, and voluntary; (3) the trial court was entitled to discredit contradictory testimony given by the defendant at the motion to withdraw the plea hearing; and (4) the defendant's claim that the defendant had nothing to gain by entering a "blind" plea failed as even assuming, that an aggravated assault conviction would have merged with an armed robbery conviction and that five convictions of possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime would have merged with each other for sentencing purposes, the defendant still would have faced an additional five years' to serve if the defendant had not pled guilty. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 767, 634 S.E.2d 875 (2006).

Sentencing. — When defendant was convicted of aggravated assault, defendant's prior convictions for aggravated assault and criminal damage to property, which had been used during the guilt-innocence phase of defendant's trial for impeachment purposes, could be used at sentencing because a repeat offender convicted of aggravated assault could be sentenced as a recidivist, under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-7(a), and there was no restriction in the aggravated assault statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, that limited the use of prior convictions to the guilt-innocence phase of trial such that they could not be used again at the sentencing phase of trial. Carswell v. State, 263 Ga. App. 833, 589 S.E.2d 605 (2003).

Trial court did not err in sentencing defendant because the sentence it imposed on defendant was 10 years in prison and 10 years probation for aggravated assault, 10 years in prison to run concurrently for aggravated battery, and five years confinement to run consecutively for possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, as each part of defendant's sentence was well within the statutory limits for the respective crime involved; accordingly, defendant's sentences would not be modified on appeal. King v. State, 269 Ga. App. 658, 605 S.E.2d 63 (2004).

Because the trial court set aside the defendant's aggravated assault conviction, a claim that the trial court erred in failing to merge the aggravated assault with an armed robbery conviction for sentencing purposes, lacked merit. Lawrence v. State, 289 Ga. App. 163, 657 S.E.2d 250 (2008).

Because the Supreme Court of Georgia had already affirmed the defendant's convictions and sentences for felony murder predicated on aggravated assault by striking the victim with a gun with the intent to rob and felony murder predicated on aggravated assault by striking the victim with a gun, an instrument when used offensively against a person is likely to result in serious bodily injury, the trial court properly denied a subsequent pro se motion to correct an illegal sentence. Brady v. State, 283 Ga. 359, 659 S.E.2d 368 (2008).

As the defendant was not sentenced as a recidivist under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-7(c) or to the maximum term pursuant to § 17-10-7(a) for a conviction of aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(b), the defendant's claim that the sentencing imposed was improper lacked merit. Tatum v. State, 297 Ga. App. 550, 677 S.E.2d 740 (2009).

Trial court did not impose an unjustifiably lengthy sentence merely because a defendant chose to require the prosecution to prove the defendant's guilt at trial rather than to enter a plea of guilty because the trial court sentenced defendant to the maximum term of 20 years in prison for kidnapping and on each of the aggravated assault counts, the trial court also exercised the court's discretion to run all of the counts concurrently instead of consecutively; the defendant's claim that the trial court punished the defendant for exercising the defendant's right to a jury trial was not supported by the transcript, which revealed that the sentence imposed by the trial court was based on the defendant's lack of remorse. Brown v. State, 299 Ga. App. 782, 683 S.E.2d 874 (2009).

Defendant's sentence of 20 years to serve for armed robbery, 20 years probation for aggravated assault, and 5 years probation for possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, each to run consecutively, did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment because the trial court's sentence fell within the statutory range of punishment, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(b), 16-8-41(b), and 16-11-106(b); under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-10(a), it was within the trial court's discretion to order that the defendant's sentences on armed robbery and aggravated assault run consecutively. McKenzie v. State, 302 Ga. App. 538, 691 S.E.2d 352 (2010).

Sentence improper. — Trial court erred in sentencing the defendant on the count of the indictment charging the defendant with making an assault upon the victim with intent to murder in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a) after sentencing the defendant to life in prison for malice murder because the aggravated assault upon the victim and the murder of the victim occurred simultaneously; thus, the evidence used to prove the aggravated assault offense was established by the same, but not all, of the facts required to prove malice murder. Gresham v. State, No. S11A0382, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 291 (Apr. 18, 2011).

Conduct sufficient for sentence enhancement. — Four-level enhancement under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2K2.1(b)(6) was proper because the district court found that the defendant shot at people allegedly intending to rob the defendant's store, the act constituted the felony offense of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and the discharge of the gun was relevant conduct under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.3(a)(1) because the discharge occurred during the commission of the offense of conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 922. United States v. Sako, No. 07-12834, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 7449 (11th Cir. Apr. 2, 2008) (Unpublished).

Sufficient findings warranting restrictive custody for juvenile. — Juvenile court did not err in determining that a defendant juvenile was in need of restrictive custody with thirty months of confinement in a youth detention center because: (1) the court complied with O.C.G.A. § 15-11-63(c) by making specific written findings of fact as to each of the statutory elements; (2) the court's findings analyzed the defendant's needs and best interest; and (3) the court properly considered the report of a psychological evaluation performed on the defendant, along with the defendant's background and prior juvenile history, in making the court's determination that the defendant's needs would be better served with restrictive custody; the juvenile court's findings accurately reflected the nature and circumstances of the aggravated assault the defendant committed, including the facts that the victim did receive a serious injury when the defendant shot her in the head and that she had to receive medical treatment for her head injury, and the juvenile court's findings as to those basic facts were supported by the trial evidence and showed circumstances that authorized the order for restrictive custody. In the Interest of I.C., 300 Ga. App. 683, 686 S.E.2d 279 (2009).

Ineffective counsel not established. — In a prosecution for aggravated assault, despite the fact that defendant failed to satisfy defendant's responsibility under the Rules of the Georgia Court of Appeals, after a review of the record in the appellate court's discretion, defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel failed, as defendant's trial counsel's stipulation to a witness' prior testimony, made under oath, before the judge, and subject to trial counsel's searching cross-examination on defendant's behalf regarding this same case, did not constitute an unreasonable or incompetent strategy. Stuart v. State, 274 Ga. App. 120, 616 S.E.2d 855 (2005).

Given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt with respect to an aggravated assault charge, and because no reasonable probability existed that the outcome of the trial with respect to that charge would have been different had the jury not been presented evidence of the temporary protective order, and the result would not have changed even if trial counsel had stipulated to the existence of the temporary protective order to avoid its presentment to the jury, trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in defending the charge. Ford v. State, 283 Ga. App. 460, 641 S.E.2d 671 (2007).

Because defense counsel was not ineffective in: (1) failing to investigate the victim's reputation for violence and introduce evidence of that victim's prior violent acts; (2) failing to investigate the defendant's medical records; (3) failing to investigate a state witness's convictions for crimes of moral turpitude and request an impeachment charge concerning that witness; (4) advising defendant not to testify; and (5) failing to present evidence or argument at sentencing, the defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied and the aggravated assault conviction was upheld. Cross v. State, 285 Ga. App. 518, 646 S.E.2d 723 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 680 (Ga. 2007).

Ineffective counsel established as to aggravated assault but not as to other charge. — Because the defendant presented sufficient evidence to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to stipulate to the defendant's felon status or to obtain a jury charge limiting the jury's consideration of the defendant's criminal history, such failures prejudiced the defendant's defense sufficiently to require a new trial on a charge of aggravated assault; however, given the defendant's admission to possessing a gun at the time of the altercation, no prejudice resulted to warrant reversal and a new trial on the possession of a firearm by a convicted felon conviction. Starling v. State, 285 Ga. App. 474, 646 S.E.2d 695 (2007).

Indictment

Indictment must charge methods conjunctively. — Although the aggravated assault statute contains disjunctively several methods by which the crime may be committed, proof of any one of which is sufficient to constitute the crime, an indictment must charge such methods conjunctively if it charges more than one of them. Gutierrez v. State, 235 Ga. App. 878, 510 S.E.2d 570 (1998).

Indictment sufficient to charge aggravated assault. — Indictment alleging that defendant made “an assault upon the person of Joe Jones, with a handgun, a deadly weapon” was sufficient to charge the crime of aggravated assault. Wallace v. State, 216 Ga. App. 718, 455 S.E.2d 615 (1995); Griffin v. State, 241 Ga. App. 783, 527 S.E.2d 577 (1999).

Indictment charging that defendant’s fists were likely to result in serious bodily injury was sufficient, and no reference to deadly weapons was required. Jay v. State, 232 Ga. App. 661, 503 S.E.2d 563 (1998).

In an indictment alleging that defendant assaulted the victim “by kicking her in the head and shoulder area and by striking her with his hands and feet,” it was unnecessary to further allege that defendant used defendant’s own hands and feet as deadly weapons or that there was intent to injure. Gafford v. State, 240 Ga. App. 251, 523 S.E.2d 336 (1999).

Indictment was sufficient to charge aggravated assault, which stated that defendant “did unlawfully make an assault upon the person of [victim], with a knife, the same being an object which when used offensively against a person is likely to result in serious bodily injury. . . .” Merneigh v. State, 242 Ga. App. 735, 531 S.E.2d 152 (2000).

Indictment which alleged that defendant assaulted another person with a box cutter by chasing the other person with the box cutter was sufficient to apprise defendant of the charge. Hogan v. State, 261 Ga. App. 261, 582 S.E.2d 210 (2003).

Defendant’s conviction for aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 was affirmed because the trial court did not err when it instructed the jury on the full definition of aggravated assault under § 16-5-21 and there was no reasonable probability that the jury convicted defendant on a portion of the offense that was not charged in the indictment. Hughes v. State, 266 Ga. App. 203, 596 S.E.2d 697 (2004).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was affirmed because the trial court did not err when it denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict on the grounds that there was a fatal variance between the indictment and the proof at trial; under the circumstances the terms "choke" and "strangulation" were synonymous. Hughes v. State, 266 Ga. App. 203, 596 S.E.2d 697 (2004).

Indictment charging defendant with "aggravated assault (family violence)" and "family violence battery (felony)" in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 was sufficient as it informed defendant of the charges and protected defendant against double jeopardy; it was the description in the indictment that characterized the offense charged, not the name given to the offense in the bill of indictment, and mere surplusage did not vitiate an otherwise sufficient indictment. State v. Barnett, 268 Ga. App. 900, 602 S.E.2d 899 (2004).

Because a count in an indictment against the defendant alleged that the defendant assaulted the victim with a handgun, a deadly weapon, by engaging in an exchange of gunfire with a codefendant, which resulted in the victim being shot, such language was sufficient to charge the elements of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); as such, the defendant's counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a demurrer to challenge that count. Barber v. State, 273 Ga. App. 129, 614 S.E.2d 105 (2005).

In two actions charging the defendant with being a party to the crime of aggravated assault allegedly committed with a codefendant, given that the first of two indictments failed to set out the elements of aggravated assault, and the state offered to nolle pros the same, the indictment was properly dismissed; however, a second and superseding indictment survived demurrer, as the elements of aggravated assault were sufficiently set out therein, and the disjunctive way that the offense was charged was not fatally defective as to the defendant, but simply limited the state's option of proving at trial the manner in which the aggravated assault was committed. State v. Daniels, 281 Ga. App. 224, 635 S.E.2d 835 (2006).

Because an indictment, which included charging language that the defendant "unlawfully, and with malice aforethought, caused the death of the victim by striking," placed the defendant on notice of a possible conviction of an assault upon the victim with the intent to murder or commit a violent injury, the defendant could be convicted of aggravated assault as a lesser included crime of malice murder; the only difference was that the malice murder indictment alleged that the defendant actually accomplished the murder, in addition to having intended to accomplish the murder. Reagan v. State, 281 Ga. App. 708, 637 S.E.2d 113 (2006).

There was no deficiency in an indictment charging the defendant with aggravated assault by making an assault upon the person of the victim with a certain semiautomatic pistol; the charge of aggravated assault tracked the statutory language of the offense, contained the elements thereof, and gave the defendant sufficient notice of the charge that the defendant needed to be prepared to defend. Garza v. State, 285 Ga. App. 902, 648 S.E.2d 84 (2007), vacated, in part, 300 Ga. App. 352, 685 S.E.2d 366 (2009).

Court of appeals rejected the defendant's claim that the indictment filed was fatally defective as the indictment properly charged the defendant with aggravated assault, specifying that the defendant's hands and feet "were likely to result in serious bodily injury." May v. State, 287 Ga. App. 407, 651 S.E.2d 510 (2007).

With respect to an aggravated assault conviction, a trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion in arrest of the judgment on the basis that the rule of lenity required that defendant be sentenced to a lesser charge of simple battery as the evidence was sufficient to support the aggravated assault conviction, and the indictment was not void on the indictment's face or otherwise deficient. Armstrong v. State, 292 Ga. App. 145, 664 S.E.2d 242 (2008).

As an indictment against the defendant inmate charged aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), based on the striking of a victim with an object likely to result in serious bodily injury, all of the essential elements were stated and the indictment was not deficient; the indictment was not void for failing to expressly allege the criminal intent. Powell v. State, 297 Ga. App. 833, 678 S.E.2d 524 (2009).

Indictment charged the defendant with the aggravated assault of the victim by assaulting the victim with the defendant's hands, which when used offensively against another person was likely to result in serious bodily injury, by striking the victim repeatedly about the head and face with the defendant's hands; thus, it was unnecessary for the indictment to allege that the defendant used hands as a deadly weapon. Walker v. State, 298 Ga. App. 265, 679 S.E.2d 814 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal on the grounds that a count in the indictment alleging aggravated assault was void because the indictment set forth all of the necessary elements of aggravated assault, specifically citing the aggravated assault statute, and informing the defendant that the defendant was accused of unlawfully assaulting the person of defendant's daughter, with objects, to wit: hands and an object, the description of which being unknown, which when used offensively against a person was likely to and did result in serious bodily injury. Johnson v. State, 286 Ga. 432, 687 S.E.2d 833 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on the ground that there was insufficient evidence that the crimes for which the defendant was charged, aggravated assault, making terroristic threats, and cruelty to children in the third degree, were committed on the date alleged in the indictment because there was sufficient evidence to support the allegations of the indictment; the exact date of the crimes was not a material allegation of the indictment because the exact date was not an essential element with respect to any of the charged offenses, and the date of the crimes proved at trial was prior to the return of the indictment and within the limitation periods for the crimes. Coats v. State, 303 Ga. App. 818, 695 S.E.2d 285 (2010).

There was no defect in the aggravated assault counts of an indictment a grand jury returned against the defendant because those counts alleged that the defendant did make an assault upon the person of a five-year-old boy and his mother with a knife, a deadly weapon; the language of the indictment tracked that of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and was not too vague to inform the defendant of the charges against the defendant. Belcher v. State, 304 Ga. App. 645, 697 S.E.2d 300 (2010).

Indictment insufficient to charge aggravated assault. — An indictment did not set forth the elements of this crime where it failed to state that defendant placed defendant's own hands around the victim's neck in an attempt to use them as deadly weapons, or in an attempt to rape, rob, or murder the victim, and failed to state that, in placing defendant's hands around the victim's neck, defendant intended to inflict a violent injury or place the victim in reasonable apprehension of being injured violently. Smith v. Hardrick, 266 Ga. 54, 464 S.E.2d 198 (1995).

Because an indictment did not charge the defendant with all the elements of aggravated assault, it could not support a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); therefore, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal. Fleming v. State, 276 Ga. App. 491, 623 S.E.2d 696 (2005).

Admissions in indictment. — Because the defendant could not admit the charges of aggravated assault and terroristic threats in the indictment and still be innocent, the indictment returned was not defective. Dudley v. State, 283 Ga. App. 86, 640 S.E.2d 677 (2006).

One count indictment was sufficient. — One-count indictment against the defendant was held sufficient and did not violate the defendant's due process rights, because the indictment charged the defendant with felony murder by causing the death of the victim while committing the felony of aggravated assault and was sufficient to have withstood a general demurrer; the fact that the defendant failed to raise a special demurrer to the indictment prior to pleading to the merits of the indictment was a waiver of that argument. Stinson v. State, 279 Ga. 177, 611 S.E.2d 52 (2005).

Indictment not required to allege party status. — Indictment's failure to allege that a defendant was a party to aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and first-degree child cruelty under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a), 16-5-24(a), and 16-5-70(b) did not require a showing that the defendant was the principal perpetrator under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-21; the defendant's status as a party to the crimes was not an essential element used to increase the sentences for the crimes, and the trial court did not err in instructing the jury that the defendant could be convicted either as the principal perpetrator of the crimes or as a party thereto. Hill v. State, 282 Ga. App. 743, 639 S.E.2d 637 (2006).

Indictment sufficient for assault by dentist against patient. — Count nine in an indictment charging a defendant, allegedly an oral surgeon, with aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54(a) because the general intent required under § 16-5-21(a)(2) did not need to be expressly alleged and the use of the phrase "serious bodily harm" was substantially the same as the statutory language; additional pleading was not required simply because the case involved a doctor and a patient. State v. Austin, 297 Ga. App. 478, 677 S.E.2d 706 (2009).

Indictment alleging offensive use of fists also sufficient allegation of simple battery. — After the defendant was indicted for aggravated assault and convicted of simple battery, language of the indictment tracking the aggravated assault statute by alleging that the offensive use of fists and feet resulted in bodily injury was also a sufficient allegation of simple battery. Buchanan v. State, 173 Ga. App. 554, 327 S.E.2d 535 (1985).

No fatal variance. — Fact that an indictment charged the defendant with aggravated assault and battery by slicing the victim's neck with a knife, but the evidence showed the defendant used a box cutter, did not constitute a fatal variance between the indictment and the proof, because the defendant was sufficiently informed of the charges and faced no danger of further prosecution arising out of the incident. Lawson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 852, 630 S.E.2d 131 (2006).

In a case when the defendant, a juvenile, was adjudicated delinquent based on aggravated assault, there was not a fatal variance between the allegations and the proof. The petition alleged that the defendant's use of a baton against a deputy amounted to an assault with an object likely to cause serious bodily injury when used offensively, and the proof supported this conclusion; any variance between the allegation that the defendant actually hit the deputy and proof that the defendant merely advanced on the deputy was thus immaterial. In the Interest of J.A.C., 291 Ga. App. 728, 662 S.E.2d 811 (2008).

Charge of entire aggravated assault statute not required. — Trial court did not charge the entire aggravated assault statute, but defined aggravated assault as an "assault done in an aggravated manner," committed when a person assaulted another with a deadly weapon as alleged in the indictment; thus, there was no reasonable probability that the defendant was convicted of aggravated assault in a manner not charged in the indictment. Garza v. State, 285 Ga. App. 902, 648 S.E.2d 84 (2007), vacated, in part, 300 Ga. App. 352, 685 S.E.2d 366 (2009).

Indictment alleging rape and aggravated assault. — Evidence showed that the kidnapping conviction, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), was based on evidence showing that when the victim attempted to escape the initial attack, defendant grabbed the victim and dragged the victim to a more secluded area of the trailer park and the aggravated assault with intent to rape conviction, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, was based on evidence that defendant beat the victim with the defendant's hands and fists with the intention of raping the victim; thus, the two crimes were separate offenses supported by different facts that did not merge as a matter of law. McGuire

Indictment alleging aggravated assault and aggravated battery. — Because a conviction on a charge of aggravated assault could be based on the defendant's act of cutting of the victim's throat, while a conviction on a charge of aggravated battery could be based on the serious disfigurement of the victim's arms, a conviction could be entered on each count; hence, merger did not apply. Goss v. State, 289 Ga. App. 734, 658 S.E.2d 168 (2008).

Failure to file demurrer to indictment charging aggravated assault provided no basis for ineffective assistance of counsel. — Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion for new trial based on the defendant's claim that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel as a result of defense counsel failing to file a demurrer to an aggravated assault count on the premise that the allegations in the indictment did not adequately track the language of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 as, although the indictment did not state that the defendant used the defendant's hands as deadly weapons, that omission did not render the charge flawed since specific reference to a deadly weapon in an indictment must be seen as a general reference to the aggravating circumstance in § 16-5-21. As a result, any objection or demurrer would have been futile and, as such, the defendant's contention provided no basis for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Hall v. State, 292 Ga. App. 544, 664 S.E.2d 882 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1841, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 926 (Ga. 2008).

Failure to file demurrer to indictment. — Defendant's motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment challenging the wording of the indictment charging the defendant with aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), (3), were properly denied because the defendant could not have admitted the allegations of the indictment without admitting that the defendant was guilty of a crime, and, under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110, having failed to file a timely special demurrer, the defendant waived the right to a perfect in-

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to challenge the felony murder count of an indictment because the indictment contained sufficient facts to put the defendant on notice that the defendant was accused of the death of the victim as a result of an aggravated assault when the indictment alleged a specific, offensive use of the defendant's hands and feet and that when the defendant's hands and feet were used in a particular way they were objects which were likely to and actually did result in serious bodily injury; the absence of self-defense, like general intent, did not have to be expressly alleged in an indictment, and even if some such allegation were necessary, language in the indictment asserting that defendant acted unlawfully and contrary to the laws of the state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof was sufficient. Lizana v. State, 287 Ga. 184, 695 S.E.2d 208 (2010).

Included Crimes

Which offense to sentence on. — When the same facts were used to support aggravated assault and aggravated battery charges, the trial court erred in sentencing defendant on the aggravated assault count, the lesser included offense. Riden v. State, 226 Ga. App. 245, 486 S.E.2d 198 (1997).

Legislative intent as to aggravated assault upon police officer. — Aggravated assault and aggravated assault upon police officer are separate and distinct crimes. Language in the caption to the bill which stated that the purpose of the statute was to define "the crime of aggravated assault upon a police officer" clearly indicated the intent of the General Assembly. Bundren v. State, 247 Ga. 180, 274 S.E.2d 455 (1981); but see Lambert v. State, 157 Ga. App. 275, 277 S.E.2d 66 (1981).

Simple assault is lesser included offense of aggravated assault. — Simple assault or assault (synonymous terms) is necessarily a lesser included offense of the greater crime of aggravated assault and is an essential part thereof. Smith v. State, 140 Ga. App. 395, 231 S.E.2d 143 (1976).

Reckless conduct is a lesser included offense of aggravated assault. Bowers v. State, 177 Ga. App. 36, 338 S.E.2d 457 (1985).

In the defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), the trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury on reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b) because the latter was not a lesser-included offense of the former; while both offenses proscribed the same general conduct, i.e., subjecting another to actual injury or the possibility of injury, aggravated assault required proof that the forbidden act was intentional, while in the case of reckless conduct, the forbidden act is the product of criminal negligence. Chambers v. State, No. A11A0034, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 272 (Mar. 24, 2011).

Crimes included in aggravated assault with deadly weapon. — Simple assault under former Code 1933, § 26-1301 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20) and pointing a gun or pistol at another under former Code 1933, § 26-2908 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-11-102) are both misdemeanors and included in the greater crime of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Morrison v. State, 147 Ga. App. 410, 249 S.E.2d 131 (1978).

Possession of firearm. — Trial court properly refused to merge convictions for possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime and aggravated assault. Pace v. State, 239 Ga. App. 506, 521 S.E.2d 444 (1999).

Cruelty to children can be lesser included crime under indictment for aggravated assault with deadly weapon. Williams v. State, 144 Ga. App. 130, 240 S.E.2d 890 (1977).

Cruelty to children count merged into count alleging aggravated assault, where both counts alleged the same facts, i.e., that defendant shot daughter. Cranford v. State, 186 Ga. App. 862, 369 S.E.2d 50 (1988).

Unauthorized possession of weapon by inmate is not a lesser included offense of aggravated assault. Weaver v. State, 176 Ga. App. 639, 337 S.E.2d 420 (1985).

Pointing weapon at another. — In a homicide trial, defendant's act was clearly the felony of aggravated assault, not the misdemeanor of pointing a weapon at another, where the testimony showed that victim, as well as the three passengers in the victim's car, were aware of and understandably apprehensive of immediate violent injury, and defendant's own testimony revealed that defendant's purpose in pointing the weapon was to place victim in apprehension of immediate violent injury. Thus, the request for a charge on misdemeanor manslaughter was properly denied. Rhodes v. State, 257 Ga. 368, 359 S.E.2d 670 (1987); Rameau v. State, 267 Ga. 261, 477 S.E.2d 118 (1996).

Although pointing a firearm at another is an offense included in aggravated assault, it is not error to refuse a charge on it when the evidence does not reasonably raise the issue that defendant may be guilty of only the lesser crime. Head v. State, 233 Ga. App. 655, 504 S.E.2d 499 (1998); Stobbart v. State, 272 Ga. 608, 533 S.E.2d 379 (2000).

Offense merged with attempted armed robbery. — Since the defendant was indicted for aggravated assault for pointing a handgun at a victim, which was also a substantial step toward commission of the armed robbery, the trial court properly merged the defendant's aggravated assault conviction with the attempted armed robbery conviction. McKinney v. State, 274 Ga. App. 32, 619 S.E.2d 299 (2005).

Merger with armed robbery. — Evidence identifying the defendant as the perpetrator who stole a victim's car and purse at gunpoint, coupled with evidence of the defendant's flight from police, possession of the stolen car, and possession of the revolver used in the crimes, was sufficient to support convictions for hijacking a motor vehicle, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, armed robbery, and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon; however, the conviction and sentence for aggravated assault merged as a matter of fact into the armed robbery conviction and sentence. Doublette v. State, 278 Ga. App. 746, 629 S.E.2d 602 (2006).

Merger of an aggravated assault count

into an armed robbery count was required when the only evidence was that the defendant used a gun to rob the victim. There was not a separate aggravated assault before the robbery began; thus, there having been no additional violence used against the victim, it followed that the evidentiary basis for the aggravated assault conviction was "used up" in proving the armed robbery. Howard v. State, 298 Ga. App. 98, 679 S.E.2d 104 (2009).

Trial court did not err in failing to merge counts of armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), because the assault was completed before the armed robbery; the evidence showed that the defendant confronted the victim by entering the room with a pistol and threatening the victim, at which point, the crime of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon was completed. The evidence further showed that after threatening the victim, presumably to prevent the victim from retaliating against the defendant for a prior altercation, the defendant ordered the victim to empty the victim's pockets at gunpoint and took $200 from the victim, which comprised the armed robbery. Ransom v. State, 298 Ga. App. 360, 680 S.E.2d 200 (2009).

Defendant's sentence for armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), and aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), was not void as a result of the trial court's failure to merge the convictions because the convictions did not merge for sentencing purposes since they did not involve the same conduct; the crime of armed robbery was complete when the defendant entered a restaurant and, with the use of a handgun, demanded and took money from a waitress, and, after completion of the armed robbery, the defendant pushed the gun against the waitress's neck and asked whether the waitress wanted to die, which formed the basis of the aggravated assault conviction. McKenzie v. State, 302 Ga. App. 538, 691 S.E.2d 352 (2010).

Defendant's aggravated assault convictions merged into the defendant's armed robbery convictions because there was no element of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), that was not contained in armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41; aggravated assault with a deadly weapon does not require proof of a fact that armed robbery does not, and because the assault requirement of aggravated assault is the equivalent of the "use of an offensive weapon" requirement of armed robbery, the "deadly weapon" requirement of this form of aggravated assault is the equivalent of the "offensive weapon" requirement of armed robbery. Long v. State, 287 Ga. 886, 700 S.E.2d 399 (2010).

Because the defendant's conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a) for armed robbery could be sustained based upon the defendant's conduct with a shotgun, and because the defendant's conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) for aggravated assault could be sustained based upon the defendant's conduct with a knife, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a), the two convictions did not merge. Johnson v. State, 305 Ga. App. 838, 700 S.E.2d 726 (2010).

Plea counsel performed deficiently in failing to argue for the merger of the defendant's convictions and sentences for armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), because the aggravated assault with a deadly weapon charges did not require proof of a fact that the armed robbery charges did not likewise require, and the defendant's aggravated assault convictions unquestionably merged into the defendant's armed-robbery convictions; the armed robbery counts in the indictment provided that the defendant unlawfully, with intent to commit theft, did take property from the person of the victim, by use of an offensive weapon, and the aggravated assault counts provided that the defendant did unlawfully make an assault upon the person of the victim with a steel rod, a deadly weapon, an object, which, when used offensively against a person, was likely to or actually did result in serious bodily injury, by beating the victim about the head and face with the steel rod. Murray v. State, 307 Ga. App. 621, 705 S.E.2d 726 (2011).

Reckless conduct as lesser included offense of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. — Where evidence indicated that defendant might have merely fired a gun up into the air while the police were chasing the car in which defendant was riding, the trial court erred in refusing to charge the jury on the offense of reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of an aggravated assault by attempting to injure. Shaw v. State, 238 Ga. App. 757, 519 S.E.2d 486 (1999).

Charge on reckless conduct not warranted. — When the evidence, including defendant's own admissions, clearly established that the defendant repeatedly fired the weapon with the intention of scaring the victims, even if the defendant did not intend to hit them, the evidence established aggravated assault and there was no error in the failure to give an instruction on reckless conduct. Huguley v. State, 242 Ga. App. 645, 529 S.E.2d 915 (2000).

Rape includes lesser offense of assault with intent to rape or aggravated assault. Wingfield v. State, 231 Ga. 92, 200 S.E.2d 708 (1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 942, 94 S. Ct. 1949, 40 L. Ed. 2d 294 (1974).

Aggravated assault and kidnapping. — Aggravated assault, with intent to rob as the factor in aggravation, is not a lesser included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury. Brown v. State, 232 Ga. App. 787, 504 S.E.2d 452 (1998).

Evidence that was required to convict defendant of three counts of aggravated assault differed from that which was required to prove the three kidnapping charges against defendant, as the aggravated assaults occurred when deadly weapons were pointed at the victims shortly after defendant and another assailant entered a certain store, whereas the kidnappings were complete when the three victims were later dragged from one room to another; thus, the aggravated assault convictions did not merge into the kidnapping convictions for sentencing purposes. Phanamixay v. State, 260 Ga. App. 177, 581 S.E.2d 286 (2003).

Trial court's decision not to merge the conviction of kidnapping, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, with the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and armed robbery, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-8-41, was proper under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a), as the facts that supported the kidnapping were not the same as those that supported the convictions for the other offenses; the kidnapping occurred when the defendant forced three store employees into an office, the aggravated assaults occurred when the defendant pointed a gun at one employee's head and hit another employee with it, and the armed robbery occurred when the defendant took money from the store safe. Hill v. State, 279 Ga. App. 666, 632 S.E.2d 443 (2006).

Kidnapping, aggravated assault, and rape were separate offenses, completed individually, and did not merge as a matter of fact; thus, the trial court did not err in refusing to merge the kidnapping counts into the aggravated assault and rape counts for purposes of sentencing. Dasher v. State, 281 Ga. App. 326, 636 S.E.2d 83 (2006).

Because there was independent evidence to support each of the offenses as indicted, a defendant's aggravated assault conviction did not merge as a matter of fact with either the aggravated battery or kidnapping with bodily injury convictions. Pitts v. State, 287 Ga. App. 540, 652 S.E.2d 181 (2007).

It was error for the trial court to impose separate sentences for the defendant's aggravated assault convictions because the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault merged as a matter of fact with the defendant's conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury. Delgiudice v. State, 308 Ga. App. 397, 707 S.E.2d 603 (2011).

Aggravated assault is included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury. — Because the elements of the crime of aggravated assault must have been proved in order to sustain a conviction for the crime of kidnapping with bodily injury, the aggravated assault is an included offense of the crime of kidnapping with bodily injury. Brown v. State, 247 Ga. 298, 275 S.E.2d 52, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 366, 70 L. Ed. 2d 192 (1981), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. Zant, 249 Ga. 373, 290 S.E.2d 442 (1982), but see, Morgan v. State, 267 Ga. 203, 476 S.E.2d 747 (1996); Herring v. State, 224

When assault is committed with deadly weapon, simple assault is not lesser included offense. Hightower v. State, 137 Ga. App. 790, 224 S.E.2d 842 (1976).

When assault is committed with gun, simple assault is not a lesser included offense. Zachery v. State, 158 Ga. App. 448, 280 S.E.2d 860 (1981).

Simple assault is not a lesser included offense of an aggravated assault in which a gun or a knife is alleged to have been used as a deadly weapon. Weaver v. State, 182 Ga. App. 806, 357 S.E.2d 153 (1987).

Aggravated assault not lesser included offense. — When the evidence used to prove the commission of an aggravated assault was not used at all in proving the commission of an aggravated battery, defendant's argument that the aggravated assault was a lesser included offense of the aggravated battery was without merit. Grace v. State, 262 Ga. 746, 425 S.E.2d 865 (1993).

When an indictment alleged that an aggravated assault was committed with a firearm by shooting the victims, and an armed robbery alleged the use of an offensive weapon, the aggravated assault charge was not a lesser included offense of armed robbery as a matter of law, and the two offenses rarely merged as a matter of fact. Silvers v. State, 278 Ga. 45, 597 S.E.2d 373 (2004).

Mutiny in a penal institution and aggravated assault require proof of different elements and, therefore, the former offense cannot be a lesser included offense of the latter. Bierria v. State, 232 Ga. App. 622, 502 S.E.2d 542 (1998).

Simple battery. — When an assault is committed with a deadly weapon, the simple battery is not a lesser included offense under aggravated assault. Powell v. State, 140 Ga. App. 36, 230 S.E.2d 90 (1976).

When the defendant was indicted for aggravated assault upon the person of another "with a bottle, an object which when used offensively against a person is likely to or actually does result in serious bodily injury," simple battery was a lesser included offense of aggravated assault, and the jury was properly instructed as to the lesser included offense. Haun v. State, 189 Ga. App. 884, 377 S.E.2d 878, cert. denied, 189 Ga. App. 912, 377 S.E.2d 878 (1989).

Offense of battery is not necessarily a lesser included offense of aggravated assault. Although the element of physical or bodily harm is a requisite for battery, since the physical or bodily harm is committed with a deadly weapon, simple battery is not a lesser included offense. Givens v. State, 199 Ga. App. 845, 406 S.E.2d 272 (1991); Van Doran v. State, 244 Ga. App. 496, 53 S.E.2d 163 (2000).

"Affray" is not a lesser-included offense of aggravated assault. Rowland v. State, 228 Ga. App. 66, 491 S.E.2d 119 (1997).

When assault occurred after aggravated battery, and the evidence indicated that any intent defendant may have had to kill her husband before he was shot was abandoned immediately thereafter, when she prevented her son from shooting her husband a second time, it was error to deny her motion for a directed verdict of acquittal as to the offense of aggravated assault with intent to murder. Overstreet v. State, 182 Ga. App. 809, 357 S.E.2d 103 (1987).

Aggravated assault merged into aggravated battery. — Because the indictment alleged only one act, the shooting of the victim, and because the evidence showed only that defendant's actions were the result of a single act of firing a series of shots in quick succession at the victim, the convictions for aggravated assault merged into the aggravated battery. Brown v. State, 246 Ga. App. 60, 539 S.E.2d 545 (2000).

Aggravated assault did not merge with aggravated battery. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated assault and aggravated battery against the same victim did not merge for sentencing purposes, as the two offenses were proven with different facts: the assault occurred when defendant threatened the victim with a gun, and the battery occurred when defendant later shot the victim in the arm. Pennymon v. State, 261 Ga. App. 450, 582 S.E.2d 582 (2003).

Trial court did not err in refusing to merge the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-5-24, because the offenses were established by proving different facts; the defendant was found guilty of aggravated assault because there was evidence that the defendant assaulted the victim with a screwdriver, and the defendant was found guilty of aggravated battery because the victim's left lung was nonfunctional for a period of time due to the stab wound. Works v. State, 301 Ga. App. 108, 686 S.E.2d 863 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0458, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 251 (Ga. 2010).

Carrying weapon without license is not included within aggravated assault with deadly weapon. Thomas v. State, 128 Ga. App. 538, 197 S.E.2d 452 (1973).

Elements of interference with government property are not included in the elements required for aggravated assault. Hyman v. State, 222 Ga. App. 419, 474 S.E.2d 243 (1996).

Aggravated assault not lesser included offense of burglary. — Neither burglary nor aggravated assault was established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to prove the other so the argument that an aggravated assault conviction must merge with a burglary conviction is without merit. Taylor v. State, 157 Ga. App. 212, 276 S.E.2d 691 (1981).

Attempted armed robbery and aggravated assault are separate and distinct crimes, and separate sentences were properly imposed. Lambert v. State, 157 Ga. App. 275, 277 S.E.2d 66 (1981).

Aggravated assault is not included in attempted armed robbery as a matter of law, although these two offenses may as a matter of fact merge if the same facts are used to prove both offenses. However, where the underlying facts show that one crime was completed prior to the second crime, so that the crimes are separate as a matter of law, there is no merger. Gaither v. Cannida, 258 Ga. 557, 372 S.E.2d 429 (1988).

Convictions and sentences for both armed robbery and aggravated assault were proper, where each offense charged was clearly supported by its own set of facts. Millines v. State, 188 Ga. App. 655, 373 S.E.2d 838 (1988).

Attempted armed robbery as included offense of aggravated assault.

— Trial court did not err by refusing to charge the jury that the jury could find the defendant guilty of attempted armed robbery as an included offense of aggravated assault with intent to rob since the defendant was not entitled to a charge or verdict of attempted armed robbery when that offense could only be proved by showing that the defendant brandished a weapon in the faces of the victims with the intent to rob the victims, that is, that the defendant actually committed the greater offense, a completed aggravated assault with the intent to rob. Since the evidence that proved that the defendant committed an attempted armed robbery necessarily proved that the defendant committed the greater, completed crime of aggravated assault with intent to rob, there was no evidence that the defendant committed only the offense of attempted armed robbery and, therefore, the defendant was not entitled to a charge on that lesser included offense. Pilkington v. State, 298 Ga. App. 317, 680 S.E.2d 164 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1717, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 54 (Ga. 2010).

Conviction for aggravated assault did not merge with conviction for armed robbery where the evidence showed that the defendant had completed the armed robbery at the time defendant assaulted the security guard. Loumakis v. State, 179 Ga. App. 294, 346 S.E.2d 373 (1986).

Offenses of aggravated assault and robbery did not merge as a matter of law, where although the occurrences happened within a short span of time, the robbery had been completed at the time defendant fired the gun and involved different actions and intents. Phelps v. State, 194 Ga. App. 493, 390 S.E.2d 899 (1990).

Aggravated assault conviction did not merge with armed robbery offenses for sentencing purposes because each crime required proof of an additional fact as the robbery required proof that defendant took the property of another, which was not required to prove aggravated assault, and assault required proof that the victim was placed in reasonable fear of immediately receiving a violent injury, which armed robbery did not require. Nava v. State, 301 Ga. App. 497, 687 S.E.2d 901 (2009).

Aggravated assault did not merge with kidnapping and armed robbery charges because each count relied on separate facts. Howard v. State, 230 Ga. App. 437, 496 S.E.2d 532 (1998).

Aggravated assault with intent to rob did not merge with kidnapping offense. — Defendant completed the act of aggravated assault with intent to rob when defendant initially approached the victim and told the victim that defendant intended to steal the car; this crime did not merge into the conviction for kidnapping, which was completed later. Robinson v. State, 271 Ga. App. 768, 610 S.E.2d 706 (2005).

Aggravated assault merged with kidnapping with bodily injury. — An aggravated assault based on defendant's choking of the victim with an electrical cord merged into the kidnapping with bodily injury, and the sentence imposed for a count of aggravated assault was vacated. Nelson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 548, 629 S.E.2d 410 (2006).

Aggravated assault was included in armed robbery as matter of fact, when it was not the initial pointing of a pistol at the victim which prompted the victim to open a cash drawer but the subsequent cocking of the weapon by the assailant after the victim had told the assailant that the victim had no money and the actual firing of the weapon occurred virtually at the same moment as the victim was hitting the button to open the drawer. Moreland v. State, 183 Ga. App. 113, 358 S.E.2d 276 (1987).

Defendant's aggravated assault conviction should have merged with the defendant's armed robbery conviction as the two convictions were based on the same conduct in sticking a gun to a victim's head with the intent to rob the victim. Kirk v. State, 271 Ga. App. 640, 610 S.E.2d 604 (2005).

Defendants' aggravated assault convictions merged into their armed robbery convictions as simultaneous with showing the gun, defendants made clear that they intended to rob the victims, which they proceeded to do; there was not a separate aggravated assault before the robbery began. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Defendants' aggravated assault by striking a victim with a gun convictions merged into their armed robbery convictions as the robbery was not complete until the gunman struck the victim with the gun, thereby allowing defendant to take the victim's money. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Aggravated assault conviction merged with robbery conviction where victim was placed in fear of receiving bodily injury before the victim's money was taken. Luke v. State, 171 Ga. App. 201, 318 S.E.2d 833 (1984).

Defendant's five convictions of aggravated assault merged with defendant's conviction on five counts of attempted armed robbery where defendant's act of pointing a pistol at bank employees when defendant announced an intent to rob the bank was the act underlying both the convictions for attempted armed robbery and for aggravated assault. Hambrick v. State, 256 Ga. 148, 344 S.E.2d 639 (1986).

Since the evidence adduced to convict defendant of aggravated assault with intent to rob — that defendant threw the victim on the floor, hit the victim, and strangled the victim with a bed sheet — was part and parcel of the evidence underlying defendant's robbery conviction, the offenses merged as a matter of fact. Johnson v. State, 247 Ga. App. 157, 543 S.E.2d 439 (2000).

Aggravated assault merged with armed robbery, where the aggravated assault alleged separately in the indictment was the same assault alleged to have been committed in the course of the armed robbery. Cherry v. State, 178 Ga. App. 483, 343 S.E.2d 510 (1986).

When the defendant's offense of attempted armed robbery was included in the defendant's offense of aggravated assault with intent to rob a restaurant manager, only one sentence should have been imposed in connection with the two charges. Redding v. State, 193 Ga. App. 50, 386 S.E.2d 907 (1989).

Aggravated assaults did not merge with the robbery of two victims, where the robberies were completed, both victims having been deprived of their property, when they were marched off for another criminal purpose and the aggravated assaults on each victim occurred. Glass v. State, 199 Ga. App. 530, 405 S.E.2d 522 (1991).

Aggravated assault count merged into robbery count, where the only aggravated assault (committed by defendant) shown by the evidence was that by which the commission of the robbery was effectuated. Since there was no additional, gratuitous violence employed against the victim, the evidentiary basis for the aggravated assault conviction was "used up" in proving the robbery. Head v. State, 202 Ga. App. 209, 413 S.E.2d 533 (1991).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on counsel's failure to ask at sentencing that defendant's convictions for aggravated assault be merged into the armed robbery convictions was rejected as the convictions were merged at the motion for a new trial hearing. Buchanan v. State, 273 Ga. App. 174, 614 S.E.2d 786 (2005).

Separate sentences for aggravated assault and assault with the intent to rape. — When there was evidence of assaults as the defendant wielded the knife that were gratuitous and unconnected with the assault with the intent to rape the victim, it was not error to sentence the defendant separately on the jury's findings of guilt for the aggravated assaults. Woodson v. State, 242 Ga. App. 67, 530 S.E.2d 2 (2000), aff'd, 273 Ga. 557, 544 S.E.2d 431 (2001).

Aggravated assault merged with criminal attempt to commit murder. — Aggravated assault conviction merged into a criminal attempt to commit murder conviction, where both counts were based on allegations that defendant had stabbed the victim with a knife. Kelley v. State, 201 Ga. App. 343, 411 S.E.2d 276 (1991).

Merger of aggravated assault with malice murder. — Convictions and sentences for aggravated assault with intent to murder and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon were vacated where the evidence showed that they both merged as a matter of fact with the malice murder conviction. Williams v. State, 277 Ga. 368, 589 S.E.2d 563 (2003).

Because the evidence the state used to prove that the defendant committed aggravated assault was the same that it used to prove that defendant committed malice murder, the aggravated assault offense merged into the malice murder as a matter of fact. Thus, the separate judgment of conviction and sentence for aggravated assault had to be vacated. Ludy v. State, 283 Ga. 322, 658 S.E.2d 745 (2008).

Convictions against the defendant for both malice murder and aggravated assault were error under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a)(1) as the aggravated assault was included within the malice murder conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(1) because the same conduct established the commission of both offenses. Bell v. State, 284 Ga. 790, 671 S.E.2d 815 (2009).

With regard to a defendant's malice murder conviction arising from the suffocation death of the defendant's newborn daughter, the defendant's conviction and sentence for aggravated assault was vacated inasmuch as the evidence showed that the aggravated assault merged as a matter of fact with the malice murder conviction. Wright v. State, 285 Ga. 428, 677 S.E.2d 82 (2009), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 S. Ct. 1076, 175 L. Ed. 2d 903 (2010).

Aggravated assault did not merge with malice murder. — When the defendant fired a gun at someone and the bullet grazed the person, went through a wall, and killed another person, the aggravated assault and malice murder convictions did not merge for sentencing purposes. George v. State, 276 Ga. 564, 580 S.E.2d 238 (2003).

Aggravated assault not lesser included offense. — Where an indictment alleged that an aggravated assault was committed with a firearm by shooting the victims, and an armed robbery alleged the use of an offensive weapon, the aggravated assault charge was not a lesser included offense of armed robbery as a matter of law, and the two offenses rarely merged as a matter of fact. Silvers v. State, 278 Ga. 45, 597 S.E.2d 373 (2004).

Trial court erred in sentencing defendant for malice murder and aggravated assault as the victim's death was caused by a combination of blunt force trauma and strangulation and the aggravated assault merged into the malice murder as a matter of fact. Young v. State, 280 Ga. 65, 623 S.E.2d 491 (2005).

Defendant's conviction and sentence for aggravated assault was vacated as the malice murder and the aggravated assault charges merged as a matter of fact because the same evidence to prove aggravated assault as indicted, stabbing the victim with a knife, was used to prove malice murder. Williams v. State, 279 Ga. 154, 611 S.E.2d 19 (2005).

Because the evidence that defendant assaulted the victim with a shotgun was used to prove both an aggravated assault and malice murder, the aggravated assault conviction merged by fact into the malice murder conviction. Nix v. State, 280 Ga. 141, 625 S.E.2d 746 (2006).

When a prisoner was convicted of malice murder under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1(a), a jury did not return a verdict on felony murder counts because O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7 prohibited a conviction for both offenses for the death of a single victim. Further, the prisoner's crime of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a) also merged with the malice murder offense as it was a crime included within the greater offense. Newland v. Hall, 527 F.3d 1162 (11th Cir. 2008), cert. denied, U.S. , 129 S. Ct. 1336, 173 L. Ed. 2d 607 (2009).

Aggravated assault with intent to rob and aggravated assault with deadly weapon merged. — Convictions for aggravated assault of a male victim with the intent to rob and aggravated assault of the male victim with a deadly weapon did not rely on distinct criminal acts, as the weapons used in the assault were also implements of the robbery and used with the same purpose and intent; since the same facts were used to prove both crimes, the different crimes merged as a matter of fact for sentencing purposes. Maddox v. State, 277 Ga. App. 580, 627 S.E.2d 166 (2006).

Armed robbery and aggravated assault with deadly weapon are separate crimes, and one is not included in the other. Neither prohibits a designated kind of conduct generally while the other prohibits a specific instance of such conduct. Roberts v. State, 228 Ga. 298, 185 S.E.2d 385 (1971).

Aggravated assault and armed robbery not always different crimes. — While aggravated assault and armed robbery are different crimes as a matter of law, they are not always so as a matter of fact. Lambert v. State, 157 Ga. App. 275, 277 S.E.2d 66 (1981).

Conviction of aggravated assault and armed robbery constitutional. — There was no violation of defendant's protection from double jeopardy in defendant's having been convicted of and punished for both the aggravated assault and armed robbery of defendant's victim, where the indictment charged armed robbery with the specific intent to commit a theft and the two acts were in fact separate though in close succession. Taylor v. State, 177 Ga. App. 624, 340 S.E.2d 263 (1986).

Charge of aggravated assault on a peace officer merges into a mutiny conviction because the aggravated assault charge is established by proof of less than all the facts required to establish the commission of mutiny. Lummen v. State, 180 Ga. App. 204, 348 S.E.2d 584 (1986).

Aggravated assault on a police officer merged with obstruction of a police officer. — Trial court erred in failing to merge the defendant's convictions for four counts of obstruction of a police officer into the convictions for four counts of aggravated assault on a police officer because each count of the crime of obstruction was established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to establish each count of the crime of aggravated assault; the state conceded that the trial court erred in failing to merge the convictions for obstruction into the convictions for aggravated assault on a police officer. Dobbs v. State, 302 Ga. App. 628, 691 S.E.2d 387 (2010).

Assault with Deadly Weapon

"Assault with deadly weapon" and "assault with intent to murder" compared. — While an assault with intent to commit murder is usually manifested by the use of some deadly weapon, yet the offense of an assault with intent to commit murder may be committed without a weapon likely to produce death. Wright v. State, 40 Ga. App. 118, 149 S.E. 153 (1929).

"Assault with deadly weapon" and "assault with an object used offensively" compared. — Despite the defendant's claim that insufficient evidence was presented that the gun used in the commission of the charged crime was used as a deadly weapon, because the defendant was indicted for committing an assault by striking the victim on the side of the victim's head with the gun, an object when used offensively was likely to result in serious injury, no evidence of a deadly weapon was required at trial. Vonhagel v. State, 287 Ga. App. 507, 651 S.E.2d 793 (2007).

Assault with deadly weapon is essential element of offense of aggravated assault. Haygood v. State, 142 Ga. App. 627, 236 S.E.2d 696 (1977).

Assault with deadly weapon constitutes aggravated assault, felony. Ruff v. State, 150 Ga. App. 238, 257 S.E.2d 203 (1979).

Assault is aggravated when made with deadly weapon, regardless of intent. Ross v. State, 131 Ga. App. 587, 206 S.E.2d 554 (1974).

When jury can be given discretion to convict of lesser included offense.

— Under the proof in a case, the jury can be given the discretion to convict of a lower offense included in a higher felony charged, if they believe the evidence does not show a specific intent to kill. Jackson v. State, 99 Ga. App. 740, 109 S.E.2d 886 (1959).

Instruction on lesser offense and authorization to so convict. — Under an indictment for murder the accused may be convicted of a lower grade of felony, or of a misdemeanor, if the lesser offense is one involved in the homicide and is sufficiently charged in the indictment; but whether the jury should be instructed on the law of a lesser offense, or they would be authorized to convict of a lesser offense, depends on the evidence. Moore v. State, 55 Ga. App. 213, 189 S.E. 731 (1937).

When one is charged with murder by shooting and the evidence does not demand a finding that the victim died from such gunshot wounds and the defendant admits the shooting, a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to murder may be authorized and it is not error to charge the jury on such lesser crime. Kimbro v. State, 113 Ga. App. 314, 147 S.E.2d 876 (1966).

Because the evidence showed that defendant committed an assault with intent and a deadly weapon, the crime constituted an aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); therefore, a charge on the lesser-included offenses of simple assault or reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-20(a)(2) and 16-5-60(b) was not warranted. Paul v. State, 296 Ga. App. 6, 673 S.E.2d 551 (2009).

Intent is a question for the jury. — When defendant contended the evidence was not sufficient to support the verdict because defendant did not intend to shoot anyone, but only intended to scare off people who were attacking defendant's home and defendant's automobile, it was held that intent is a question for the jury, and the evidence was sufficient. Cade v. State, 180 Ga. App. 314, 348 S.E.2d 769 (1986).

State of mind of either a perpetrator or a victim, including whether a victim has been placed under reasonable apprehension of injury or fear from an event, when in issue, may be proved by indirect or circumstantial evidence. Williams v. State, 208 Ga. App. 12, 430 S.E.2d 157 (1993).

Intent to kill is not element of aggravated assault with deadly weapon. Emmons v. State, 142 Ga. App. 553, 236 S.E.2d 536 (1977); Riddle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 328, 243 S.E.2d 607 (1978), overruled on other grounds, Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Intent to injure is not an element of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Collins v. State, 199 Ga. App. 676, 405 S.E.2d 892 (1991); Turner v. State, 205 Ga. App. 745, 423 S.E.2d 439 (1992); Jay v. State, 232 Ga. App. 661, 503 S.E.2d 563 (1998).

It is the reasonable apprehension of harm by the victim of an assault by a firearm that establishes the crime of aggravated assault, not the assailant's intent to injure. Collins v. State, 199 Ga. App. 676, 405 S.E.2d 892 (1991); Turner v. State, 205 Ga. App. 745, 423 S.E.2d 439 (1992).

Intent to harm the victim is not an element of aggravated assault, and the state needs only to prove that defendant committed an assault and that defendant used a deadly weapon in doing so; a jury's finding that defendant was guilty of aggravated assault was supported by evidence that defendant, armed with a knife, grabbed the victim as the victim was running; defendant and the victim struggled; the victim fell to the ground; defendant held a knife to the victim's neck, forced the victim into a near-by pick-up truck, and drove away; and while in the truck, the defendant punched the victim in the face and threatened to kill the victim. Bailey v. State, 269 Ga. App. 262, 603 S.E.2d 786 (2004).

Intent to scare victim not a defense. — When the defendant discharged a firearm in the direction of the victim, the defendant committed aggravated assault, and defendant's claim that the defendant was just trying to scare the victim was no defense. Jordan v. State, 214 Ga. App. 598, 448 S.E.2d 917 (1994).

Actual injury not required. — There is no requirement that a victim actually be injured by the deadly weapon before a conviction for aggravated assault is authorized, since it is the reasonable apprehension of harm by the victim from exposure to the deadly weapon that establishes the crime of aggravated assault. Gilbert v. State, 209 Ga. App. 483, 433 S.E.2d 664 (1993).

When the defendant fired shots into the cab of a single cab pickup truck containing three people, the evidence was sufficient for a conviction of aggravated assault against the two victims who were not struck by a bullet, because one of those victims testified that the defendant shot at the victim and the jury could surmise that the victims not struck suffered apprehension of being shot. Cornelius v. State, 273 Ga. App. 806, 616 S.E.2d 148 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Criminal negligence cannot substitute for criminal intent in cases of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon based on either an attempt to commit violent injury to the person of another (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1)), or the commission of an act placing another in apprehension of receiving an injury (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2)). Dunagan v. State, 269 Ga. 590, 502 S.E.2d 726 (1998), overruling Osborne v. State, 228 Ga. App. 758, 492 S.E.2d 732 (2007) and Jordan v. State, 214 Ga. App. 598, 448 S.E.2d 917 (1994).

Aggravated assault with deadly weapon is completed when simple assault committed by means of deadly weapon. Scott v. State, 141 Ga. App. 848, 234 S.E.2d 685 (1977); Tuggle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 603, 244 S.E.2d 131 (1978); Hurst v. State, 158 Ga. App. 722, 282 S.E.2d 192 (1981); Doss v. State, 166 Ga. App. 361, 304 S.E.2d 484 (1983); Rust v. State, 264 Ga. App. 893, 592 S.E.2d 525 (2003).

Recanting of assault by victim. — Investigative statements given by a passenger at the scene of a car accident and subsequent statement that defendant swung and hit the passenger with a gun constituted substantive evidence of defendant's guilt despite the passenger's subsequent recantation or equivocation. Hurst v. State, 258 Ga. App. 664, 574 S.E.2d 876 (2002).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict regarding an aggravated assault count involving defendant's spouse, even though the spouse testified that the spouse did not believe defendant would harm the spouse despite the fact that defendant had been carrying a gun, as the police testimony that the spouse was in a very fearful state when police found the spouse sufficiently showed that the spouse had a reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury. Gordian v. State, 261 Ga. App. 75, 581 S.E.2d 616 (2003).

Despite the recantation by a juvenile's parent at trial, because sufficient evidence that the juvenile placed the parent in reasonable apprehension of being struck with a hammer, which was in line with the allegations in the parent's complaint filed immediately following the incident, the juvenile court's adjudication against the juvenile for aggravated assault was upheld on appeal. In the Interest of C.B., 288 Ga. App. 752, 655 S.E.2d 342 (2007).

Assault on victim holding child. — When the defendant discharged a firearm in the direction of a victim who was holding a two-year-old child in the victim's arms, the defendant's deliberate act could be found to have included an attempt to injure those at whom defendant aimed, and the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated assault upon the child. Jordan v. State, 214 Ga. App. 598, 448 S.E.2d 917 (1994).

Assault against several people. — Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of three counts of aggravated assault after one victim testified about being fearful and that the defendant pointed a gun at all three victims. Jackson v. State, 251 Ga. App. 578, 554 S.E.2d 768 (2001).

Attempting injury with deadly weapon. — Person commits aggravated assault when a person attempts to commit violent injury upon another person with a deadly weapon. Riddle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 328, 243 S.E.2d 607 (1978), overruled on other grounds, Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Reasonable apprehension of violent injury on part of victim must be shown. — When the facts establish clearly that defendant committed an act with a deadly weapon which placed the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, this is sufficient to support the charge of aggravated assault; there is no requirement that a victim be actually injured, and the crime is complete without proof of injury. Daughtry v. State, 180 Ga. App. 711, 350 S.E.2d 53 (1986).

Unreasonable apprehension or suspicion of harm. — Juvenile defendant was not authorized to stab the victim under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a), where defendant was attacked by the victim from behind with the victim's fists, and could see that the victim did not have a weapon; defendant's belief that defendant's own life was in danger was a mere unreasonable apprehension or suspicion of harm, which was insufficient to justify the use of deadly force, and defendant was properly adjudicated a delinquent for aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and for carrying a weapon onto a school bus under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-127.1(b). In re Q.M.L., 257 Ga. App. 22, 570 S.E.2d 92 (2002).

Fear is not the same as reasonable apprehension. — Simple assault is defined as an act which places another in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2), an assault becomes aggravated when it is committed with a deadly weapon, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); thus, if the victim is in reasonable apprehension of an immediate violent injury from a weapon, an aggravated assault has occurred. Because reasonable apprehension of injury is not the same as simple fear, the testimony that the victim was not afraid of the defendant does not preclude conviction. Lunsford v. State, 260 Ga. App. 818, 581 S.E.2d 638 (2003).

Conviction upheld despite accident defense. — Court would reject the contention that injuries to one victim were caused accidentally during the assault of the other victim since the defendant explicitly threatened the first victim's life and since the defendant's conviction could otherwise be supported by the doctrine of transferred intent. Harris v. State, 233 Ga. App. 696, 505 S.E.2d 239 (1998).

Conviction upheld despite coercion defense. — When the defendant, on appeal, conceded to being present and participating in an armed robbery and the assault that occurred along with the robbery, but contended (as defendant did at trial) that the defendant was not a voluntary participant in the crimes but acted only out of fear for the defendant's own life through the coercion of other participants in the crimes, it was held that the jury was presented with sufficient admissible evidence to establish to the satisfaction of a rational trier of fact that guilt was proven beyond a reasonable doubt. August v. State, 180 Ga. App. 510, 349 S.E.2d 532 (1986).

Conviction upheld despite self-defense argument. — When the victim threw the hot contents of a frying pan at the defendant and the defendant then drew a knife from her blouse and stabbed the victim numerous times, but there were no eyewitnesses to the stabbing other than the victim and the defendant, and the defendant testified she stabbed the victim in self-defense in the belief that he was reaching into his pocket for a weapon and that, while she had meant to "hurt" the victim, she had not intended to kill him, a rational trier of fact could have found the defendant guilty of the crime of felony murder beyond a reasonable doubt by causing the victim's death while committing the felony of aggravated assault. Henderson v. State, 256 Ga. 486, 350 S.E.2d 236 (1986).

Defendant was properly convicted of aggravated assault after the defendant pulled a gun on security personnel at a tavern after they took defendant's keys because of the defendant's intoxicated condition, notwithstanding the defendant's contention that the actions were in self-defense. Richardson v. State, 233 Ga. App. 890, 505 S.E.2d 57 (1998).

Testimony of a parent and two children that a defendant allegedly pointed a gun at their vehicle and that, as a result, they were in fear of being shot was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction on three counts of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); given the evidence, a rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of aggravated assault beyond a reasonable doubt, and the jury obviously resolved the defendant's self-defense claim against the defendant. Adams v. State, 282 Ga. App. 819, 640 S.E.2d 329 (2006).

Evidence plainly was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(a) because the state presented more than ample evidence that the defendant's use of force was not justified under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a); based upon the victim's testimony and the victim's prior statement to the responding officer, the jury clearly was authorized to find that the defendant's acts of grabbing the victim by the hair, throwing the victim to the ground, and choking the victim to the point of unconsciousness constituted excessive force, and the prior and subsequent difficulties evidence and the similar transaction evidence the state presented supported the jury's decision to give little credence to the defendant's self-defense claim. Whitley v. State, 307 Ga. App. 553, 707 S.E.2d 375 (2011).

Words "deadly weapon," include all means or instrumentalities by which assaults with intent to commit murder may be made. Wright v. State, 40 Ga. App. 118, 149 S.E. 153 (1929).

Although hands are not per se "deadly weapons," where the defendant's hands were restrained by handcuffs, and a doctor testified that the victim's severe injuries were consistent with being struck by hands, fists, and handcuffs, there was sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction for aggravated assault. Gamble v. State, 235 Ga. App. 777, 510 S.E.2d 69 (1998).

Proving that weapon is one likely to produce death. — When an indictment charges the commission of the offense of assault with intent to murder by using a knife such as was "likely to produce death," the proof must show that it was a weapon of this character, but this may be done by evidence as to the nature of the wound, as well as direct proof of the character of the weapon. Jackson v. State, 56 Ga. App. 374, 192 S.E. 633 (1937).

Assault with deadly weapon while resisting arrest constitutes prima facie case of assault with intent to kill. Garrett v. State, 89 Ga. 446, 15 S.E. 533 (1892).

Unprovoked assault by police officer with deadly weapon justifying offender's killing policeman. — If an officer who makes a lawful arrest for a misdemeanor committed in the officer's presence does so in an unlawful manner by making an unprovoked assault with a weapon likely to produce death, and with intent to kill the offender, if the circumstances are sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man that a felony is intended, and the offender slays the officer, not in a spirit of revenge or for the purpose of preventing the lawful arrest, but to protect self from what is or what reasonably appears to be such a felonious assault, then, in either of such events, the killing would be justifiable. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

Since an assault and battery is a misdemeanor and not a felony, the mere unlawful striking of an offender by an officer lawfully arresting the offender for a misdemeanor would not be sufficient to justify the offender in killing the officer, unless the conduct of the officer was such as to excite the fears of a reasonable man that a felony was in fact about to be committed, and the offender really acted on such fears. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

Whether instrument used constitutes deadly weapon is properly for jury's determination. Quarles v. State, 130 Ga. App. 756, 204 S.E.2d 467 (1974); Ellis v. State, 137 Ga. App. 834, 224 S.E.2d 799 (1976); Harper v. State, 157 Ga. App. 480, 278 S.E.2d 28 (1981).

Because the jury viewed the weapon used in an attack subject to the underlying aggravated assault charge against the defendant, and received testimony and photographic evidence about the nature and extent of the victim's actual injuries and the manner in which the defendant used the shank to stab the victim in the area of several vital organs, the jury was authorized to infer from the evidence that the instrument was a deadly weapon. Ellison v. State, 288 Ga. App. 404, 654 S.E.2d 223 (2007).

Manner of weapon's use determinative of nature. — Manner in which a weapon is used may determine whether that weapon is an offensive or deadly weapon for the purpose of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. Banks v. State, 169 Ga. App. 571, 314 S.E.2d 235 (1984).

Deadly weapon depends on object's use, wounds inflicted and the like. — An object may be found to be a deadly weapon by the jury depending on the manner and means of its use, the wound inflicted, etc. Ellis v. State, 137 Ga. App. 834, 224 S.E.2d 799 (1976).

Assault with knife. — There was sufficient evidence to support conviction for aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, against a waitress after defendant jumped over the restaurant counter, held a knife to the waitress' neck, and indicated that defendant would use the knife if another employee came closer; the conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 for aggravated assault of the other employee was also supported by sufficient evidence as the employee was cut by defendant's knife, which constituted suffering of a violent injury, and although the employee testified that the employee did not perceive a threat from the knife, there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support such a finding. Lemming v. State, 272 Ga. App. 122, 612 S.E.2d 495 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Miller v. State, 285 Ga. 285, 676 S.E.2d 173 (2009).

Sufficient evidence supported an aggravated assault conviction where the victim testified that, during a dispute, the defendant stabbed the victim several times with a knife, where defendant's sibling testified to a similar incident 11 days earlier, in which defendant assaulted the sibling during a dispute, where a witness testified that the defendant admitted to stabbing the victim because of the way the victim had treated the witness's friend, and where defendant admitted stabbing the victim, but claimed it was in self-defense. Cochran v. State, 277 Ga. App. 251, 626 S.E.2d 217 (2006).

Aggravated assault conviction was supported by sufficient evidence that, after the victim confronted the defendant about a comment made to the victim's spouse, the defendant stabbed the victim to death; witnesses saw the defendant fighting with the victim, saw the defendant fold up a knife after the victim fell, and the defendant admitted to stabbing the victim. Williams v. State, 280 Ga. 297, 627 S.E.2d 32 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions for aggravated assault on a peace officer and making a terroristic threat or act, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2) and 16-11-37(a), respectively, where the defendant was agitated when officers came to the residence to investigate complaints of a terroristic threat, the defendant brandished two knives at the officers which caused them to retreat outside of the residence, defendant refused to put the knives down despite being instructed to do so at gunpoint by the officers, and when the defendant threatened to stab an officer and raised the knife up, the defendant was shot in the hand. Williams v. State, 277 Ga. App. 884, 627 S.E.2d 897 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 and aggravated sodomy in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a) although the defendant pointed to the defendant's previous sexual relationship with the victim and to alleged inconsistencies in the testimony of the victim and the victim's friend; the appellate court refused to weigh the evidence or determine witness credibility, and it found that the evidence, which included testimony that the defendant forcibly placed the victim in the defendant's truck, drove the victim across the state line to an apartment, forced the victim to have sex with the defendant, and cut the victim with a knife, was sufficient to convict. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 64, 635 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Testimony from an eyewitness that the defendant and the victim scuffled and fell to the ground, and that the defendant knelt over the victim, stabbing the victim repeatedly with a knife, was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of felony murder and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Lamplley v. State, 284 Ga. 37, 663 S.E.2d 184 (2008).

In a trial for aggravated assault, the evidence was sufficient to establish that the defendant was armed with a knife when an apparently bloodstained knife was found on the defendant's person when the defendant was arrested, the defendant admitted both to possessing and brandishing the knife at the victim, and the victim testified that the victim was stabbed. Furthermore, the state was not required to prove the cause of the victim's injuries with medical evidence. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 224, 666 S.E.2d 600 (2008).

Evidence supported the convictions of felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a knife during the commission of a felony. The victim's grandchild saw the defendant stab the victim after an argument, then went to a relative for help; the defendant then attacked the relative and fled, throwing the knife the defendant used to stab the victim in the bushes; when the defendant was found by police shortly thereafter, the defendant admitted to stabbing the victim; and a medical examiner testified that the bulk of the victim's stabs came from behind and that the cut on the defendant's hand was an offensive wound likely sustained as the defendant was stabbing the victim with enough force to break one of the victim's ribs. Butler v. State, 285 Ga. 518, 678 S.E.2d 92 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated assault because a rational trier of fact could have inferred that the defendant's girlfriend apprehended a knife attack; jury could reasonably conclude that when the defendant threatened the girlfriend's life while holding a knife, and the girlfriend reached up with her hand, she was in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury. Wilson v. State, 304 Ga. App. 743, 698 S.E.2d 6 (2010).

Nature and location of wounds showing character of weapon. — Even in absence of production or verbal description of weapon used, evidence as to nature, kind, and location of wounds inflicted by assailant is sufficient to allow jury to infer character of weapon. Wade v. State, 157 Ga. App. 296, 277 S.E.2d 292 (1981); Wright v. State, 211 Ga. App. 431, 440 S.E.2d 27 (1994).

State must show how object not per se deadly weapon is such in circumstances. — When an object is not per se a deadly weapon within the meaning of Ga. L. 1968, pp. 1249, 1280 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21), it is incumbent upon the state to show the circumstances of the object's use which made the object a deadly weapon. Talley v. State, 137 Ga. App. 548, 224 S.E.2d 455 (1976).

Evidence sufficient to allow jury to infer character of weapon. — Lethal character of the weapon used in making an assault may be inferred from the effect and nature of the wound inflicted. Wells v. State, 125 Ga. App. 579, 188 S.E.2d 407 (1972).

Even if the actual weapon alleged to be a deadly one in an indictment is not produced or described, evidence as to the nature, kind and location of the wounds inflicted by the assailant is sufficient to allow the jury to infer the character of the weapon. Zachery v. State, 153 Ga. App. 531, 265 S.E.2d 860 (1980).

Description of the injuries sustained by the victim is admissible to prove that the pistol used by the defendant was a deadly weapon. Howard v. State, 165 Ga. App. 555, 301 S.E.2d 910 (1983).

No evidence showed that aggravated assault could have occurred other than through use of deadly weapon. — Although the indictment only referred to the commission of the crimes through the use of a deadly weapon, defendants did not point to evidence showing that an aggravated assault could have occurred other than through the use of a deadly weapon; moreover, because the trial court instructed the jury that the state was required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every material allegation of the indictment, even if the aggravated assault charge was erroneous, such error was rendered harmless in light of the additional instruction. Dunbar v. State, 273 Ga. App. 29, 614 S.E.2d 472 (2005).

Deadly weapon need not be introduced. — It is not necessary for the state to admit into evidence the deadly weapon used by the defendant in order for the defendant to be found guilty of aggravated assault. Lattimer v. State, 231 Ga. App. 594, 499 S.E.2d 671 (1998).

With regard to the sufficiency of the evidence to uphold a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, because two police officers testified that the defendant fired a gun, the testimony was sufficient to infer the presence of a weapon even though no weapon was introduced into evidence. Johnson v. State, 287 Ga. App. 352, 651 S.E.2d 450 (2007).

It is not essential for state to locate bullets, bullet holes, or expended shells to establish the crime of aggravated assault. Radford v. State, 251 Ga. 50, 302 S.E.2d 555 (1983).

Admissible evidence of res gestae. — Evidence was sufficient to find the defendant guilty of assault with a deadly weapon, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and kidnapping; the victim's statement that the victim's sister was afraid of the defendant because the defendant had done the same thing to the sister was clearly admissible as part of the res gestae even if it incidentally placed the defendant's character in evidence. McLendon v. State, 258 Ga. App. 133, 572 S.E.2d 763 (2002).

Evidence sufficient for conviction.

— When the state's evidence shows that the victim was standing outside the victim's apartment when the defendant approached, the defendant accused the victim of stealing the defendant's television and attacked the victim, stabbing the victim with a knife, and after stabbing the victim, the defendant left the scene, considering the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict, a rational trier of fact reasonably could find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the offense charged. Jackson v. State, 180 Ga. App. 363, 349 S.E.2d 252 (1986).

Although expressing concern for personal safety, the defendant admitted seeing nothing but the victim's closed fist and that the defendant stabbed the victim with an eight-inch long butcher knife, the wound to the victim was in the victim's back, between the victim's shoulder blades and puncturing the victim's lung, although the defendant said the defendant stabbed the victim in the shoulder, and the sole defense was self-defense, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the state, there was sufficient evidence to authorize the trial judge, as trier of fact, to find appellant guilty of aggravated assault beyond a reasonable doubt. Roberts v. State, 180 Ga. App. 646, 350 S.E.2d 39 (1986).

See Johnson v. State, 185 Ga. App. 167, 363 S.E.2d 773 (1987); Nash v. State, 222 Ga. App. 766, 476 S.E.2d 69 (1996); Littleton v. State, 225 Ga. App. 900, 485 S.E.2d 230 (1997); Harris v. State, 233 Ga. App. 696, 505 S.E.2d 239 (1998); Jones v. State, 233 Ga. App. 291, 503 S.E.2d 902 (1998); Head v. State, 233 Ga. App. 655, 504 S.E.2d 499 (1998); Tolliver v. State, 243 Ga. App. 180, 531 S.E.2d 383 (2000); Bartlett v. State, 244 Ga. App. 49, 537 S.E.2d 362 (2000).

When the record showed that defendant pointed a gun at the defendant's father and brothers-in-law during the kidnapping of his wife, the evidence was sufficient to render a conviction. Williams v. State, 207 Ga. App. 371, 427 S.E.2d 846 (1993).

Intentionally firing a gun at another, absent justification, is sufficient in and of itself to support a conviction of aggravated assault. Quinn v. State, 209 Ga. App. 480, 433 S.E.2d 592 (1993).

Testimony by the victim, in which the victim positively identified defendant as the person who entered the victim's home, and committed the crimes of robbery by intimidation, kidnapping, aggravated assault, aggravated assault with a knife, aggravated battery and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, charged in the indictment and eyewitness testimony that defendant entered the victim's premises minutes before the attack of the victim was sufficient to authorize the jury's finding that defendant was guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt, of committing the crimes charged in the indictment. Mobley v. State, 211 Ga. App. 709, 441 S.E.2d 73 (1994).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find appellant guilty of murder, aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon beyond a reasonable doubt. Hall v. State, 264 Ga. 85, 441 S.E.2d 245 (1994).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault, when the victim was attacked and beaten with fists and a round "fence pipe," the victim identified the defendant at trial as the victim's principal assailant, a witness testified to seeing the defendant pick up an object like a pole or stick and repeatedly strike the victim, and a wooden fence post with blood on the post was located a short distance from where the police found the victim. Peek v. State, 234 Ga. App. 731, 507 S.E.2d 553 (1998).

Victim's in-court identification of defendant as the assailant was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict that defendant committed aggravated assault with a handgun, a deadly weapon, as alleged in the indictment. Graham v. State, 236 Ga. App. 673, 512 S.E.2d 921 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) where: (1) an officer observed a broken truck window and saw the defendant disappearing into the woods behind grandmother's home; (2) one of the defendant's friends warned the officer that the defendant would probably shoot at the officer; (3) that friend testified that the friend had seen the defendant break the glass and take the gun from the truck; (4) the officers testified that they were able to identify the general type of weapon and the direction of travel of the first bullet; (5) the area was desolate and remote; and (6) no evidence showed the presence of any other person in the area at that time of night which was approaching midnight. Yawn v. State, 237 Ga. App. 206, 515 S.E.2d 182 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction since the victim testified that the defendant stabbed the victim in the arm and that the knife the victim observed in the defendant's possession was "maybe six or eight inches long with a handle on it," and two witnesses testified that they saw the defendant stab the victim with a large knife. Silas v. State, 247 Ga. App. 792, 545 S.E.2d 358 (2001).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated assault since: (1) the defendant snatched a woman's purse in the parking lot of a restaurant as she and her husband walked to the restaurant; (2) the husband pursued the defendant and managed to attach himself to the driver's side of the pick-up in which defendant sped away; and (3) the defendant nonetheless drove off, dragging the husband with him, managing to shake him from the vehicle, and leaving him injured on the ground. Bogan v. State, 249 Ga. App. 242, 547 S.E.2d 326 (2001).

Evidence that defendant threatened a daycare owner and two daycare workers with a handgun when they tried to stop defendant from taking defendant's daughter supported defendant's convictions of two aggravated assaults in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and possessing a firearm during the commission of a felony in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b)(1). Diaz v. State, 255 Ga. App. 288, 564 S.E.2d 872 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to establish aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), because defendant placed his wife in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, which assault was aggravated by the use of a shotgun in a threatening manner. Weaver v. State, 256 Ga. App. 573, 568 S.E.2d 836 (2002).

Evidence that defendant intentionally stabbed a man in the side with a knife after a confrontation was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Townsend v. State, 256 Ga. App. 837, 570 S.E.2d 47 (2002).

Evidence that defendant knew people lived inside a home and that there was a truck parked next to the home when defendant fired four or five shots from a .30 caliber rifle into the home at 10:30 a.m. was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and using a firearm in the commission of a felony. Maynor v. State, 257 Ga. App. 151, 570 S.E.2d 428 (2002).

Although the victim's statement to the police was sufficient to prove that defendant threatened to kill the victim as alleged in the indictment, proof that defendant threatened to kill the victim was not a necessary element of the charge of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); evidence that defendant caused the victim to be very much afraid by pointing a pistol at the victim was sufficient to prove the offense. Thomas v. State, 257 Ga. App. 350, 571 S.E.2d 178 (2002).

Evidence that defendant pulled a knife out, struck it against the neck of a woman defendant was dating, and told the woman that defendant should have killed the woman was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault as it showed defendant assaulted the woman with a deadly weapon. Alvarado v. State, 257 Ga. App. 746, 572 S.E.2d 18 (2002).

Eyewitnesses saw defendant standing by the door of the barber shop shooting repeatedly at the murder victim, who died from those wounds, and the police recovered the pistol from defendant that shot the victim; thus, the evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of malice murder, felony murder, and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-1 and 16-5-21. Roberts v. State, 276 Ga. 258, 577 S.E.2d 580 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault where the record revealed that the defendant admitted to being in the apartment of the victim, who was the defendant's former love interest, the defendant admitted to having the gun, and the defendant's only defense was that the gun went off accidentally, which was contradicted by the evidence of the defendant's intentional punching and shooting of the victim. Milton v. State, 259 Ga. App. 660, 577 S.E.2d 862 (2003).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) was supported by sufficient evidence after the victim testified as to the attack, there were photographs which showed the victim's cuts, and the jury's decision was based in part on its weighing of the credibility of the witnesses; it was also determined that the sentence imposed was within the statutory guidelines of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(g) and was not more severe merely because defendant had requested a jury trial. Benham v. State, 260 Ga. App. 243, 581 S.E.2d 586 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of two counts of armed robbery, two counts of theft by taking, three counts of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), three counts of simple battery, three counts of kidnapping, and two counts of possessing a firearm during the commission of a crime since: (1) there was evidence that the defendant entered a store, placed a knife to the neck of one of the three victims, forced that victim to the back of the store, aided another assailant who was armed with a gun to bind the victims and drag them to the back of the store, and stole money and other items from two of the victims; (2) the defendant confessed to the crimes during interviews with law enforcement officials; and (3) the defendant's confessions were corroborated by the testimony of one of the victims who, despite earlier being unable to identify the robbers, ultimately identified the defendant as one of the robbers. The corroborating victim's initial inability to identify the defendant posed an issue of credibility for the jury's resolution and did not require reversal. Phanamixay v. State, 260 Ga. App. 177, 581 S.E.2d 286 (2003).

When a jury could believe that defendant shot a victim without aggravation rather than defendant's claim that a gun went off by accident during a struggle, ample evidence sustained the conviction for aggravated assault pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Wilson v. State, 261 Ga. App. 28, 581 S.E.2d 625 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated assault, a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), because the State of Georgia presented evidence that the defendant stabbed the defendant's love interest's child several times with a butcher knife. Even though the defendant argued that the defendant was merely defending against the child's attack with a bat, the jury was authorized by O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(b)(2) to reject the defendant's justification claim; the evidence showed that the love interest's child hit the defendant with a bat to protect the child's parent from the defendant, who forcefully entered their house and then charged the love interest's child, pushed the child down, and stabbed the child. Williams v. State, 268 Ga. App. 384, 601 S.E.2d 833 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault because: (1) the defendant was in an altercation with the victim at a dance; (2) eyewitnesses saw the defendant make a stabbing motion at the victim; (3) the victim died of a nine stab wounds, including one to the heart; (4) the defendant's burned blue jeans were found in the defendant's love interest's backyard; (5) the defendant provided an investigator with clean clothes the defendant allegedly wore at the dance; and (6) the victim's blood and DNA were found on the defendant's leather jacket and on the shirt the defendant's love interest wore to the dance. Rakestrau v. State, 278 Ga. 872, 608 S.E.2d 216 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for malice murder and aggravated assault because the victim had defensive wounds on a hand, the victim's blood was found on defendant's shoe, a mixture of the victim's and defendant's blood was found on defendant's shirt, and the victim planned to ask defendant to leave the apartment. Williams v. State, 279 Ga. 154, 611 S.E.2d 19 (2005).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendants' convictions for armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), burglary, O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1(a), and possession of a firearm during the commission of certain crimes, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b)(2), because evidence was seen in one of the defendant's vehicles during a traffic stop, defendants were identified from the videotape of the stop, and the shotgun used by the assailant in the home invasion was found in one of the defendant's homes. Dunbar v. State, 273 Ga. App. 29, 614 S.E.2d 472 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support the convictions of murder, armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, and a statutory violation, all in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-1, 16-5-21, 16-7-1, 16-8-41, and 16-11-106, respectively, where the defendant and the codefendant went to a club with the intention of robbing someone, met the victim and drove the victim back to the victim's home, beat and fatally stabbed the victim, and upon leaving the victim's apartment, took some of the victim's belongings. Willoughby v. State, 280 Ga. 176, 626 S.E.2d 112 (2006).

Victim's testimony that the defendant threatened the victim with a knife and struck the victim with a lamp, and evidence that the victim was found in a bathroom with an electrical cord wrapped tightly around the victim's neck, and that the defendant's finger and palm prints were lifted from blood on the bathroom wall, allowed any rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of three counts of aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Nelson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 548, 629 S.E.2d 410 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to find the defendant guilty of voluntary manslaughter in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-2, felony murder predicated on possession of a firearm by a convicted felon in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1, two counts of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, possession of a firearm by a convicted felon in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-131, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony murder in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, as the defendant was angered by the victim's presence in the residence, the defendant assaulted the victim with a baseball bat and threatened to kill the victim if the victim did not leave the residence, and when the victim returned to the residence, the defendant fatally shot the victim in the stomach. Lawson v. State, 280 Ga. 881, 635 S.E.2d 134 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's convictions for malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony as: (1) the defendant repeatedly followed the victim in and out of a restaurant, and eventually chased the victim from the restaurant, firing at the victim at least nine times; (2) after the shooting, the defendant jumped into a silver truck and sped away; (3) the victim died as a result of the gunshot wounds; and (4) two witnesses identified the defendant from photographic lineups. Waters v. State, 281 Ga. 119, 636 S.E.2d 538 (2006).

In spite of the defendant's contrary testimony, a conviction on a charge of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon upon a police officer, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and (c), was supported by sufficient evidence; the trial judge, as the trier of fact, was authorized to credit testimony that the defendant's act of pointing a gun at the victim's midsection caused that person a reasonable apprehension of fear, over testimony presented by the defendant. Defrancisco v. State, 289 Ga. App. 115, 656 S.E.2d 238 (2008).

Evidence of the defendant's shooting a victim, striking the victim's companion with a motorcycle helmet, the defendant's sibling's pointing a gun at the companion, and the sibling's pointing a gun at the victim and pulling the trigger, was sufficient to convict the defendant of four counts of aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), as the defendant was responsible for the sibling's acts as an aider and abettor under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(b)(3). Serchion v. State, 293 Ga. App. 629, 667 S.E.2d 624 (2008).

Conviction of aggravated assault, murder, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon was justified. — See Brooks v. State, 250 Ga. 739, 300 S.E.2d 810 (1983).

Instruction on defense of accident or misfortune properly refused. — Trial court properly refused to give a requested jury instruction on the defense of accident or misfortune, where defendant's own testimony showed that defendant was engaged in an attempt to commit an aggravated assault upon the victim when defendant's pistol discharged and the victim was struck by a bullet. Grude v. State, 189 Ga. App. 901, 377 S.E.2d 731 (1989).

Assault With Gun

Stun gun. — Victim's acts of cooperation when the victim recognized that assailants were armed with a stun gun, the testimony of the victim's intense reaction to being repeatedly assaulted by the gun's electronic discharge, and the legal recognition that the stun gun was an "offensive weapon" constituted sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that the victim was assaulted with a weapon likely to result in serious bodily injury. Harwell v. State, 270 Ga. 765, 512 S.E.2d 892 (1999).

An unloaded gun pointed at another in a threatening manner is a deadly weapon. Daughtry v. State, 180 Ga. App. 711, 350 S.E.2d 53 (1986).

When it reasonably appears to an assault victim that the firearm is or might be loaded, then the assailant should be held to consequences of using a deadly weapon whether or not the weapon in fact is loaded. An unloaded shotgun pointed at another in a threatening manner is a "deadly weapon" as a matter of law within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Empty pellet gun in the shape of an automatic weapon was per se a deadly weapon. Clark v. State, 191 Ga. App. 386, 381 S.E.2d 763 (1989).

When a pellet gun that could not be fired reasonably appeared to the victims to be a deadly weapon, such evidence authorized defendant's conviction of aggravated assault. Mitchell v. State, 222 Ga. App. 866, 476 S.E.2d 639 (1996).

Toy pistol can be offensive or deadly weapon under certain circumstances but is not necessarily a deadly weapon. Butts v. State, 153 Ga. App. 464, 265 S.E.2d 370 (1980).

Toy gun having appearance of real gun. — Defendant did not object to the officer's direct testimony that the toy gun the defendant used to assault defendant's former girlfriend looked like a real gun and defendant did not challenge admission of that testimony on appeal; so, the testimony was properly admitted to prove aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. Further, defendant had stated to friends who were witnesses that the defendant used the toy gun since the toy looked like a real gun; therefore, the defendant did not show prejudice since the officer's opinion was also cumulative of other evidence. Jackson v. State, 270 Ga. App. 166, 605 S.E.2d 876 (2004).

Reassembled rifle. — Regardless of whether the reassembled rifle the defendant used in committing an aggravated assault was loaded and capable of firing, the gun reasonably appeared to be a deadly weapon, despite testimony from the defendant's sibling that the sibling later informed the victim that the defendant's rifle was broken. Stancil v. State, 278 Ga. App. 843, 630 S.E.2d 130 (2006).

Armed robbery can be committed either with a real weapon or with a toy or replica weapon having appearance of being real. Adsett v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Pistol as deadly weapon. — Pistol was a "deadly weapon" within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a) as a matter of law even though it was loaded only with blanks. Veal v. State, 191 Ga. App. 445, 382 S.E.2d 131, cert. denied, 191 Ga. App. 923, 382 S.E.2d 131 (1989).

Whether pistol was deadly weapon is jury question. — If the jury were to find that there was an assault, then whether the pistol used was a weapon likely to produce death when used in such manner was a jury question. Kerbo v. State, 230 Ga. 241, 196 S.E.2d 424 (1973).

Defendant's use of police officer's pistol involved jury question. — Whether the defendant's use of a police officer's pistol by placing the defendant's hand on the pistol and trying to pull the pistol from the pistol's holster constituted use of a deadly weapon under the circumstances was properly for the jury's determination. Hall v. State, 189 Ga. App. 107, 375 S.E.2d 50 (1988).

Evidence supported the defendant's aggravated assault upon a police officer conviction as whether to credit the defendant's testimony that the defendant acted in self-defense and that the defendant did not have control of or fire the officer's weapon was a matter for the jury. Mills v. State, 273 Ga. App. 699, 615 S.E.2d 824 (2005).

Indictment alleging "shooting" by defendant adequately denotes use of deadly weapon. — An indictment charging aggravated assault and alleging that the defendant committed an aggravated assault on the victim by commission of an act of "shooting" clearly denotes the use of a deadly weapon and, therefore, is not fatally defective. Rushin v. State, 180 Ga. App. 276, 348 S.E.2d 910 (1986).

Sufficiency of circumstantial evidence. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and burglary, O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1, were affirmed, as there was sufficient circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to prove that the defendant was the person who committed the acts in question, based on witness testimony and the discovery of clothes and a gun used in the robbery in the defendant's room. Moore v. State, 277 Ga. App. 474, 627 S.E.2d 107 (2006).

Evidence sufficient for assault with gun. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction given testimony showing that defendant fired defendant's gun inside a game room along with a bullet hole that an officer found behind the counter where a victim was located which allowed a rational trier of fact to conclude that defendant committed the crime of aggravated assault by shooting defendant's gun toward one of the victims. Dukes v. State, 264 Ga. App. 820, 592 S.E.2d 473 (2003).

Determination of witness credibility, including the accuracy of eyewitness identification, is within the exclusive province of the jury. Evidence that defendant wielded and attempted to use a gun during the robbery of a pool hall owner was sufficient to convict defendant for aggravated assault where the question of eyewitness identification of defendant was a jury matter. Bartley v. State, 267 Ga. App. 367, 599 S.E.2d 318 (2004).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions of burglary in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1(a), aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), (2), and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b), where evidence showed that three persons forcibly entered the victims' apartment and demanded money, that all three persons were in the car together on the way to the apartment and on the way to the hospital to drop off a bleeding codefendant, that all three persons carried guns, that one of the victims was shot, and that defendant's statement that defendant only was involved to drop off the bleeding codefendant at the hospital was in contrast to the fact that defendant had blood on defendant's pants, shirt, boxer shorts, and that defendant ejected the bloody codefendant from the car in a hurried manner at the hospital. Brown v. State, 267 Ga. App. 642, 600 S.E.2d 731 (2004).

There was sufficient evidence for the jury to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime because the testimony of the victim was sufficient to establish that defendant was the perpetrator. Davis v. State, 267 Ga. App. 668, 600 S.E.2d 742 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support burglary, aggravated assault, kidnapping, false imprisonment, and armed robbery convictions where one of the victims opened the door to the victim's home when the victim recognized one of defendant's accomplices, where defendant and another then pushed the door open and rushed inside, and where defendant grabbed the first victim, pointed a gun at the first victim's head, took money from the second victim's wallet, kept the gun pointed at both victims during the entire incident, ripped the telephone cord out of the wall, and instructed the accomplices to bind and blindfold the victims, which they did; the victims both identified defendant as the gunman from a police photo array and made an in-court identification at trial, and any conflict between the victims' testimony that the gunman had a tattoo on the gunman's arm and a trial demonstration revealing no tattoo on defendant's arm was a matter for the jury to resolve and did not affect the sufficiency of the identification. Kates v. State, 269 Ga. App. 8, 603 S.E.2d 342 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated assault, as: (1) defendant previously threatened to kill the victim; (2) defendant pointed a gun at the victim, warned the victim not to give information to the police about what they did, and said, "We own this area"; (3) the frightened victim told defendant to leave; and (4) defendant left after further words were exchanged. Husband v. State, 275 Ga. App. 246, 620 S.E.2d 479 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying a codefendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on two aggravated assault charges, given that sufficient evidence was presented that: (1) both the defendant and the codefendant, while armed, attempted to rob the victims; (2) off-duty police officers working as security officers identified the defendants; (3) an assault rifle and a sawed-off shotgun were fired by the police as both the defendants were pursued; and (4) the weapons were recovered after both the defendants were apprehended. Walker v. State, 281 Ga. App. 163, 635 S.E.2d 422 (2006).

Convictions for felony murder and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-1 and 16-5-21, were supported by sufficient evidence, including that the defendant and the codefendant were acting in concert, and the denial of the defendant's motion for a judgment of acquittal pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1 was proper; the defendant argued with the victim, a prostitute, and refused to pay for the victim's services, prompting the victim to get a gun and fire a shot into the air, whereupon the defendant and a codefendant fired their guns back at the victim in a car leaving the area, and a bullet from the codefendant's gun killed the victim. Stinchcomb v. State, 280 Ga. 170, 626 S.E.2d 88 (2006).

Convictions for kidnapping, aggravated assault, and malice murder, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-40, 16-5-21, and 16-5-1, respectively, were supported by sufficient evidence where defendant got into a dispute with the victim over a drug deal, defendant and the codefendants kidnapped the victim, drove the victim to a remote area, and shot the victim several times. Morris v. State, 280 Ga. 179, 626 S.E.2d 123 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), where the defendant fired shots towards the victim, who was "having a good time" with a group of other people in the apartment parking lot; the victim's reasonable apprehension of receiving a violent injury was sufficient to satisfy the intent element under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2). Thompson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 323, 626 S.E.2d 825 (2006).

Evidence supported convictions for armed robbery and aggravated assault where using defendant's parent's telephone number, defendant contacted the victim and arranged a meeting to buy shoes, where the victim identified the car defendant was driving, which was registered to defendant's parent, where the victim identified defendant from a pretrial police photo array and at trial, and where, at the meeting arranged by defendant, the victim was shot in the face and defendant then rummaged through the victim's car where the victim kept the shoes. Waddell v. State, 277 Ga. App. 772, 627 S.E.2d 840 (2006), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 731, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 9304, 166 L.Ed.2d 567 (2006).

Evidence that three unarmed people went to talk to defendant about rumors that the defendant wanted to harm them, and that, when one approached the defendant, the defendant fired five shots in their direction, killing one of them, was sufficient to support convictions for felony murder and aggravated assault. Traylor v. State, 280 Ga. 400, 627 S.E.2d 594 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported convictions of aggravated assault with intent to rob and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime where the defendant and two other persons tried to rob a market, one of the other persons had a pistol, which was pointed at the market's owners, the armed participant forced one of the owners to try to open the register, and during the course of the robbery, one of the owners grabbed a hidden gun and shot and killed the armed robber, where the defendant and the other participant fled. Laurel v. State, 278 Ga. App. 147, 628 S.E.2d 208 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's aggravated assault conviction, as the fact that the victim and the defendant offered opposite accounts as to the reason the defendant reached for the gun was of no consequence on appeal, and the appeals court refused to speculate as to which evidence the jury chose to believe. Moss v. State, 278 Ga. App. 221, 628 S.E.2d 648 (2006).

Evidence that the defendant and others approached two separate victims while the defendant brandished a shotgun, that defendant threatened the victims with the gun, and that defendant and the compatriots stole both of the victims' cars, sufficed to sustain convictions of two counts of hijacking a motor vehicle, two counts of armed robbery, two counts of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, and two counts of possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony; the jury was free to disbelieve defendant's testimony that defendant was coerced into threatening the victims at gunpoint and participating in the car thefts. Martinez v. State, 278 Ga. App. 500, 629 S.E.2d 485 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a juvenile's delinquency adjudication based on charges of aggravated assault, possession of a firearm by a minor, and discharge of a gun or pistol near a street, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a), 16-11-132(b), and 16-11-103, as the juvenile was at a party and went outside with a crowd of others due to a fight, and the juvenile fired a gun into the air while standing in the midst of a crowd; the juvenile was identified by three eyewitnesses, whose testimony established that they were placed in reasonable apprehension of immediate violent injury due to the juvenile's actions. In the Interest of C.D.G., 279 Ga. App. 718, 632 S.E.2d 450 (2006).

Defendant's conviction as a party for aggravated assault and aggravated battery was affirmed as: (1) the defendant drove a car knowing a gun was inside; (2) the defendant extinguished the headlights and drove slowly past a crowded corner as a passenger opened fire; (3) the defendant stopped the car next to a prone victim while the passenger continued shooting; and (4) the defendant told the police that the defendant did not care who had been shot. Ford v. State, 280 Ga. App. 580, 634 S.E.2d 522 (2006).

Defendant's motion for a new trial on the defendant's aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the aggravated assault charges was properly denied as the defendant's actions before, during, and after a friend's aggravated assault and firearm possession crimes at a home showed not only that the defendant was a party to those crimes, but that the defendant was a fellow conspirator in the assault against the victim as the defendant: (1) forced the victim at gunpoint to drive to the home; (2) stayed in the nearby living room while the friend shot a gun and threatened the victim (and defendant looked into the bedroom after the gun was fired); (3) accompanied the friend and the handcuffed victim in the vehicle following the incident while the friend searched for the victim's love interest's residence; (4) encouraged the friend to kill the victim; and (5) did not protest any of the friend's actions throughout the evening. Sapp v. State, 280 Ga. App. 592, 634 S.E.2d 523 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, aggravated battery, and possessing a firearm during the commission of a felony were supported by evidence that: (1) the victim and the defendant had an acrimonious relationship; (2) the defendant threatened to hit the victim with a jug; and (3) the defendant's statement that the victim was not "dead yet" after the victim was shot in the back; the jury could reject the defendant's claim that the defendant fired a warning shot away from the victim and could convict the defendant, even though the victim did not see the defendant point the gun at the victim. Rowe v. State, 280 Ga. App. 881, 635 S.E.2d 251 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for malice murder, felony murder while in commission of an aggravated assault, aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony as: (1) the defendant came to a tenant's apartment and told the victim that the defendant just shot someone in the backyard; (2) the tenant heard the victim calling the tenant's name; (3) another witness heard a series of gunshots and then someone being beaten, was familiar with the victim and recognized the victim's voice as the victim hollered, "You stomping me. I've been shot. You already done shot me," and saw the defendant emerge from behind the residence with a gun in the defendant's hand; (4) the defendant held the gun to the head of the witness, but then instructed the witness to leave the area; and (5) the victim's death was caused by two fatal gunshot wounds to the neck and chest and there was blunt force trauma to the head. Compton v. State, 281 Ga. 45, 635 S.E.2d 766 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction of felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony as: (1) the defendant told the victim that the defendant was going to shoot the victim and then the defendant shot the victim in the stomach, argued with the victim some more, and shot the victim again; (2) the victim never admitted cheating on the defendant; (3) after the second shot, the defendant and a friend took the victim to a hospital in a car; (4) while en route, the defendant persisted in the defendant's efforts to get the victim to admit to cheating on the defendant; and (5) the defendant wiped down the revolver and threw it out of the car. Durham v. State, 281 Ga. 208, 636 S.E.2d 513 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for robbery by intimidation, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon as: (1) the defendant demanded that the victim give the defendant the victim's purse and then threatened the victim with a gun and told the victim that the defendant would use it; (2) feeling that the victim's life was in danger, the victim ran; (3) the defendant chased the victim and snatched the victim's purse; (4) two witnesses chased the defendant to an abandoned house, where the victim's purse was later found; (5) a witness obtained the tag number of the defendant's vehicle and police traced the vehicle to the defendant's parent; even assuming that the pre-trial identification procedures were unduly suggestive, the in-court identifications by a witness and the victim were admissible as they were based on independent recollections. Boatwright v. State, 281 Ga. App. 560, 636 S.E.2d 719 (2006).

Aggravated assault convictions were upheld on appeal based on the defendant's act of deliberately firing a gun in the direction of another; moreover, the fact that one of the defendant's cohorts also fired a weapon in the direction of the shooting victims was sufficient for the defendant to be guilty as a party to those criminal acts. Thompson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 627, 636 S.E.2d 779 (2006).

On appeal from the defendant's aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and first-degree criminal damage to property convictions, the court held that the testimony provided by two of the victims identifying the defendant as one of the perpetrators was sufficient to uphold the same, as: (1) the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact; and (2) under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-80, the credibility of a witness was a matter to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court. Reid v. State, 281 Ga. App. 640, 637 S.E.2d 62 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for malice murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony as: (1) during a van ride, the defendant fought with an assault victim, striking the assault victim in the head with a gun, and was told to stop hitting the assault victim; (2) a gunshot was heard and the passengers saw a murder victim lying dead and the defendant holding the gun; (3) the gun was inside the murder victim's mouth when it was fired; (4) the assault victim and another passenger fled; and (5) the defendant and an accomplice dumped the body in an industrial area. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. 229, 637 S.E.2d 393 (2006).

Defendant's malice murder and aggravated assault convictions were upheld on appeal, as supported by sufficient evidence, including that: (1) the defendant, along with two codefendants, fired numerous shots into a crowd in an attempt to shoot several men with whom they had been feuding; (2) one of the codefendants later told a friend that the three committed the crimes; (3) one of the defendant's friends saw the defendant with a shotgun shortly after the shooting, the shotgun had red shells, and the defendant told the friend that the gun had been used in the shootings; and (4) forensic evidence later confirmed that red shotgun shells were found at the scene. Adkins v. State, 281 Ga. 301, 637 S.E.2d 714 (2006).

Sufficient evidence was presented to convict the defendant of two counts of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 because witness testimony indicated that the first victim and the first victim's young child, the second victim who was also the defendant's child, were scared and crying after a confrontation with the defendant and that gunshots were fired; thus, the evidence established that the victims were in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury as required by § 16-5-21. Cain v. State, 288 Ga. App. 535, 654 S.E.2d 456 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and possession-of-a-firearm based on the testimony of three separate witnesses, including the victim, that the defendant threateningly pointed a gun at the victim's head. Further, regarding the need to show the victim's reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, the state presented evidence from the victim's mouth that the victim feared the gun and that the fear resulted in the victim urinating on the victim's person and in the victim lying to an officer at the front door to protect the victim's children. Hardy v. State, 293 Ga. App. 265, 666 S.E.2d 730 (2008).

Victim's testimony that the defendant kicked in the door of the victim's residence, entered, pointed a shotgun at the victim, and threatened to shoot the victim if the victim did not give the defendant money was sufficient in itself to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a). Reed v. State, 293 Ga. App. 479, 668 S.E.2d 1 (2008).

Though the victim was approaching the defendant when the defendant fatally shot the victim at a distance of three feet, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated assault and felony murder despite the defendant's claim of self-defense as the defendant decided to confront the victim and beat the victim up, retrieved a gun from a car, and lied to police about the victim's pulling a knife before the shooting. McNeil v. State, 284 Ga. 586, 669 S.E.2d 111 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of aggravated assault in connection with the robbery of a cell phone store at gunpoint as the employees of the store identified the defendant from a non-suggestive photographic array; the getaway car had been rented by the defendant's spouse; and the employee of another cell phone store that had been robbed 20 minutes earlier identified the defendant as the robber. Fuller v. State, 295 Ga. App. 439, 672 S.E.2d 438 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0749, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 220 (Ga. 2009).

Sufficient evidence was presented to convict a defendant of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon based on evidence that the defendant and a codefendant approached the victims' rental car and brandished guns; while pistol whipping the victims and robbing them of their property, the defendant's gun went off and fatally wounded the first victim; and a gun matching the caliber of bullet recovered from the first victim during the autopsy was found during the execution of a search warrant at a hotel where the defendant had visited a guest on three occasions. Watkins v. State, 285 Ga. 107, 674 S.E.2d 275 (2009).

Because an officer, knowing a bank robbery and carjacking had just occurred, saw defendant with a white bag running away from a car matching the stolen car's description, and the fleeing individual pointed a gun at the officer after being ordered to stop, and a bystander corroborated the officer's testimony about the pointing of the gun, there was probable cause to believe defendant had committed the felonies of aggravated assault and aggravated assault upon a peace officer under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and detaining defendant was a lawful warrantless seizure such that none of the evidence obtained from the seizure was tainted. United States v. Epps, 613 F.3d 1093 (11th Cir. 2010), cert. denied, U.S. , 131 S. Ct. 1526, 179 L. Ed. 2d 344 (2011).

Rational trier of fact could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed voluntary manslaughter, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-2, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime (voluntary manslaughter), O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime (aggravated assault), O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, because the defendant's explanation of the killing was inconsistent with and not explanatory of the other direct and circumstantial evidence, and, therefore, the jury was permitted to reject such explanation and convict on the remaining evidence; the defendant's son testified on direct that the defendant told the son that the defendant shot the victim once, that the victim ran, that the defendant pursued, and that although the victim begged for the victim's life, the defendant shot the victim again, and there also was forensic evidence indicating that the defendant fired three more rounds into the victim's body. Cantera v. State, 304 Ga. App. 289, 696 S.E.2d 354 (2010).

Defendant's claim that the testimony of an armed robbery victim was insufficient to authorize the jury to find that an aggravated assault victim was placed in apprehension of receiving an immediate bodily injury was not supported by the record because the record revealed that the actual victim of the aggravated assault testified that one of the robbers pointed a gun at the victim. Hester v. State, 304 Ga. App. 441, 696 S.E.2d 427 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt as a party to two counts of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 because even though the defendant did not actually use a weapon, there was evidence that an accomplice brandished a handgun and pointed the handgun at both the manager and the clerk of the video store, and the accomplice's use of a weapon could be attributed to the defendant; one who intentionally aids or abets the commission of a crime by another is a party to the crime and equally guilty with the principal, and reasonable apprehension of injury can be proved by circumstantial or indirect evidence as well as by direct or positive evidence since the presence of a gun would normally place a victim in reasonable apprehension of being injured violently. Rainy v. State, 307 Ga. App. 467, 705 S.E.2d 246 (2010).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions for malice murder, felony murder, criminal attempt to commit armed robbery, armed robbery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime because: (1) the defendant participated in the armed robbery of three people, including the shooting victim, who were sitting in a car on a neighborhood street; (2) during the encounter, the co-indictee fatally shot the victim in the head with a shot gun; (3) one of the two other people in the car testified that, after the shooting, the defendant, with the defendant's hand in the defendant's pocket simulating that the defendant had a gun, took money and drugs from the witness; (4) the co-indictee also took money from the other person; and (5) the defendant and the co-indictee then fled the scene. Gilyard v. State, 288 Ga. 800, 708 S.E.2d 329 (2011).

of aggravated assault, tampering with evidence, and felony misuse of a firearm while hunting, and negated the defense of accident where the victim who was shot by defendant while hunting waved to signal defendant before the gun was fired and where defendant was hunting while on medication that could have caused mental and physical impairment; the jury also could have considered defendant's actions after the shooting in removing the victim's orange vest, hiding two guns, failing to aid the victim, and failing to alert paramedics of the victim's location. Wilson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 136, 630 S.E.2d 640 (2006).

Evidence held sufficient. — No fatal variance existed between the indictment alleging the defendant committed aggravated assault in either of two different ways and the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, as the wording of the indictment allowed the state to seek a conviction for either showing that the defendant assaulted another person with intent to murder or with a deadly weapon; the state was not required to prove both methods of assault, and, thus, the trial court's instruction to the jury only as to aggravated assault by use of a deadly weapon did not cause a fatal variance between the indictment and the proof. Lopez v. State, 260 Ga. App. 713, 580 S.E.2d 668 (2003).

Because the passenger's testimony demonstrated that the passenger had a reasonable apprehension of a violent injury, the evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of aggravated assault where defendant fired several shots at the car in which the passenger was riding. Richardson v. State, 261 Ga. App. 55, 581 S.E.2d 694 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support all but one of defendant's convictions for burglary, kidnapping, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime because the testimony of the three shooting victims was entirely consistent in all material respects, and any conflicts in the witnesses' testimony raised a credibility issue for jury resolution. Squires v. State, 265 Ga. App. 673, 595 S.E.2d 547 (2004).

Victim's testimony and in-court identification was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of hijacking the victim's motor vehicle at a gas station and of aggravated assault for shooting the victim three times; thus, a photo lineup was not unduly suggestive. Weeks v. State, 268 Ga. App. 886, 602 S.E.2d 882 (2004).

Evidence that defendants intentionally fired bullets into a house occupied by three people in an attempt to kill one of them was sufficient to support their conviction of aggravated assault against another occupant, whom they wounded, under the doctrine of transferred intent. It was immaterial that defendants were unaware that the assault victim was in the home. Culler v. State, 277 Ga. 717, 594 S.E.2d 631 (2004).

After the defendants were accused of firing into a house, killing one occupant and injuring another; one defendant admitted firing into the home, thinking defendant had killed a man; ballistics reports identified shell casings found at the scene as having been fired from at least two different guns; and DNA testing identified a cap recovered from the scene as having been worn by another defendant, their convictions for felony murder and aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence. Culler v. State, 277 Ga. 717, 594 S.E.2d 631 (2004).

When the defendant's victim identified the defendant from a photo lineup and at trial as the person who forced the victim to open the vaults in the fast-food restaurant where the victim worked, then duct-taped the victim's limbs and repeatedly struck the victim as the victim lay face down on the floor, the evidence was sufficient beyond a reasonable doubt to allow the jury to convict the defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of certain crimes. Banks v. State, 269 Ga. App. 653, 605 S.E.2d 47 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to show that defendant was guilty of two counts of aggravated assault, one count of aggravated battery, and one count of possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, as the evidence showed that defendant shot the victim in the abdomen and the arm with a gun and that defendant intended to cause serious physical harm and disfigurement to the victim. King v. State, 269 Ga. App. 658, 605 S.E.2d 63 (2004).

Evidence that the defendant fatally shot the victim during a scuffle in a robbery attempt and told the police that the defendant was shot by a robber was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for felony murder, aggravated assault, making a false statement to law enforcement officers, and giving a false name to law enforcement officers. Sampson v. State, 279 Ga. 8, 608 S.E.2d 621 (2005).

Evidence supported the defendant's aggravated assault conviction as the defendant twice pointed a gun at a victim's neck, ordered the victim to kneel, demanded the victim's wallet and keys, and left with a coin bag and the victim's keys; the victim was scared and covered the victim's head with the victim's forearms so that the defendant would not shoot the victim in the head. Kirk v. State, 271 Ga. App. 640, 610 S.E.2d 604 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault because: (1) the victim heard an unidentified voice scream defendant's name, tell defendant "don't do it," and tell defendant that defendant was going to kill the victim, as a gun was cocked and fired at the victim; and (2) the victim unequivocally identified defendant as the victim's assailant. Sharif v. State, 272 Ga. App. 660, 613 S.E.2d 176 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support a jury's verdict convicting defendant of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(c), and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, because, through the testimony of someone whom defendant threatened with a gun after the defendant shot a police officer, the evidence showed that the person saw defendant fire a gun at the officer and recognized the gun later recovered as the weapon the defendant used. Milton v. State, 272 Ga. App. 908, 614 S.E.2d 140 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support a juvenile court's finding that a minor had committed aggravated assault under

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 because it showed that the minor blocked the victim's flight, assisted a friend in pushing the victim into the bedroom, and committed sexual battery, all while the friend remained armed with the gun that the friend had pointed at the victim's head; since defendant was concerned in the commission of the crime, defendant could be convicted of it under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20. In the Interest of A.J., 273 Ga. App. 51, 614 S.E.2d 159 (2005).

Because defendant shot a victim with a rifle as the victim attempted to flee and the victim at first thought that defendant had a BB gun, but realized otherwise when defendant shot at the victim's cousin, the evidence supported defendant's conviction for aggravated assault based on: (1) defendant's attempt to commit a violent injury to the victim with a deadly weapon; or (2) defendant's shooting at the victim with a deadly weapon, thereby putting the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury. Harris v. State, 273 Ga. App. 90, 614 S.E.2d 189 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault as, notwithstanding the absence of an in-court identification of defendant and the state's failure to present fingerprint evidence, a victim's testimony concerning the victim's on-the-scene identification supported the finding that defendant perpetrated the crimes; there was also sufficient evidence that the cash seized from defendant's love interest's house had been put there by defendant. Oliver v. State, 273 Ga. App. 754, 615 S.E.2d 846 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony in a case because defendant, who had engaged in previous altercations with the victim, got out of defendant's car after seeing the victim on the street, ran up to the victim, shot the victim, returned to defendant's car, ran back to the victim and shot the victim again, and then got in defendant's car and drove off, as all of the elements of those offenses were established. Hayes v. State, 279 Ga. 642, 619 S.E.2d 628 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon convictions where the jury was entitled to give greater weight to the victim's positive contemporaneous identification of the defendant as the shooter and to conclude that the victim's subsequent uncertainty resulted from fear of retaliation by the defendant rather than from any real confusion about who fired the shot; the jury was also entitled to give little weight to a negative gunshot residue test result on defendant's hands as a sergeant regularly ordered gunshot residue tests on the suspects. Haggins v. State, 277 Ga. App. 742, 627 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Because: (1) the jury was authorized to infer that defendant intended to commit a violent injury upon the victim in view of the evidence showing that the defendant demanded to know the victim's location, and then walked directly up to the victim and shot the victim; and (2) this same evidence was sufficient to show that defendant intended to commit an act that placed the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, defendant's two aggravated assault with a deadly weapon convictions were supported by sufficient evidence. Smith v. State, 279 Ga. App. 211, 630 S.E.2d 833 (2006).

In defendant's convictions for armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault in connection with robbery of a fast food restaurant, sufficient evidence existed to support defendant's convictions based on a restaurant employee identifying defendant as one of two perpetrators who confronted that employee and manager at gunpoint and threatened to shoot if the victims did not comply with defendant's demand for money; also, evidence showed that defendant forced the manager out of the manager's car at gunpoint, ordered the manager back across the parking lot and into the restaurant, and stole over $300 from the restaurant's safe as well as a cellular phone before fleeing. Holsey v. State, 291 Ga. App. 216, 661 S.E.2d 621 (2008).

Eyewitnesses testified that the defendant ordered a man to shoot the victim, who was wounded but escaped; later, eyewitnesses saw the defendant and an armed cohort encounter the unarmed victim, who was fatally shot. This evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and murder. Wilcox v. State, 284 Ga. 414, 667 S.E.2d 603 (2008).

Juvenile court properly denied a juvenile's motion for a new trial with regard to the juvenile's delinquency adjudication finding the juvenile guilty for aggravated assault, criminal property damage, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct arising from the shooting of a BB gun at a passing car. The juvenile was the only Caucasian identified in the group of youth; the juvenile admitted to hiding the BB gun; the juvenile did not dispute that the juvenile encouraged another youth to shoot the gun; and the judge was the final arbiter of the credibility and witness issues and had the province to reject the testimony of the juvenile and a parent that the juvenile did not shoot the gun. In the Interest of A.A., 293 Ga. App. 827, 668 S.E.2d 323 (2008).

Testimony by two victims that the defendant grabbed a purse from one of them and pointed a gun at both of them, and testimony from an eyewitness that the defendant fled from the police, was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery and aggravated assault. Wallace v. State, 295 Ga. App. 452, 671 S.E.2d 911 (2009).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of murder, felony murder, and aggravated assault; the evidence revealed that the victim and the defendant got into a physical fight at a bar, and that the victim then left the bar and went to an apartment. The defendant then went home, retrieved a handgun, went to the apartment, knocked on the door, and when one of the people inside opened the door, the defendant shot the victim in the chest, killing the victim. Rector v. State, 285 Ga. 714, 681 S.E.2d 157 (2009), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 S. Ct. 807, 175 L. Ed. 2d 567 (2009).

Evidence authorized the jury to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a weapon during the commission of a felony because contrary to the defendant's arguments, the evidence showed that the person who was sitting in the back seat of the victim's car was not sitting directly behind the victim, but instead, that person was in the rear seat on the passenger's side of the car; the forensics testing showed that the murderer was located to the left of the victim, not the right, and there was blood spatter on the seat behind the victim from which the jury could have inferred that no one was sitting there at the time of the shooting. Julius v. State, 286 Ga. 413, 687 S.E.2d 828 (2010).

Jury could have found the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of two counts of aggravated assault because the victim's testimony that the defendant pointed a gun at the victim and that a shot was subsequently fired wounding the victim was sufficient circumstantial evidence that the defendant committed a violent injury to the victim; the victim's testimony that the victim was afraid of being shot when the defendant pointed the gun at the victim sufficed to convict the defendant of aggravated assault by placing the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury. Wright v. State, 302 Ga. App. 101, 690 S.E.2d 220 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for the aggravated assault of people because there was evidence that the defendant stabbed and shot at the same person, and there was evidence that the defendant and the defendant's accomplice pointed a gun at the people in the house, and an officer testified to their names; the defendant did not show the requisite harm arising out of a claim that the allegations and proof fail to correspond. Ward v. State, 304 Ga. App. 517, 696 S.E.2d 471 (2010).

Although under Georgia law, a defendant could not be convicted solely upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the evidence corroborated some particulars of the accomplice's testimony implicating the codefendants in the charged crimes since all three of the victims from the three separate gas stations provided descriptions of their assailants that generally matched the codefendants and the accomplice, and all three victims also testified that their assailants brandished a handgun and a shotgun, which were indeed the weapons that were found at the scene where the stolen SUV crashed and where the accomplice was arrested. Accordingly, the evidence corroborating the accomplice's testimony was sufficient to authorize the jury's determination that the codefendants were guilty beyond a reasonable doubt as parties to armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41, hijacking a motor vehicle, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1, aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, theft by taking, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-2, theft by receiving, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-7, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106. Daniels v. State, 306 Ga. App. 577, 703 S.E.2d 41 (2010).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions for felony murder predicated on armed robbery, armed robbery, and aggravated assault because the evidence showed that the defendant and the codefendant, after discussing the idea of stealing marijuana and whatever cash the victim had on the victim, arranged to meet with the victim to buy marijuana from the victim. When the victim got into the back seat of the defendant's vehicle and pulled out a bag of marijuana, the codefendant drew a gun and shot the victim, fatally wounding the victim. Herbert v. State, 288 Ga. 843, 708 S.E.2d 260 (2011).

Evidence was sufficient to prove three counts of aggravated assault against the defendant because testimony that the victims ran from gunfire was sufficient evidence that the defendant and the codefendant placed the victims in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, and other evidence showed that all of the victims were positioned in or very near the line of fire; one of the victims testified that the victim was sitting on the ground, could have been shot, and would have been if the victim had stood up, and a jury could find that the victim experienced a reasonable apprehension of receiving a violent injury even though the victim affirmatively testified that the victim was not afraid. Howard v. State, 288 Ga. 741, 707 S.E.2d 80 (2011).

Identification of defendant sufficient. — Victim's testimony at trial sufficiently identified the defendant as the assailant who fired shots at the victim, and the evidence was sufficient to support convictions for aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, since the victim knew the defendant from previous encounter and although it was dark, the victim was able to see the defendant's face during incident because area was illuminated by streetlight. Johnson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 153, 630 S.E.2d 661 (2006).

Evidence insufficient for conviction. — Because no eyewitnesses saw a third defendant participate in an armed robbery, a kidnapping, an aggravated assault, or possess a firearm during the commission of the crimes, and because the third defendant was not implicated by the other defendants, did not confess to the crimes, and did not flee the jurisdiction, the evidence was insufficient to support a conviction for the third defendant. Johnson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 499, 627 S.E.2d 116 (2006).

Testimony as to ultimate issue excluded in assault with gun case. — In a prosecution for aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-6, the issue of whether the defendant shot the victim with the intention of assaulting the victim was an issue of ultimate fact to be decided by the jury. Therefore, the state's objection to defense counsel's question to the defendant, "Did you intend to assault the victim?" was properly sustained. Gordon v. State, 294 Ga. App. 908, 670 S.E.2d 533 (2008).

Sentencing. — Defendant was entitled to resentencing with regard to the defendant's convictions on one count of aggravated assault and one count of armed robbery arising from the robbery of a restaurant because the two counts were based upon the same conduct, namely pointing a handgun at the restaurant's manager in order to commit a robbery. Fagan v. State, 283 Ga. App. 784, 643 S.E.2d 268 (2007).

Assault With Automobile

Trial counsel not ineffective as lenient sentence imposed. — Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel due to a failure to investigate defendant's mental health history as: (1) defendant did not claim that defendant was insane at the time of the crimes, was incompetent to stand trial, or was otherwise suffering from delusional compulsion; (2) there was no evidence that defendant was guilty, but mentally ill; and (3) felony murder carried a mandatory life sentence, firearm possession required a consecutive five-year sentence, and the trial court was lenient in sentencing defendant to half of the time allowed by law for an aggravated assault, so there was no harm in the failure to introduce more detail about defendant's mental health history at sentencing. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. 304, 612 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Reckless driving as lesser included offense of aggravated assault. — Defendant was entitled to a new trial on the charge of aggravated assault upon a police officer in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 because the trial court should have given the defendant's requested charge on reckless driving in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-390(a) as a lesser included offense since there was evidence that the defendant did not intend to injure a police officer but that the defendant's decision to drive off suddenly with the officer in close proximity to the defendant's truck was nonetheless an act of criminal negligence, which would have supported a conviction for reckless driving. Young v. State, 294 Ga. App. 227, 669 S.E.2d 407 (2008).

Automobile is not per se deadly weapon, but may become one depending upon the manner and means of the vehicle's use. Blalock v. State, 165 Ga. App. 269, 299 S.E.2d 753 (1983); Cline v. State, 199 Ga. App. 532, 405 S.E.2d 524 (1991); Reynolds v. State, 234 Ga. App. 884, 508 S.E.2d 674 (1998).

Although an automobile is not per se a deadly or offensive weapon, it may become one depending on the manner and means of the vehicle's use. The question of whether an automobile, or other instrumentality, has been used so as to constitute a deadly or offensive weapon is properly for the jury's determination. Butler v. State, 196 Ga. App. 706, 396 S.E.2d 916 (1990); Reynolds v. State, 234 Ga. App. 884, 508 S.E.2d 674 (1998).

Aggravated assault convictions were affirmed after the defendant accelerated toward officers standing in front of the defendant at a roadblock, forcing the officer's to jump out of the way, and causing one to fall. Williams v. State, 270 Ga. App. 371, 606 S.E.2d 594 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, as a rational trier of fact was authorized to conclude that defendant meant to harm the police officer who stopped defendant's vehicle when defendant fled in the vehicle and the officer had to step out of the way to avoid being struck; although an automobile was not a deadly weapon per se, defendant used it as such and defendant's increasing level of hostility during the stop, coupled with defendant's attempt to run over the officer while fleeing, supported defendant's conviction for aggravated assault. Young v. State, 273 Ga. App. 151, 614 S.E.2d 257 (2005).

Automobile can be a deadly weapon. — Evidence that defendant hit patrol cars while making a U-turn and appeared to be in full control of the vehicle just prior to the impact was sufficient for the jury to find that defendant attempted to commit a violent injury to another's person and interfered with government property. Black v. State, 222 Ga. App. 80, 473 S.E.2d 186 (1996).

Sufficient evidence existed to convict defendant of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), since defendant used a vehicle as a deadly or offensive weapon, because when the officer pulled defendant over, defendant turned the vehicle around and accelerated at the officer, forcing the officer to jump behind a patrol car to avoid being hit. Thomas v. State, 255 Ga. App. 777, 567 S.E.2d 72 (2002).

Evidence that defendant, a shoplifting suspect, drove off in defendant's vehicle with a police officer hanging only halfway inside defendant's vehicle as the officer attempted to grab defendant's keys, and that defendant continued to drive even though the officer was hanging half-in and half-out of the vehicle was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for aggravated assault of a police officer as the evidence showed that defendant used the vehicle as a deadly weapon and that defendant had the general intent required to sustain an aggravated assault conviction. Frayall v. State, 259 Ga. App. 286, 576 S.E.2d 654 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault on a peace officer as it showed defendant had the general intent to commit the crime against the police officer who had executed a traffic stop on defendant, by using defendant's automobile to commit an offensive act and make it likely the officer would sustain serious bodily injury as defendant was aware that the officer had both hands on defendant when defendant put the car in drive and sped off with the officer hanging on to defendant. Riels v. State, 259 Ga. App. 420, 577 S.E.2d 88 (2003).

Evidence that defendant forced a love interest to remain in the love interest's car against the love interest's will, that the defendant chased the love interest with the love interest's car when the love interest tried to escape, that the defendant hit the love interest with the car, and that the love interest suffered a broken ankle was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for false imprisonment and aggravated assault. Scott v. State, 268 Ga. App. 889, 602 S.E.2d 893 (2004).

Convictions against defendant for aggravated assault and simple assault did not require reversal because the police failed to preserve defendant's car after defendant had engaged in an aggressive car chase, which resulted in the assault charges based on defendant having used the car as a weapon, as there was no showing that the police acted in bad faith in failing to preserve the evidence and no evidence that suggested that the possible exculpatory value of the car was apparent before the car's destruction. Ransby v. State, 273 Ga. App. 594, 615 S.E.2d 651 (2005).

Withdrawal of plea to charge of aggravated assault on police officer was properly denied because the defendant agreed during the plea colloquy with the state's version of the facts that the defendant drove toward the officer-victim and rammed a stolen vehicle that the defendant was driving into the officer's car while the officer was in it and admitted to the court that the defendant was in fact guilty of the crime as charged. Sheffield v. State, 270 Ga. App. 576, 607 S.E.2d 205 (2004).

Evidence of intent sufficient. — Evidence of criminal intent was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated assault of a peace officer, notwithstanding that defendant might have had a seizure during the police chase, where: (1) defendant exhibited continued hostility of the officers during the chase; (2) defendant eluded rolling backups; (3) defendant maneuvered through stationary roadblocks; and (4) defendant maintained control of defendant's vehicle at high speeds during the chase. Dupree v. State, 267 Ga. App. 561, 600 S.E.2d 654 (2004).

Defendant's proceeding pro se after three detailed trial court warnings was not abuse of discretion; the defendant's conviction of two counts of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) aggravated assault and one count of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(c) cruelty to children (using defendant's car as a deadly weapon to run into the defendant's spouse's car with the spouse and child inside) was supported by sufficient evidence. Bush v. State, 268 Ga. App. 200, 601 S.E.2d 511 (2004).

Adjudications as to two counts of aggravated assault and two counts of failing to stop at or return to an accident scene were supported by sufficient evidence detailing the juvenile's act of striking two individuals with a car, and then leaving the scene of said accident; moreover, decisions as to the credibility of witnesses were in the province of the juvenile court, which apparently determined that the state disapproved the juvenile's defense. In the Interest of J.L., 281 Ga. App. 105, 635 S.E.2d 393 (2006).

Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict on an aggravated assault charge based on evidence that a deputy stood visibly in the roadway with the deputy's arms raised and yelling for defendant to stop the defendant's vehicle at a roadblock, defendant drove the vehicle at 40 miles per hour directly at the deputy who had to quickly jump out of the roadway to avoid being struck by the defendant's vehicle, and the deputy testified that the deputy feared being struck by the defendant's vehicle and receiving serious injuries; the jury was authorized to determine that the defendant had the requisite criminal intent to commit aggravated assault against the deputy, who was placed in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury. Taul v. State, 290 Ga. App. 288, 659 S.E.2d 646 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault based on the defendant, after panicking from striking a vehicle in a night-club parking lot, drove a vehicle with headlights on toward a sheriff's deputy providing security at the nightclub, accelerated towards the officer, and drove within two or three car lengths of the officer without stopping, at which point the officer ran out of the vehicle's path, which evidence authorized a jury to find that the defendant had the requisite intent to commit injury. Further, there was sufficient evidence to authorize a jury finding that the defendant intended to act in a manner that placed the officer in reasonable apprehension of an immediate violent injury based on the officer jumping to safety to avoid being struck by the vehicle. Adams v. State, 293 Ga. App. 377, 667 S.E.2d 186 (2008).

Evidence supported convictions of aggravated assault when the evidence showed that the defendant chased the victims in the defendant's car for about 15 miles, rear-ended their vehicle when the car attempted to make a turn, and ran the defendant's vehicle into their driver's side with enough force to push their vehicle up onto a curb; moreover, one victim testified that during the vehicle chase, it was apparent that the defendant and another person were trying to box the victim in with their vehicles and that the victim was very scared. The jury was not required to believe defendant's testimony that the incident was an accident. Windham v. State, 294 Ga. App. 72, 668 S.E.2d 526 (2008).

Aggravated assault by means of a deadly weapon (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2)) is not a specific intent crime; the state is only required to prove a general intent to injure. Therefore, evidence that the defendant threatened to kill the victim and tried to hit the victim with the defendant's car was sufficient to prove that the defendant had the requisite intent to commit aggravated assault. Barnes v. State, 296 Ga. App. 493, 675 S.E.2d 233 (2009).

Defendant fled from police in a car, disregarded their orders to stop, and almost ran over one of the officers. Evidence that an officer reasonably feared receiving a violent injury when the defendant backed the car toward the officer, and that the defendant acted in reckless disregard for human life, was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault by intent to murder. The defendant's defense, that the defendant was resisting an unlawful arrest, was meritless. Mackey v. State, 296 Ga. App. 675, 675 S.E.2d 567 (2009).

Evidence of intent sufficient. — Evidence was sufficient to enable the trial court to find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant possessed the intent necessary to commit aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), and felony murder, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1(c), because the defendant used a vehicle as an offensive weapon while the defendant was extremely drunk, and the evidence was sufficient to prove both forms of simply assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1)-(2) by the defendant against all six of the victims; the defendant engaged in an extended high-speed car chase with a driver, deliberately rammed the other driver's truck, and attempted to smash into the other driver head-on after the truck stalled, and within minutes after the driver escaped, the defendant came upon the other five victims by swerving sharply into oncoming traffic and slamming into a vehicle. Guye v. State, 286 Ga. 574, 690 S.E.2d 406 (2010).

Assault With Hands, Fists, or Other Body Parts

Fists are not, per se, deadly weapons. Thomas v. State, 237 Ga. 690, 229 S.E.2d 458 (1976); Boling v. State, 244 Ga.

825, 262 S.E.2d 123 (1979); Meminger v. State, 160 Ga. App. 509, 287 S.E.2d 296 (1981), rev'd on other grounds, 249 Ga. 561, 292 S.E.2d 681 (1982).

While fists per se are not a deadly weapon within the meaning O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, they may be found to be a deadly weapon by the jury depending on the manner and means of their use, the wounds inflicted, etc. Quarles v. State, 130 Ga. App. 756, 204 S.E.2d 467 (1974); Guevara v. State, 151 Ga. App. 444, 260 S.E.2d 491 (1979); Boling v. State, 244 Ga. 825, 262 S.E.2d 123 (1979); Harper v. State, 152 Ga. App. 689, 263 S.E.2d 547 (1979); Wright v. State, 211 Ga. App. 431, 440 S.E.2d 27 (1994).

Hands as deadly weapons. — Evidence that defendant beat the victim about the head and face with defendant's hands was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict that defendant was guilty of aggravated assault. Scott v. State, 243 Ga. App. 383, 532 S.E.2d 141 (2000).

While hands are not considered deadly weapons per se within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), the fact finder may find them to be so depending on the circumstances surrounding their use, including the extent of the victim's injuries. Mallon v. State, 253 Ga. App. 51, 557 S.E.2d 409 (2001).

Defense of property not sole defense. — Trial court did not err in failing sua sponte to instruct the jury on the defense of property defense as the defendant's sole defense as the defendant claimed that the defendant did not cause the victim's injuries, defense counsel attempted to establish that the victim's recollection of the events was impaired by the victim's fading in and out of consciousness and by the victim's consumption of alcohol, and the jury was adequately instructed on witness credibility, the burden of proof, reasonable doubt, and the presumption of innocence. Strickland v. State, 267 Ga. App. 610, 600 S.E.2d 693 (2004).

Fists may constitute weapon likely to produce death. See Haygood v. State, 154 Ga. App. 633, 269 S.E.2d 480 (1980).

Whether fists are deadly weapons is question for jury. See Arnett v. State, 245 Ga. 470, 265 S.E.2d 771 (1980).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault and other related crimes, sufficient evidence existed to support the conviction since the evidence authorized the jury to find that the defendant beat the victim with the defendant's fists until the victim was rendered unconscious, fracturing bones in the victim's face. Ferrell v. State, 283 Ga. App. 471, 641 S.E.2d 658 (2007).

Fists and feet may be deadly weapons. — Although fists and feet are not considered deadly weapons within the meaning of former Code 1933, § 26-1302, they may be found to be deadly weapons by the jury depending on the manner and means of their use. Kirby v. State, 145 Ga. App. 813, 245 S.E.2d 43 (1978); Dixon v. State, 268 Ga. 81, 485 S.E.2d 480 (1997); Braswell v. State, 245 Ga. App. 602, 538 S.E.2d 492 (2000) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21).

Jury could find that a defendant's hands and feet, depending upon their use, wounds inflicted, and other surrounding circumstances, were deadly weapons or objects likely to result in serious bodily injury when used offensively against a person for purposes of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Haugland v. State, 253 Ga. App. 423, 560 S.E.2d 50 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) as defendant repeatedly stomped defendant's work boots on the victim's chest and face, driving the victim's head into the floor. Kemp v. State, 257 Ga. App. 340, 571 S.E.2d 412 (2002).

While an indictment against defendant failed to state that defendant's hands were used as deadly weapons, this omission did not render the charge flawed, where the allegations set forth that defendant's hand were used as offensive objects, resulting in serious bodily injury to defendant's child. State v. English, 276 Ga. 343, 578 S.E.2d 413 (2003).

Sufficient evidence supported convictions of aggravated assault, criminal trespass, and obstruction of a 9-1-1 call as the defendant became irate after a demand for a refund was denied by a store, a store manager told the defendant to leave, but the defendant refused, when the manager picked up the phone to call 9-1-1, the defendant grabbed the phone and slammed it on the counter, the defendant pushed the bag of brass plates the defendant was trying to return in the manager's face, cutting the manager, and punched the manager in the face. Hooker v. State, 278 Ga. App. 382, 629 S.E.2d 74 (2006).

Delinquency finding for acts constituting party to the crimes of aggravated assault and battery was supported by sufficient evidence showing that the appellant was one of a group of youths who punched, kicked, and struck one victim with a shotgun, and participated in the attack; the appellant also knocked another victim to the ground and hit that victim during the fracas. In the Interest of E.R., 279 Ga. App. 423, 631 S.E.2d 458 (2006).

Two defendants were properly convicted of felony murder with aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), as the predicate felony since the evidence established that the defendants killed the victim by repeatedly striking the victim's face and head, and the jury was authorized to conclude that the defendants' hands and feet were used as deadly weapons. Dasher v. State, 285 Ga. 308, 676 S.E.2d 181 (2009).

Victim's testimony that the defendant pushed the victim off a porch railing then came down the stairs and kicked the victim in the mouth, after which the victim was paralyzed from the chest down, was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Morales v. State, 305 Ga. App. 569, 699 S.E.2d 864 (2010).

Hands, fists, and shoe-clad feet are not necessarily or per se deadly weapons, but may or may not be deadly weapons depending upon the circumstances of the case. Chafin v. State, 154 Ga. App. 122, 267 S.E.2d 625 (1980).

Although hands, feet and a telephone receiver are not deadly weapons per se, the jury could find them to be deadly depending upon their use, wounds inflicted, and other surrounding circumstances. Wheeler v. State, 232 Ga. App. 749, 503 S.E.2d 628 (1998).

Whether defendant's hands were used as a deadly weapon within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 was a jury question. Richards v. State, 222 Ga. App. 853, 476 S.E.2d 598 (1996).

Assault with shoe clad feet. — Evidence supported a conviction of aggravated assault when the indictment alleged that the defendant kicked and stomped the victim with shoe clad feet, a means likely to cause serious bodily injury when used offensively against a person. Whether the defendant's shoe-clad feet constituted objects likely to result in serious injury was a question of fact for the jury, and given that the defendant stomped on and kicked the victim, rendering the victim bruised and unconscious, the jury was authorized to convict the defendant of aggravated assault. Windham v. State, 294 Ga. App. 72, 668 S.E.2d 526 (2008).

It is jury question as to whether or not shoe or boot constitutes deadly weapon, under all the circumstances surrounding the shoe or boot, its size, weight and construction, and the manner in which it was used. Williams v. State, 127 Ga. App. 386, 193 S.E.2d 633 (1972).

Actual serious injuries not required. — Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of violating of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), as the indictment alleged that the aggravated assault was committed with objects likely to cause serious bodily injury (a broom handle and defendant's feet and hands), not that serious bodily injury in fact occurred. Massey v. State, 278 Ga. App. 303, 628 S.E.2d 706 (2006).

Photographs of victim's injuries. — In a prosecution for a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), as the indictment alleged that the aggravated assault was committed with objects likely to cause serious bodily injury (a broom handle and the defendant's feet and hands), photos depicting the condition of the victim, one of which depicted the defendant's foot print on the victim's face, were relevant to establish the nature and extent of the injury. Massey v. State, 278 Ga. App. 303, 628 S.E.2d 706 (2006).

Denial of motion for acquittal proper. — Defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on an aggravated assault of a peace officer charge was properly denied as the evidence supported the conviction since an officer testified that the defendant knocked the officer to the ground, attempted to remove the officer's firearm from its holster, told the officer that defendant "was going to take care of (the officer)," indicated that the defendant wanted the defendant's drugs back, grabbed the drugs, and ran away; a videotape of the incident was also admitted at trial. Bolden v. State, 281 Ga. App. 258, 636 S.E.2d 29 (2006).

Jury instructions. — Since defendant's aggravated assault conviction merged as a matter of law into defendant's malice murder conviction, any complaint by defendant about the jury instruction on aggravated assault was rendered moot. Mason v. State, 279 Ga. 636, 619 S.E.2d 621 (2005).

Biting victim with risk of transmitting HIV virus. — When defendant was tried for aggravated assault with intent to murder after biting a police officer, the jury could rationally find the risk of transmitting the HIV virus through a human bite rendered defendant's bite, if not defendant's spittle, a "deadly" weapon beyond a reasonable doubt. Scroggins v. State, 198 Ga. App. 29, 401 S.E.2d 13 (1990), cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 401 S.E.2d 13 (1991).

Hands likely to cause serious bodily injury sufficient for indictment. — Trial court erred in quashing an aggravated assault count against defendant because the indictment was sufficient where it alleged that defendant assaulted defendant's spouse with defendant's hands, which, when used offensively were likely to cause serious bodily injury; further, the indictment did not need to additionally charge in the language of simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20 in order to withstand demurrer. State v. Tate, 262 Ga. App. 311, 585 S.E.2d 224 (2003).

Sixth Amendment violation was harmless error. — Although the admission of a victim's statements to a deputy violated defendant's Sixth Amendment rights, the error was harmless as to defendant's aggravated assault and battery convictions in light of the photographs of the victim's injuries and the defendant's admission that the defendant grabbed the victim around the neck and that the defendant might have hit the victim in the face. Miller v. State, 273 Ga. App. 761, 615 S.E.2d 843 (2005).

Choking victim and slamming her around room. — Evidence supported defendant's rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault, criminal trespass, misdemeanor obstruction of a law enforcement officer, felony obstruction of a law enforcement officer, and possession of marijuana conviction because: (1) a victim testified that defendant choked the victim, slammed the victim around a room, and raped and sodomized the victim, then drank a beer, took some BC powder packets, and cell phone, and left; (2) defendant fled from the police, kicked two officers, and had marijuana, BC packets, and a cell phone; (3) defendant's DNA matched the DNA on the beer can; (4) a nurse testified that the victim's bruise was consistent with strangulation; and (5) a doctor testified that the victim's injuries were consistent with rape and sodomy. Lewis v. State, 271 Ga. App. 744, 611 S.E.2d 80 (2005).

No merger with family violence battery. — Aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 with fists only and family violence battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(f) with fists and a bottle upon the defendant's then live-in love interest were not required to be merged under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a) because there were two separate incidents separated by the love interest's visit to a store and because the aggravated assault did not require the use of a bottle. Collins v. State, 277 Ga. App. 381, 626 S.E.2d 513 (2006).

Evidence sufficient to show beating. — Evidence that the defendant beat the victim about the head and face with the defendant's hands was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict that the defendant was guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt, of aggravated assault, particularly in light of the victim's concussion and fractured face bone caused by the defendant's punches. Sims v. State, 296 Ga. App. 461, 675 S.E.2d 241 (2009).

Assault With Hands, Fists, or Other Body Parts (Cont'd)

Evidence sufficient for assault on infant. — Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated assault, given the defendant's own admissions to the police that the defendant had shaken the defendant's love interest's infant; the jury was entitled to reject the defendant's version of events and credit the testimony of the state's multiple medical experts, as each of the experts testified that the child's severe injuries were inconsistent with the defendant's explanation for the injuries. Sullivan v. State, 277 Ga. App. 738, 627 S.E.2d 437 (2006).

Sufficient circumstantial evidence supported the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 upon the eight-month-old victim, as a jury could have concluded that the other children, ages four and five, could not have injured the victim; medical testimony indicated that such shaken baby injuries could not have been caused by the other children, and the defendant was the only adult with the child at the time the injuries were allegedly sustained. Mahan v. State, 282 Ga. App. 201, 638 S.E.2d 366 (2006).

Assault With Other Objects

Knife with two blades each three and one-fourth inches in length was deadly weapon. Powell v. State, 140 Ga. App. 36, 230 S.E.2d 90 (1976).

Defensive use of knife. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 does not differentiate between offensive and defensive threats of immediate bodily harm, and a knife may constitute a "deadly weapon" even though the victim was out of striking range and the defendant maintained a defensive posture. Davis v. State, 184 Ga. App. 230, 361 S.E.2d 229 (1987).

Box cutter. — Evidence did not support finding that defendant had committed aggravated assault because the state did not show that a box cutter was a deadly weapon; the state showed only that the defendant hit the victim with the blunt side of a box cutter, inflicting minor injuries, but there was no evidence that the blade was ever exposed or that defendant threatened the victim with an exposed blade. Ware v. State, 289 Ga. App. 860, 658 S.E.2d 441 (2008).

Chain. — Evidence supported defendant's conviction of aggravated assault on a peace officer in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) where the evidence, when viewed in the light most favorable to the state, showed that defendant, after being sprayed with pepper spray during a confrontation with a police officer, grabbed a long chain and swung it over defendant's head while moving toward the officer; defendant's testimony that defendant had been backing away with the chain raised an issue of credibility for the jury to resolve. Chancey v. State, 258 Ga. App. 319, 574 S.E.2d 383 (2002).

Ceramic vase is not per se an offensive or deadly weapon. Banks v. State, 169 Ga. App. 571, 314 S.E.2d 235 (1984).

Pencil. — Sufficient evidence supported the finding that the defendant, a juvenile, had committed an act that would have constituted aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); circumstantial evidence, including cuts on the victim's face, discovery of the pencil in the vicinity of the assault, and the investigating officer's testimony, corroborated the victim's belief that the defendant wielded a broken pencil during the attack. In the Interest of M.V.H., 281 Ga. App. 486, 636 S.E.2d 168 (2006).

Pen. — Evidence sufficed to sustain the jury's determination that the defendant was guilty of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) for stabbing a store manager with a pen because the defendant stabbed the manager with the pen with such force that it bent the pen and broke the manager's skin, causing bleeding; the jury viewed the weapon and received testimony and photographic evidence about the nature and extent of the victim's actual injuries and the manner in which the defendant used the pen to stab the manager. Griggs v. State, 303 Ga. App. 442, 693 S.E.2d 615 (2010).

Metal cane employed to beat victim's head sufficiently showed the use of an instrumentality in a way that was likely to cause serious injury, so as to prove aggravated assault. Coney v. State, 209 Ga. App. 9, 432 S.E.2d 812 (1993).

Metal objects. — Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) after the defendant's companions used metal knuckles, a metal pipe, and a gun to beat the victim; the defendant was a party to the offense under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(a), as the victim, whose testimony was sufficient to establish a fact under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, testified that, during the incident, the defendant summoned the companions to help beat the victim, and the defendant and the companions repeatedly warned the victim not to testify in court in the defendant's criminal case. Souder v. State, 281 Ga. App. 339, 636 S.E.2d 68 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0113, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 97 (Ga. 2007).

Evidence that the defendant threw a punch at the victim, who punched the defendant back and walked away; and that the defendant followed the victim and aggressively swung a metal rod at the victim, who felt threatened enough to go into a residence, was sufficient to adjudicate the defendant delinquent of committing acts which, if committed by an adult, would have constituted felony aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. The trial court was authorized to find that it was the victim, not the defendant, who acted in self defense. In the Interest of J. W. B., 296 Ga. App. 131, 673 S.E.2d 630 (2009).

Pry bar. — Testimony indicating that the defendant struck the victim in the head and on the arm with a pry bar, breaking the victim's arm and pulling the flesh away from the victim's head, was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24 and aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. Mattis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 49, 637 S.E.2d 787 (2006).

Iron. — Testimony that defendant struck the victim with a hot iron along with photographs of the wounds were sufficient to support finding that defendant used the iron as an offensive weapon. Hill v. State, 230 Ga. App. 395, 496 S.E.2d 526 (1998).

Use of a dog can be considered a deadly weapon. Perkins v. State, 197 Ga. App. 577, 398 S.E.2d 702 (1990).

Lit cigarette constituted an offensive weapon likely to cause serious injury when, after defendant doused the victim, a store clerk, with gasoline, the defendant profanely insisted that the victim give the defendant "the money" or the defendant would burn the victim with the cigarette. Johnson v. State, 246 Ga. App. 109, 539 S.E.2d 605 (2000).

Bludgeon device used as offensive weapon. — When the testimonies of the victim, a doctor, and other witnesses were a sufficient indication under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 of the severity of the blow to show that a bludgeon device was used as an offensive weapon, there was sufficient competent evidence to find defendant guilty of armed robbery and aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a) and 16-8-41(a). Garrett v. State, 263 Ga. App. 310, 587 S.E.2d 794 (2003).

Assault with a baseball bat. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault and attempted robbery; the description of the crimes as they occurred by a witness to a 9-1-1 operator, the 9-1-1 tape transcript of that call, the observations of the police officers who responded to the call of the witness that an African-American person was beating a Hispanic person with a baseball bat while trying to take money out of the Hispanic person's pockets, and the testimony of the witness at trial was sufficient to overcome evidence that the witness gave a false name to police, that the witness was unable to identify defendant at trial, and that the victim did not testify at trial. Williams v. State, 275 Ga. App. 491, 621 S.E.2d 512 (2005).

Testimony of the state's witnesses that the defendant struck the victims with a baseball bat, coupled with testimony and photographs depicting the defendants' injuries, amply supported the defendant's conviction of two counts of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Gray v. State, 291 Ga. App. 573, 662 S.E.2d 339 (2008).

Wooden plank. — Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal following the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault of a romantic friend as the evidence sufficiently established that the defendant's friend sustained serious bodily injury as a result of being attacked with a wooden plank with which the defendant struck the friend on the back and head with repeatedly. The testimony and photographs admitted at trial reflected that, as a result of the defendant repeatedly striking the victim with the wooden plank, the victim was bruised on multiple parts of the body and experienced soreness, saw "stars," and fell to the ground. Reynolds v. State, 294 Ga. App. 213, 668 S.E.2d 846 (2008).

Tree limb. — There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant juvenile's conviction of aggravated assault as the defendant juvenile hit a victim with a "big old broken tree limb," bruising the victim's back; whether the tree limb was a deadly weapon under the aggravated assault statute, capable of causing serious bodily injury, was an issue for the factfinder. In the Interest of T.W., 280 Ga. App. 693, 634 S.E.2d 854 (2006).

Convictions against the defendant for malice murder, burglary, armed robbery, and aggravated assault were supported by evidence that the defendant entered the victim's home, hit the victim multiple times about the head and face with a tree limb with a metal piece on the limb, and wrote a check in defendant's name from the victim's checkbook; evidence included witness testimony from the bank where defendant cashed the check, defendant's confession to police, and physical evidence. Bell v. State, 284 Ga. 790, 671 S.E.2d 815 (2009).

Stick and brick. — Evidence that the defendant intentionally struck the victim with a stick and that either the defendant or one of the other parties to the assault intentionally struck the victim with their fists and a concrete block supported an aggravated assault conviction; further, although the victim was the only person who testified about having been hit with a concrete block, and was not sure which of the attackers struck that blow, this testimony was sufficient to establish that the victim was hit with a concrete block because it made no difference whether an accomplice, and not the defendant, assaulted the victim in the manner alleged in the indictment. Oliver v. State, 278 Ga.

App. 425, 629 S.E.2d 63 (2006).

Machete. — There was sufficient evidence to conclude that the defendant, charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon resulting in serious bodily injury, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), and aggravated battery by maliciously causing bodily harm and serious disfigurement in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), was the person who attacked the victim with a machete; the victim and two other persons identified the defendant, and a witness testified that the defendant told the witness that the defendant had hit a person with a machete after someone threw an object at the defendant's car. Emberson v. State, 271 Ga. App. 773, 611 S.E.2d 83 (2005).

Convictions for theft, aggravated assault, and making a terroristic threat was supported by evidence because the defendant admitted to taking gas cans, raised a machete to scare or strike the defendant's sibling, the sibling was frightened and ran, and the defendant then threatened the siblings that if either called the sheriff the defendant would return and kill them. Turner v. State, 273 Ga. App. 535, 615 S.E.2d 603 (2005).

Meat cleaver. — Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated assault in a case where the defendant, an occasional houseguest, became angry at a relative, retrieved a meat cleaver, and attacked the relative, who grabbed a pool cue to in self-defense; the defendant's conduct amounted to a reasonable imminent threat of the use of deadly force and the relative, under the circumstances, was entitled to use force in defense of habitation pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-3-23. Robison v. State, 277 Ga. App. 133, 625 S.E.2d 533 (2006).

Assault with brick. — Evidence that, after an officer stopped defendant's car and asked defendant to exit the vehicle, defendant attempted to flee, and, in the ensuing struggle, struck the officer with a brick was sufficient to support defendant's aggravated assault conviction, as any alleged inconsistencies in the victim's testimony were for the jury to resolve, rather than an appellate court. Monroe v. State, 273 Ga. App. 14, 614 S.E.2d 172 (2005).

Pipe. — Evidence that the defendant struck the victim with a pipe was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault. Bilow v. State, 279 Ga. App. 509, 631 S.E.2d 743 (2006).

Metal pipe. — While, at trial, the victim of the defendant's assault disavowed an initial, pre-trial statement to police and medical personnel that the defendant hit the victim with a metal pipe, the jury was authorized to believe the victim's pre-trial statement rather than the victim's in-court disavowal, and sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault, Leonard v. State, 279 Ga. App. 192, 630 S.E.2d 804 (2006).

Lamp. — When the defendant was accused of felony murder and aggravated assault by throwing a lamp at the victims, because the indictment alleged that the lamp was an object that when used offensively against a person was likely to and actually did result in serious bodily injury, an allegation that the lamp was a deadly weapon was not required. Furthermore, the indictment was not too vague as the defendant clearly was apprised that the defendant would have to defend against the allegation that the defendant struck one victim on and about the head with the lamp, and the defendant admitted to a law enforcement officer that the defendant had thrown the lamp at the other victim. Hester v. State, 283 Ga. 367, 659 S.E.2d 600 (2008).

Glass bowl. — Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) because defendant hurled a glass bowl at a motel manager, which caused injuries when the manager raised a hand in front of the manager's face for protection. Watson v. State, 301 Ga. App. 824, 689 S.E.2d 104 (2009).

Beer bottle. — Victim was struck from behind with a beer bottle; the victim's head was cut, requiring stitches. The circumstantial evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated assault because: (1) the victim saw defendant standing close behind the victim after the blow was struck, and defendant began fighting with the victim; (2) similar transaction evidence showed the defendant's history of making unprovoked attacks on unsuspecting victims; and (3) a bartender's testimony that someone else committed the crime was internally inconsistent and uncorroborated. Maiorano v. State, 294 Ga. App. 726, 669 S.E.2d 678 (2008).

Defendant's act of throwing a beer bottle at a deputy sheriff at close range and with such force that the bottle shattered on impact was sufficient to allow a jury to conclude that the defendant used a bottle offensively against the officer in a manner likely to have resulted in serious bodily injury within the meaning of the aggravated assault statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Reese v. State, 303 Ga. App. 871, 695 S.E.2d 326 (2010).

Unknown object. — Defendant was properly convicted of aggravated assault for repeatedly cutting a person's arm. Even though the victim could not identify what kind of weapon inflicted the wound, a treating nurse testified the wound was inflicted by a sharp instrument, like a box cutter, and the victim's testimony established all the other elements of the offense. Freeman v. State, 297 Ga. App. 496, 678 S.E.2d 97 (2009).

Screwdriver. — Evidence showed aggravated assault because the defendant had a long screwdriver in the defendant's hand, the defendant took a swing at the victim when the victim caught up to the defendant, the victim assumed a fighting stance until the victim noticed the screwdriver and immediately retreated, and the victim did not thereafter try to personally apprehend the defendant but opted to call the police and only trailed the defendant while keeping a safe distance; the jury was not required to view the evidence as the defendant urged. Davis v. State, 308 Ga. App. 7, 706 S.E.2d 710 (2011).

Assault with Intent to Murder

Definition of assault with intent to murder is assault without justification and without any circumstances of mitigation made by one person upon another, with a weapon in its nature likely to produce death, with the specific intent at the time unlawfully to take the life of the person assaulted. Killian v. State, 19 Ga. App. 750, 92 S.E. 227 (1917).

Elements of assault with intent to murder. — To constitute the offense of assault with intent to murder, there must be an assault by one person upon another, with a weapon likely to produce death in the manner used, the assault must be actuated by malice, either express or implied, and made by a person making the assault with the specific intent to kill the person assaulted. Reddick v. State, 11 Ga. App. 150, 74 S.E. 901 (1912); Griffin v. State, 50 Ga. App. 213, 177 S.E. 511 (1934); Anderson v. State, 51 Ga. App. 98, 179 S.E. 654 (1935); Dennis v. State, 51 Ga. App. 538, 180 S.E. 909 (1935).

On the trial of one indicted for the offense of assault with intent to murder by the use of a deadly weapon, the burden is on the state to show: (1) the assault; (2) the deadly character of the weapon; (3) the intent to take life; and (4) the commission of the assault under such circumstances that, had death ensued, the party making the assault would have been guilty of the offense of murder. Jackson v. State, 56 Ga. App. 374, 192 S.E. 633 (1937).

Proof of assault with intent to murder requires proof of all elements of murder except victim's death. Jackson v. State, 51 Ga. 402 (1874); Caudle v. State, 7 Ga. App. 848, 68 S.E. 343 (1910); Baker v. State, 88 Ga. App. 894, 78 S.E.2d 357 (1953).

Evidence must show specific intent to kill person assaulted. — Specific intent to kill is an essential ingredient of the offense of assault with intent to commit murder. Neese v. State, 40 Ga. App. 503, 150 S.E. 451 (1929).

One cannot legally be convicted of an assault with intent to murder unless the evidence shows that the assault was committed with the specific intent to kill the person assaulted. Gresham v. State, 46 Ga. App. 54, 166 S.E. 443 (1932).

To constitute the offense of assault with intent to murder there must be a specific intent to kill, which is not necessarily or conclusively shown by the use of a weapon likely to produce death. Titshaw v. State, 51 Ga. App. 60, 179 S.E. 641 (1935); Jackson v. State, 99 Ga. App. 740, 109 S.E.2d 886 (1959).

Specific intent to kill will not be presumed. — When death ensues from the use of a deadly weapon, a specific intent to kill will be presumed; but when death does not ensue, such an intent will not be presumed. In a charge of assault with intent to murder, proof of the specific intent to kill is a necessary ingredient of the crime. Hawks v. State, 51 Ga. App. 317, 180 S.E. 363 (1935).

Single shot assaulting two individuals. — Firing of a single shotgun blast at a car containing two persons in the front seat of the car authorized defendant's conviction for the offense of aggravated assault as to both individuals. Cavender v. State, 208 Ga. App. 61, 429 S.E.2d 711 (1993).

Indictment must allege intent to kill. — In an indictment for assault with intent to murder, the intent to kill cannot be implied or inferred by the state, but must be specifically alleged; and the jury may or may not infer such intention from the facts proved. Minge v. State, 45 Ga. App. 197, 164 S.E. 68 (1932) (decided under former Penal Code 1910, § 97).

Indictment sufficient. — Indictment which alleged that defendant assaulted another person "with a handgun, a deadly weapon" was sufficient to inform defendant of the charge defendant had to defend, and the trial court properly overruled defendant's special demurrer alleging that the indictment was deficient because it did not specify whether defendant committed the assault by shooting the victim, pointing the gun at the victim, or beating the victim with the gun. Arthur v. State, 275 Ga. 790, 573 S.E.2d 44 (2002).

Allegation that act was committed "with malice aforethought" is not equivalent to allegation of "intent to kill," which must be specifically alleged in an indictment for assault with intent to murder. Minge v. State, 45 Ga. App. 197, 164 S.E. 68 (1932).

Intent to kill may be gathered from circumstances and is jury question. — Existence of intent to murder is matter of fact to be ascertained by the jury from all the evidence before the jury, and not a matter for legal inference or presumption. Minge v. State, 45 Ga. App. 197, 164 S.E. 68 (1932).

Intention of the defendant is a question for determination by the jury under the facts and circumstances surrounding the occurrence. Vickery v. State, 48 Ga. App. 851, 174 S.E. 155 (1934).

While the intent to kill is not conclusively shown by the use of a weapon likely to produce death, such intent may be gathered from circumstances and is a matter for the determination of the jury. Griffin v. State, 50 Ga. App. 213, 177 S.E. 511 (1934); Dennis v. State, 51 Ga. App. 538, 180 S.E. 909 (1935); Jackson v. State, 56 Ga. App. 374, 192 S.E. 633 (1937).

In prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the court, in passing upon the intent, may take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case at the time of the attack, and also the nature of the wound inflicted. Breland v. State, 80 Ga. App. 575, 56 S.E.2d 921 (1949).

Proving intent. — Intent to kill may be established by proving, to satisfaction of jury, reckless disregard of human life. Minge v. State, 45 Ga. App. 197, 164 S.E. 68 (1932).

Intent to kill may be inferred. — While to authorize a conviction for assault with intent to murder a deliberate intent to kill must be shown at the time of the assault, such intent may be inferred by the jury from the nature of the instrument used in making the assault, the manner of its use, and the nature of the wounds inflicted. Reece v. State, 60 Ga. App. 195, 3 S.E.2d 229 (1939); Tanner v. State, 86 Ga. App. 767, 72 S.E.2d 549 (1952).

Jury may consider brutality and duration of assault as circumstances from which intent to kill may be inferred. Reece v. State, 60 Ga. App. 195, 3 S.E.2d 229 (1939).

Evidence sufficient to show intent. — When the defendant was tried for aggravated assault with intent to murder after biting a police officer, the jury's finding of "intent to murder" was supported by evidence that the defendant sucked up excess sputum before biting the officer — this being evidence of a deliberate, thinking act rather than purely spontaneous — and that the defendant laughed when the officer asked the defendant if the defendant had AIDS. Scroggins v. State, 198 Ga. App. 29, 401 S.E.2d 13 (1990), cert.

Evidence was sufficient to adjudicate a juvenile a delinquent for aggravated assault with intent to murder when: (1) the juvenile was willingly present when the victim was beaten and stabbed; (2) the juvenile was part of a group carrying bricks, sticks, and bats on a mission of revenge; and (3) the juvenile fled the crime scene and gave police false information moments after the incident, because, under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20, whether the juvenile actually stabbed the victim was not controlling, as the juvenile was an accomplice of those who did, and it could be inferred from the juvenile's conduct before and after the crime that the juvenile shared the perpetrators' criminal intent. In the Interest of N.L.G., 267 Ga. App. 428, 600 S.E.2d 401 (2004).

Jury was authorized to find that the defendant intended to murder a kidnapping victim since the defendant strangled the victim after the defendant's spouse told the defendant to get rid of the victim, the defendant's conduct caused the victim to lose consciousness and created such pressure in the victim's neck that both eyes hemorrhaged, and the defendant then threw the victim into the back of the defendant's car trunk and drove away. Moody v. State, 279 Ga. App. 440, 631 S.E.2d 485 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for malice murder and assault as: (1) the defendant told a first witness that the defendant had killed a man; (2) the defendant had tried to sell the victim's car; (3) the defendant admitted to police that the defendant had the key to the victim's car; and (4) the defendant told a fellow prisoner that the defendant and an accomplice strangled the victim, beat the victim, stabbed the victim, cut the victim's throat, and tore out the victim's fingernails. Richard v. State, 281 Ga. 401, 637 S.E.2d 406 (2006).

Aggravated assault merged into felony murder. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault based on the non-fatal beating of the victim where: (1) the victim had been beaten, but had died from strangulation; (2) the victim's clothing was found in defendant's apartment complex's trash bin; and (3) the victim's DNA was present in blood on defendant's bedspread. Thus, the aggravated assault conviction merged into the felony murder conviction; however, a separate aggravated assault conviction based on the non-fatal beating of the victim did not merge. Scott v. State, 276 Ga. 195, 576 S.E.2d 860 (2003).

Erroneous charge to jury that assault with intent to murder linked to possibility of murder conviction. — Charge to jury that if it finds that defendant would have been guilty of murder if victim of assault had died (which the victim did not) that defendant would now be guilty of assault with intent to murder is erroneous, but it is not always reversible error to give such charge. Bradford v. State, 69 Ga. App. 856, 26 S.E.2d 848 (1943).

Failure to charge jury on law of assault with intent to murder when victim died of wounds. — When in trial for murder, whether or not the evidence demanded a finding that the deceased died of a wound inflicted by defendant, it showed conclusively and without dispute that the deceased died as a result of a wound or wounds inflicted by one or more of the persons jointly indicted, the court did not err in failing to charge the jury on the law of assault with intent to murder. Fudge v. State, 190 Ga. 340, 9 S.E.2d 259 (1940).

Evidence sufficient for aggravated assault conviction. — Evidence that the defendant shot the victim with a gun in a dispute over money the victim allegedly owed to the defendant was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault as it showed the defendant used a deadly weapon to inflict serious bodily injury on the victim. Render v. State, 257 Ga. App. 477, 571 S.E.2d 493 (2002).

Maximum sentence properly imposed. — When the defendant was convicted of aggravated assault, burglary, theft by taking, and carrying a concealed weapon, the trial court properly imposed a 111-year sentence of imprisonment, which was within the statutory limits and which was the maximum possible. The presumption of vindictiveness was absent when a trial court imposed a greater penalty after trial than the court would have after a guilty plea; furthermore, the trial court explained that the court imposed the sentence because the defendant's actions were life-threatening, because the jury convicted the defendant of entering the dwelling with intent to commit murder, because the defendant's actions against one victim, the defendant's parent, had escalated from the defendant's previous misdemeanor crimes against the parent, and because the defendant displayed no remorse. Townes v. State, 298 Ga. App. 185, 679 S.E.2d 772 (2009).

Assault with Intent to Rob

Offender may be convicted of assault with intent to murder and assault with intent to rob where the evidence supports an intent to murder and an intent to rob. Under the provisions of the state Constitution they are not the same offenses, although they include the same occasion, time, and place. Martin v. State, 77 Ga. App. 297, 48 S.E.2d 485 (1948).

Assault with intent to rob person of money may be committed though person assaulted may not have money in their pocket, or on person, at the time and place the crime is attempted. Alexander v. State, 66 Ga. App. 708, 19 S.E.2d 353 (1942).

No fatal variance. — Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was affirmed since there was not a fatal variance between the evidence and the indictment, which alleged that the defendant unlawfully made an assault with intent to rob, with a knife, by holding the knife in a threatening manner while demanding money; the defendant was a conspirator in an armed robbery and the demands for money could be attributed to the defendant as the defendant entered the apartment without permission and held the knife at the defendant's side with the blade exposed as the defendant's partner demanded money, and the victims were afraid that the defendant "would do some-

No merger of related offenses. — As separate facts were used to prove each crime, the trial court did not err by refusing to merge the offenses of armed robbery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of the felonies. Blocker v. State, 265 Ga. App. 846, 595 S.E.2d 654 (2004).

There was sufficient evidence to uphold a defendant's convictions for malice murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime in connection with the fatal shootings of two men, and the wounding of four other men, as the jury was authorized to accept an accomplice's version of events, including that robbery was the initial motive and that the defendant fired the shots that killed and wounded the victims. The fact that conflicts in the evidence were resolved adversely to the defendant did not render the evidence insufficient and there was ample evidence that the defendant acted with implied malice, therefore, there was no error in determining that the killings were malice murders rather than felony murders. Jackson v. State, 282 Ga. 668, 653 S.E.2d 28 (2007).

Defendant was properly denied merger of a charge of criminal attempt to commit armed robbery and aggravated assault of a store victim as the offense of attempted armed robbery under, inter alia, O.C.G.A. § 16-4-1 was complete when the defendant pointed the gun at the victim and aggravated assault occurred when the victim was struck in the face with the gun. Stubbs v. State, 293 Ga. App. 692, 667 S.E.2d 905 (2008).

Merger required. — Because all of the facts used to prove the offense of aggravated assault with intent to rob were used up in proving the armed robbery, merger was required. Mercer v. State, 289 Ga. App. 606, 658 S.E.2d 173 (2008).

Because the assault element of a defendant's aggravated assault with intent to rob conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a) was contained within the "use of an offensive weapon" element of armed robbery under O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41, and both crimes shared the "intent to rob" element, the defendant's aggravated assault conviction merged into the armed robbery conviction. Lucky v. State, 286 Ga. 478, 689 S.E.2d 825 (2010).

Defendant's aggravated assault conviction should have merged into defendant's armed robbery conviction for sentencing purposes because the defendant's use of the defendant's handgun against the victim was the same conduct in both offenses, designed to immobilize the victim while the victim was robbed. The aggravated assault was established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to establish the commission of the armed robbery. Herrera v. State, 306 Ga. App. 432, 702 S.E.2d 731 (2010).

Defendant's testimony sufficient to authorize conviction. — Where defendant testified that codefendant conceived of the robbery without defendant's knowledge or participation and that only the codefendant was armed, defendant did acknowledge pretending to have a gun and giving orders to the store occupants, defendant's own testimony was sufficient to authorize a conviction for armed robbery and aggravated assault, and insufficient to support a defense of coercion. House v. State, 203 Ga. App. 55, 416 S.E.2d 108, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 906, 416 S.E.2d 108 (1992).

Different jury decisions supported. — Defendant's conviction was based on direct evidence, corroborated by circumstantial evidence; the jury's decision on the gun charge did not alter the fact that the aggravated assault charge was well-supported by the record. Murray v. State, 256 Ga. App. 736, 569 S.E.2d 636 (2002).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of robbery and assault. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendants' convictions for aggravated assault with intent to rob and aggravated battery. Autry v. State, 230 Ga. App. 773, 498 S.E.2d 304 (1998).

Ample evidence supported defendant's convictions of two counts of armed robbery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), and one count of aggravated assault in violation O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), (a)(2), where defendant was identified by defendant's companions in statements to the police, and also by two victims at trial, as the person who drove with the three companions to a store and, while pointing a gun at the various victims, robbed one person of money and lottery tickets, demanded and obtained money from a second person and shot that person, demanded money from the second person's spouse, and then fled with the three companions. Bates v. State, 259 Ga. App. 232, 576 S.E.2d 619 (2003).

Defendant was properly found guilty of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, aggravated assault with intent to rob under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106 where the footprints observed along the path between the crime scene and the area where defendant was apprehended matched the size and soles of defendant's shoes and defendant was identified as the robber based on defendant's clothing, shoes and "build." Mack v. State, 263 Ga. App. 186, 587 S.E.2d 132 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of the felonies because the only evidence of coercion came from defendant personally. To disprove the coercion defense, the victim testified that defendant did not appear nervous, that the robbery occurred very quickly, with no "fumbling" or "bumbling" on defendant's part, and that defendant commented that the defendant was robbing the victim because the defendant needed a place to stay. Blocker v. State, 265 Ga. App. 846, 595 S.E.2d 654 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault as defendant approached a fast food manager in a parking lot, demanded money at gunpoint, and shot the victim in a struggle; the victim and the victim's spouse identified defendant as the assailant. Clark v. State, 271 Ga. App. 534, 610 S.E.2d 165 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for aggravated assault under

O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20 as: (1) defendant and codefendant tried to convince a victim to participate in a fake armed robbery; (2) defendant told the victim that they would take the bullets out of the gun if it would make the victim feel better; (3) defendant watched over the victim while codefendant retrieved the gun; (4) defendant informed the victim that the victim would not get hurt if the victim cooperated with codefendant; and (5) defendant left in the car with codefendant. Broome v. State, 273 Ga. App. 273, 614 S.E.2d 807 (2005).

Because the person who stole the victim's vehicle had a distinctive hairstyle, and the defendant, who had the same hairstyle, was apprehended while in possession of the vehicle soon after the crime was committed, there was sufficient evidence to support a conviction for armed robbery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41, aggravated assault with intent to rob in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possessing a firearm during commission of a felony in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106. Hall v. State, 277 Ga. App. 413, 626 S.E.2d 611 (2006).

Acceptance of the juveniles' admissions to an aggravated assault with intent to rob under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 was proper because the defendants' argument that, while they threatened to take the victim's vehicle, they failed to take any steps to consummate the taking of the vehicle was rejected because, clearly, the defendants were parties to the assault, and there merely had to be an intent to rob, as a substantial step toward a robbery was unnecessary. In the Interest of T.K.L., 277 Ga. App. 461, 627 S.E.2d 98 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported convictions of felony murder, armed robbery, aggravated assault, possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, and possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony where, upon pulling into an apartment complex to turn around and ask for directions, the victims were approached by defendant and another man, where defendant pulled out a gun and told the victims to "give it up," where, when one of the victims hesitated, defendant shot him, where defendant then stole that victim's money and jewelry, where, later, the gunshot victim died, where the second victim described defendant, who was wearing a specific jersey at the time of the crimes, and where two witnesses who knew defendant testified that defendant robbed and shot the victim while wearing that jersey. Davis v. State, 280 Ga. 442, 629 S.E.2d 238 (2006).

Convictions for kidnapping and aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence, including testimony from the victim that, when the victim stopped the victim's car at a stop sign, the defendant jumped in the car, held a knife to the victim's throat and demanded money, that, as the victim drove, the defendant held the knife on the victim and continued to demand money, that, when the victim spotted a police station, the victim sped into its parking lot, at which point, the defendant fled on foot. Adcock v. State, 279 Ga. App. 473, 631 S.E.2d 494 (2006).

Convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, fleeing to elude a police officer, and reckless driving were all upheld on appeal, given the sufficiency of the identification evidence supplied by the victim, an investigating officer, and the arresting officer, as well as observations made by the latter in apprehending the defendant; moreover, the defendant's failure to object to the admission of a photographic lineup and show-up as impermissibly suggestive precluded appellate review of the same. Newton v. State, 280 Ga. App. 709, 634 S.E.2d 839 (2006).

Jury was entitled to find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault, charged in the indictment "with the intent to rob," based on the corroboration of the defendant's admission to going on a "lick," which meant to go find someone to rob, and that the defendant knew what a passenger was going to do when that passenger reached out of the car window in an attempt to snatch the elderly victim's purse, resulting in the victim being struck by the car and falling to the ground; hence, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's amended motion for a new trial. Jackson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 506, 636 S.E.2d 694 (2006).

Given the defendant's confession, the victim's identification of the defendant as the person who robbed the victim, testimony by the victim and others that the robber had a gun, and testimony that the defendant was not at the nightclub where the defendant claimed to be, the jury was authorized to find the defendant guilty of armed robbery and aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-41(a) and 16-5-21(a). Burns v. State, 288 Ga. App. 507, 654 S.E.2d 405 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions of armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, false imprisonment, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony when the state showed that the defendant intentionally aided and abetted a home invasion in which the home was burglarized and the homeowner's teenage child was detained and robbed by use of a handgun. Even in the absence of evidence sufficient to show that the defendant directly committed the charged offenses, there was sufficient evidence that the defendant was a party to the offenses in that the defendant and a person armed with a gun loaded a truck with property stolen from the home during the two-hour home invasion, the defendant was present speaking with the armed person during the home invasion, and the defendant confirmed that the child was home alone. Whitley v. State, 293 Ga. App. 605, 667 S.E.2d 447 (2008).

Testimony that the defendant's passenger pointed a gun at the victim's head, while attempting to gain control of the victim's vehicle sufficed to prove both counts of aggravated assault. Moreover, the jury could have found the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of two counts of aggravated assault based on the defendant's involvement as a party to the crimes or as a coconspirator. Johnson v. State, 299 Ga. App. 706, 683 S.E.2d 659 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for directed verdict of acquittal on the defendant's aggravated assault with intent to rob convictions because the jury was authorized to conclude that the defendant fired a gun at the victims to further a robbery, and the indictment did not charge the defendant with a specific intent to rob the victims but only with a general intent to rob; the defendant approached the victims, pointed a gun toward the head of one of the victims, and demanded money, and after robbing that victim, the defendant fled and fired several shots at the porch where the victims had been standing and at the victims once the victims began chasing the defendant. Johnson v. State, 304 Ga. App. 371, 696 S.E.2d 396 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for directed verdict of acquittal because there was ample evidence of the defendant's guilt of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) based on the defendant's act of firing two shots in the victim's direction, wounding the victim in the chest and leg. Nyane v. State, 306 Ga. App. 591, 703 S.E.2d 53 (2010).

Assault with Intent to Rape

Elements of crime of assault with intent to rape are: (1) an assault; (2) an intent to have carnal knowledge of the female; and (3) a purpose to carry into effect this intent with force and against the consent of the female. Dorsey v. State, 108 Ga. 477, 34 S.E. 135 (1899); McCullough v. State, 11 Ga. App. 612, 76 S.E. 393 (1912); Fitchett v. State, 52 Ga. App. 87, 182 S.E. 412 (1935); Pickett v. State, 53 Ga. App. 478, 186 S.E. 206 (1936); Scott v. State, 63 Ga. App. 353, 11 S.E.2d 64 (1940); Moody v. State, 91 Ga. App. 138, 85 S.E.2d 61 (1954).

Crime of aggravated assault with intent to rape is complete when there is substantial step toward battery of the victim, i.e., an assault coupled with an intent to rape. Bissell v. State, 153 Ga. App. 564, 266 S.E.2d 238 (1980).

Substantial step requirement relates to assault, the first element of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and not to the second element, the intent to rape. Bissell v. State, 153 Ga. App. 564, 266 S.E.2d 238 (1980); Young v. State, 181 Ga. App. 587, 353 S.E.2d 82 (1987).

Substantial step toward committing battery. — Since assault is an attempted battery, there must be a substantial step toward committing a battery before there can be an assault. Bissell v.

If there is substantial step toward rape, crime would become attempted rape. Bissell v. State, 153 Ga. App. 564, 266 S.E.2d 238 (1980).

Evidence sufficient to supply "substantial step" requirement. — When the evidence authorized a finding that the defendant tricked the victim into a building, ostensibly to use a telephone, then seized the victim, stated an intention of kissing the victim, and attempted to get the victim to lie on a bed and the ensuing struggle was interrupted by a third party and the victim was then able to escape, the evidence supplied the "substantial step" requirement as it relates to the offense of assault with intent to rape. Lester v. State, 173 Ga. App. 300, 325 S.E.2d 912 (1985).

When a defendant was charged with assault with intent to commit rape but did not actually have carnal knowledge of the victim as defined by § 16-6-1, there was evidence, although circumstantial insofar as intent is concerned, sufficient to establish that the defendant assaulted the victim with intent to commit rape. Butler v. State, 194 Ga. App. 895, 392 S.E.2d 324 (1990); Whitehill v. State, 247 Ga. App. 267, 543 S.E.2d 470 (2000).

Convictions of criminal attempt to commit kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), and aggravated assault with intent to rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), were supported by sufficient evidence since the victim positively identified the defendant as the attacker when the defendant was captured and again at trial, and since a store owner also identified the defendant at trial and testified that the store owner maintained sight of the defendant from when the store owner saw the defendant attacking the victim until the defendant's capture; additionally, since the defendant made no attempt to take the victim's purse or keys, and the evidence showed that the defendant had pornographic photos of someone who looked similar to the victim, the jury was authorized to find that the defendant had the requisite intent to detain, abduct, and rape the victim as charged. Mobley v. State, 279 Ga. App. 476, 631 S.E.2d 491 (2006).

Solicitation alone will not constitute offense of assault with intent to rape. Tiller v. State, 101 Ga. 782, 29 S.E. 424 (1897).

Battery is not essential. Owens v. State, 9 Ga. App. 441, 71 S.E. 680 (1911).

Intent not abrogated by defendant's statement that defendant lacked time for offense. — Defendant's statement to the victim that defendant did not have time to actually attempt to rape the victim did not abrogate defendant's intent. Young v. State, 181 Ga. App. 587, 353 S.E.2d 82 (1987).

Distinguishing assault with intent to rape and assault with intent to kill.

— Assault with intent to rape involves attempted sexual intercourse with the victim while assault with intent to murder involves striking the victim in the head with the admitted intent of killing the victim. Both of these offenses require proof of distinct essential elements, each of which separately or together will sustain a conviction, and both are aimed at prohibiting specific conduct, and, accordingly, are not offenses established by the same conduct. Guthrie v. State, 147 Ga. App. 351, 248 S.E.2d 714 (1978).

Female under 14 years of age. — It is not necessary to show that attempt was forcible and against female's will where one is charged with assault with intent to rape upon a female under the age of 14 years. Vickery v. State, 48 Ga. App. 851, 174 S.E. 155 (1934).

In an assault with an intent to rape upon a female under the age of 14 years it is only necessary to show an intent to have carnal knowledge of the female, and that some overt act was done towards the accomplishment of that purpose. Vickery v. State, 48 Ga. App. 851, 174 S.E. 155 (1934).

When female is under age 14, law conclusively presumes that engaging in intercourse is against her will, she being unable to consent. Moody v. State, 91 Ga. App. 138, 85 S.E.2d 61 (1954).

Evidence sufficient for finding defendant guilty of assault with intent to rape. — When appellant crawled under the door of the ladies' room stall in which victim was changing her clothes, pulled his pants down to his knees, grabbed her by the throat and pulled at her clothes, all the while warning her not to make any noise, this was sufficient to authorize rational triers of fact to find appellant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of assault with intent to rape. Middlebrooks v. State, 156 Ga. App. 319, 274 S.E.2d 643 (1980).

When the jury could find that the victim consented to intercourse after being assaulted by the defendant, the evidence was sufficient to authorize a finding of assault with the intent to commit rape. Terry v. State, 166 Ga. App. 632, 305 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

Evidence that the defendant held women at gunpoint and attempted to remove or did remove some of their underclothes was sufficient to support convictions for assault with intent to rape. Hardy v. State, 240 Ga. App. 115, 522 S.E.2d 704 (1999).

Evidence that the defendant entered the victim's home, crawled onto the victim's back as the victim slept in bed, pressed a knife to the victim's neck, and then began fondling the victim's genital area was sufficient to authorize the jury to find intent to rape. Brown v. State, 242 Ga. App. 858, 531 S.E.2d 409 (2000).

Evidence showing that defendant threatened and struck the victim, combined with the evidence showing that defendant unsuccessfully tried to rape the victim, was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for aggravated assault with intent to rape. Jackson v. State, 257 Ga. App. 817, 572 S.E.2d 360 (2002).

Evidence that defendant touched the inside of the first victim's breasts, that the victim feared the victim was going to be raped, and that the defendant fled and turned to the second victim only after being foiled in the defendant's first attempt was sufficient for the jury to have concluded that the defendant was guilty of aggravated assault with intent to rape two people. De'Mon v. State, 262 Ga. App. 10, 584 S.E.2d 639 (2003).

Evidence provided by the victim that defendant was the person who threatened the victim with a knife and then raped the victim was sufficient to support both the rape and aggravated assault with intent to rape convictions. Wilson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 491, 600 S.E.2d 440 (2004).

Assault with Intent to Rape (Cont'd)

Denial of a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, was proper because the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault with intent to rape, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21; defendant came to the home of the victim, who was a former love interest, and the victim claimed that the defendant physically and sexually assaulted the victim, causing multiple serious injuries and bruises. Goodall v. State, 277 Ga. App. 600, 627 S.E.2d 183 (2006).

Defendant's convictions of rape, aggravated sodomy, false imprisonment, and two counts of aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence in the form of the victim's injuries, and the victim's testimony that, among other things, after the victim refused the defendant's request for sex, the defendant threw the victim on the bed, hit the victim in the back and on the arms with hedge clippers, ordered the victim to remove the victim's clothes, dragged the victim by the hair back into the house after the victim had escaped through a window, grabbed the victim, twisted the victim's arm, and said, "I'm trying — bitch, I'm going to kill you," hit the victim in the arm and leg with the hedge clippers, punched the victim on the lips and on the forehead, threw the victim on the bed and raped the victim and made the victim perform oral sex on the defendant. Tarver v. State, 280 Ga. App. 89, 633 S.E.2d 415 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21; the victim's testimony that the defendant pinned the victim down while touching the victim underneath the victim's clothes against the victim's will and that the defendant was really rough was sufficient to convict. Clark v. State, 282 Ga. App. 248, 638 S.E.2d 397 (2006).

Defendant ripped off a 15-year-old child's shorts, tried to force the victim's legs open, and when the victim resisted, beat the victim, rammed the victim's head to the floor, and choked the victim; police found the victim on the floor, bloody, naked, and sobbing, and the defendant clad only in underwear. This evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated assault with intent to rape. Murray v. State, 293 Ga. App. 516, 667 S.E.2d 382 (2008).

Because the victim, a resident, and a police officer all testified that defendant was attempting to have sex with the victim against the victim's will, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated assault with intent to rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1). Cubia v. State, 298 Ga. App. 746, 681 S.E.2d 195 (2009).

Because the jury was authorized to infer that the defendant had the requisite intent to rape the victim as charged, the jury was also authorized to find that he was guilty of aggravated assault with intent to rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1); the state presented evidence that the defendant removed the victim's underwear while on top of her in her bed and then licked her genital and anal areas, and the evidence also showed that defendant only stopped sexually assaulting the victim after she pleaded with him and offered him money. Mattox v. State, 305 Ga. App. 600, 699 S.E.2d 887 (2010).

Evidence presented at trial was sufficient to authorize a rational jury to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault with intent to rape, and simple battery because the victim's testimony, standing alone, could sustain the convictions; the jury was entitled to take into account similar transaction evidence for the purpose of showing the defendant's intent, bent of mind, and course of conduct, and while the defendant testified to a different version of what transpired, it was the exclusive role of the jury to determine witness credibility and to choose what evidence to believe and what to reject. Alvarez v. State, No. A11A0101, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 340 (Apr. 19, 2011).

Admissibility of proof of similar offenses in rape cases. — It is well settled in rape cases that proof of similar offenses committed by the accused in the same locality, about the same time, and where similar methods were employed by the accused in commission of such offenses, is admissible in defendant's trial for the purpose of identifying the defendant as the guilty party and to show motive, plan, scheme, bent of mind and course of conduct. The separate crimes must, of course, be logically related to the offense being tried and must tend to establish an element of the state's case. Burnett v. State, 137 Ga. App. 183, 223 S.E.2d 232 (1976).

Trial court properly admitted the similar acts evidence of other women who were also attacked by the defendant and who all identified defendant as their attacker. The evidence was highly probative of defendant's intent to rape, a necessary element of the charged offense. Henderson v. State, 204 Ga. App. 884, 420 S.E.2d 813 (1992).

Pushing rape victim into furniture. — Nurse was properly allowed to testify as to a rape victim's statement to the nurse that her assailant had blindfolded her and pushed her into furniture because the victim's statement to the nurse was given to explain the nature and origin of some of her injuries. This evidence was sufficient to allow the jury to find that the rape victim had been pushed into furniture as she was pushed and dragged through her home while blindfolded, supporting the defendant's aggravated assault convictions. Bryant v. State, 304 Ga. App. 456, 696 S.E.2d 439 (2010).

Conviction of aggravated assault is legal conviction upon indictment for rape. Jones v. Smith, 228 Ga. 648, 187 S.E.2d 298 (1972).

On indictment for rape, defendant can be convicted of assault with intent to rape, although the indictment does not contain an allegation of an assault. Long v. State, 84 Ga. App. 638, 66 S.E.2d 837 (1951).

Failure to charge on assault with intent to rape not error. — Conviction of assault with intent to rape may be had on an indictment for rape since the act was attempted but not completed. The jury should be instructed that the defendant may be found guilty of the lesser offense necessarily involved in the graver offense, if under any view of the evidence submitted a conviction of the lesser offense would be authorized. If all of the evidence, however, shows that the defendant, if guilty at all, was guilty of the completed major offense, it is not error to fail to charge as to the lesser offense. Rider v. State, 196 Ga. 767, 27 S.E.2d 667 (1943).

Guilty verdict on rape charge and not guilty verdict on aggravated assault charge are inconsistent. Martin v. State, 157 Ga. App. 304, 277 S.E.2d 300, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 833, 102 S. Ct. 133, 70 L. Ed. 2d 112 (1981).

Conviction for rape and aggravated assault. — Evidence consisting mostly of testimony from the victim, that the victim was awakened by defendant when the defendant broke into the victim's home, placed the defendant's hand around the victim's neck, and forced the victim to shut up or die, as the defendant threw the victim onto a couch and engaged in sexual intercourse with the victim without the victim's consent, was sufficient to uphold defendant's rape conviction, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, aggravated assault conviction, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and burglary conviction, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1. Lowe v. State, 259 Ga. App. 674, 578 S.E.2d 284 (2003).

Despite the victim's recantation of the events that occurred leading up to the rape, kidnapping and aggravated assault committed by defendant, the evidence presented of the victim's statements and the testimony of the other state witnesses and medical personnel as to the extent of the victim's injuries, was sufficient to support the convictions. Hambrick v. State, 278 Ga. App. 768, 629 S.E.2d 442 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault with intent to rape did not merge into the defendant's rape conviction as the defendant's fondling the victim while threatening to kill the victim were separate and distinct acts of force and intimidation beyond that necessary to accomplish the rape. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

Because the requirement under the rape statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, that defendant have forcible carnal knowledge of the victim against the victim's will was not a fact required under the aggravated assault statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, the aggravated assault with intent to rape charge merged with the rape charge; therefore, the trial court erred in sentencing defendant separately for aggravated assault. Johnson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 639, 680 S.E.2d 675 (2009).

Conviction upheld on appeal. — Aggravated assault with intent to rape conviction was upheld on appeal, given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, as the jury charges on intent and unanimity were proper; the victim's identification testimony was sufficient; the sentencing judge's comments did not show bias; and trial counsel was not ineffective. Williams v. State, 290 Ga. App. 829, 661 S.E.2d 563 (2008).

Sentence not void. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for out-of-time appeal to vacate a void sentence because the defendant's sentence of 40 years imprisonment for aggravated assault with intent to rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) and kidnapping in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) fell within the statutory range and was not void; the offenses of aggravated assault and kidnapping both carry maximum sentences of 20 years, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(b) and 16-5-40(b)(1). Shelton v. State, 307 Ga. App. 599, 705 S.E.2d 699 (2011).

Jury Instructions

Charge including element not alleged in indictment. — Even though a jury charge included reference to the intent to rob, which element was not contained in the indictment, defendant was not denied a fair trial since the jury was given a copy of the indictment, and there was no reasonable possibility that the jury did not believe defendant committed aggravated assault in the manner alleged in the indictment. Green v. State, 221 Ga. App. 694, 472 S.E.2d 457 (1996).

Charging the jury on two alternative methods of committing aggravated assault, while the indictment charged only that aggravated assault was committed because the assault was with "intent to rob," was not reversible error because there was no reasonable possibility that the jury would have convicted defendant of committing the crime in a way not alleged in the indictment. Harwell v.

When the indictment charged the defendant with having committed an aggravated assault on the victim by assaulting the victim with intent to rape, even though the trial court charged the jury that aggravated assault also may be committed by the use of a deadly weapon, there was no error because the court additionally instructed that there was no basis to find the defendant guilty on this theory since the indictment charged the defendant with commission of an aggravated assault with intent to rape. Gordon v. State, 244 Ga. App. 265, 535 S.E.2d 289 (2000).

Although the court read the charge as set forth in the indictment, because the court did not instruct the jury to limit its consideration of aggravated assault to only the method set forth in the indictment, and not to consider aggravated assault as having occurred in another manner charged, the conviction of the defendants was defective. Chapman v. State, 273 Ga. 865, 548 S.E.2d 278 (2001).

There was no need to instruct the jury on the use of hands as deadly weapons as the defendant alleged, given that that method of aggravated assault was not alleged nor pursued by the state. Boyd v. State, 289 Ga. App. 342, 656 S.E.2d 864 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 498 (Ga. 2008).

Instruction on reckless conduct charge not warranted. — Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel for the failure to request an instruction on reckless conduct as defendant testified at trial and trial counsel testified at the new trial hearing that the defense strategy was to portray the stabbing of the former love interest as an accident; thus, the incident was either an accident or an aggravated assault and a charge on reckless conduct was unwarranted. Alston v. State, 277 Ga. App. 117, 625 S.E.2d 475 (2005).

After threatening to kill the victim, because the defendant's actions in continuing to drive away, as the victim was caught on the outside of the car screaming, supported the crime of either aggravated or simple assault, and not simple negligence, the trial court did not err in rejecting a reckless conduct instruction. Martin v. State, 283 Ga. App. 652, 642 S.E.2d 340 (2007).

Because the evidence in the defendant's felony murder trial, with aggravated assault as the underlying felony, showed without dispute that, although the defendant might not have intended to kill the victim, the defendant intentionally gunned the engine and then drove at the victim, who was acting aggressively and was armed with a knife, the trial judge did not err in denying the defendant's request for a reckless conduct instruction, but properly instructed the jury on the issue of justification. Berry v. State, 282 Ga. 376, 651 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

Defendant admitted firing a gun to frighten the victims, but asserted the affirmative defense of justification. The defendant was not entitled to a jury charge on reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of the charged offense of aggravated assault as the evidence established either the commission of an aggravated assault, or no offense at all. Hudson v. State, 296 Ga. App. 692, 675 S.E.2d 578 (2009).

Jury's consideration limited to facts alleged in indictment. — Trial court's recharge to the jury that an aggravated assault could be committed in a way not set forth in the indictment, without giving a remedial instruction limiting the jury's consideration to the facts alleged in the indictment, was reversible error. Elrod v. State, 238 Ga. App. 80, 517 S.E.2d 805 (1999).

Because the indictment charged defendant with aggravated assault by using a deadly weapon, the trial court's inclusion in the instruction of the definition of simple assault was superfluous and potentially misleading; however, the charge as a whole was not erroneous because, at the beginning, the court read the indictment to the jurors verbatim. Salahuddin v. State, 241 Ga. App. 168, 525 S.E.2d 422 (1999).

Because actual injury is not an essential element of aggravated assault under Georgia law, the trial court's failure to explicitly charge the jury that it had to find that defendant shot the victims was not a federal due process violation. Salahuddin v. State, 241 Ga. App. 168, 525 S.E.2d 422 (1999).

Because the indictment did not charge the defendant with using a deadly weapon, but with using objects, specifically, hands and feet, which when used offensively are likely to and actually do result in serious bodily injury, it was not necessary for the court to define the term "deadly weapon." Johnson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 761, 538 S.E.2d 850 (2000).

Trial court erred in its charge on aggravated assault because even though defendant was indicted for aggravated assault by use of a handgun, the court instructed the jury that intent to murder, rape or rob are alternative methods by which a person commits aggravated assault. Boone v. State, 250 Ga. App. 133, 549 S.E.2d 713 (2001).

When the defendant was indicted for two counts of aggravated assault, the assault of one victim by shooting that person with a pistol and the assault of another victim by striking that person on the head with a pistol, the court properly instructed that a person commits the offense of aggravated assault when he or she assaults another person with intent to murder or with any instrument that, when used offensively, is likely to result in serious bodily injury. Scott v. State, 274 Ga. 153, 549 S.E.2d 338 (2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 929, 122 S. Ct. 1301, 152 L. Ed. 2d 212 (2002).

When the defendant was charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the trial court's jury instruction that aggravated assault could occur both by an assault with intent to murder or by an assault with a deadly weapon was error because the instruction deviated from the indictment, which had not alleged assault with intent to murder. Doomes v. State, 261 Ga. App. 442, 583 S.E.2d 151 (2003).

Upon a charge in an indictment alleging that the defendant committed an aggravated assault by holding a razor blade against the victim's neck, and the only weapon shown to be used by the defendant was a razor blade, the question as to whether the razor blade constituted a deadly weapon or an instrument likely to inflict serious bodily harm had nothing to do with the manner in which the crime was committed; hence, a charge and recharge given to the jury could not reasonably be deemed to have presented the jury with an alternative basis for finding the defendant guilty of a crime not charged in the indictment. Dudley v. State, 283 Ga. App. 86, 640 S.E.2d 677 (2006).

Because the trial court's additional instructions confined the aggravated assault charge to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), which was alleged in the indictment, the jury was not misled; the trial court did not err in failing to give a charge concerning whether hands and feet were deadly weapons per se since it would not have been adjusted to the facts and circumstances of the case. Stevens v. State, 293 Ga. App. 845, 668 S.E.2d 467 (2008).

Reference to both paragraphs of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a). — Trial court's reference to both paragraphs of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a) in its recharge on aggravated assault did not violate defendant's due process rights because its initial charge limited the jury's consideration to the method of committing the offense alleged in the indictment. Martin v. State, 268 Ga. 682, 492 S.E.2d 225 (1997).

Even though the trial court recited both O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) and (a)(2) in its charge to the jury, the court properly limited the elements of the crime to those charged in the indictment by reading the indictment verbatim and also instructing the jury that the state had the burden of proving every material allegation of the indictment. Johnson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 761, 538 S.E.2d 850 (2000).

Knowledge as essential element. — Knowledge is an essential element to the offense of the aggravated assault of a police officer, and the jury must be charged that knowledge is an essential element to the crime. Britt v. State, 184 Ga. App. 445, 361 S.E.2d 710 (1987); Hudson v. State, 189 Ga. App. 201, 375 S.E.2d 475 (1988).

The charge was inadequate, and the convictions of the indictment were vacated where the court defined the elements of the charges of aggravated assault and aggravated battery without any reference to the element of defendant's knowledge that the victim was a police officer. Chandler v. State, 204 Ga. App. 816, 421 S.E.2d 288 (1992).

Knowledge element adequately covered. — Deficiency in conveying to the jury the requirement that the accused must have acted with knowledge that the victim was a police officer did not require reversal, since the knowledge element of the offense was adequately covered in an earlier portion of the charge. Cornwell v. State, 193 Ga. App. 561, 388 S.E.2d 353, cert. denied, 193 Ga. App. 909, 388 S.E.2d 353 (1989).

Defendant's contention that the trial court failed to properly instruct the jury on the definition of a deadly weapon and on the requisite knowledge that the victim of the aggravated assault was a police officer was rejected on appeal because the argument was waived, in that defendant neither made nor reserved any objection to any of the jury charges; nonetheless, the trial court's charge and recharge mirrored the aggravated assault statute, including the requirement of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(c) that the person "knowingly" commit the offense, and there could be no dispute that the gun defendant fired at the officer was a deadly weapon. Milton v. State, 272 Ga. App. 908, 614 S.E.2d 140 (2005).

"Mere presence" charge unwarranted. — Defendant's aggravated assault with a deadly weapon conviction was upheld, and an amended motion for a new trial was properly denied, as the defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on a claimed defense of "mere presence" as such was not a recognized defense, and the charge given to the jury covered all legal principles relevant to the determination of guilt; any confusion was cleared up by the court's further instruction that in order for the jury to convict defendant of aggravated assault under a party to a crime theory, it would have to find that the defendant directly committed or intentionally helped in the commission of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Kelley v. State, 279 Ga. App. 187, 630 S.E.2d 783 (2006).

Evidence elicited at trial did not support a charge on mere presence because the defendant took an active role in the crime; the defendant drove the codefendants to the crime scene with the intent to rob, the defendant turned off the car's lights to assist in accosting the victims by surprise, the defendant drove defendant's comrades away from the crime, and the defendant tried to get rid of the stolen car. Huckabee v. State, 287 Ga. 728, 699 S.E.2d 531 (2010).

Parties to a crime charge. — In a prosecution for aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's requested jury instruction on a "parties to a crime" issue, as the overall jury charge the trial court gave, which included the applicable portions of the pattern instruction on parties to a crime, and generally tracked the statutory language of O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20, as well as the entire pattern instruction on "mere presence," substantially covered the principles necessary. Morales v. State, 281 Ga. App. 18, 635 S.E.2d 325 (2006).

Defense of justification and character of defendant. — Assertion of the defense of justification does not, in and of itself, have the effect of placing the defendant's character in issue. Moon v. State, 202 Ga. App. 500, 414 S.E.2d 721 (1992).

Defendant could not argue justification as a defense since defendant denied firing the weapon into the crowd; thus, defendant did not meet the elements of justification whereby the defendant admitted acting with the intent to inflict an injury, but claimed doing so while in reasonable fear of suffering immediate serious harm. Broussard v. State, 276 Ga. 216, 576 S.E.2d 883 (2003).

Failure to charge jury on justification and duty to retreat. — Defendant's convictions for voluntary manslaughter, aggravated assault, and two related counts of possession of a firearm in the commission of a crime required reversal because the trial court erred by not charging the jury on the principle of no duty to retreat since the defense of justification was raised by the evidence, via defendant's testimony that the victim tried to stab the defendant, and the state placed the issue of retreat before the jury. As a result of defendant making out a prima facie case of justification, the trial court erred by concluding otherwise. Lewis v. State, 292 Ga. App. 257, 663 S.E.2d 721 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1869, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 885 (Ga. 2008).

Basing deadly weapon determination on victim's apprehensions not error. — When the charge given the jury required an analysis of the concept of the "deadly weapon" be conducted in terms of the reasonable apprehensions of the victim rather than those of the hypothetical prudent person the court found no error in the charge. Moore v. State, 169 Ga. App. 24, 311 S.E.2d 226 (1983).

Victim's reasonable belief. — Error in a jury instruction, its failing to state that the victim's belief that a shotgun was a deadly weapon had to be reasonable, was harmless error. Brown v. State, 211 Ga. App. 267, 438 S.E.2d 713 (1993).

Improper charge on eyewitness testimony. — Eyewitness testimony identifying the defendant as the perpetrator of an assault was sufficient to support a conviction; a new trial was required, however, because the trial judge should not have instructed the jurors to take into account the certainty shown by the eyewitness in making the identification. Brown v. State, 277 Ga. App. 396, 626 S.E.2d 596 (2006).

Essential element of simple assault must be stated in jury instructions in defining aggravated assault. Smith v. State, 140 Ga. App. 395, 231 S.E.2d 143 (1976); Harper v. State, 157 Ga. App. 480, 278 S.E.2d 28 (1981), but see Quong v. State, 157 Ga. App. 532, 278 S.E.2d 122 (1981); McKibben v. State, 212 Ga. App. 370, 441 S.E.2d 895 (1994).

Term "assault" is legal word of art and the term's meaning must be explained to the jury by the judge. Smith v. State, 140 Ga. App. 395, 231 S.E.2d 143 (1976).

It is not necessary to define or explain "assault" in charging aggravated assault. Zachery v. State, 158 Ga. App. 448, 280 S.E.2d 860 (1981).

Meaning of "assault" in aggravated assault was not equivalent to definition of simple assault in former Code 1933, § 26-1301. Zachery v. State, 158 Ga. App. 448, 280 S.E.2d 860 (1981) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20).

Defining "assault" in charge. — When charging on essential elements of aggravated assault, "assault" should be defined by statutory elements of simple assault. Emmons v. State, 142 Ga. App. 553, 236 S.E.2d 536 (1977).

No definition of simple assault is necessary in charge on aggravated assault. Bundren v. State, 155 Ga. App. 265, 270 S.E.2d 807 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 247 Ga. 180, 274 S.E.2d 455 (1981); Quong v. State, 157 Ga. App. 532, 278 S.E.2d 122 (1981), but see Harper v. State, 157 Ga. App. 480, 278 S.E.2d 28 (1981).

Charge on simple assault authorized. — Trial court was authorized to give an instruction on the lesser-included offense of simple assault because some evidence showed that the defendant attempted to violently injure a store manager by stabbing the manager with a pen with such force that defendant bent the pen; the fact that actual contact occurred did not diminish the fact that there was evidence of a simple assault. Griggs v. State, 303 Ga. App. 442, 693 S.E.2d 615 (2010).

Charge on simple assault need not be given to complete definition of aggravated assault. Sutton v. State, 245 Ga. 192, 264 S.E.2d 184 (1980); Petouvis v. State, 165 Ga. App. 409, 301 S.E.2d 483 (1983).

Trial court does not necessarily err in failing to charge upon the definition of simple assault in charging on aggravated assault as a charge on simple assault need not be given in order to complete the definition of aggravated assault. Willis v. State, 167 Ga. App. 626, 307 S.E.2d 133 (1983).

There is no merit in defendant's contention that a charge on simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20 must be given in order to complete the definition of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, as the latter does not need the former to make it complete. Spaulding v. State, 185 Ga. App. 812, 366 S.E.2d 174, cert. denied, 185 Ga. App. 911, 366 S.E.2d 174 (1988).

Trial court's jury instructions in defendant's criminal trial on multiple charges arising out of a domestic dispute were proper, as: (1) there was no requirement that the jury be instructed on the element of assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20) in order to be properly instructed on the crime of aggravated assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21); (2) the methods of committing an aggravated battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), were properly defined based on the methods asserted in the indictment; (3) there was no support for a requested charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b); and (4) there was no possibility of a lesser included conviction for false imprisonment (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41), such that instruction only on the indicted offense of kidnapping (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40) was proper. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), as the jury charge provided guidelines for determining guilt or innocence, the defendant waived any other error by failing to request, in writing, a charge on the lesser-included offense of battery. Massey v. State, 278 Ga. App. 303, 628 S.E.2d 706 (2006).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in failing to give a charge on the lesser-included offense of simple battery, as the defendant failed to request the same in writing, at or before the close of the evidence, and an oral request to give such a charge was insufficient. Morales v. State, 281 Ga. App. 18, 635 S.E.2d 325 (2006).

In the defendant's prosecution for aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), the defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on the lesser included offense of simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20 because the defendant's wife could have reasonably apprehended that the black microrecorder allegedly in the defendant's hand was a gun. Dixon v. State, 285 Ga. App. 694, 647 S.E.2d 370 (2007).

Trial court did not commit reversible error, much less "plain error" pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-8-58(b), by failing to inform the jury of the definition of simple assault because the defendant's defense was mistaken identity, and the undisputed evidence showed that the perpetrators intentionally fired the perpetrators' guns through a parking lot occupied by many pedestrians and in the direction of a vehicle; neither negligence nor reckless conduct was an issue and, thus, any error in the charge would not have affected the outcome of the case. Howard v. State, 288 Ga. 741, 707 S.E.2d 80 (2011).

During the defendant's trial for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), the trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury on simple assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a), as an essential element of aggravated assault because the record failed to indicate that the defendant submitted a written request to charge on simple assault, and the trial court's instruction was sufficient to define the offense charged and provided a proper guideline for the determination of the defendant's guilt or innocence. Williams v. State, 307 Ga. App. 577, 705 S.E.2d 332 (2011).

Trial counsel's performance was not deficient due to counsel's failure to request a jury charge on simple assault as a lesser included offense of the charged crime of aggravated assault because there was no evidence showing that the defendant committed merely simple assault; the evidence showed that the defendant's assault upon the victim was with a screwdriver within the purview of the aggravated assault statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Davis v. State, 308 Ga. App. 7, 706 S.E.2d 710 (2011).

Failure to charge jury on simple assault when the defendant is charged with aggravated assault is not reversible error in the absence of a proper request. Glover v. State, 153 Ga. App. 74, 264 S.E.2d 554 (1980).

Defendant was accused of hitting the victim in the head with a beer bottle, cutting the victim's head and requiring stitches. The evidence allowed the jury to either find that the defendant had not committed an aggravated assault, or to find the defendant guilty as charged; the defendant was not entitled to an instruction on the lesser-included charge of simple assault as there was no evidence to support that charge. Maiorano v. State, 294 Ga. App. 726, 669 S.E.2d 678 (2008).

Charging jury on aggravated assault. — It is not error for a judge to charge on aggravated assault in the same language as former Code 1933, § 26-1302, even though that language contains means of committing the offense other than that for which a defendant is indicted, if it does not confuse the jury. Pitts v. State, 128 Ga. App. 827, 198 S.E.2d 377 (1973) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21).

When, in charging the jury on aggravated assault, the trial court fails to include that portion of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 which prohibits an individual from knowingly committing aggravated assault on a peace officer while the peace officer is engaged in or on account of the performance of the officer's official duties, but the trial court communicates that knowledge was an essential element of the offense, it is not reversible error. Glover v. State, 153 Ga. App. 74, 264 S.E.2d 554 (1980); Bright v. State, 238 Ga. App. 876, 520 S.E.2d 48 (1999).

Curative recharge on aggravated assault with intent to rape eliminated any possibility that the jury convicted the defendant of the crime in a manner not charged in the indictment. Cook v. State, 210 Ga. App. 323, 436 S.E.2d 61 (1993).

Requested charge of reckless conduct as a lesser included offense was properly denied where the evidence was that defendant was guilty of two offenses of aggravated assault, as averred, or was not guilty of any crime under this particular indictment for aggravated assault. Morris v. State, 228 Ga. App. 90, 491 S.E.2d 190 (1997).

Charge on aggravated assault given in conjunction with a charge on felony murder and in substantial conformity with pattern jury instructions was not reversible error. Robinson v. State, 268 Ga. 175, 486 S.E.2d 156 (1997).

Jury instruction on aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, which tracked the language of the statute in the statute's entirety, was not error, although it was a better practice to conform the jury charge to the evidence; however, there was no possibility that the jury was misled by reading the entire statute. Morris v. State, 280 Ga. 179, 626 S.E.2d 123 (2006).

Defendant's aggravated assault and cruelty to children convictions were upheld on appeal as: (1) the prosecutor's closing argument comments did not inject a personal opinion as to the veracity of the witnesses and the appeal to the jury was to make the community safer; (2) the trial court charged the jury fully on defendant's justification and self-defense claims, and thus, did not err in declining to instruct the jury on mistake of fact; and (3) the appeals court failed to see how jury charges on guilt by association, bare suspicion, or mere presence were appropriate. Navarro v. State, 279 Ga. App. 311, 630 S.E.2d 893 (2006).

Two charged methods of committing simple assault, as an element of aggravated assault, did not provide an improper basis for the jury to convict the defendant of aggravated assault, and the trial court did not charge a separate, unalleged method of committing aggravated assault, but simply defined both methods of committing simple assault, a lesser included offense; hence, because the jury's charge did not authorize a conviction in a manner other than that alleged in the indictment, the charge was not erroneous. Opio v. State, 283 Ga. App. 894, 642 S.E.2d 906 (2007).

Trial court properly instructed the jury on aggravated assault when the court charged that an assault was an attempt to commit a violent injury to the person of another or an act which placed another person in a reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury and that a person committed aggravated assault when the person assaulted another person with a deadly weapon or with any object, device, or instrument which, when used offensively against a person, was likely to or actually did result in serious bodily injury. Cail v. State, 287 Ga. App. 547, 652 S.E.2d 190 (2007).

Trial court did not err by giving a charge on aggravated assault that permitted the jury to convict if the jury found that the defendant placed the intruder in reasonable fear of receiving a violent injury, even though the indictment specified that the defendant, while in the commission of an aggravated assault, caused the victim's death by shooting at the victim. Warren v. State, 283 Ga. 42, 656 S.E.2d 803 (2008).

Trial court erred by failing to provide the statutory definition of assault, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20, in a jury charge, which resulted in the final charge being fatally insufficient since the charge did not instruct on substantive points and issues involved in the case and allowed the jury to find defendant guilty of aggravated assault based merely on criminal negligence. As a result, defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was reversed and a retrial was ordered since there was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction. Coney v. State, 290 Ga. App. 364, 659 S.E.2d 768 (2008).

Since the defendant was charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the trial court did not mislead the jury by charging all of the aggravated assault statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, as the court read the indictment to the jury; charged the jury that the state had the burden to prove every allegation in the indictment, and that the jury could convict only if the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the offense alleged in the indictment; and the court sent the indictment out with the jury during the jury's deliberations. Turner v. State, 293 Ga. App. 869, 668 S.E.2d 268 (2008).

Trial court's jury charges on both simple assault and aggravated assault were proper in the defendant's criminal trial on charges of, inter alia, aggravated assault as the instructions that defined aggravated assault by using the simple assault definition and including the manner in which the assault had to be committed in order to be an aggravated assault did not improperly expand the indictment. Deleon v. State, 285 Ga. 306, 676 S.E.2d 184 (2009).

Trial court did not err in the court's jury instructions on aggravated assault because the instruction, which stated that the jury had to find that the assault was made with an object when used offensively against a person was likely to result in serious bodily injury, substantially covered the principle that the jury had to consider the manner and means of the object's use. Griggs v. State, 303 Ga. App. 442, 693 S.E.2d 615 (2010).

Instructions on felony murder and aggravated assault moot in light of malice murder conviction. — Any issue concerning the trial court's issuance of instructions to the jury on the offenses of felony murder and aggravated assault became moot when a defendant was convicted and sentenced on a charge of malice murder. Parker v. State, 282 Ga. 897, 655 S.E.2d 582 (2008).

Sequential charges on aggravated assault and reckless battery were proper since the jury's finding that defendant committed aggravated assault required a finding of an intentional infliction of injury, which precluded the element of criminal negligence in reckless conduct. Sheats v. State, 210 Ga. App. 622, 436 S.E.2d 796 (1993).

Issuance of sequential jury charge in trial for malice murder, felony murder, and aggravated assault. — In a prosecution for malice murder, felony murder, and aggravated assault, although no error resulted from the trial court's issuance of a sequential jury charge, because the jury found in the defendant's favor on the defense of justification as to the malice murder count, the finding also applied to the felony murder charge. Thus, the trial court erred in finding the defendant guilty of both felony murder and the underlying felony of aggravated assault. Turner v. State, 283 Ga. 17, 655 S.E.2d 589 (2008).

Instruction on voluntary manslaughter not warranted. — When evidence established either that the defendant intentionally shot and killed the victim or that a pistol discharged accidentally and no offenses occurred, this showed either the commission of felony murder and aggravated assault or commission of no offense, and the trial court did not err in refusing to give the lesser included offense charge on involuntary manslaughter based on reckless conduct. Lashley v. State, 283 Ga. 465, 660 S.E.2d 370 (2008).

Three separate assaults did not merge. — Defendant-B's punches to the victim's face upon defendant-A's demand for the victim's property amounted to an assault with attempt to rob, which justified one of defendant-B's convictions for aggravated assault, the formulation of a plan to rob someone at a convenience store with defendant-A and defendant-A's aggravated assault in pointing a gun at the victim constituted a second aggravated assault, and an armed robbery of the victim's property constituted the armed robbery; as each of the three crimes was proven by three different sets of facts, there was no error in the trial court's failure to have merged defendant-B's aggravated assault convictions in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, into the armed robbery conviction in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41. Johnson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 182, 630 S.E.2d 778 (2006).

Refusal to give a requested charge on the misdemeanor offense of reckless conduct, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60, as a lesser included offense of aggravated assault was not error where defendant admitted firing a gun with the intent to scare the victim, although defendant testified that defendant did not intend to hit the victim, since using a deadly weapon to commit an act which places another in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury amounts to an aggravated assault, absent justification. The act testified to by defendant was either justified as an act of self-defense or constituted a felony. Riley v. State, 181 Ga. App. 667, 353 S.E.2d 598 (1987).

Because the defendant failed to make a written request for a lesser included offense instruction on reckless conduct in the trial for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), there could be no error found on appeal for the trial court's failure to give such an instruction. Barber v. State, 273 Ga. App. 129, 614 S.E.2d 105 (2005).

Because witnesses established that, during a dispute with the victim over drugs, defendant pointed a gun at the victim, struck the victim in the head, and shot the victim, there was no evidence that defendant was simply negligent in pointing or firing the gun and thus no evidence of reckless conduct; it was not error for the trial court to refuse to charge the jury on reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of aggravated assault. Anthony v. State, 276 Ga. App. 107, 622 S.E.2d 450 (2005).

Trial court did not err in refusing a request to instruct the jury on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60, in a criminal trial on a charge of aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), as the essential elements of the assault charge were all shown by the evidence; the defendant's firing of a gun into a crowded parking lot, and in the direction of the victim, was not criminal negligence that would have supported a reckless conduct charge, but rather, was deemed intentional. Thompson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 323, 626 S.E.2d 825 (2006).

Variance from indictment. — Jury instruction on aggravated assault did not vary from the indictment since the indictment charged that the defendant shot the victim with intent to rob the victim and the instruction stated that a person commits aggravated assault when the person assaults another person with the intent "to rob with a deadly weapon"; as the shooting of the victim was a material element as set forth in the indictment, the trial court properly charged an aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Isaac v. State, 269 Ga. 875, 505 S.E.2d 480 (1998).

Trial court did not authorize a conviction in a manner not alleged in the indictment as the indictment alleged that a defendant assaulted an assault victim by striking the assault victim with a gun, and that the defendant assaulted a murder victim by shooting the murder victim with a gun; the jury instruction on the assault of the assault victim was proper as it did not charge a separate, unalleged method of committing aggravated assault, but simply defined both methods of committing simple assault, a lesser included offense. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. 229, 637 S.E.2d 393 (2006).

Charge in exact language of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 shows no error. Zilinmon v. State, 234 Ga. 535, 216 S.E.2d 830 (1975), overruled by Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

In the absence of a request for a further charge, a charge in the language of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 is correct. Griffin v. State, 168 Ga. App. 696, 310 S.E.2d 278 (1983).

Charging O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) and (a)(2) in their entirety does not succumb to the argument that there was a problem because of an incomplete definition of "deadly weapon" in jury instructions. Spaulding v. State, 185 Ga. App. 812, 366 S.E.2d 174, cert. denied, 185 Ga. App. 911, 366 S.E.2d 174 (1988).

It is not usually reversible error that an entire Code section or subsection is charged even though a part of the charge may be inapplicable under the facts in evidence. Diaz v. State, 194 Ga. App. 577, 391 S.E.2d 140 (1990).

Trial court erred in the court's charge of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 in its entirety given the indictment's specific language; however, this error did not warrant reversal of defendant's conviction. Hunley v. State, 227 Ga. App. 234, 488 S.E.2d 716 (1997).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) need not be charged where such possibilities not raised by evidence. — Where no evidence introduced at trial indicated that defendant assaulted victim with intent to murder, rape, or rob, trial court's definition of aggravated assault omitting any reference to specific intent possibilities of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 was permissible. Harper v. State, 157 Ga. App. 480, 278 S.E.2d 28 (1981).

Charge to jury on both paragraphs of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a) was warranted by an indictment charging that defendant made an assault upon the victim with a deadly weapon, by pointing the weapon at the victim, threatening to kill the victim, and firing at the victim's car, thereby placing the victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury. Cannon v. State, 223 Ga. App. 248, 477 S.E.2d 381 (1996).

Charging jury as to deadly weapon. — When in a prosecution for aggravated assault, the jury was charged that a deadly weapon is any weapon which when used in the manner in which the jury finds it to have been used is capable of causing death or great bodily injury, and told that it was the jury's duty to determine whether the "night stick" was a deadly weapon or not, the court did not err in not instructing that a night stick was not a deadly weapon per se. Howard v. State, 151 Ga. App. 759, 261 S.E.2d 483 (1979).

When the court instructed that "the mere fact" that the defendant did not initiate the confrontation "does not necessarily show" that defendant was not guilty of assault "with a knife, a deadly weapon," but this language was immediately preceded by the correct and clear instruction that "whether or not a weapon is a deadly weapon is an issue to be determined by you ... based on the character of the weapon and the nature of the wounds inflicted ..." in the context of the instruction as a whole, and of the undisputed facts in evidence, the language could not have been understood by reasonable jurors as a usurpation of their prerogative to determine whether the knife with which appellant stabbed the victim was or was not a deadly weapon. Doss v. State, 166 Ga. App. 361, 304 S.E.2d 484 (1983).

Court did not err in charging jury that it must first determine if the knife used by the defendant was a deadly weapon "likely to cause great bodily injury" instead of "likely to produce death or great bodily injury". Johnson v. State, 185 Ga. App. 167, 363 S.E.2d 773 (1987).

Trial courts inclusion of the phrase "weapon or any object, device or instrument," in its charges rather than limiting the charge to the knife specifically referred to in the indictment did not mislead the jury because the court charged the jury properly with respect to the manner in which aggravated assault was allegedly committed by the defendant, i.e., with a deadly weapon. Oseni v. Hambrick, 207 Ga. App. 166, 427 S.E.2d 559 (1993).

In aggravated assault prosecution, because the trial court did not err in instructing the jury on the issue of whether a weapon could be considered deadly when used in an intentional and threatening manner, defendant's conviction on this charge was upheld on appeal; hence, the trial court did not err in instructions by taking the deadliness issue from the jury. Chappell v. State, 290 Ga. App. 691, 659 S.E.2d 919 (2008).

"Levels of certainty." — In a prosecution on four counts of aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, given that the state did not rely upon eyewitness identification alone, but presented other evidence linking the defendant to the crimes charged, the trial court did not err in giving the "level of certainty" portion of an identity charge to the jury, which the defendant requested, Creamer v. State, 282 Ga. App. 411, 638 S.E.2d 832 (2006).

Charging presumption of intent to kill. — It was not error to charge that the law presumes the intent to kill when a person uses a deadly weapon or instrumentality in the manner in which such weapon or instrumentality is ordinarily employed to produce death. Hardy v. State, 242 Ga. 702, 251 S.E.2d 289 (1978).

Use of "the law presumes" in deadly weapon charge. — Use of the phrase "the law presumes" in the deadly weapon charge is improper; the proper charge authorizes the jury to "infer the intent to kill" from the intentional and unjustified use of a deadly weapon. The words "the law presumes" cannot, however, be considered in a vacuum, but must be viewed in the context of the overall charge. Wilson v. Jones, 251 Ga. 23, 302 S.E.2d 546 (1983).

Use of "or actually did" in jury charge. — Defendant asserts that the trial court erred by charging the jury that the jury could find defendant guilty of aggravated assault if the flashlight was "likely to or actually [did] result in serious bodily injury." Defendant objected to the inclusion of "or actually did" because this phrase was not included in the indictment. However, a charge on a code section in the statute's entirety is not error if a part thereof is applicable and it does not appear that the inapplicable part misled the jury or erroneously affected the verdict; thus, since the charge was taken from O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and, immediately after giving the charge, the court correctly instructed the jury to determine whether the flashlight was "likely to cause serious bodily injury," using evidence of actual injury as part of this inquiry. Gibson v. State, 283 Ga. 377, 659 S.E.2d 372 (2008).

Use of "actually does" in instruction. — Trial court properly charged the jury on only that part of the aggravated assault statute relating to the allegations of the indictment, and the court's use of the language "actually does" was extraneous. Further, the trial court was also within the court's province to instruct the jury as to the state's burden of proof. Jackson v. State, 288 Ga. App. 432, 654 S.E.2d 232 (2007).

Cautionary instruction on potential danger of weapon as exhibit held proper. — An instruction given by the trial court cautioning the jury as to the potential danger presented by the weapon allegedly used in the assault that is an exhibit which still contains a round of ammunition is wholly proper and is not error even though the weapon appears to be inoperable. Drayton v. State, 167 Ga. App. 477, 306 S.E.2d 731 (1983).

Court should not authorize jury to convict for lesser crime of simple assault in every case of aggravated assault. Smith v. State, 140 Ga. App. 395, 231 S.E.2d 143 (1976).

When there is uncontradicted evidence that the victim died, it is not necessary to charge on the lesser included crimes of aggravated assault and aggravated battery. Sanders v. State, 251 Ga. 70, 303 S.E.2d 13 (1983).

Failure to give jury charge on accident as harmful error. — When the defendant's testimony is sufficient to raise a jury question as to whether a physical encounter is an accident or an aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, it is harmful error for the court to fail to give any charge to the jury on accident. Dotson v. State, 144 Ga. App. 113, 240 S.E.2d 238 (1977).

Charge on simple battery, lesser included offense of aggravated assault. — Since the jury was authorized to decide defendant's fists and hands were not used as deadly weapons as required for aggravated assault, there was no error in charging on simple battery, which was a lesser included offense of aggravated assault. Guevara v. State, 151 Ga. App. 444, 260 S.E.2d 491 (1979).

Because the defendant's conduct put the officer-victim in reasonable apprehension of immediately sustaining a violent injury, which satisfied the elements required to prove simple assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2), the trial court properly charged the jury on simple assault as a lesser-included offense of aggravated assault upon a police officer. Bostic v. State, 289 Ga. App. 195, 656 S.E.2d 546 (2008).

Trial court did not err in failing to give an instruction on the lesser-included offense of simple battery because the defendant failed to request such an instruction. Griggs v. State, 303 Ga. App. 442, 693 S.E.2d 615 (2010).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that the defendant's trial counsel erred by failing to request a jury charge on simple battery as a lesser included offense of the charged crime of aggravated assault because there was no evidence that the defendant made physical contact with the victim or caused physical harm to the victim; since the state's evidence establishes all of the elements of an offense, and there is no evidence raising the lesser offense, there is no error in failing to give a charge on the lesser offense. Davis v. State, 308 Ga. App. 7, 706 S.E.2d 710 (2011).

Even though defendant was not charged as anything other than a direct perpetrator in a prosecution for aggravated assault, an instruction that defendant could be convicted under a theory of indirect concern was proper since defendant had notice of the testimony of a defense witness authorizing the jury to find that defendant was an aider and abettor. Upshaw v. State, 221 Ga. App. 655, 472 S.E.2d 484 (1996).

Charge on simple battery not required. — Court's refusal to give the requested instruction on simple battery was proper because the evidence did not authorize an instruction on this lesser offense since there was no conflict in the evidence concerning defendant's act and its result and the state proved aggravated assault with a deadly weapon beyond a reasonable doubt. Doss v. State, 166 Ga. App. 361, 304 S.E.2d 484 (1983).

With regard to defendant's conviction for aggravated battery of a taxi driver, defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on the lesser included offense of battery based on defendant's argument that the jury could have found under the facts of the case that the gun was not used as a deadly weapon as the evidence showed without conflict that defendant's physical assault upon the taxi driver with the handgun caused the taxi driver to bleed from the head and the entire right side of the face, and the taxi driver testified that, during the attack, the taxi driver was very afraid of being killed. Thus, the pistol in the case, if used in the manner testified to by the taxi driver, was per se a deadly weapon, and the offense was either aggravated assault or no offense at all. Ortiz v. State, 292 Ga. App. 378, 665 S.E.2d 333 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1851, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 928 (Ga. 2008).

Charge on maliciously in aggravated battery trial. — Trial court did not err in charging the jury on the meaning of “maliciously” in the context of the elements of aggravated battery because the court charged the jury quite extensively on the element of intent as that element related to the crimes charged, and the court properly advised the jury of the state’s requisite burden of proof; therefore, the additional charge on the definition of maliciously did not, in the context of the charge as a whole, prejudice the defendant. Mubarak v. State, 305 Ga. App. 419, 699 S.E.2d 788 (2010).

Lesser included offense of pointing gun at another. — Trial court properly refused a requested charge on the lesser included offense of pointing a gun at another, given the victim’s testimony and defendant’s own statement that defendant drew the firearm in response to the violence of a confrontation between defendant and the victim. Watson v. State, 199 Ga. App. 825, 406 S.E.2d 509 (1991).

With regard to a defendant’s conviction for the felony murder of the defendant’s wife, with aggravated assault as the underlying felony, the trial court erred by refusing the defendant’s requested charge on involuntary manslaughter with pointing a pistol at another as the predicate misdemeanor, which entitled the defendant to a new trial based on the defendant testifying that the shooting occurred inadvertently when, in the course of horseplay with the pistol, the defendant pulled the trigger while pointing the pistol at the victim’s head, not knowing there was a round in the chamber. Manzano v. State, 282 Ga. 557, 651 S.E.2d 661 (2007).

No merger with armed robbery. — Because: (1) evidence presented against the second of two defendants, jointly charged, that the victim was beaten over the head with a pistol showed a completed aggravated assault prior to the armed robbery; and (2) possession of a firearm during the commission of an aggravated assault did not merge with armed robbery, as there was an expressed legislative intent to impose double punishment for conduct which violated both O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106 and other felony statutes, the offenses did not merge. Bunkley v. State, 278 Ga. App. 450, 629 S.E.2d 112 (2006).

Merger of assault with deadly weapon and assault with intent to rob. — Under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a), a trial court erred in convicting and sentencing the defendant for both aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and aggravated assault with the intent to rob, as those two offenses merged since the same facts were used to prove both offenses. Adcock v. State, 279 Ga. App. 473, 631 S.E.2d 494 (2006).

Declining defendant’s requested instruction held not error. — Trial court did not err in refusing defendant’s requested instruction that, in order to convict, the state must show affirmatively an intention to aid and abet or an active involvement in the two crimes charged since the charge given covered fully (even to overflowing) each and every applicable principle of law concerning the crimes of armed robbery and aggravated assault and the law of principals as well as intent and participation only under coercion. August v. State, 180 Ga. App. 510, 349 S.E.2d 532 (1986).

In a prosecution for felony involuntary manslaughter, the trial court did not err in refusing the defendant’s requested jury charge on unlawful-act involuntary manslaughter, because the jury considered the defendant’s theories of self-defense and accident and rejected them, and evidence in opposition to these defenses showed that the defendant struck the victim with the barrel of the gun, which went off, killing the victim, and the evidence presumed that the defendant committed an aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2). Gore v. State, 272 Ga. App. 156, 611 S.E.2d 764 (2005).

There was sufficient evidence to convict a defendant of felony murder under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1 based upon the actions of participating in the attack by hitting the victim with the bat even though the defendant did not actually shoot the victim; thus, instructions tracking O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) aggravated assault could properly be based on another perpetrator's use of a gun but the victim's acts of self-defense were not provocation that justified an O.C.G.A. § 16-5-3(a) involuntary manslaughter instruction. Ros v. State, 279 Ga. 604, 619 S.E.2d 644 (2005).

In a trial for voluntary manslaughter, aggravated assault, and battery, it was not error to refuse to charge on the lesser included offense of involuntary manslaughter under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-3(a). Such a charge required an unlawful act that was not a felony, and the only such act supported by the evidence was the striking of the victim with a gun, which constituted the felony of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. Moon v. State, 291 Ga. App. 499, 662 S.E.2d 283 (2008).

Charge on intent not "closely connected" to charge on aggravated assault. — Court of appeals would not consider the argument when the defendant contended the trial court failed to properly charge the jury on the intent necessary to commit aggravated assault, not arguing that the court's charge on intent was incorrect, but contending that the charge on intent was not "closely connected" with the charge on aggravated assault and thus, the jury could not properly understand the charge on intent, since the court charged the jury fully and correctly on intent, and there was nothing in the transcript to support the defendant's contention that the jury could not, or did not, understand the charge on intent as applied to aggravated assault. Cade v. State, 180 Ga. App. 314, 348 S.E.2d 769 (1986).

Charge on intent was sufficient where a reasonable juror would only have understood it to mean that if the victim was reasonably apprehensive of receiving bodily injury, the crime of aggravated assault has been committed regardless of whether defendant intended to injure the victim or whether the gun was loaded or could be fired. Head v. State, 233 Ga. App. 655, 504 S.E.2d 499 (1998).

Trial court did not sua sponte err in failing to charge jury on identity as: (1) there was Georgia law requiring a trial judge to warn the jury against the possible dangers of mistaken identification of an accused as the person committing a crime; and (2) such was not required after the jury had already been charged as to the presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, burden of proof, credibility of witnesses, and impeachment of witnesses. Lee v. State, 281 Ga. 776, 642 S.E.2d 835 (2007).

Self-defense instruction based on statutory language upheld. — When the defendant contended the trial court erred by failing to give the defendant's requested charge on self-defense, since the court charged the jury on self-defense in the language of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-3-23, which is the law in Georgia, and those code provisions cover the same principles requested by the defendant, it was not error to deny the defendant's request to charge. Cade v. State, 180 Ga. App. 314, 348 S.E.2d 769 (1986).

Accident and self-defense. — Defenses of accident and self-defense are inconsistent, and a defendant generally is not entitled to a charge on both. Regardless of the reason why defendant drew a weapon, when the discharge of the weapon inside the victim's truck was the result of either an intentional or an unintentional act by defendant, there was no error in the trial court's refusal to give requested charges on both accident and self defense. Watson v. State, 199 Ga. App. 825, 406 S.E.2d 509 (1991).

Failure to give jury charge on accident was error. — Defendant's convictions for voluntary manslaughter, aggravated assault, and possession of a knife during the commission of a felony were reversed because the trial court erred in failing to charge the jury on the defense of accident as requested when that defense was raised by the evidence, and the Court of Appeals could not find that it was highly probable that the failure to give the requested charge did not contribute to the verdict; at least slight evidence supported the theory that the defendant armed oneself with a knife in order to fend off the victim's attack with a pipe wrench and that although the defendant was prepared to intentionally stab the victim in self-defense, the defendant did not do so, but the victim lunged at the defendant and impaled oneself on the knife. Hill v. State, 300 Ga. App. 210, 684 S.E.2d 356 (2009).

Jury charge on defense of habitation. — In a prosecution for aggravated assault, while the trial court charged the jury regarding the details of the defense of justification, because the evidence did not authorize the charge of defense of habitation, the instruction was properly denied; moreover, no evidence was presented to suggest that the victim used coercion or threats to gain entry into the defendant's residence. Brimidge v. State, 287 Ga. App. 23, 651 S.E.2d 344 (2007).

Flight charge was not expression of court's opinion. — When in a trial for aggravated assault defendant complained that part of the court's charge on intent was an improper comment on the evidence because the court charged in terms of inferences allowed to be made by the jury, if it so chose, from the evidence of flight, it was held that the flight charge, either standing alone or taken in the context of the whole charge, could not have been taken by the jury as an expression or intimation of the court's opinion. Alexander v. State, 180 Ga. App. 640, 350 S.E.2d 284 (1986).

Charge excluding "when used offensively" from definition. — Trial court did not err in failing to use the phrase "when used offensively" in the court's definition of the crime when defendant was indicted specifically for using a hand gun and was not charged with the alternative method of committing the crime. Green v. State, 209 Ga. App. 274, 433 S.E.2d 383 (1993); Diaz v. State, 255 Ga. App. 288, 564 S.E.2d 872 (2002).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) defined aggravated assault as an assault with a deadly weapon or with any object which, when used offensively, was likely to result in serious bodily injury. The phrase "when used offensively" described an alternative method of committing aggravated assault, i.e., by use of an object other than one considered a deadly weapon; therefore, a trial judge did not err in omitting to charge this alternative language in a case in which the defendant was charged with using a deadly weapon. Finley v. State, 286 Ga. 47, 685 S.E.2d 258 (2009).

Recharge as to applicable definition. — When the trial court's original charge to the jury with respect to the statutory definition of aggravated assault included the language of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), but at the state's suggestion, the trial court recalled the jury for the purpose of giving clarifying instructions to the effect that only O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) applied, and the record clearly showed that the trial court's recharge informed the jury to disregard only the previously given inapplicable definition of aggravated assault contained in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), there was no error. Rashada v. State, 180 Ga. App. 773, 350 S.E.2d 323 (1986); Cail v. State, 194 Ga. App. 584, 391 S.E.2d 444 (1990).

Recharge not error. — Because the jury in the defendant's criminal matter requested clarification for purposes of their deliberations, whereupon the trial court recharged them on the offense of aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, such was not error under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-24(c) or under the holding in Dukes, as the initial charge and the recharge were not based on the entire aggravated assault statute but instead, were only based on that part of the O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 that related to the allegations in the indictment. Johnson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 669, 632 S.E.2d 688 (2006).

Charge which created an unconstitutional burden-shifting presumption as to intent was harmless error, since the defendant's defense was alibi and misidentification, and in the alternative, insanity, and such defenses did not put into issue criminal intent. Williams v. State, 180 Ga. App. 893, 350 S.E.2d 768 (1986).

Charge as to justification not misleading or confusing. — In a trial for aggravated assault, jury charge as to justification was not misleading or confusing; charge made it clear that state bore burden of proving both elements of aggravated assault under the indictment and that defendant's use of force was not justified beyond a reasonable doubt. White v. State, 291 Ga. App. 249, 661 S.E.2d 865 (2008).

In an aggravated assault case in which the defense was justification under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a), trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a charge defining aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) as a forcible felony for which the use of force was justified. Also, there was no showing that the outcome of the trial would have been different if such a charge had been given. Lewis v. State, 302 Ga. App. 506, 691 S.E.2d 336 (2010).

gravated assault with a deadly weapon and resisting arrest, because the trial court's curative instructions to the jury obviated the need for a mistrial with respect to statements from a potential juror and cured any prejudice which might have resulted from the prosecutor's closing argument, convictions of those crimes were upheld on appeal. Mitchell v. State, 284 Ga. App. 209, 644 S.E.2d 147 (2007).

Harmless error. — When the defendant was tried for aggravated assault with intent to murder after biting a police officer, the trial court's error in charging the jury that, in order to convict of the offense, the jury must find the use of a deadly weapon and intent to murder, caused the defendant no harm; it simply placed an extra burden of proof upon the state and therefore enured to the defendant's benefit. Scroggins v. State, 198 Ga. App. 29, 401 S.E.2d 13 (1990), cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 401 S.E.2d 13 (1991).

16-5-22. Conviction of assault with intent to commit a crime if intended crime actually committed.

A person may be convicted of the offense of assault with intent to commit a crime if the crime intended was actually committed as a result of the assault but may not be convicted of both the assault and completed crime. (Code 1933, § 26-1303, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Legislative intent. — It is the intent of the legislature that, although an assault may be a criminal attempt, and even though the criminal act intended be completed, a conviction for an assault is authorized. Williams v. State, 141 Ga. App. 201, 233 S.E.2d 48 (1977).

"Assault" during brief investigatory stop. — When defendant attempted to push past federal officers during a brief investigatory stop, making contact with one of the officers, the officers had probable cause to arrest the defendant for battery and obstruction of an officer, and defendant could be fully searched in connection with such an arrest. Alex v. State, 220 Ga. App. 754, 470 S.E.2d 305 (1996).

Conviction for assault lawful though battery was committed. — Recognizing the fact that an assault is nothing more than an attempted battery, and that every battery necessarily includes an assault, it is lawful to convict for simple assault even though the proof shows that a battery was committed. Webb v. State, 156 Ga. App. 623, 275 S.E.2d 707 (1980); C.L.T. v. State, 157 Ga. App. 180, 276 S.E.2d 862 (1981).

Conviction of aggravated assault was legal conviction upon indictment for rape under the provisions of former Code 1933, §§ 26-1302 and 26-1303. Jones v. Smith, 228 Ga. 648, 187 S.E.2d 298 (1972) (see O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-5-22).

Lesser included offenses to murder. — Aggravated assault with intent to commit murder and with a deadly weapon may be charged as lesser included offenses of murder. Hall v. State, 163 Ga. App. 515, 295 S.E.2d 194 (1982).

Failure to charge on lesser included crime where evidence shows completed crime. — While former Code 1933, § 26-1303 authorized the conviction of a lesser crime on evidence of the completed crime, where the evidence showed the completed crime, it was not error to fail to charge on a lesser included crime. Payne v. State, 231 Ga. 755, 204 S.E.2d 128 (1974) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-22).

Where the testimony of the victim, considered with the testimony of the medical doctor who examined the victim immediately after the attack on the victim as to the nature of the injuries received, established that the offense committed was rape, and not attempted rape, the trial judge did not err in failing to instruct on the lesser included offense of attempted rape. Payne v. State, 231 Ga. 755, 204 S.E.2d 128 (1974).

Evidence sufficient for finding of assault with intent to commit rape. — If the jury can find that the victim consented to intercourse after being assaulted by the defendant, the evidence is sufficient to authorize a finding of assault with the intent to commit rape. Terry v. State, 166 Ga. App. 632, 305 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

ALR. — Attempt to commit assault as criminal offense, 93 ALR5th 683.

16-5-23. Simple battery.

(a) A person commits the offense of simple battery when he or she either:

- (1) Intentionally makes physical contact of an insulting or provoking nature with the person of another; or
- (2) Intentionally causes physical harm to another.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in subsections (c) through (i) of this Code section, a person convicted of the offense of simple battery shall be punished as for a misdemeanor.

(c) Any person who commits the offense of simple battery against a person who is 65 years of age or older or against a female who is pregnant at the time of the offense shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature.

(d) Any person who commits the offense of simple battery in a public transit vehicle or station shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. For purposes of this Code section, "public transit vehicle" has the same meaning as in subsection (c) of Code Section 16-5-20.

(e) Any person who commits the offense of simple battery against a police officer, law enforcement dog, correction officer, or detention officer engaged in carrying out official duties shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature.

(f) If the offense of simple battery is committed between past or present spouses, persons who are parents of the same child, parents and children, stepparents and stepchildren, foster parents and foster children, or other persons excluding siblings living or formerly living in the same household, the defendant shall be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. In no event shall this subsection be applicable to corporal punishment administered by a parent or guardian to a child or administered by a person acting in loco parentis.

(g) A person who is an employee, agent, or volunteer at any facility licensed or required to be licensed under Code Section 31-7-3, relating to long-term care facilities, or Code Section 31-7-12.2, relating to assisted living communities, or Code Section 31-7-12, relating to personal care homes, or who is required to be licensed pursuant to Code Section 31-7-151 or 31-7-173, relating to home health care and hospices, who commits the offense of simple battery against a person who is admitted to or receiving services from such facility, person, or entity shall be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature.

(h) Any person who commits the offense of simple battery against a sports official while such sports official is officiating an amateur contest or while such sports official is on or exiting the property where he or she will officiate or has completed officiating an amateur contest shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. For the purposes of this Code section, the term "sports official" means any person who officiates, umpires, or referees an amateur contest at the collegiate, elementary or secondary school, or recreational level.

(i) Any person who commits the offense of simple battery against an employee of a public school system of this state while such employee is engaged in official duties or on school property shall, upon conviction of such offense, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. For purposes of this Code section, "school property" shall include public school buses and stops for public school buses as designated by local school boards of education. Ga. L. 2004, p. 621, § 9(b), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that the amendment by that Act shall apply to offenses committed on or after July 1, 2004.

GENERAL CONSIDERATION JURY INSTRUCTIONS

General Consideration

Assault and battery defined. — Any act of physical violence inflicted on the person of another, which is not necessary, is not privileged, and which constitutes a harmful or offensive contact constitutes an assault and battery. Brown v. State, 57 Ga. App. 864, 197 S.E. 82 (1938).

Domestic relationship did not need to be an element of predicate offense. — Defendant's conviction for violating the Georgia battery statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(1), qualified as a predicate offense for 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9) purposes even though the conviction did not require as an element the existence of a domestic relationship because a domestic relationship had to exist as part of the facts giving rise to the prior offense, but it did not need to be an element of that offense. United States v. Griffith, 455 F.3d 1339 (11th Cir. 2006).

Conviction for violating statute qualified as a predicate offense for 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9) purposes. — Defendant's conviction for violating the Georgia battery statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(1), qualified as a predicate offense for 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9) purposes and satisfied the definition of a “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence” under 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A) even though the crime did not have as an element the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon because a person could not make physical contact, particularly of an insulting or provoking nature, with another without exerting some level of physical force. Therefore, under the plain meaning rule, the “physical contact of an insulting or provoking nature” made illegal by the Georgia battery statute satisfied the “physical force” requirement of 18 U.S.C.

§ 921(a)(33)(A)(ii), which was defined in 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9). United States v. Griffith, 455 F.3d 1339 (11th Cir. 2006).

Simple battery a crime of violence under 18 U.S.C. § 16(a) for removal purposes under 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2).

— Because an alien's conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(2) required intentionally causing physical harm through physical contact, the conviction constituted a crime of violence under 18 U.S.C. § 16(a), making the alien properly removable under 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2), as reviewed under 8 U.S.C. § 1252. The alien was also sentenced to a 12-month term to constitute an aggravated felony under 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43). Hernandez v. United States AG, 513 F.3d 1336 (11th Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 44, 172 L.Ed.2d 22 (2008).

Simple battery a crime of violence for purposes of cancellation of removal. — Simple battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23 contained an element of use of physical force as required for a crime of violence under 18 U.S.C. § 16(a) and 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43). Thus, an alien with a prior conviction for that crime was ineligible for cancellation of removal under 8 U.S.C. § 1229b or for discretionary relief under 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h). Irabor v. United States AG, No. 06-13535, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 5797 (11th Cir. Mar. 13, 2007) (Unpublished).

Attitude of victim not an element of offense. — It is the act, intent, and results of the defendant's act which constitute the crimes as charged; the attitude of the victim is not called into issue by these elements. Ramey v. State, 203 Ga. App. 650, 417 S.E.2d 699 (1992).

Evidence of victim's alcoholism. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated battery and simple battery were affirmed as the trial court properly refused to admit evidence of the victim's alcoholism prior to the victim's involvement with defendant since the defendant failed to show any nexus between the victim's alcoholism and the conclusion that the victim had falsely accused defendant of battery. Harris v. State, 263 Ga. App. 329, 587 S.E.2d 819 (2003).

Evidence of victim's alleged infidelity. — Evidence that a battery victim cheated on the defendant was properly excluded as the victim's alleged infidelity had no bearing on the victim's veracity, was intended only to impugn the victim's character, and had no relevance to any disputed issues in the case. Burrowes v. State, 296 Ga. App. 629, 675 S.E.2d 518 (2009).

Battery against a police officer. — Defendant's convictions for simple battery and the sale of marijuana were upheld on appeal as sufficient evidence was presented that the defendant spat in the face of another and the undercover officer who the defendant sold the marijuana to testified regarding the sale; further, the trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence as the evidence was probative of defendant's bent of mind to become belligerent with police officers when arrested. Williams v. State, 287 Ga. App. 40, 651 S.E.2d 347 (2007).

Evidence sufficient to support conviction for hijacking, battery, and kidnapping. — Defendants convictions of hijacking a motor vehicle, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b), battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23, and two counts of kidnapping with bodily injury, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b), were affirmed because sufficient evidence was presented at trial to support the charges as the victim testified that defendant forced a way into the victim's car at gunpoint while the victim and an infant child were in the vehicle and then sexually assaulted the victim after threatening to harm the child, defendant's wallet was found in the abandoned car, and defendant admitted to the hijacking. Adams v. State, 276 Ga. App. 319, 623 S.E.2d 525 (2005).

Contact proceeding from rudeness is as offensive and harmful as that from anger or lust, and in law constitutes an assault and battery. Brown v. State, 57 Ga. App. 864, 197 S.E. 82 (1938).

Physical contact is required for simple battery but not for aggravated assault, and hence the crime of simple battery is not necessarily included in the crime of aggravated assault. Tuggle v. State, 145 Ga. App. 603, 244 S.E.2d 131 (1978); Anderson v. State, 170 Ga. App. 634, 317 S.E.2d 877 (1984).

Physical contact is required to prove simple battery. Hancock v. State, 188 Ga. App. 870, 374 S.E.2d 757, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 911, 374 S.E.2d 757 (1988).

There is no requirement that victim receive great bodily harm in a case of simple battery. Mize v. State, 135 Ga. App. 561, 218 S.E.2d 450 (1975).

Simple battery consists of all forms of prohibited contact and is not limited to contact that causes substantial or visible harm like battery. Thus defendant was not prejudiced when the trial court gave a lesser-included offense instruction on simple battery. Lawson v. State, 274 Ga. 866, 561 S.E.2d 72 (2002).

Mere pain is sufficient to show physical harm for purposes of simple battery. Meja v. State, 232 Ga. App. 548, 502 S.E.2d 484 (1998).

Manner in which act committed irrelevant. — Defendant's contention that the "tweaking" of his estranged wife's breast was not done in an insulting or provoking manner so as to constitute the crime of simple battery was rejected and the victim's testimony that the defendant pinched her breast without consent was sufficient to authorize the trial court's finding that the defendant was guilty of simple battery. Wells v. State, 204 Ga. App. 90, 418 S.E.2d 450 (1992).

Act causing physical harm must be done intentionally or with criminal negligence. — Act which causes the physical harm can be active or passive, and done directly or indirectly through an agency, as long as the act is done intentionally, or with criminal negligence. J.A.T. v. State, 133 Ga. App. 922, 212 S.E.2d 879 (1975).

Committing battery through use of animal. — As a matter of law, the offense of simple battery can be committed through the use of a dog if it is shown that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in the causation. J.A.T. v. State, 133 Ga. App. 922, 212 S.E.2d 879 (1975).

Indictment need not allege defendant violated some other statute. — In an indictment for assaulting a named person by running that person down with an automobile, it is not essential for the indictment to allege that the defendant also violated some other statute, such as those prohibiting speeding or driving while under the influence of intoxicants. Bailey v. State, 101 Ga. App. 81, 113 S.E.2d 172 (1960).

Three counts of an indictment charging defendant with "family violence battery (felony)" in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(f), 16-5-23(f), and 16-5-23.1(f)(2), respectively, were sufficient as the indictment informed defendant of the charges and protected against double jeopardy; mere surplusage did not vitiate an otherwise sufficient indictment, and since the indictment did not reference the sentencing for the offense charged, the indictment did not inject the issue of punishment and was not subject to demurrer. State v. Barnett, 268 Ga. App. 900, 602 S.E.2d 899 (2004).

Accusation not vague and uncertain. — An accusation which charges a defendant with the offense of simple battery and states that defendant "beat" the victim on a certain day in the county is not too vague and uncertain even when it does not state an offense in the language of the Code or specify any Code section. Tomlinson v. State, 123 Ga. App. 738, 182 S.E.2d 320 (1971).

Municipal court lacks jurisdiction. — Since the municipal court lacked jurisdiction to try defendant pursuant to a Uniform Traffic Citation charging defendant with "simple battery" in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23, prosecution of the offense before such court was void; accordingly, trial of defendant for simple battery in the state court was not barred on the ground of double jeopardy or prior prosecution. Rangel v. State, 217 Ga. App. 152, 456 S.E.2d 739 (1995).

Allegation of exact means of battery or language of section not required in indictment. — An indictment for battery is not required to allege the exact manner and means of the battery, or to express the language of the charge in the exact language of the Code. J.A.T. v. State, 133 Ga. App. 922, 212 S.E.2d 879 (1975).

Indictment alleging offensive use of fists. — After a defendant was indicted for aggravated assault and convicted of simple battery, language of the indictment tracking the aggravated assault statute by alleging that the offensive use of fists and feet resulted in bodily injury was also a sufficient allegation of simple battery. Buchanan v. State, 173 Ga. App. 554, 327 S.E.2d 535 (1985).

When an assault is committed with a deadly weapon, simple battery is not a lesser included offense under aggravated assault. Powell v. State, 140 Ga. App. 36, 230 S.E.2d 90 (1976).

Simple battery and DUI. — Simple battery charge did not “arise from the same conduct” as a driving under the influence (DUI) charge, so as to come within the prohibition of the multiple prosecution bar, where the battery occurred 40 minutes after defendant’s arrest for DUI and at a different location, the officer who made the DUI arrest was not the same person allegedly struck by defendant and the DUI involved defendant’s operation of a motor vehicle, but the battery did not. State v. Littler, 201 Ga. App. 527, 411 S.E.2d 522 (1991).

Simple battery not lesser crime included in child molestation. — Simple battery, as defined in former Code 1933, chapter 26-13 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23), is not a lesser crime included in the crime of child molestation, as defined in former Code 1933, chapter 26-20 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4). State v. Stonaker, 236 Ga. 1, 222 S.E.2d 354, cert. denied, 429 U.S. 833, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 98 (1976).

Trial court’s refusal to charge on simple battery as a lesser included offense of child molestation was not error, where the victim testified to defendant’s commission of acts of fondling which, if believed by the jury, would clearly show that defendant had committed the crime of child molestation. Brooks v. State, 197 Ga. App. 194, 397 S.E.2d 622 (1990).

Involuntary manslaughter based on battery verdict not inconsistent with felony murder/cruelty to children verdict. — In a shaken baby death, an involuntary manslaughter verdict was not mutually exclusive of a guilty verdict for felony murder/cruelty to children because, consistent with the jury’s guilty verdict on the felony murder charge, an offense requiring criminal intent, the jury predicated the jury’s involuntary manslaughter verdict on a misdemeanor involving criminal intent, battery, or simple battery under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-23(a) and 16-5-23.1(a), although the jury was also instructed on reckless conduct, a misdemeanor committed by criminal negligence, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Drake v. State, 288 Ga. 131, 702 S.E.2d 161 (2010).

Corporal punishment. — Trial court erred in finding that a guardian proved by a preponderance of the evidence, as required under O.C.G.A. § 19-13-3(a), that a parent committed an act of family violence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 19-13-1, as there was insufficient evidence that the parent committed an act of violence, specifically simple battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23, as opposed to administering reasonable discipline in the form of corporal punishment, as O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23 specifically exempted corporal punishment from the definition of battery, and the appellate court determined after considering O.C.G.A. §§ 16-3-20 and 20-2-731 that the alleged action of the parent in slapping the child did not arise to the level of unreasonable discipline. Buchheit v. Stinson, 260 Ga. App. 450, 579 S.E.2d 853 (2003).

Sufficiency of testimony to sustain conviction of simple battery. — Testimony by a youth, who testified that a group of four other youths accosted the youth in a public park and that the two defendants on trial had used abusive language, and slapped and hit the youth, is sufficient to sustain a conviction of simple battery as to each of the defendants. Scott v. State, 123 Ga. App. 675, 182 S.E.2d 183 (1971).

Simple battery not offense included in robbery by force. — Since simple battery focuses on injury to the person while robbery by force involves the taking of property from the person of another by doing physical violence to the victim, simple battery is not as a matter of law an offense included in robbery by force. Givens v. State, 184 Ga. App. 498, 361 S.E.2d 830, cert. denied, 184 Ga. App. 909, 361 S.E.2d 830 (1987).

Simple battery and robbery convictions merged. — Because the single continuous act of simple battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(1), was the evidence required to show the "force" used to accomplish a robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-40(a)(1), the defendant's battery convictions merged with the robbery conviction; the "use of force" charged in connection with the robbery was "hitting," which was the same type of force used in the continuous battery. Bonner v. State, No. A10A1670, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 298 (Mar. 28, 2011).

Simple battery not a crime of moral turpitude. — Simple battery, a misdemeanor, has been recognized to be a crime not involving moral turpitude, and a plea of nolo contendere to a charge of simple battery is admissible for impeachment of the defendant in the subsequent trial of the civil suit stemming from the battery. Jabaley v. Mitchell, 201 Ga. App. 477, 411 S.E.2d 545 (1991).

Simple battery is not a lesser included offense of false imprisonment. — See Reynolds v. State, 231 Ga. App. 22, 497 S.E.2d 580 (1998).

Simple battery is not a lesser included offense of felony obstruction, because it is a separate and independent offense wherein the intent is to make physical contact or cause physical harm. Pearson v. State, 224 Ga. App. 467, 480 S.E.2d 911 (1997).

Defendant failed to show error in refusing to merge offenses because defendant failed to show that aggravated assault was established by the same facts used to prove simple battery; evidence that defendant entered a store wearing a mask, opened the cash drawer, tried to wrangle a key to the drawer from the employee's hand, demanded money, banged on the register, and appeared to have had a gun supported the aggravated assault conviction, but none of this evidence was needed to prove simple battery, which was established by evidence of defendant's bruising blows to the employee's arm. Lawson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 334, 620 S.E.2d 600 (2005).

Inclusion in offense of rape. — Offense of rape necessarily includes contact of insulting or provoking nature. Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981); Humphrey v. State, 207 Ga. App. 472, 428 S.E.2d 362 (1993).

Assault, or assault and battery, is necessarily involved in every case of rape. Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

Registration as sex offender not required. — Trial court erred in ordering defendant to register as a sexual offender based on a conviction for the non-sexual offense of simple battery for having placed defendant's hands on the breasts and between the legs of a fifteen-year-old girl. Sequeira v. State, 243 Ga. App. 718, 534 S.E.2d 166 (2000).

Every battery necessarily includes an assault, which is but an attempted battery. Anderson v. State, 170 Ga. App. 634, 317 S.E.2d 877 (1984).

Recently conceived fetus not a "child" under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(f). — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(f) did not cover the relationship the defendant shared with the victim, a person the defendant had sexual relations with but did not know was pregnant, because the victim's testimony suggested that the victim was only a few weeks into the pregnancy at the time of the incident, and that the victim had "lost" the child; such a recently conceived fetus was not a "child" under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(f). Gillespie v. State, 280 Ga. App. 243, 633 S.E.2d 632 (July 3, 2006).

Evidence sufficient to support delinquency adjudication. — There was sufficient evidence to support an adjudication of delinquency based on simple battery. The juvenile defendant's parent testified that the defendant slapped the parent's finger, hit the parent, and pushed the parent with sufficient force that the parent fell on the floor and dislodged the parent's prosthesis; the fact that the defendant had a different account of the altercation and that the parent did not remain passive during the altercation did not require a different result. In the Interest of B.B., 298 Ga. App. 432, 680 S.E.2d 497 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to find a juvenile committed the lesser included offense of simple battery because the juvenile's act of placing the juvenile's hands in the victim's pockets despite the victim's protests to remove the juvenile's hands was a prohibited act under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(1). In the Interest of D.M.,

Evidence sufficient to support conviction. — See Manus v. State, 180 Ga. App. 658, 350 S.E.2d 41 (1986); Jackson v. State, 182 Ga. App. 826, 357 S.E.2d 143 (1987); Conejo v. State, 189 Ga. App. 14, 374 S.E.2d 826 (1988); Bedley v. State, 189 Ga. App. 90, 374 S.E.2d 841 (1988); Mitchel v. State, 193 Ga. App. 146, 387 S.E.2d 390 (1989); Huffman v. State, 201 Ga. App. 642, 411 S.E.2d 787 (1991); Waddell v. State, 224 Ga. App. 172, 480 S.E.2d 224 (1996); Basu v. State, 228 Ga. App. 591, 492 S.E.2d 329 (1997); Miller v. State, 230 Ga. App. 73, 495 S.E.2d 329 (1998); Eberhart v. State, 241 Ga. App. 164, 526 S.E.2d 361 (1999); Shaw v. State, 247 Ga. App. 867, 545 S.E.2d 399 (2001); In re W.B., 255 Ga. App. 192, 564 S.E.2d 816 (2002); Miller v. State, 271 Ga. App. 524, 610 S.E.2d 156 (2005).

Evidence that defendant held the victim against the victim's will while defendant made physical advances against the victim and physically caused the victim harm was sufficient to convict defendant of false imprisonment and simple battery. Reynolds v. State, 231 Ga. App. 22, 497 S.E.2d 580 (1998).

Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to authorize a jury's verdict that defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of committing aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and that defendant committed simple battery by intentionally kicking the victim on the ankle, causing a bruise. Ringo v. State, 236 Ga. App. 38, 510 S.E.2d 893 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions of two counts of armed robbery, two counts of theft by taking, three counts of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), three counts of simple battery, three counts of kidnapping, and two counts of possessing a firearm during the commission of a crime since: (1) there was evidence that defendant entered a store, placed a knife to the neck of one of the three victims, forced that victim to the back of the store, aided another assailant who was armed with a gun to bind the victims and drag the victims to the back of the store, and stole money and other items from two of the victims; (2) defendant confessed to the crimes during interviews with law enforcement officials; and (3) defendant's confessions were corroborated by the testimony of one of the victims who, despite earlier being unable to identify the robbers, ultimately identified defendant as one of the robbers. The corroborating victim's initial inability to identify defendant posed an issue of credibility for the jury's resolution and did not require reversal. Phanamixay v. State, 260 Ga. App. 177, 581 S.E.2d 286 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to find defendant committed simple battery on the victim, defendant's ex-spouse, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a), as defendant struck and kicked the victim repeatedly over a 26-hour period, leaving the ex-spouse with severe injuries to the face, arms, and neck coupled with broken bones. Hammonds v. State, 263 Ga. App. 5, 587 S.E.2d 161 (2003).

Evidence supported a simple battery conviction because, in responding to a 9-1-1 call, a deputy saw the defendant holding the victim down on a bed and the victim screamed as the defendant held the victim down. Pitts v. State, 272 Ga. App. 182, 612 S.E.2d 1 (2005), aff'd, 280 Ga. 288, 627 S.E.2d 17 (2006).

Delinquency finding for acts constituting party to the crimes of aggravated assault and battery was supported by sufficient evidence showing that the appellant was one of a group of youths who punched, kicked, and struck one victim with a shotgun, and participated in the attack; the appellant also knocked another victim to the ground and hit that victim during the fracas. In the Interest of E.R., 279 Ga. App. 423, 631 S.E.2d 458 (2006).

Because the victim's testimony, standing alone, was sufficient to establish the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, when the evidence showed: (1) two separate aggravated assaults, one with a knife and one with a hammer; (2) two separate instances of simple battery; and (3) a hours-long detention of the victim by the defendant, said evidence amply supported the jury's conviction on the charges of false imprisonment, aggravated assault, and simple battery. Brigman v.

Because sufficient evidence was presented via the testimony of the victim regarding the defendant's attack with a screwdriver, which was corroborated by the defendant's own admissions at trial, the defendant's simple battery conviction was upheld on appeal; moreover, the defendant's characterization of the incident as one involving mutual argument did not in and of itself justify the actions. Rainey v. State, 286 Ga. App. 682, 649 S.E.2d 871 (2007).

Despite waiving error regarding a show up identification because: (1) a victim's identification of the defendant as one of the perpetrators of a burglary, robbery, and battery was sufficient and non-suggestive; and (2) the corroborating testimony from the defendant's two accomplices was admissible to support the defendant's convictions as both accomplices testified as to the defendant's involvement in the crimes, those convictions were upheld on appeal; thus, a new trial was properly denied. Carr v. State, 289 Ga. App. 875, 658 S.E.2d 419 (2008).

Evidence supported a simple battery conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23 when the defendant slammed a door on the victim, the defendant's lessor, knocking the victim down a short flight of stairs. As the defendant's oral tenancy had always been subject to the right of realtors to enter the residence, the victim, who sought to enter the home upon two hours' notice to show the property to a new realtor, was within the victim's rights to enter the premises; even if this were not the case, because the defendant might have simply denied the victim reentry by warning the victim not to proceed further and closing the door, the defendant's use of force exceeded that permissible under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-23 had there been no right of reentry. Young v. State, 291 Ga. App. 460, 662 S.E.2d 258 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for involuntary manslaughter of the defendant's romantic friend given the evidence of the defendant's admission that the defendant placed the friend in a headlock during a fight, and the medical examiner's findings that the friend was strangled to death. As a result, the jury was authorized to exclude all other reasonable hypotheses and conclude that the defendant unintentionally caused the friend's death while committing simple battery. Lemon v. State, 293 Ga. App. 488, 667 S.E.2d 654 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support a verdict of simple battery when the defendant grabbed the victim by the hair and dragged the victim by the hair. Eller v. State, 294 Ga. App. 77, 668 S.E.2d 755 (2008).

Evidence that showed that during an argument with the victim, the defendant dragged the victim off a couch by the victim's hair and threw a table at the victim, that the victim fled on foot and attempted to make a 9-1-1 call, that the defendant pursued the victim in the defendant's truck, reached the victim, and held a knife to the victim, retreating only after another vehicle drove up, was sufficient to convict the defendant of family violence simple battery. Stone v. State, 296 Ga. App. 305, 674 S.E.2d 31 (2009).

Testimony that the defendant hit the victim and pinned the victim to the floor was sufficient to convict the defendant of simple battery beyond a reasonable doubt. Burrowes v. State, 296 Ga. App. 629, 675 S.E.2d 518 (2009).

When two witnesses testified that the defendant fought with at least one rival gang member outside of a restaurant and another witness testified that the rival gang member had scratches and bruises on the rival's face as a result of the fight, the evidence was sufficient to allow the jury to find the defendant guilty of simple battery. Lopez v. State, 297 Ga. App. 618, 677 S.E.2d 776 (2009), overruled on other grounds, State v. Gardner, 286 Ga. 633, 690 S.E.2d 164 (2010).

Defendant's simple battery conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23 was supported by evidence that the defendant was in the room when the codefendant was striking the victim with a baseball bat. Wilkinson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 190, 679 S.E.2d 766 (2009).

Defendant's simple battery conviction was supported by evidence from the investigating officer that the victim told the officer that the defendant struck the victim in the face with a closed fist, although at trial, the victim testified that the victim had lied to police about being punched in the face because the victim was angry with the defendant. Miller v. State, 300 Ga. App. 652, 686 S.E.2d 302 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for simple battery because during an argument defendant grabbed the defendant's girlfriend by one arm, pulled her into the living room, threw her chest first against the back of a couch, handcuffed her hands behind her back, and did not release her from the handcuffs despite her requests to be released. Turner v. State, 307 Ga. App. 376, 705 S.E.2d 177 (2010).

Defendant's convictions for family violence battery and simple battery were supported by evidence from the victim that the defendant had slapped the victim and choked the victim, an officer's observation of red marks around the victim's neck, and evidence of the defendant's two prior guilty pleas to batteries against the defendant's spouse. Evidence of the victim's fear of retrieving the victim's children from the house and the defendant's threats to spread the victim's brains on the wall supported the simple assault conviction. Cuzzort v. State, 307 Ga. App. 52, 703 S.E.2d 713 (2010).

Evidence insufficient for conviction. — Evidence was not sufficient to support a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(f) as: (1) the state failed to prove the existence of a familial relationship between defendant and the victim; (2) the legislature failed to include sexual partners in the list of persons who constituted a family under the purview of § 16-5-23(f); and (3) defendant and the victim did not enjoy any other special familial relationship outlined under § 16-5-23. Gillespie v. State, 280 Ga. App. 243, 633 S.E.2d 632 (2006).

Defendant not deprived of Sixth Amendment right to counsel. — In a battery prosecution, setting aside the defendant's failure to object to a second attorney's representation at trial, a denial from the defendant's first attorney of an alleged promise to represent the defendant after that counsel's suspension had expired gave the trial court sufficient grounds for finding that no such promise occurred, eliminating the defendant's denial of the right to counsel claim; moreover, inasmuch as the defendant failed to challenge the trial court's finding that the second attorney's representation was effective, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial. Northington v. State, 287 Ga. App. 96, 650 S.E.2d 760 (2007).

Multiple charges resulting from single attack. — Evidence that defendant hit defendant's love interest on the head, pushed the love interest around, grabbed the love interest by the hair, jerked the love interest to the ground, and stuck a knife to the love interest's throat supported the trial court's judgment finding defendant guilty of two counts of battery, and the trial court did not err by imposing separate sentences for each conviction or by ordering defendant to serve those sentences consecutively. McFalls v. State, 260 Ga. App. 578, 580 S.E.2d 328 (2003).

When the victim attempted to intervene to break up a fight between the defendant and another but the defendant aggressively hit the victim causing the victim to bleed above the eye, the evidence was sufficient to show lack of justification and to sustain the defendant's conviction for simple battery. Cobble v. State, 259 Ga. App. 236, 576 S.E.2d 623 (2003).

Evidence that showed that the defendant attacked the defendant's spouse and the spouse's parent and broke the windshield and at least one other window on the spouse's car was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions on two counts of simple battery and one count of criminal trespass, and the defendant was not subjected to cruel and unusual punishment because the trial court imposed a sentence of 12 months' incarceration for simple battery and 12 months' incarceration for criminal trespass, and ordered that the defendant serve the sentences consecutively. Hill v. State, 259 Ga. App. 363, 577 S.E.2d 61 (2003).

Sentence. — Defendant's sentence to three consecutive twelve month terms for three simple battery convictions, with eight months to serve in confinement and the rest on probation, did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment. Dudley v. State, 242 Ga. App. 53, 527 S.E.2d 912 (2000).

Charge dismissed on basis of immunity. — Trial court properly held that the defendant, who was charged with family violence battery and simple battery under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-23.1(f) and 16-5-23, was immune from prosecution under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-24.2. The testimony of the defendant's friend that the defendant restrained the friend after the friend broke the defendant's windshield and kicked a car seat, knocking the defendant into the steering wheel, provided some evidence that the defendant's actions were justified under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a). State v. Yapo, 296 Ga. App. 158, 674 S.E.2d 44 (2009).

Simple battery conviction merged into family violence battery conviction. — Defendant's conviction for simple battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(2), should have been merged into the defendant's conviction for family violence battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1, because each battery was not a separate and complete criminal act but rather was part of a continuous criminal act, committed at the same time and place and inspired by the same criminal intent. Clement v. State, No. A11A0241, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 344 (Apr. 20, 2011).

Jury Instructions

Charging the language of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(1) and (a)(2) clearly identified "physical contact" as an element of the crime and the court was not obligated to give defendant's requested charge that "physical contact is required to prove a simple battery." Brinkworth v. State, 222 Ga. App. 288, 474 S.E.2d 9 (1996).

Instructions not required on simple battery where not reasonably raised by evidence. — When the offense of simple battery is not reasonably raised by the evidence, it is not in issue so as to require instructions. Guthrie v. State, 147 Ga. App. 351, 248 S.E.2d 714 (1978).

Charging as a lesser included offense of cruelty to children. — Trial court did not err in refusing to charge on simple battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23 as a lesser included offense of cruelty to children; there was no evidence to support the offense of simple battery because the defendant claimed that the child accidentally fell while the defendant was playing with the child. Moore v. State, 283 Ga. 151, 656 S.E.2d 796 (2008).

Charging lesser included offense of aggravated assault. — Since the jury was authorized to decide defendant's fists and hands were not used as deadly weapons as required for aggravated assault, there was no error in charging on simple battery, which was a lesser included offense of aggravated assault. Guevara v. State, 151 Ga. App. 444, 260 S.E.2d 491 (1979).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that the defendant's trial counsel erred by failing to request a jury charge on simple battery as a lesser included offense of the charged crime of aggravated assault because there was no evidence that the defendant made physical contact with the victim or caused physical harm to the victim; since the state's evidence establishes all of the elements of an offense, and there is no evidence raising the lesser offense, there is no error in failing to give a charge on the lesser offense. Davis v. State, 308 Ga. App. 7, 706 S.E.2d 710 (2011).

Charging in rape case. — In all cases where defendant is charged with rape, and where evidence under any view thereof would authorize conviction for lesser offense necessarily involved in graver charge, the jury should be instructed that defendant may be convicted of the lesser offense. Where all evidence shows either completed offense as charged, or no offense, such evidence will not support a verdict for one of the lesser grades of the offense, and court should not charge on such lesser grades. Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

Charging entire Code section. — It is not reversible error to charge entire Code section to the jury even though a portion thereof was not specifically pertinent to the accusation. Zager v. State, 172 Ga. App. 207, 322 S.E.2d 530 (1984); Jackson v. State, 205 Ga. App. 452, 422 S.E.2d 304 (1992).

Defendant was indicted for simple battery only by causing the victim physical harm, but the court instructed the jury that it was "charging the definition of simple battery as it is contained in the Official Code of Georgia Annotated 16-5-23"; the instruction was not improper, as although the court recited the entire statutory definition of simple battery, it charged the jury that it should find the defendant guilty if it believed that the defendant had committed simple battery "as alleged in the indictment," the court instructed the jury that the defendant had been indicted for simple battery by "unlawfully and intentionally causing physical harm to the victim, by hitting the victim in the arms, back and face," and the indictment went out with the jury to aid it in deliberations. Hammonds v. State, 263 Ga. App. 5, 587 S.E.2d 161 (2003).

Battery charge not proper given use of deadly weapon. — Since the indictment alleged assault with a deadly weapon, and the evidence showed that an assault was committed with a knife, aggravated assault was proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and the evidence did not support a finding that the defendant committed a battery. Therefore, the trial court was not required to charge the jury on battery as a lesser included offense. Scott v. State, 208 Ga. App. 561, 430 S.E.2d 879 (1993).

Whether striking person with weapon likely to kill is felony is jury question. — Whether an assault and battery committed by striking one over the head with a weapon likely to produce death would amount to a felony, in that it was done with intent to kill even though death did not in fact result, would be a question for the jury. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

Assault and battery committed with automobile. — Assault and battery may be committed by striking another with an automobile intentionally, or by driving the automobile recklessly as to justify a jury in finding that there was a reckless disregard of human life and safety. Henry v. State, 49 Ga. App. 80, 174 S.E. 183 (1934); Maloney v. State, 57 Ga. App. 265, 195 S.E. 209 (1938); Martin v. State, 98 Ga. App. 136, 105 S.E.2d 250 (1958); Bailey v. State, 101 Ga. App. 81, 113 S.E.2d 172 (1960).

It is assault and battery if, under like circumstances, an automobile is driven against another vehicle in which persons are riding, and the collision occasions physical injuries to persons in the vehicle so struck. Henry v. State, 49 Ga. App. 80, 174 S.E. 183 (1934); Maloney v. State, 57 Ga. App. 265, 195 S.E. 209 (1938); Martin v. State, 98 Ga. App. 136, 105 S.E.2d 250 (1958).

Assault and battery on victim. — When there was no indication that twisting the victim's hand and jerking the victim around were done for any lawful purpose, the jury was amply authorized to find that such acts were offensive and harmful, at least to the feelings and peace of mind of the victim, and that, as such, the actions constituted an assault and battery. Brown v. State, 57 Ga. App. 864, 197 S.E. 82 (1938).

Charging jury as to lesser included offenses. — When a graver charge, such as rape, necessarily includes an offense of lesser grade, such as assault and battery, particularly if the minor offense is expressly alleged in the indictment, it is the duty of the judge, without request, to instruct the jury as to the principles of law applicable to the minor offense, if, under any view of the evidence, independently of the defendant's statement, a finding that the defendant was guilty of the minor but not the major offense would be authorized. It is, however, not error to fail to instruct the jury as to the minor offense when all the evidence connecting the defendant with the transaction shows that the minor offense was necessarily but an incidental part of the major offense perpetrated. Whitley v. State, 188 Ga. 177, 3 S.E.2d 588 (1939).

Trial court gave the jury the option to find the defendant guilty of the lesser included offense of misdemeanor battery or of felony aggravated battery as indicted, but since the jury rejected the misdemeanor battery offense and found the additional aggravating elements to warrant a felony conviction, the idea that the jury might have reached a different result had they also been charged on the even less culpable misdemeanor of simple battery is not reasonable. Christensen v. State, 245 Ga. App. 165, 537 S.E.2d 446 (2000).

It was unnecessary for the trial court to charge on the lesser offenses of battery and simple battery because the indictment charged defendant and others with malice murder by stabbing the victim to death, and there was no evidence whatsoever that defendant's beating of the victim was a separate act. Lamb v. State, 273 Ga. 729, 546 S.E.2d 465 (2001).

Sexual battery was not a lesser included offense of statutory rape as a matter of law, and because the indictment charging defendant with statutory rape was narrowly drawn and the evidence did not support instructions allowing the jury to find defendant guilty of sexual battery or simple battery, the trial court did not err when it denied defendant's request to instruct the jury that sexual battery and simple battery were lesser included offenses of statutory rape. Neal v. State, 264 Ga. App. 311, 590 S.E.2d 168 (2003).

When the defendant was charged with sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1, the trial court properly refused to instruct on simple battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a) as a lesser included offense. The defendant claimed that the victim had placed his hand on the outside of her clothing over her vagina, and simple battery required intentional contact. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008).

Jury questions regarding ejectment of persons from property. — Upon the defendant's refusal to leave, the prosecutor had a right to eject defendant from the prosecutor's property, but with force not disproportionate to that required to eject the defendant. Whether or not the prosecutor was using force in excess of that necessary, giving in turn the right to the defendant to defend self against an unwarranted assault as to defendant or defendant's property, but not to an extent within itself to constitute an assault and battery on the prosecutor, or whether the defendant was arbitrarily refusing to leave and was committing an unwarranted battery upon prosecutor, were all questions for the jury under the proper instructions of the court. Slaughter v. State, 64 Ga. App. 423, 13 S.E.2d 391 (1941).

When reversible error for judge to fail to charge law regarding assault and battery. — Under an indictment for assault with intent to rape, which so describes the manner of the commission of the offense as to contain allegations essential to constitute the lesser offense of assault and battery, where the evidence will consistently support a verdict for either offense, it is reversible error for the trial judge to fail to charge, without request, the law with reference to the offense of assault and battery. Barton v. State, 58 Ga. App. 554, 199 S.E. 357 (1938).

On the trial of one charged with the offense of assault with intent to rape, where the indictment is sufficiently broad to include therein the offense of assault and battery, and where the evidence is inconclusive as to whether the assault by the accused was with the intention to gain the woman's consent to sexual intercourse, or whether it was with the intention to overpower her and commit rape, it is error for the court to fail to submit to the jury the law of assault and battery. Reeves v. State, 78 Ga. App. 126, 50 S.E.2d 640 (1948).

When on an indictment for assault with intent to murder, it is alleged that the defendant beat the prosecutrix, and when on the trial of the case the evidence does not demand a finding that there is an intent to kill, but a verdict for the lesser offense of assault and battery would be warranted, it is error, even in the absence of request, to fail to charge the lesser offense of assault and battery. Jackson v.

Failure to charge law of assault and battery not error. — If a graver charge, such as rape, necessarily includes an offense of lesser grade, such as assault and battery, particularly if the minor offense is expressly alleged in the indictment, it is the duty of the judge, without request, to instruct the jury as to the principles of law applicable to the minor offense, if under any view of the evidence, independently of the defendant's statement, a finding that the defendant was guilty of the minor but not the major offense would be authorized. It is, however, not error to fail to instruct the jury as to the minor offense, when all the evidence connecting the defendant with the transaction shows that the minor offense was necessarily but an incidental part of the major offense perpetrated. In this case, if the defendant was guilty of an assault and battery as charged in the indictment, the defendant was also necessarily guilty of the major offense of rape, as charged, by being a principal in the second degree present and aiding and abetting by the defendant's assault the perpetration of the major offense by the codefendant; thus, there was no error in failing to close on assault and battery. Whitley v. State, 188 Ga. 177, 3 S.E.2d 588 (1939).

When the accused was convicted of assaulting a female, under the age of 14 years, with the intent to rape her, and in the defendant's statement to the jury the defendant denied committing any assault, or any assault and battery, upon the female, while the evidence of the female, if true, proved the felonious assault as alleged in the indictment, omission of the court to charge the jury on the law of assault, or assault and battery, was not error. Finney v. State, 51 Ga. App. 545, 181 S.E. 144 (1935).

When jury should be given discretion to convict of lower offense. — To constitute the offense of assault with intent to murder, there must be a specific intent to kill. This intent is not necessarily or conclusively shown by the use of a weapon likely to produce death, in a manner likely to produce death. Under the proof in this case, the jury should have been given the discretion to convict of a lower offense included in the higher felony charged, if they believed the evidence did not show a specific intent to kill. Jackson v. State, 99 Ga. App. 740, 109 S.E.2d 886 (1959).

Error in instruction waived. — Error was deemed waived because the defendant's silence, after the trial court ruled that it would not instruct the jury on simple battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(b) as a lesser included offense of battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(c), essentially amounted to acquiescence and induced the error. McPetrie v. State, 263 Ga. App. 85, 587 S.E.2d 233 (2003).

Charging entire section when not supported by indictment. — When defendant was specifically charged with violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(2), prohibiting the intentional causing of physical harm to another, it was reversible error for the trial court to instruct the jury that the jury could convict the defendant of simple battery even if it only found that defendant violated O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(1), prohibiting intentional physical contact aimed at insulting or provoking another. Dinnan v. State, 173 Ga. App. 191, 325 S.E.2d 851 (1984).

Charging the entire section when the indictment alleged only that defendant intentionally caused physical harm was reversible error where no remedial instructions were given to limit the jury's consideration to the acts alleged. Owens v.

When defendant was charged with a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a)(2), an instruction which permitted the jury to convict defendant if the jury found that defendant either caused the victim physical harm or made an offensive contact with the victim was reversible error. Lyman v. State, 188 Ga. App. 790, 374 S.E.2d 563 (1988).

Justification defense. — In a prosecution for simple battery, failure to charge the jury that the state had the burden to prove the absence of the elements of defendant's justification defense was not harmless error. Austin v. State, 218 Ga. App. 90, 460 S.E.2d 310 (1995).

In a prosecution for simple battery, as the defendant denied grabbing or striking the victim, the evidence did not support the defendant's requested justification charge. Burrowes v. State, 296 Ga. App. 629, 675 S.E.2d 518 (2009).

Charge on right to resist unlawful arrest. — On appeal from convictions entered against the defendant for misdemeanor battery on a police officer, and misdemeanor obstruction of that officer entered against the defendant's mother, a charge that one could resist an unlawful arrest with reasonably necessary force was not required in either case as such was covered by the charge on the elements of the offense; moreover, as to the battery charge, because the defendant testified to never touching the officer, there was no requirement to charge on this affirmative defense. Curtis v. State, 285 Ga. App. 298, 645 S.E.2d 705 (2007).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Authority of Georgia Crime Information Center to maintain records. — Georgia Crime Information Center is authorized to maintain records of reported crime and, in some instances, to record information identifying persons charged with the commission of crime; however, the center is not authorized to maintain records identifying persons charged with disorderly conduct except when the charge is directly connected with or directly related to certain statutory offenses, including simple battery. 1976 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 76-33.

16-5-23.1. Battery.

(a) A person commits the offense of battery when he or she intentionally causes substantial physical harm or visible bodily harm to another.

(b) As used in this Code section, the term "visible bodily harm" means bodily harm capable of being perceived by a person other than the victim and may include, but is not limited to, substantially blackened eyes, substantially swollen lips or other facial or body parts, or substantial bruises to body parts.

(c) Except as provided in subsections (d) through (l) of this Code section, a person who commits the offense of battery is guilty of a misdemeanor.

(d) Upon the second conviction for battery against the same victim, the defendant shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten days nor more than 12 months, by a fine not to exceed $1,000.00, or both. The minimum sentence of ten days for a second offense shall not be suspended, probated, deferred, stayed, or withheld; provided, however, that it is within the authority and discretion of the sentencing judge to:

(1) Allow the sentence to be served on weekends by weekend confinement or during the nonworking hours of the defendant. A weekend shall commence and shall end in the discretion of the sentencing judge, and the nonworking hours of the defendant shall be determined in the discretion of the sentencing judge; or

(2) Suspend, probate, defer, stay, or withhold the minimum sentence where there exists clear and convincing evidence that imposition of the minimum sentence would either create an undue hardship upon the defendant or result in a failure of justice.

(e) Upon a third or subsequent conviction for battery against the same victim, the defendant shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years. The minimum sentence provisions contained in subsection (d) of this Code section shall apply to sentences imposed pursuant to this subsection.

(f) If the offense of battery is committed between past or present spouses, persons who are parents of the same child, parents and children, stepparents and stepchildren, foster parents and foster children, or other persons living or formerly living in the same household, then such offense shall constitute the offense of family violence battery and shall be punished as follows:

(1) Upon a first conviction of family violence battery, the defendant shall be guilty of and punished for a misdemeanor; and

(2) Upon a second or subsequent conviction of family violence battery against the same or another victim, the defendant shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years. In no event shall this subsection be applicable to reasonable corporal punishment administered by parent to child.

(g) Any person who commits the offense of battery in a public transit vehicle or station shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. For purposes of this Code section, "public transit vehicle" has the same meaning as in subsection (c) of Code Section 16-5-20.

(h) Any person who commits the offense of battery against a female who is pregnant at the time of the offense shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature.

(i) Any person who commits the offense of battery against a teacher or other school personnel engaged in the performance of official duties or while on school property shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years or a fine of not more than $10,000.00, or both. For purposes of this Code section, "school property" shall include public school buses and public school bus stops as designated by local school boards of education.

(j) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (e) and paragraph (2) of subsection (f) of this Code section, any person who commits the offense of battery against a person who is 65 years of age or older shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature.

(k) A person who is an employee, agent, or volunteer at any facility licensed or required to be licensed under Code Section 31-7-3, relating to long-term care facilities, or Code Section 31-7-12.2, relating to assisted living communities, or Code Section 31-7-12, relating to personal care homes, or who is required to be licensed pursuant to Code Section 31-7-151 or 31-7-173, relating to home health care and hospices, who commits the offense of battery against a person who is admitted to or receiving services from such facility, person, or entity shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years, or a fine of not more than $2,000.00, or both.

(l) Any person who commits the offense of battery against a sports official while such sports official is officiating an amateur contest or while such sports official is on or exiting the property where he or she will officiate or has completed officiating an amateur contest shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. For purposes of this Code section, the term "sports official" means any person who officiates, umpires, or referees an amateur contest at the collegiate, elementary or secondary school, or recreational level. (Code 1981, § 16-5-23.1, enacted by Ga. L. 1987, p. 1010, § 1; Ga. L. 1991, p. 971, §§ 7, 8; Ga. L. 1996, p. 449, § 1; Ga. L. 1997, p. 907, § 2; Ga. L. 1997, p. 1064, § 9; Ga. ## JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Statute not an ex post facto law. — Even though a statute, passed after a conviction, uses the conviction as an element of a future offense, this is not an ex post facto law, because the defendant's punishment for the earlier conviction is not increased, since the statute punishes only for a future offense, and that punishment is rationally enhanced by the prior conviction. State v. Dean, 235 Ga. App. 847, 510 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

Enhanced penalty for battery of family members. — Passage of this 1996 Code section, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1, did not create a new offense but rather a separate category of an existing offense, enhancing the penalty for the already prohibited act of battery when such involved family members. State v. Dean, 235 Ga. App. 847, 510 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

In increasing to a felony the punishment of repeat convictions for battery against family members, the legislature recognized that repetition itself increased the severity and reprehensibility of the act. State v. Dean, 235 Ga. App. 847, 510 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

Living in same household. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's two separate convictions for family violence battery, one for striking and kicking a woman with whom defendant was living in the same apartment and one for striking the woman on a different occasion, as it showed defendant committed a battery upon a person living in the same household that defendant was living in. Alvarado v. State, 257 Ga. App. 746, 572 S.E.2d 18 (2002).

Battery as lesser included offense of cruelty to children. — When the evidence was sufficient to establish that the defendant repeatedly struck the defendant's nine-year-old child on the back, buttocks, and legs with defendant's hand, leaving several visible, handprint-shaped bruises, battery was a lesser included offense of cruelty to children. Bennett v. State, 244 Ga. App. 149, 534 S.E.2d 881 (2000).

Trial court did not err by refusing to give an instruction on battery since, based on the evidence, defendant was either guilty of cruelty to children or no crime. Allen v. State, 247 Ga. App. 10, 543 S.E.2d 45 (2000).

Battery merged into kidnapping with bodily injury count. — Battery count against a defendant required merger with a kidnapping with bodily injury count since the only allegation of bodily injury in connection with the kidnapping count was the evidence that the defendant held the victim against the victim's will resulting in bruising to the victim's head; since that same evidence was the only evidence used to show a bodily injury described in the kidnapping charge, the battery charge required merger with the kidnapping with bodily injury count. Jones v. State, 285 Ga. App. 114, 645 S.E.2d 602 (2007).

Whether simple battery is lesser included offense of aggravated assault.

— After defendant was indicted for aggravated assault upon the person of another "with a bottle, an object which when used offensively against a person is likely to or actually does result in serious bodily injury," simple battery was a lesser included offense of aggravated assault, and the jury was properly instructed as to the lesser included offense. Haun v. State, 189 Ga. App. 884, 377 S.E.2d 878, cert. denied, 189 Ga. App. 912, 377 S.E.2d 878 (1989).

Although the element of physical or bodily harm is a requisite for battery, where the physical or bodily harm is committed with a deadly weapon, such as a knife, simple battery is not a lesser included offense. Scott v. State, 208 Ga. App. 561, 430 S.E.2d 879 (1993).

Aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 with fists only and family violence battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(f) with fists and a bottle upon the defendant's then live-in love interest were not required to be merged under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a) because there were two separate incidents separated by the love interest's visit to a store and because the aggravated assault did not require the use of a bottle. Collins v. State, 277 Ga. App. 381, 626 S.E.2d 513 (2006).

Simple battery could be a lesser included offense of battery, when the defendant is charged with intentionally causing visible bodily harm and the state does not prove that the harm was visible. Ross v. State, 214 Ga. App. 385, 448 S.E.2d 52 (1994).

Convictions for aggravated battery and family violence battery, arising out of the same conduct, violated double jeopardy. — Convictions under both O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) and (h) (aggravated battery, family violence) and O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(a), (b), and (f) (family violence battery, substantial physical and visible bodily harm), which were not based on actions at different times or places or different injuries, violated a defendant's double jeopardy rights under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7. Pierce v. State, 301 Ga. App. 167, 687 S.E.2d 185 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0549, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 244 (Ga. 2010).

Attitude of victim not an element of offense. — It is the act, intent and results of the defendant's act which constitute the crimes as charged; the attitude of the victim is not called into issue by these elements. Ramey v. State, 203 Ga. App. 650, 417 S.E.2d 699 (1992).

Substantial bodily harm. — Whether or not a victim of intentional injury by another heals from the injury is not the test of whether the victim suffered substantial bodily harm. Richards v. State, 222 Ga. App. 853, 476 S.E.2d 598 (1996).

Defense of property not sole defense. — Trial court did not err in failing sua sponte to instruct the jury on the defense of property defense as the defendant's sole defense as the defendant claimed that the defendant did not cause the victim's injuries, defense counsel attempted to establish that the victim's recollection of the events was impaired by the victim's fading in and out of consciousness and by the victim's consumption of alcohol, and the jury was adequately instructed on witness credibility, the burden of proof, reasonable doubt, and the presumption of innocence. Strickland v. State, 267 Ga. App. 610, 600 S.E.2d 693 (2004).

County's practice of strip searching all detainees placed in the general jail population was unlawful, but as the plaintiff was charged with family violence battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1, a dispatcher had reasonable suspicion for a strip search; the dispatcher and the dispatcher's superiors were thus entitled to qualified immunity in the plaintiff's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action alleging violation of the plaintiff's U.S. Const., amend. 4 rights. Hicks v. Moore, 422 F.3d 1246 (11th Cir. 2005).

Charge dismissed on basis of immunity. — Trial court properly held that the defendant, who was charged with family violence battery and simple battery under

O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-23.1(f) and 16-5-23, was immune from prosecution under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-24.2. The testimony of the defendant's friend that the defendant restrained the friend after the friend broke the defendant's windshield and kicked a car seat, knocking the defendant into the steering wheel, provided some evidence that the defendant's actions were justified under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a). State v. Apo, 296 Ga. App. 158, 674 S.E.2d 44 (2009).

Indictment sufficient. — Three counts of an indictment charging defendant with "family violence battery (felony)" in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(f), 16-5-23(f), and 16-5-23.1(f)(2), respectively, were sufficient as the indictment informed defendant of the charges and protected against double jeopardy; mere surplusage did not vitiate an otherwise sufficient indictment, and since the indictment did not reference the sentencing for the offense charged, it did not inject the issue of punishment and was not subject to demurrer. State v. Barnett, 268 Ga. App. 900, 602 S.E.2d 899 (2004).

Discrepancy between an averment in the indictment that the defendant "intentionally caused visible bodily harm to (the victim)" and the jury charge that "a person commit(ed) the offense of battery when (the defendant) intentionally cause(d) substantial physical harm or visible bodily harm to another" had nothing to do with the manner in which the crime was committed and did not present the jury with an alternative basis for finding the defendant guilty of family violence battery not charged in the indictment since the evidence presented at trial supported two alternative theories: (1) that the defendant committed no offense at all, or (2) that the defendant committed family violence battery as alleged in the indictment; this was not a case where there was evidence that the crime itself was committed by two different, alternative methods, only one of which was charged in the indictment. Buice v. State, 281 Ga. App. 595, 636 S.E.2d 676 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 93 (Ga. 2007).

Indictment for misdemeanor battery sufficient to withstand demur-

rer. — Trial court correctly denied defendant's motion to quash a count alleging misdemeanor battery because the allegations of the count were not too vague, uncertain, or unclear, as contended by defendant where they met the language of the statute and were sufficiently technical and correct; further, the specific bodily harm did not have to be alleged. State v. Tate, 262 Ga. App. 311, 585 S.E.2d 224 (2003).

Trial court did not commit reversible error in failing to charge the jury on simple battery, where defendant denied committing sodomy. Thompson v. State, 203 Ga. App. 339, 416 S.E.2d 755, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 908, 416 S.E.2d 755 (1992).

Family violence battery. — Victim of defendant's battery was the defendant's parent, and there was testimony as to the victim's statements that the defendant beat the victim and photographs of the victim's wounds; this was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of family violence battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(f). Meeks v. State, 281 Ga. App. 334, 636 S.E.2d 77 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for family violence battery and simple battery were supported by evidence from the victim that the defendant had slapped the victim and choked the victim, an officer's observation of red marks around the victim's neck, and evidence of the defendant's two prior guilty pleas to batteries against the defendant's spouse. Evidence of the victim's fear of retrieving the victim's children from the house and the defendant's threats to spread the victim's brains on the wall supported the simple assault conviction. Cuzzort v. State, 307 Ga. App. 52, 703 S.E.2d 713 (2010).

Error in admitting similar transaction evidence required reversal. — While state presented sufficient evidence of the victim's age to support assault charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), because the trial court clearly erred in admitting evidence of two burglaries defendant committed in 1998 as similar transactions to help prove the issue of identity, defendant's aggravated assault, burglary, robbery, theft, and battery convictions were reversed. Usher v. State, 290 Ga. App. 710, 659 S.E.2d 920 (2008).

Similar transaction evidence properly admitted. — In a prosecution on two counts of second-degree cruelty to children and family violence battery, the trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence against the defendant for the limited purpose of showing the defendant's course of conduct and bent of mind, as identity was not an issue and the similar transaction and the charged offense were the same, except for the fact that the offenses were committed against different family members. Breazeale v. State, 290 Ga. App. 632, 660 S.E.2d 376 (2008).

Evidence authorized finding of serious disfigurement to support aggravated battery conviction. — There was sufficient evidence of disfigurement to support a defendant's conviction for aggravated battery with regard to the abuse inflicted upon the defendant's two year old child based on the numerous visible injuries inflicted on the child, and a CT scan that showed a skull fracture, which required a long period of hospitalization. Yearwood v. State, 297 Ga. App. 633, 678 S.E.2d 114 (2009).

Battery of police officer not justified. — Officer's second-tier Terry frisk of the defendant did not constitute an illegal detention considering all of the circumstances including the defendant's repeated refusal to keep the defendant's hands away from the pockets of the defendant's baggy clothes at the officer's request, the defendant's nervous demeanor, the presence of two companions, and the officer's knowledge of violent crime in the area. Therefore, the defendant was not justified in elbowing the officer and resisting arrest. Santos v. State, 306 Ga. App. 772, 703 S.E.2d 140 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to enable the jury to find defendant guilty of the offense of battery, where an investigating officer observed red scuff marks on the victim's head, arms, and legs, and the scuff marks turned into substantial bruises — as evidenced by photographs of the victim taken ten days after the victim was beaten and kicked. Danzis v. State, 198 Ga. App. 136, 400 S.E.2d 671 (1990), cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 897, 400 S.E.2d 671 (1991).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find appellant guilty of battery beyond a reasonable doubt, although the appellant and the victim's testimony was contradictory, in part because the appellant was nine inches taller and 70 pounds heavier than the victim. Hussey v. State, 206 Ga. App. 122, 424 S.E.2d 374 (1992).

Convictions of cruelty to children and battery were supported by evidence that defendant caused eight-year-old son to suffer severe burns by forcing the son to sit in a bathtub filled with hot water and caustic chemicals. Mitchell v. State, 233 Ga. App. 92, 503 S.E.2d 293 (1998).

Conviction of defendant for family violence battery was authorized by the testimony of eye-witnesses who refuted testimony of the victim that the victim provoked defendant's violence and that defendant did not strike the victim. Holland v. State, 239 Ga. App. 436, 521 S.E.2d 255 (1999).

Defendant's admission to striking son in the face and photographic evidence revealing visible bodily harm were sufficient to support defendant's conviction for family violence battery. Bowers v. State, 241 Ga. App. 122, 526 S.E.2d 163 (1999).

Defendant's admission that during an argument defendant hit the victim in the face with defendant's fist, coupled with proof that the victim's face and eye were swollen and bruised was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict that defendant was guilty of battery by intentionally causing visible bodily harm. Etheridge v. State, 249 Ga. App. 111, 547 S.E.2d 744 (2001).

Evidence that defendant beat the victim, who had a child with defendant, so badly that the victim had to go to the hospital was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for family violence battery as such evidence consisted of eyewitness testimony and statements of the victim, later murdered by defendant, that were admissible under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule. Hayes v. State, 275 Ga. 173, 562 S.E.2d 498 (2002).

After the defendant threw a set of keys at a parent, which hit the parent in the face and shoulder, spat in the parent's face, violently grabbed and pulled out the parent's hair, which left the parent's head bloody, the evidence was sufficient to show lack of justification and to sustain the defendant's conviction for family battery. Cobble v. State, 259 Ga. App. 236, 576 S.E.2d 623 (2003).

There was ample evidence that the defendant committed battery against the victim, the defendant's spouse by intentionally causing substantial physical harm; the victim had scrapes and bruises on the neck consistent with being choked, and the defendant had thrown the victim against a wall. Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 413, 579 S.E.2d 809 (2003).

When the evidence revealed that defendant and others returned to a parking lot with the specific intent of ambushing a group of people who had earlier told defendant not to speed and had thrown a beer bottle at defendant's car, and when defendant was found to be an accomplice of one who possessed a gun and fatally shot someone, there was sufficient evidence pursuant to the "party to a crime" law under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20 to convict defendant of felony murder in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1 and simple battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1. Smith v. State, 277 Ga. 95, 586 S.E.2d 629 (2003).

When an accomplice testified that the accomplice drove defendant to the robberies, and the victims testified that the victims were robbed at gunpoint and hit with a gun or that the robbers banged one victim's head on the dashboard of that victim's vehicle and was then locked in the truck of the victim's vehicle, and defendant admitted that defendant was one of the persons videotaped while using the victims' automatic teller cards shortly after the robberies and was wearing sunglasses in the videotape, and even though the victims could not identify defendant, both victims recalled that one of the robbers had something metallic on the robber's face, identified by one victim as glasses, the accomplice testimony was sufficiently corroborated, and the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict of guilty of kidnapping, battery, and two counts of armed robbery. Ross v. State, 264 Ga. App. 830, 592 S.E.2d 479 (2003).

Conviction for family violence battery was supported by sufficient evidence where, during an argument with a love interest, the defendant shoved the love interest into kitchen cabinets and then head-butted the love interest in the face, causing the love interest to drop to the floor with a nose bleed, facial, knee, and arm bruises, a lip cut, and loosened teeth; the battery was seen by the love interest's child, and although the defendant claimed that the defendant collided with the love interest's nose only in an effort to avoid the love interest's blows, the jury was authorized to disregard the claims of accident and self-defense in light of the evidence, including the defendant's demeanor after the incident, and the defendant's flight. Kuykendoll v. State, 278 Ga. App. 369, 629 S.E.2d 32 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of family violence battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1, where the victim's sibling saw defendant strike the victim, the defendant admitted striking the victim, and the trial court found the victim's reddened face to have been harm capable of being perceived by a person, a police officer, other than the victim. Gilbert v. State, 278 Ga. App. 765, 629 S.E.2d 587 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for robbery, battery, false imprisonment, and obstruction of an emergency telephone call were all upheld on appeal, as no error flowed from: (1) the trial court's admission of an audio recording of the attack on the victim and order granting the state two hearings regarding the admissibility of said recording; (2) the trial court's failure to give a curative instruction after the prosecutor injected a personal experience with domestic violence into the closing argument; (3) the trial court's failure to strike the testimony of similar transaction witnesses and issue a curative instruction; and (4) the trial court's order restricting the counsel's closing argument. Ellis v. State, 279 Ga. App. 902, 633 S.E.2d 64 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for family violence battery as: (1) although the victim recanted the earlier allegations and denied that the victim had been living with the defendant, an officer testified as to the victim's statements that the defendant had pushed, hit, kicked, and spat on the victim, and that in an effort to force the defendant away, the victim struck the defendant in the head with a chair; (2) the officer testified that, at the scene, the victim had visible injuries and was distraught; (3) the officer testified that the defendant told the officer that the defendant lived with the victim; and (4) the state presented evidence of two previous incidents in which the defendant had physically injured the victim. Buice v. State, 281 Ga. App. 595, 636 S.E.2d 676 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 93 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant's family violence battery conviction was affirmed on appeal as testimony from the victim, standing alone, describing the defendant's attack, when coupled with testimony regarding two prior incidents, sufficiently supported the convictions; moreover, the jury was authorized to: (1) rely upon the victim's prior statement to the responding officer as substantive evidence supporting the conviction; and (2) consider the prior difficulties evidence presented by the state, which most certainly demonstrated the status of the relationship between the defendant and the victim, and was highly relevant to show the defendant's abusive bent of mind towards the victim. Simmons v. State, 285 Ga. App. 129, 645 S.E.2d 622 (2007).

Legally sufficient evidence existed to support the defendant's conviction for battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1 because the victim suffered a bruised lip and the victim's wrists were red when the victim was found; photographic evidence of the injuries was presented by the state. Austin v. State, 286 Ga. App. 149, 648 S.E.2d 414 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 687 (Ga. 2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support battery conviction for intentionally causing defendant's spouse visible bodily harm after defendant admitted that defendant had punched the defendant's spouse in the face, the spouse and one of the parties' children testified that defendant struck the spouse in the face, another child saw the spouse covered with blood, an officer testified about the spouse's injuries and photographs of which were admitted into evidence, and a doctor testified to performing surgery on the spouse's nose.

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's convictions on one count of simple assault and two counts of battery, which arose from a fight with a romantic friend, as it was within the jury's province to consider defendant's self-defense theory and reject that defense; the jury heard witnesses and observed testimony and was more capable of determining the reasonableness of the hypothesis produced by the evidence or the lack of evidence than the appellate court. Thompson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 355, 662 S.E.2d 135 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of misdemeanor battery when the victim testified that on the day after the victim told the defendant that the victim no longer wanted to be in a relationship with the defendant, the defendant punched the victim in the eye, after which they fought, and when the victim identified photographs depicting the victim's injuries. Although the defendant claimed that the victim started the altercation, the jury was authorized to believe the victim instead of the defendant. Watkins v. State, 291 Ga. App. 343, 662 S.E.2d 544 (2008).

Evidence authorized a battery conviction after the victim testified that the defendant hit the victim and dragged the victim through the victim's house, leaving various marks on the victim's body, including bruises on the victim's arms and neck; furthermore, the state presented photographs of the bruises and other marks suffered by the victim. Mack v. State, 294 Ga. App. 518, 669 S.E.2d 487 (2008).

In a prosecution for battery, eyewitness testimony that the defendant struck the victim in the face and photographs of the victim's injuries provided sufficient evidence to overcome a motion for a directed verdict. Therefore, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to make such a motion. Crawford v. State, 294 Ga. App. 711, 670 S.E.2d 185 (2008).

Testimony of the victim that the victim was beaten and kicked by a former romantic companion and another person, and that the defendant later joined these two in battering the victim, and the compan-ion's testimony corroborating the defendant's role in the attack, was sufficient to convict the defendant of battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1. Frasier v. State, 295 Ga. App. 596, 672 S.E.2d 668 (2009).

Evidence that the defendant smashed the victim's head into the trunk of a car, and choked and kicked the victim was sufficient to convict the defendant of battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(a). Bradley v. State, 298 Ga. App. 384, 680 S.E.2d 489 (2009).

Evidence plainly was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(a) because the state presented more than ample evidence that the defendant's use of force was not justified under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a); based upon the victim's testimony and the victim's prior statement to the responding officer, the jury clearly was authorized to find that the defendant's acts of grabbing the victim by the hair, throwing the victim to the ground, and choking the victim to the point of unconsciousness constituted excessive force, and the prior and subsequent difficulties evidence and the similar transaction evidence the state presented supported the jury's decision to give little credence to the defendant's self-defense claim. Whitley v. State, 307 Ga. App. 553, 707 S.E.2d 375 (2011).

Juvenile delinquency based on school bus assault. — In a juvenile proceeding wherein a juvenile was adjudicated delinquent as a result of an assault of a schoolmate on a school bus, sufficient evidence existed to support the juvenile's delinquency adjudication because the conflicting evidence, which the trial court as the trier of fact chose to resolve against the juvenile, established that the juvenile hit the schoolmate several times as a result of an insult made, causing the victim to have a nose bleed, a bruise over the eye, and a raised bruise on the forehead. In the Interest of E.J., 283 Ga. App. 648, 642 S.E.2d 179 (2007).

Evidence was insufficient to convict defendant of the offense of family violence battery when the evidence showed only that some beer was splashed on the defendant's wife's clothes. Cox v. State, 243 Ga. App. 582, 532 S.E.2d 697 (2000).

Municipal court lacks jurisdiction. — Since the municipal court lacked jurisdiction to try defendant pursuant to a Uniform Traffic Citation charging defendant with "simple battery" in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23, prosecution of the offense before such court was void; accordingly, trial of defendant for simple battery in the state court was not barred on the ground of double jeopardy or prior prosecution. Rangel v. State, 217 Ga. App. 152, 456 S.E.2d 739 (1995).

Denial of motion for directed verdict of acquittal was proper. — Where defendant was tried on two counts of battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(a) in relation to an altercation in a movie theater, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, which was based on defendant's claim of justification under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a), even though defendant presented the testimony of two witnesses who said that defendant only struck the victim after the victim grabbed defendant's throat, as the victim denied choking defendant and defendant had earlier entered into a written restitution agreement with the victim in which defendant had admitted that defendant approached and struck the seated victim, inflicting a forehead laceration; the conflicting testimony on the justification defense presented credibility issues for the jury to resolve and there was ample evidence from which a rational trier of fact could have found defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Tahantan v. State, 260 Ga. App. 861, 581 S.E.2d 373 (2003).

Error waived. — Error was deemed waived as defendant's silence, after the trial court ruled that it would not instruct the jury on simple battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(b) as a lesser included offense of battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(c), essentially amounted to acquiescence and induced the error. McPetrie v. State, 263 Ga. App. 85, 587 S.E.2d 233 (2003).

Additional jury charge not error. — After the jury requested written copies of the definitions of certain offenses in defendant's criminal trial, and the trial court recharged the jury on those offenses, and the court sua sponte charged the jury on the issue of voluntary intoxication, such was not error because defendant had not requested the opportunity to reargue to the jury and hence, the trial court did not absolutely deny that right. Cochran v. State, 276 Ga. App. 840, 625 S.E.2d 92 (2005).

Charging jury as to lesser included offenses. — Trial court gave the jury the option to find defendant guilty of the lesser included offense of misdemeanor battery or of felony aggravated battery as indicted, but since the jury rejected the misdemeanor battery offense and found the additional aggravating elements to warrant felony conviction, the idea that the jury might have reached a different result had the jury also been charged on the even less culpable misdemeanor of simple battery is not reasonable. Christensen v. State, 245 Ga. App. 165, 537 S.E.2d 446 (2000).

It was unnecessary for the trial court to charge on the lesser offenses of battery and simple battery because the indictment charged defendant and others with malice murder by stabbing the victim to death, and there was no evidence whatsoever that defendant's beating of the victim was a separate act. Lamb v. State, 273 Ga. 729, 546 S.E.2d 465 (2001).

Trial court did not err in failing to give an instruction on the lesser-included offense of simple battery because the defendant failed to request such an instruction. Griggs v. State, 303 Ga. App. 442, 693 S.E.2d 615 (2010).

Although the trial court should have given the defendant's requested charge on battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1, since the evidence authorized a finding that the defendant intentionally caused substantial physical harm and visible bodily harm to the victims by beating the victims with a bat and a belt, the failure to give the battery charge was harmless error in light of the overwhelming evidence of the commission of the greater offense, cruelty to children, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70; the indictment alleged that the defendant unlawfully and maliciously caused the victims cruel and excessive physical and mental pain by striking the victims about the body with a belt and wooden bat. Dinkler v. State, 305 Ga. App. 444, 699 S.E.2d 541 (2010).

Jury charge on living in same household. — There was not reversible error as a jury charge that “if the offense of battery (was) committed between persons living or formerly living in the same household then that offense constitute(d) the offense of family violence battery” did not permit the state to prove that the crime was committed in a wholly different manner than that specifically alleged in the indictment, which alleged that the defendant “did live in the same household as the victim,” since “did” was a phraseology that did not distinguish between whether a defendant currently or formerly lived with the victim at the time of the battery and could reasonably be construed as encompassing both factual scenarios; the indictment was sufficient to put the defendant on notice that the defendant could be convicted for family violence battery if the defendant lived with the victim at some point in time. Buice v. State, 281 Ga. App. 595, 636 S.E.2d 676 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 93 (Ga. 2007).

Prior transaction jury instruction. — Trial court properly admitted evidence of defendant’s prior domestic offenses in defendant’s trial for simple battery and battery of defendant’s children as the prior offenses were sufficiently similar to the crimes charged in that they all involved family members and grabbing the necks of or hitting the faces of defendant’s children or former spouse; the prior transaction jury instruction was not erroneous merely because course of conduct was not one of the purposes set forth by the trial court when it decided to admit the evidence, as defendant’s course of conduct in repeatedly abusing members of defendant’s family was a legitimate purpose for the similar transaction evidence. Morrell v. State, 262 Ga. App. 288, 585 S.E.2d 204 (2003).

Justification charge properly refused. — Trial court properly refused to charge the jury on justification as either: (1) as a police officer testified, the victim stated that the defendant had pushed, hit, kicked, and spat on the victim and that the victim had reacted by hitting the defendant in the head with a chair, which did not support a justification defense since the evidence presented the defendant as the aggressor, or (2) as the victim testified, the victim hit the defendant in the head with a chair during the course of their argument, and the defendant never pushed, hit, or kicked the victim in response, which did not support a justification defense since there was no evidence that the defendant tried to defend the defendant or otherwise acted in any manner to protect the defendant’s person. Buice v. State, 281 Ga. App. 595, 636 S.E.2d 676 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 93 (Ga. 2007).

With regard to defendant’s conviction for aggravated battery of a taxi driver, defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on the lesser included offense of battery based on defendant’s argument that the jury could have found under the facts of the case that the gun was not used as a deadly weapon as the evidence showed without conflict that defendant’s physical assault upon the taxi driver with the handgun caused the taxi driver to bleed from the head and the entire right side of the face, and the taxi driver testified that, during the attack, the taxi driver was very afraid of being killed. Thus, the pistol in the case, if used in the manner testified to by the taxi driver, was per se a deadly weapon, and the offense was either aggravated assault or no offense at all. Ortiz v. State, 292 Ga. App. 378, 665 S.E.2d 333 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1851, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 928 (Ga. 2008).

Enhanced sentence for second offense. — Defendant could not challenge a sentence for family violence battery on appeal, claiming that the sentence was erroneously enhanced from a misdemeanor to a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(f)(2) based on a previous conviction arising from a guilty plea to the same offense that was based on a defective indictment, because since the defendant failed to challenge the indictment at the time the defendant pled guilty, the proper remedy was a motion in arrest of judgment under O.C.G.A. § 17-9-61(b) or habeas corpus. Grogan v. State, 297 Ga. App. 251, 676 S.E.2d 764 (2009).

Trial court did not err in failing to charge the jury that malice was an essential element of either second-degree cruelty to children or family violence battery, as malice, prior to a 2004 amendment, was not an element of cruelty to children, and was not an element to the offense of family violence battery. Breazeale v. State, 290 Ga. App. 632, 660 S.E.2d 376 (2008).

Omitting statutory definition of “visible bodily harm” from instruction error. — By omitting the statutory definition of “visible bodily harm” contained in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(b), the trial court failed to give the jury the proper framework for evaluating whether a laceration to the victim’s nose was severe enough to merit a finding of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24 or whether only a finding of battery was merited. Thus, the charge was fatally insufficient. Carroll v. State, 293 Ga. App. 721, 667 S.E.2d 708 (2008).

Verdict not inconsistent. — Verdicts were not necessarily inconsistent where the defendant was acquitted of family violence battery but convicted of third-degree cruelty to children because: (1) the appellate court could not know, and should not speculate, why a jury acquitted a defendant on a predicate offense, but convicted on the compound offense; (2) the jury was authorized to believe an officer’s testimony about a red mark under the victim’s right eye that was caused by an altercation between the victim and the defendant which occurred in the presence of the victim’s children; and (3) the victim’s prior inconsistent statement was admissible as substantive evidence of the defendant’s guilt. Amis v. State, 277 Ga. App. 223, 626 S.E.2d 192 (2006).

In a shaken baby death, an involuntary manslaughter verdict was not mutually exclusive of a guilty verdict for felony murder/cruelty to children because, consistent with the jury’s guilty verdict on the felony murder charge, an offense requiring criminal intent, the jury predicated the jury’s involuntary manslaughter verdict on a misdemeanor involving criminal intent, battery, or simple battery under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-23(a) and 16-5-23.1(a), although the jury was also instructed on reckless conduct, a misdemeanor committed by criminal negligence, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Drake v. State, 288 Ga. 131, 702 S.E.2d 161 (2010).

Withdrawal of guilty pleas properly denied. — Because: (1) the facts of the case as narrated by the prosecutor presented a sufficient factual basis for the defendant’s pleas to both aggravated assault and two battery counts; (2) the trial court informed the defendant of the consequences of the guilty pleas, waiver of certain constitutional and statutory rights, and the minimum and maximum possible sentences for the crimes charged; and (3) the defendant admitted guilt and to entering the guilty plea freely and voluntarily, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying withdrawal of said pleas. Foster v. State, 281 Ga. App. 584, 636 S.E.2d 759 (2006).

Fingerprintable offense. — Violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1 is an offense for which those charged with a violation are to be fingerprinted. 1987 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 87-21.

16-5-24. Aggravated battery.

(a) A person commits the offense of aggravated battery when he or she maliciously causes bodily harm to another by depriving him or her of a member of his or her body, by rendering a member of his or her body useless, or by seriously disfiguring his or her body or a member thereof.

(b) Except as provided in subsections (c) through (h) of this Code section, a person convicted of the offense of aggravated battery shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than 20 years.

(c) A person who knowingly commits the offense of aggravated battery upon a peace officer while the officer is engaged in, or on account of the performance of, his or her official duties shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 20 years.

(d) Any person who commits the offense of aggravated battery against a person who is 65 years of age or older shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(e)(1) As used in this subsection, the term "correctional officer" shall include superintendents, wardens, deputy wardens, guards, and correctional officers of state, county, and municipal penal institutions who are certified by the Georgia Peace Officer Standards and Training Council pursuant to Chapter 8 of Title 35 and employees of the Department of Juvenile Justice who are known to be employees of the department or who have given reasonable identification of their employment. The term "correctional officer" shall also include county jail officers who are certified or registered by the Georgia Peace Officer Standards and Training Council pursuant to Chapter 8 of Title 35.

(2) A person who knowingly commits the offense of aggravated battery upon a correctional officer while the correctional officer is engaged in, or on account of the performance of, his or her official duties shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 20 years.

(f) Any person who commits the offense of aggravated battery in a public transit vehicle or station shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years. For purposes of this Code section, "public transit vehicle" has the same meaning as in subsection (c) of Code Section 16-5-20.

(g) Any person who commits the offense of aggravated battery upon a student or teacher or other school personnel within a school safety zone as defined in paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of Code Section 16-11-127.1 shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(h) If the offense of aggravated battery is committed between past or present spouses, persons who are parents of the same child, parents and children, stepparents and stepchildren, foster parents and foster children, or other persons excluding siblings living or formerly living in the same household, the defendant shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than three nor more than 20 years. ## JUDICIAL DECISIONS

APPLICATION
JURY INSTRUCTIONS

General Consideration

Former offense of mayhem is replaced by aggravated battery under former Code 1933, § 26-1305. Wells v. State, 125 Ga. App. 579, 188 S.E.2d 407 (1972) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24).

Inasmuch as putting out an eye indisputably constituted an offense of mayhem, it follows that an established offense of mayhem likewise constitutes an aggravated battery, the present offense standing in place of mayhem. Watts v. State, 141 Ga. App. 127, 232 S.E.2d 590, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 925, 98 S. Ct. 405, 54 L. Ed. 2d 283 (1977), overruled on other grounds, Graham v. State, 153 Ga. App. 658, 266 S.E.2d 316 (1980).

Aggravated battery is a felony. Ruff v. State, 150 Ga. App. 238, 257 S.E.2d 203 (1979).

Causation. — Defendant's assertion that the victim had fallen against a grill after being hit did not demonstrate that defendant's admitted initial contact with the victim had not "caused" a subsequent cut to the victim's eye and the resulting loss of the victim's eyesight. If by maliciously striking the victim, defendant set in motion a force which ultimately resulted in the victim's loss of eyesight, it was not determinative that defendant's hand was not a more immediate factor in that result. McKissic v. State, 201 Ga. App. 525, 411 S.E.2d 516, cert. denied, 201 Ga. App. 904, 411 S.E.2d 516 (1991).

Knowledge that victim peace officer or other official. — The O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30(b)(8) statutory aggravating circumstance does not require knowledge on the part of the defendant that the victim was a peace officer or other designated official engaged in the performance of official duties. Fair v. State, 284 Ga. 165, 664 S.E.2d 227 (2008).

Victim who dies instantaneously from first blow cannot be subjected to aggravated battery. Patrick v. State, 247 Ga. 168, 274 S.E.2d 570 (1981), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1089, 103 S. Ct. 575, 74 L. Ed. 2d 936 (1982).

Evidence did not show beyond a reasonable doubt that the victim suffered an aggravated battery before death when, according to the medical examiner's testimony, the victim sustained three blows to the scalp area of the head, any one of which would have been fatal, three other blows to the head would have rendered the victim unconscious and it was impossible to determine the sequence of the blows. Thus, the victim may have been dead or only unconscious after the first blow. Patrick v. State, 247 Ga. 168, 274 S.E.2d 570 (1981), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1089, 103 S. Ct. 575, 74 L. Ed. 2d 936 (1982).

It is not incumbent upon the state to prove that defendant intended to maim. White v. State, 210 Ga. App. 563, 436 S.E.2d 584 (1993).

Indictment laid in exact terms of former Code 1933, § 26-1305 was sufficient. See Miller v. State, 155 Ga. App. 54, 270 S.E.2d 466 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24).

Use of the word "struggle" in an indictment charging aggravated battery merely adjusted the charge to the specific facts of the case, did not leave open the possibility that defendant acted in self-defense, and did not make the indictment deficient. Stokes v. State, 258 Ga. App. 840, 575 S.E.2d 651 (2002).

Indictment not required to allege party status. — Indictment's failure to allege that a defendant was a party to aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and first-degree child cruelty under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a), 16-5-24(a), and 16-5-70(b) did not require a showing that the defendant was the principal perpetrator under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-21; the defendant's status as a party to the crimes was not an essential element used to increase the sentences for the crimes, and the trial court did not err in instructing the jury that the defendant could be convicted either as the principal perpetrator of the crimes or as a party thereto. Hill v. State, 282 Ga. App. 743, 639 S.E.2d 637 (2006).

No fatal variance between indictment and proof. — Fact that an indictment charged the defendant with aggravated assault and battery by slicing the victim's neck with a knife, but the evidence showed the defendant used a box cutter, did not constitute a fatal variance between the indictment and the proof, because the defendant was sufficiently informed of the charges and faced no danger of further prosecution arising out of the incident. Lawson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 852, 630 S.E.2d 131 (2006).

Aggravated battery conviction merged into the malice murder conviction where the medical examiner's testimony established that the same act caused the aggravated battery and the victim's death; thus, the same evidence was used to prove both crimes. Fulton v. State, 278 Ga. 58, 597 S.E.2d 396 (2004).

Offenses of aggravated battery and armed robbery merged as a matter of fact, where the aggravated battery indictment was drawn to charge the same serious bodily harm inflicted by a knife in the course of an armed robbery, and thus the same facts necessary to prove the aggravated battery charge were used up on proving the armed robbery charge. Whitner v. State, 198 Ga. App. 300, 401 S.E.2d 318 (1991).

Aggravated battery did not merge with offense of attempted armed robbery. Miller v. State, 155 Ga. App. 54, 270 S.E.2d 466 (1980).

Aggravated battery and robbery offenses did not merge. — Trial court did not err in refusing to merge a defendant's robbery and aggravated battery offenses. The robbery offense required that the defendant, with intent to commit theft, took the property of the victim from the victim by use of force, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-40(a)(1), and the aggravated battery charge required proof that the defendant maliciously caused bodily harm to the victim by seriously disfiguring the victim's body or a member thereof, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Taking property of the victim was not a fact required to establish aggravated battery, and causing serious disfigurement was not a fact required to establish robbery. Blanch v. State, 306 Ga. App. 631, 703 S.E.2d 48 (2010).

Merger with reckless conduct. — Defendant's reckless conduct conviction merged as a matter of fact into the aggravated battery conviction as the state conceded at the beginning of sentencing, and the trial court erred in failing to so find. Collins v. State, 283 Ga. App. 188, 641 S.E.2d 208 (2007).

No merger of nonhomicide counts. — Defendant's convictions of involuntary manslaughter while in the commission of a simple battery, aggravated assault, aggravated battery, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct were not mutually exclusive, and the trial court did not err in not merging the nonhomicide counts upon sentencing. Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Aggravated assault merged into aggravated battery. — Because the indictment alleged only one act, the shooting of the victim, and because the evidence showed only that defendant's actions were the result of a single act of firing a series of shots in quick succession at the victim, the convictions for aggravated assault merged into the aggravated battery. Brown v. State, 246 Ga. App. 60, 539 S.E.2d 545 (2000).

Trial court erred in failing to merge a defendant's offenses of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) and aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), for sentencing purposes, because the assault was a lesser included offense of the battery offense under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(1), given the defendant's single attack on the victim with a golf club. Allen v. State, 302 Ga. App. 190, 690 S.E.2d 492 (2010).

Aggravated assault did not merge with aggravated battery. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated assault and aggravated battery against the same victim did not merge for sentencing purposes, as the two offenses were proven with different facts: the assault occurred when defendant threatened the victim with a gun, and the battery occurred when defendant later shot the victim in the arm. Pennymon v. State, 261 Ga. App. 450, 582 S.E.2d 582 (2003).

Trial court did not err in failing to merge an aggravated assault count into a kidnapping with bodily injury count, the aggravated assault count into an aggravated battery count, and the aggravated battery count into the kidnapping count, as each count referred to a separate cut of the victims with a decorative sword that defendant pulled off the wall during a domestic dispute with defendant's spouse and child. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Because a conviction on a charge of aggravated assault could be based on the defendant's act of cutting of the victim's throat, while a conviction on a charge of aggravated battery could be based on the serious disfigurement of the victim's arms, a conviction could be entered on each count. Hence, merger did not apply. Goss v. State, 289 Ga. App. 734, 658 S.E.2d 168 (2008).

Defendant's aggravated assault and aggravated battery convictions under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a) and 16-5-24(a) did not merge under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a), although both stemmed from the same act. The aggravated assault charge required proof that the defendant attempted to commit a violent injury with the intent to murder using a deadly weapon, while the aggravated battery charge required proof that the defendant maliciously caused bodily harm to the victim by rendering a member of the victim's body useless; thus, the offenses were distinct, with each requiring proof of a fact which the other did not. Robbins v. State, 293 Ga. App. 584, 667 S.E.2d 684 (2008).

Trial court did not err in refusing to merge the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-5-24, because the offenses were established by proving different facts; the defendant was found guilty of aggravated assault because there was evidence that the defendant assaulted the victim with a screwdriver, and the defendant was found guilty of aggravated battery because the victim's left lung was nonfunctional for a period of time due to the stab wound. Works v. State, 301 Ga. App. 108, 686 S.E.2d 863 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0458, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 251 (Ga. 2010).

No merger of aggravated battery, aggravated assault, and kidnapping. — Trial court did not err under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7 in failing to merge convictions for aggravated assault and aggravated battery with a conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury as each crime required proof of at least one different element, and the state presented independent evidence to prove each individual crime as set out in the indictment. Evidence that the defendant pointed a gun at the victim and fired the gun at the floor near the victim, that the defendant used a wooden stick resembling a baseball bat to repeatedly hit the victim, and that the defendant hit and kicked the victim while the victim was tied up supported the three aggravated assault counts; aggravated battery was established by evidence that the defendant broke the victim's nose, wrist, and shoulder and knocked out two teeth and by evidence that the defendant burned the victim's hand and caused the victim to be bitten by fire ants; and kidnapping with bodily injury was proven by evidence of injuries to the victim due to being bound by rope. Rouse v. State, 295 Ga. App. 61, 670 S.E.2d 869 (2008).

Convictions for aggravated battery and cruelty to children did not merge since the evidence established that the victim was subjected to multiple injuries in addition to a broken arm, and that none of the injuries were relevant to defendant's aggravated battery conviction, which was predicated upon the victim's broken arm. Mashburn v. State, 244 Ga. App. 524, 536 S.E.2d 208 (2000).

Trial court did not err by refusing to give an instruction on battery since the state presented evidence that defendant maliciously struck the victim in the abdomen and caused severe and permanent damage to her liver and spleen, and defendant could not point to any evidence that would suggest the offense of battery. Allen v. State, 247 Ga. App. 10, 543 S.E.2d 45 (2000).

Aggravated battery and cruelty to children each requires proof of at least one additional element which the other does not, and the two crimes are not so closely related that multiple convictions are prohibited under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-1-6 and 16-1-7; accordingly, even if the same conduct establishes the commission of both aggravated battery and cruelty to children, the two crimes do not merge, and thus a defendant was properly convicted of both crimes (overruling Jones v. State, 276 Ga. App. 762 (624 SE2d 291) (2005); Etchinson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 449 (538 SE2d 87) (2000); and Harmon v. State, 208 Ga. App. 271 (430 SE2d 399) (1993)). Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Aggravated battery did not merge with kidnapping with bodily injury because the battery was concluded when defendant delivered the initial blow to the victim's head before moving the victim to another place. Deal v. State, 233 Ga. App. 79, 503 S.E.2d 288 (1998).

Trial court did not err in failing to merge aggravated battery and kidnapping with bodily injury counts; the kidnapping with bodily injury count included an injury, a broken leg, that was not included in the aggravated battery count, and the evidence that authorized the defendant's conviction of aggravated battery was separate and distinct from the evidence that authorized the conviction of kidnapping with bodily injury. Davis v. State, 281 Ga. 871, 644 S.E.2d 113 (2007).

Because there was independent evidence to support each of the offenses as indicted, a defendant's aggravated assault conviction did not merge as a matter of fact with either the aggravated battery or kidnapping with bodily injury convictions. Pitts v. State, 287 Ga. App. 540, 652 S.E.2d 181 (2007).

Aggravated battery, family violence, merged with family violence battery if charges not based on different acts or injuries — Convictions under both O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) and (h) (aggravated battery, family violence) and O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(a), (b), and (f) (family violence battery, substantial physical and visible bodily harm), which were not based on actions at different times or places or different injuries, violated a defendant's double jeopardy rights under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7. Pierce v. State, 301 Ga. App. 167, 687 S.E.2d 185 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0549, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 244 (Ga. 2010).

Criminal attempt to commit aggravated battery. — Attempted destruction of another's eyesight constitutes a criminal attempt to commit an aggravated battery. Greene v. State, 155 Ga. App. 222, 270 S.E.2d 386 (1980).

Mitigating factors. — Focus of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) is upon whether the defendant has maliciously caused the victim to suffer an enumerated physical injury, and the means employed so as maliciously to cause such an injury is not a mitigating factor. McKissic v. State, 201 Ga. App. 525, 411 S.E.2d 516, cert. denied, 201 Ga. App. 904, 411 S.E.2d 516 (1991).

Application

It is not necessary that the victim suffer the total loss of a member in order to be the victim of an aggravated battery. Taylor v. State, 178 Ga. App. 817, 344 S.E.2d 748 (1986).

Finger is a bodily part that accordingly qualifies as a “member” under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24. Ganas v. State, 245 Ga. App. 645, 537 S.E.2d 758 (2000).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction of aggravated battery on defendant’s former wife when the testimony was that defendant’s former wife’s index finger had been rendered useless as the result of defendant’s beating. Ahmadi v. State, 251 Ga. App. 1895, 554 S.E.2d 215 (2001).

Loss of tooth. — Defendant deprived his ex-girlfriend of a member of her body or rendered such member of her body useless, when he repeatedly struck her in the face, dislodging a large portion of one of her teeth; thus, defendant’s aggravated battery conviction was upheld. Rivers v. State, 255 Ga. App. 422, 565 S.E.2d 596 (2002).

Nose is a bodily member. — A nose, which is a part of the body and was considered a bodily member under the law of mayhem, also qualifies as a bodily member for the purpose of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Jones v. State, 283 Ga. App. 631, 642 S.E.2d 331 (2007).

Ear rendered useless. — When an ear is capable of hearing no more than a slight beep, the ear has been rendered useless for purposes of former Code 1933, § 26-1305. Jackson v. State, 153 Ga. App. 584, 266 S.E.2d 273 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24).

Because the evidence was sufficient for a trier of fact to find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant’s attack on the victim rendered the victim’s ear useless, the trial court did not err in denying defendant’s motion for directed verdict of acquittal as to an aggravated battery charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Biggins v. State, 299 Ga. App. 554, 683 S.E.2d 96 (2009).

Loss of use of eye is member rendered useless. — Loss of use of an eye constitutes the rendering of “a member of his body useless” within the meaning of former Code 1933, § 26-1305. Mitchell v. State, 238 Ga. 167, 231 S.E.2d 773 (1977); Blackman v. State, 178 Ga. App. 88, 342 S.E.2d 24 (1986); Taylor v. State, 178 Ga. App. 817, 344 S.E.2d 748 (1986) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24).

Evidence that established that a victim’s eye was removed immediately after defendant struck the victim and caused the eye to bleed was sufficient to show harm and to support a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) even though the eye was not functional before the battery because loss of the eye deprived the victim of a member of the victim’s body. Williams v. State, 262 Ga. App. 698, 588 S.E.2d 755 (2003).

Expert testimony is not required in an aggravated battery case to prove the loss of use of an eye. The victim’s testimony as to loss of eyesight will support the verdict. Mitchell v. State, 238 Ga. 167, 231 S.E.2d 773 (1977).

Blurred vision is evidence that an eye has been rendered useless. Taylor v. State, 178 Ga. App. 817, 344 S.E.2d 748 (1986).

Eye injury sufficient for conviction. — Evidence that defendant put fist through a window causing broken glass to strike the victim’s eye was sufficient for conviction. Blackwood v. State, 224 Ga. App. 486, 480 S.E.2d 914 (1997).

Victim’s testimony that vision was improving was not sufficient to overcome the evidence that the victim’s eye was rendered useless, especially in the absence of a prognosis of complete recovery. Taylor v. State, 178 Ga. App. 817, 344 S.E.2d 748 (1986).

Photographs depicting condition of victim’s injured eye immediately following attack were admissible over defendant’s objection that they were designed to inflame and prejudice the jury. Few v. State, 182 Ga. App. 667, 356 S.E.2d 729 (1987).

Admission of color photographs. — Court did not err in admitting color photographs showing the victim's injuries. These photographs depicted the victim's injuries shortly after the injuries were inflicted and shortly before trial to show the permanence of the victim's injuries. Since the appellant was indicted for aggravated battery, the state was required to prove that the appellant severely disfigured the victim. Maxwell v. State, 250 Ga. App. 628, 552 S.E.2d 870 (2001).

Legs rendered useless. — That the victim can walk for short distances with the aid of braces and a walker does not take away from the fact that for the purposes of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24 the victim's legs have been rendered useless. Magsby v. State, 169 Ga. App. 637, 314 S.E.2d 473 (1984).

Victim's testimony that defendant picked the victim up and threw the victim on the floor on the victim's neck, causing the victim to lose the use of both legs, was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for aggravated battery pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), despite defendant's contrary testimony that the victim simply tripped over a cord. King v. State, 255 Ga. App. 191, 564 S.E.2d 815 (2002).

When a defendant was charged with aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), for rendering a victim's legs useless by shooting the victim, the evidence supporting defendant's conviction was insufficient because no evidence showed that a gunshot wound caused the victim to lose the use of the victim's legs or any other part of the victim's body. Doomes v. State, 261 Ga. App. 442, 583 S.E.2d 151 (2003).

Pouring boiling water over spouse's leg and foot. — Sufficient evidence supported aggravated battery conviction, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), after testimony was received that defendant maliciously injured defendant's spouse and seriously disfigured that spouse by pouring boiling water on the spouse's leg and foot. Jones v. State, 259 Ga. App. 698, 577 S.E.2d 878 (2003).

Evidence sufficient for aggravated battery because hot bleach thrown on victim. — Evidence supported defendant's conviction for aggravated battery as defendant threw a cup of hot bleach on the victim and then repeatedly punched the victim in the face; the bleach burned and discolored the victim's face and severely damaged the victim's left eye. Payne v. State, 273 Ga. App. 483, 615 S.E.2d 564 (2005).

Harm to spouse's sexual organ. — Defendant's actions in biting and severing part of the defendant's spouse's genitals while the defendant was performing oral sex on the spouse, done as revenge for the spouse's infidelity, constituted serious disfigurement sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault. Byrd v. State, 251 Ga. App. 83, 553 S.E.2d 380 (2001).

Brain injury to infant. — Testimony that the defendant's baby spent 15 days in intensive care and, over a year later, was still being treated for head injuries was sufficient for the jury to find that the baby had suffered a loss of normal brain functioning (i.e., was deprived of a member of the body) to convict the defendant of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Nichols v. State, 278 Ga. App. 46, 628 S.E.2d 131 (2006).

Disfigurement need not be permanent. — To constitute the crime of aggravated battery, there is no requirement that, in addition to being "serious," the disfigurement of a victim be permanent. In re H.S., 199 Ga. App. 481, 405 S.E.2d 323 (1991).

Factual issue of serious disfigurement for jury. — Whether six scars from gunshot wounds, plus a large scar from operation to remove a bullet, constitute serious disfigurement is a factual issue for the jury. Miller v. State, 155 Ga. App. 54, 270 S.E.2d 466 (1980).

Whether a scar constituted serious disfigurement was a jury question and the trial court did not err in refusing to direct a verdict of acquittal on the charge of aggravated battery. Grace v. State, 210 Ga. App. 718, 437 S.E.2d 485 (1993).

Evidence authorized finding of serious disfigurement. — Evidence authorized a finding that the victim had incurred a serious disfigurement to the victim's head as the result of being intentionally struck by defendant, where the victim suffered a broken nose and a laceration to the scalp requiring several stitches. In re H.S., 199 Ga. App. 481, 405 S.E.2d 323 (1991).

When the defendant broke the victim's nose with a metal pipe, and a surgeon testified as to how the victim's nose was rebroken and replaced in its proper position, the jury could find that the victim suffered serious disfigurement under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24. Underwood v. State, 283 Ga. App. 638, 642 S.E.2d 324 (2007).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated battery, and other related crimes, sufficient evidence existed authorizing the jury to find that the victim's facial injuries were seriously disfiguring after the victim testified that the victim's eye socket was broken in three places, causing the eyeball to recede into the victim's head after the defendant beat the victim; the victim also testified that the victim's cheekbone and nose were broken, four ribs were broken, the victim's adenoids and eardrums burst, and the injuries required the victim to undergo multiple surgeries, including having wires placed in the victim's cheekbone and eye socket, one eye pulled back into place, and a plastic implant placed behind the eye. Ferrell v. State, 283 Ga. App. 471, 641 S.E.2d 658 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence of disfigurement to support a defendant's conviction for aggravated battery with regard to the abuse inflicted upon the defendant's two year old child based on the numerous visible injuries inflicted on the child, and a CT scan that showed a skull fracture, which required a long period of hospitalization. Yearwood v. State, 297 Ga. App. 633, 678 S.E.2d 114 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty of aggravated battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) beyond a reasonable doubt because the jury could reasonably find that the victim's broken nose constituted serious disfigurement. Seymore v. State, 300 Ga. App. 523, 685 S.E.2d 772 (2009).

Evidence that a belt used by a defendant to hit the victim created knots deep under the victim's skin and discoloration still visible during defendant's trial a year later, and that the severity and depth of those knots put the victim at risk for blood clots and deep vein thrombosis, was sufficient for the jury to determine that the victim was seriously disfigured and to sustain the defendant's conviction for aggravated battery. Pierce v. State, 301 Ga. App. 167, 687 S.E.2d 185 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0549, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 244 (Ga. 2010).

Sufficient injury to warrant conviction for aggravated battery. — Evidence that nine-week-old infant had numerous abrasions, lacerations, and bruises, as well as nine fractured ribs, showed sufficient injury to warrant conviction for aggravated battery. Thompson v. State, 156 Ga. App. 1, 273 S.E.2d 894 (1980).

Based on the victim's testimony that not only was the victim's arm broken, but that it jerked out of place, a rational trier of fact could conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the arm was seriously disfigured and that defendant was guilty of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24. Hopkins v. State, 255 Ga. App. 202, 564 S.E.2d 805 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated battery as it showed that defendant was upset with the victim and wanted to confront the victim, defendant did in fact confront the victim while the victim was sitting in the victim's car, defendant had an angry and hostile demeanor during the confrontation, defendant started the verbal and physical confrontation, and defendant seriously disfigured the victim who sustained multiple cut wounds, including cuts to the head that took 30 staples to close. Campbell v. State, 258 Ga. App. 863, 575 S.E.2d 748 (2002).

Trial court properly rejected the defendant's contention that an aggravated battery conviction had to be reversed, as the stabbing left no part of the victim's body seriously disfigured, given the victim's testimony that: (1) the victim was hospitalized for three days; (2) the stabbing had violated the victim's skin and fatty tissue and exposed the sternum; (3) the tip of the knife used penetrated the sternum or had slipped to the side of the sternum and then punctured the tissues immediately underneath the sternum; and (4) for a month after the incident, the victim suffered intermittent shortness of breath and heavy chest pain; and that for about eight months, the victim was unable to work a job as a machine operator cutting metal. Parnell v. State, 280 Ga. App. 665, 634 S.E.2d 763 (2006).

Testimony indicating that the defendant struck the victim in the head and on the arm with a pry bar, breaking the victim's arm and pulling the flesh away from the victim's head, was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24 and aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21. Mattis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 49, 637 S.E.2d 787 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) because the record showed that defendant cut a deep gash across the victim's abdomen using a knife with a 3.5 inch blade, stabbed the victim two more times, and then chased the victim as the victim fled. Brinkley v. State, 301 Ga. App. 827, 689 S.E.2d 116 (2009).

Introduction of civil lawsuit in criminal proceeding. — Defendant's malice murder and aggravated battery convictions were upheld on appeal as the trial court did not err in introducing into evidence the pleadings filed in a civil lawsuit brought by defendant against the victim and others as the evidence was introduced to show the defendant's motive or state of mind. Taylor v. State, 282 Ga. 44, 644 S.E.2d 850 (2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 950, 128 S. Ct. 384, 169 L. Ed. 2d 263 (2007).

Statute sufficient to give due notice of prohibited acts causing serious disfigurement. — When there was evidence that the defendant hit the defendant's mother-in-law, breaking her nose; that the defendant hit her repeatedly; that the results of the defendant's beating were severe, extensive bruises throughout the face and eyes, and forehead with deep lacerations at the bridge of her nose, her right brow, and her left temple, with arterial bleeding flowing from the final laceration; and, that the totality of the injuries required approximately 25 stitches, the prohibition in former Code 1933, § 26-1305 against maliciously causing bodily harm to another by seriously disfiguring the person's body gave the defendant due notice that the statute prohibited the acts for which defendant was convicted. Baker v. State, 246 Ga. 317, 271 S.E.2d 360 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24).

Evidence sufficient for aggravated battery of officer. — Because sufficient evidence was presented showing that the defendant cut a correctional officer's face with either a razor blade or other sharp object, requiring more than 150 stitches and cosmetic surgery to repair, the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault and aggravated battery upon a correctional officer were upheld on appeal. White v. State, 289 Ga. App. 224, 656 S.E.2d 567 (2008).

Knowledge that victim was officer is essential element. — Charge was inadequate, and the convictions of the indictment were vacated when the court defined the elements of the charges of aggravated assault and aggravated battery without any reference to the element of defendant's knowledge that the victim was a police officer. Chandler v. State, 204 Ga. App. 816, 421 S.E.2d 288 (1992).

Exclusion of evidence relevant to exculpatory theories as reversible error. — When defendant was convicted of seriously disfiguring the body of the victim, evidence that the victim had previously attacked defendant's spouse during a custody hearing in court and evidence that a major part of the harm done to the victim was the result, not of defendant's fist, but of the foot of defendant's spouse, was relevant to the issues raised by exculpatory theories, and exclusion of such evidence constituted reversible error. Baker v. State, 246 Ga. 317, 271 S.E.2d 360 (1980).

Evidence of victim's alcoholism. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated battery and simple battery were affirmed as the trial court properly refused to admit evidence of the victim's alcoholism prior to the victim's involvement with the defendant when the defendant failed to show any nexus between the victim's alcoholism and the conclusion that the victim had falsely accused the defendant of battery. Harris v. State, 263 Ga. App. 329, 587 S.E.2d 819 (2003).

Evidence of victim's conduct not admitted. — In a defendant's trial for aggravated battery against a victim more than 65 years of age in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) and (d), evidence that the victim had fondled the defendant's genitals when the defendant was 15 was not admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 to support the defendant's claim of justification under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21. Strozier v. State, 300 Ga. App. 199, 685 S.E.2d 743 (2009).

Conduct outside scope of involuntary manslaughter. — Whether the conduct of an accused is lawful at the outset, e.g., in self-defense or unlawful, where what takes place thereafter discloses felonious conduct in committing either an aggravated assault with an instrument likely to produce death or an aggravated battery which causes the death of another, such conduct is not within the scope of involuntary manslaughter. Trask v. State, 132 Ga. App. 645, 208 S.E.2d 591 (1974).

Aggravated assault occurring after aggravated battery. — When defendant was convicted of aggravated assault and aggravated battery under an indictment as to aggravated assault alleging that defendant aided, abetted, advised, and encouraged defendant's son to shoot the victim, this occurred prior to the aggravated battery, and there is no evidence that after the victim was shot, defendant advised and encouraged the son to kill the victim, but in fact, prevented the son from doing so, it was error to sentence defendant for both offenses, and the sentence as to aggravated assault with intent to murder must be set aside. Overstreet v. State, 182 Ga. App. 809, 357 S.E.2d 103 (1987).

No merger of related offenses. — Trial court did not err in failing to merge aggravated battery and armed robbery convictions. The evidence needed to prove each charge was entirely different, as one charge demanded evidence that the defendant shot and seriously disfigured the victim, while the other required proof that the defendant took money from the victim at gunpoint. Smashum v. State, 293 Ga. App. 41, 666 S.E.2d 549 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 952 (Ga. 2008).

Sufficient evidence of requisite criminal intent. — Appellate court rejected the defendant's claim that insufficient evidence with respect to the requisite criminal intent failed to support an aggravated battery conviction, as the jury could infer intent by: (1) the defendant's act of twisting the victim's head all the way around to the left and slamming it towards the car floorboard; (2) the fact that the incident occurred during a heated argument that extended over several hours and had previously resulted in physical violence towards the victim; (3) the defendant's refusal to take the victim to a hospital or call the victim's mother after the incident; (4) the defendant's subsequent flight from law enforcement; and (5) evidence of two prior similar transactions admitted against the defendant involving assaults on a previous girlfriend. Collins v. State, 283 Ga. App. 188, 641 S.E.2d 208 (2007).

Evidence sufficient to support conviction. — Evidence sufficient to sustain convictions of arson in the first degree and two counts of aggravated battery. Rhodes v. State, 187 Ga. App. 218, 370 S.E.2d 219 (1988); Williams v. State, 187 Ga. App. 355, 370 S.E.2d 210 (1988).

Testimony by the victim, in which the victim positively identified defendant as the man who entered the victim's home, and committed the crimes of robbery by intimidation, kidnapping, aggravated assault, aggravated assault with a knife, aggravated battery and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, charged in the indictment and eyewitness testimony that defendant entered the victim's premises minutes before the attack of the victim was sufficient to authorize the jury's finding that defendant was guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt, of committing the crimes charged in the indictment. Mobley v. State, 211 Ga. App. 709, 441 S.E.2d 73 (1994).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendants' convictions for aggravated assault with intent to rob and aggravated battery. Autry v. State, 230 Ga. App. 773, 498 S.E.2d 304 (1998).

Application (Cont'd)

Proof that defendant's unjustified and malicious blows to the victim's head caused memory lapses and permanent nerve damage is sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict that defendant committed aggravated battery by depriving the victim of a member of the victim's body. Scott v. State, 243 Ga. App. 383, 532 S.E.2d 141 (2000).

Evidence showing that the victim, defendant's son, was subjected to unspeakable abuse at defendant's hands, and that the victim suffered a broken arm, amply supported defendant's aggravated battery conviction. Mashburn v. State, 244 Ga. App. 524, 536 S.E.2d 208 (2000).

Evidence that defendant struck the victim in the face with such force that defendant suffered a broken jaw was sufficient to support conviction. Ellis v. State, 245 Ga. App. 807, 539 S.E.2d 184 (2000).

Appellate court found that when a victim positively identified defendant as the person who came to the residence where the victim was visiting, assaulted and coerced the victim into showing defendant where certain drugs and money were stashed in the residence, and then dragged the victim to the backyard where defendant slit the victim's throat twice and left the victim for dead, the evidence sufficed to sustain an aggravated battery conviction. Kelly v. State, 255 Ga. App. 813, 567 S.E.2d 36 (2002).

Evidence that defendant intentionally stabbed a man with a knife, causing a wound that required 100 stitches and that left a scar on the victim's side, was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Townsend v. State, 256 Ga. App. 837, 570 S.E.2d 47 (2002).

Since the state proved that defendant committed aggravated battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), by rendering the victim's brain useless and by depriving the victim of a brain through defendant's punches and kicks, the conviction was upheld. Miller v. State, 275 Ga. 730, 571 S.E.2d 788 (2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 1004, 123 S. Ct. 1911, 155 L. Ed. 2d 835 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated stalking and aggravated battery as the defendant's spouse had just parked at a supermarket when the defendant ran a vehicle into the spouse's vehicle, the defendant then approached the spouse, threatened to kill the spouse, opened the door, grabbed and twisted the spouse's wrist, and punched the spouse's nose, breaking the nose; on the date of the incident, a permanent protective order was in effect prohibiting the defendant from contacting the spouse or the spouse's family, or touching or damaging their property. Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 413, 579 S.E.2d 809 (2003).

Evidence that the defendant, a convicted felon, accompanied the victim to a store with the codefendant; shot the victim in the head with a handgun that the defendant had in defendant's possession thereby, causing a wound in which the victim lost one eye; and along with the codefendant took all the victim's money was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated battery. Drummer v. State, 264 Ga. App. 617, 591 S.E.2d 481 (2003); Griggs v. State, 264 Ga. App. 636, 592 S.E.2d 168 (2003).

Reviewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict, the evidence was sufficient to support the verdicts against defendant for false imprisonment, aggravated battery, and simple assault in regard to acts of domestic violence against the victim, defendant's spouse, as the evidence showed that defendant dragged the spouse down a hallway by the spouse's hair and held the spouse in a bedroom against the spouse's will, that defendant broke the spouse's nose and arm, and that defendant beat the spouse with a car-washing brush. Mize v. State, 262 Ga. App. 486, 585 S.E.2d 913 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions against defendant for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 and aggravated battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24, when the victim identified defendant from a pre-trial photograph and from in-court identification, a codefendant and a witness testified against defendant, and the gun used to shoot the victim was found near the car with shell casings in the car. Dunn v. State, 262 Ga. App. 643, 586 S.E.2d 352 (2003).

Evidence that defendant, the estranged spouse of the victim, shot the victim twice and caused the spouse to be paralyzed from the neck down was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated battery. Colbert v. State, 263 Ga. App. 193, 587 S.E.2d 300 (2003).

Evidence in the form of testimony from defendant's accomplices that defendant repeatedly struck the victim in the face while asking the victim "where the money was" and choked the victim when the victim could not immediately find the money in the victim's truck after defendant took the victim to the truck because the victim told defendant that the money was there, coupled with defendant's possession of the victim's beeper, was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for robbery, kidnapping with bodily injury, and aggravated battery. Rutledge v. State, 263 Ga. App. 308, 587 S.E.2d 808 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of causing the victim's death while committing an aggravated battery against the victim, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-1(c) and 16-5-24, because defendant was seen walking toward the residence defendant shared with the victim, after a neighbor had called the police to report a disturbance there, carrying a gas can that appeared to be heavy, and, therefore, not empty, after which the victim was seen on the porch of the residence, in flames, and defendant, who was sitting on the porch, refused the requests of passersby attempting to give the victim assistance by providing a blanket to smother the flames, which caused the victim's death shortly thereafter. Lowe v. State, 276 Ga. 538, 579 S.E.2d 728 (2003).

Defendant's attempt to invoke the circumstantial evidence rule of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was rejected, and the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated battery, as the evidence was not entirely circumstantial where there was direct evidence that: (1) defendant said that defendant was going to set the victim on fire; (2) defendant was present and poured the gasoline on the victim; (3) defendant reached in defendant's pocket for something just before the fire started; and (4) the victim questioned why defendant had done it. Miller v. State, 265 Ga. App. 402, 593 S.E.2d 943 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to show that defendant was guilty of two counts of aggravated assault, one count of aggravated battery, and one count of possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, as the evidence showed that defendant shot the victim in the abdomen and the arm with a gun and that defendant intended to cause serious physical harm and disfigurement to the victim. King v. State, 269 Ga. App. 658, 605 S.E.2d 63 (2004).

Because defendant shot the victim in the buttocks, rendering the victim's rectum and a portion of the victim's colon useless for a period of time, the evidence sufficed to sustain an aggravated battery conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a); consequently, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Parham v. State, 270 Ga. App. 54, 606 S.E.2d 79 (2004).

Victim was shot while running away from the victim's home following an armed robbery, and although the codefendant testified that the codefendant accidentally shot the victim, the victim's testimony showed that both perpetrators fought with the victim inside the victim's home and that after the victim was shot, both perpetrators struggled over the gun, and one of the defendant's said, "Kill him"; sufficient evidence supported the defendant's aggravated battery conviction. Daniel v. State, 271 Ga. App. 539, 610 S.E.2d 90 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, kidnapping with bodily injury, and possession of a knife during the commission of a felony, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2), 16-5-24, 16-5-40, and 16-11-106, respectively, were supported by the evidence, as the defendant was engaged in a domestic dispute with the defendant's spouse and child, wherein the defendant argued, threatened to kill them, and locked them in a bathroom, punched and hit the spouse, and stabbed them each multiple times with a decorative sword that the defendant removed from the wall; there was sufficient evidence to show that the defendant did not stab them in the midst of a struggle over possession of the sword, but instead, that the defendant intended to stab or cut them. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for armed robbery, possession of a weapon during the commission of a crime, aggravated assault, burglary, aggravated battery, and impersonating an officer because defendant kicked in the door of a home while shouting that defendant was a "federal agent," fired a shotgun through a door, shooting off a victim's thumb, inserted the barrel of the shotgun in the same person's mouth, and demanded money, which the victims turned over, two codefendants identified defendant as the user of the shotgun, and defendant's DNA was found on a ski mask recovered from the getaway car and defendant's fingerprints were found on the car. Garrison v. State, 276 Ga. App. 243, 622 S.E.2d 910 (2005).

Defendant's conviction as a party for aggravated assault and aggravated battery was affirmed as: (1) the defendant drove a car knowing a gun was inside; (2) the defendant extinguished the headlights and drove slowly past a crowded corner as a passenger opened fire; (3) the defendant stopped the car next to a prone victim while the passenger continued shooting; and (4) the defendant told the police that the defendant did not care who had been shot. Ford v. State, 280 Ga. App. 580, 634 S.E.2d 522 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, aggravated battery, and possessing a firearm during the commission of a felony were supported by evidence that: (1) the victim and the defendant had an acrimonious relationship; (2) the defendant threatened to hit the victim with a jug; and (3) the defendant's statement that the victim was not "dead yet" after the victim was shot in the back; the jury could reject the defendant's claim that the defendant fired a warning shot away from the victim and could convict the defendant, even though the victim did not see the defendant point the gun at the victim. Rowe v. State, 280 Ga. App. 881, 635 S.E.2d 251 (2006).

Victim's prior statements to a responding police officer and to an investigator that the defendant beat the victim, photographs of the victim's injuries, and evidence of prior difficulties between the defendant and the victim constituted sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Meeks v. State, 281 Ga. App. 334, 636 S.E.2d 77 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for aggravated battery as there was evidence supporting an inference that the victim's first wound was non-fatal, as the victim managed to flee a short distance into a neighbor's yard before succumbing to the gunfire; the trial court was not required to grant the defendant's motion for a directed verdict on the aggravated battery charge, and the trial court did not err by allowing the jury to consider the crime of aggravated battery as an aggravating circumstance of the murder. Thomason v. State, 281 Ga. 429, 637 S.E.2d 639 (2006).

Aggravated battery and obstruction or hindering an emergency telephone call convictions were upheld on appeal, despite a change in the victim's story, as the injuries sustained were consistent with the victim's original statements, foundational requirements supported the admission of hearsay statements regarding the injuries, the victim's actual written inconsistent statement was properly withheld from the jury, and a mistrial was unwarranted. Buchanan v. State, 282 Ga. App. 298, 638 S.E.2d 436 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and first-degree child cruelty pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a), 16-5-24(a), and 16-5-70(b) for participating in a drive-by shooting were supported by sufficient evidence because the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 and it was the function of the jury to evaluate the credibility of witnesses; based on the testimony of the witnesses to the shooting, a reasonable jury could have rejected the defendant's claims and determined that the defendant was a party to each of the crimes. Hill v. State, 282 Ga. App. 743, 639 S.E.2d 637 (2006).

Defendant's aggravated battery conviction was upheld on appeal based on: (1) sufficient evidence showing that the victim lost the use of an elbow when the elbow was broken during the beating with the defendant; (2) the trial court's proper jury instructions as to the offense; and (3) counsel's representation at trial, which was not made ineffective due to a failure to object to certain testimony. Walls v. State, 283 Ga. App. 560, 642 S.E.2d 195 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence that a victim had been deprived of the use of the victim's extremities under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) when the victim's doctor testified that the victim would not regain full mobility of the victim's arm or hand and would likely suffer from arthritis for the rest of the victim's life, the bones in the victim's arm had been broken into several pieces, the victim had been immobilized by a fixation device, a cast, and a splint, and the victim had spent a month in the hospital with the victim's extremities in restrictive devices. McClain v. State, 284 Ga. App. 187, 643 S.E.2d 273 (2007).

Defendant's convictions for malice murder, aggravated battery, burglary, and violation of the Georgia Controlled Substances Act by unlawfully possessing cocaine and marijuana were supported by sufficient evidence; the defendant walked into a neighbor's house with a butcher knife in each hand and stabbed two people, knives found in the woods behind the defendant's apartment matched the descriptions of those used in the stabbings and had deoxyribonucleic acid matching the defendant's, two knives were missing from a knife block in the defendant's apartment, marijuana and cocaine were found in the apartment, the defendant told a friend that the defendant had "hurt some people really bad," and three eyewitnesses identified the defendant as the assailant. Swanson v. State, 282 Ga. 39, 644 S.E.2d 845 (2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of malice murder, two counts of felony murder, kidnapping with bodily injury, two counts of armed robbery, and aggravated battery as: the defendant had been seen fleeing the victim's home in a car registered to the defendant; the defendant told the defendant's spouse to discard the defendant's bloody clothing; the defendant sought treatment at a hospital after being shot during the crimes; and the defendant had initiated conversations in which the defendant described the actions of the defendant's companions in discarding guns used in the crimes and offered to reveal the names of the companions in exchange for not being charged with murder. Davis v. State, 281 Ga. 871, 644 S.E.2d 113 (2007).

Since the evidence presented at the defendant's trial showed, and the defendant admitted, that the defendant was holding a gun that shot the defendant's boyfriend in the neck and paralyzed him, and there was no evidence presented indicating that the act of shooting the boyfriend was in self-defense, sufficient evidence existed to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault. Worthy v. State, 286 Ga. App. 77, 648 S.E.2d 682 (2007).

Aggravated assault and aggravated battery convictions were upheld on appeal as: (1) sufficient evidence was presented for the jury to reject the defendant's self-defense claim; (2) two photographs were properly admitted as innocuous demonstrative aids to show the scene of the crime and the defendant's location; and (3) the trial court did not improperly give the court's opinion about the evidence, but merely attempted to clarify the state's position. Whitaker v. State, 287 Ga. App. 465, 652 S.E.2d 568 (2007).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault, two counts of aggravated battery, and possessing a firearm during the commission of a felony; the defendant told the victim, who had walked into a common hallway in the defendant's apartment building, to leave, went inside, retrieved a gun, and shot the victim twice after the victim refused to leave, and then shot at the victim while the victim was fleeing. Johnson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 435, 657 S.E.2d 333 (2008).

Because sufficient evidence of the defendant's attack on the victim, repeatedly stabbing the victim and rendering the victim's wrist useless, supported an aggravated battery charge, and the defendant was adequately put on notice of the charge by the indictment, a conviction on that charge was supported by the evidence. Thus, a conviction based on this evidence did not violate due process. Goss v. State, 289 Ga. App. 734, 658 S.E.2d 168 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and burglary when the victim unhesitatingly identified the defendant as one of the people who attacked the victim with a bat or a pipe; the victim's roommate was about "70 percent sure" that the defendant was one of the attackers; the defendant came to the victim's door earlier in the evening and told someone in the street, "Oh no, not now"; one of the attackers threatened the victim because the victim befriended the attacker's paramour; the paramour, who was a friend of the defendant and who had called the victim to the victim's door before the attack, knew that the victim had come into some cash; and the parent of the defendant's child testified that the defendant and others left the house saying that they were going to get into a fight. Furthermore, the victim sustained a stab wound in the liver, a shattered jaw, a broken foot, a stab to the elbow, damage to the facial nerves, and a double hernia and was in constant pain and could not work. Drew v. State, 291 Ga. App. 306, 661 S.E.2d 675 (2008).

Victim's testimony that after being shot by the defendant, the victim was left with nerve damage to the shoulder from which the victim had not fully recovered, was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Serchion v. State, 293 Ga. App. 629, 667 S.E.2d 624 (2008).

Victim testified that as the victim walked in front of the defendant's car, the defendant hit the gas pedal, throwing the victim onto the hood; accelerated when the victim asked the defendant to stop; and slammed on the brakes, causing the victim to slide down the hood, and the victim's legs and foot to be broken as they went underneath the car. As the victim's testimony alone was sufficient to establish these facts under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the defendant was properly convicted of aggravated battery. Cash v. State, 293 Ga. App. 702, 667 S.E.2d 691 (2008).

Jury was authorized to find that the defendant committed aggravated battery by seriously disfiguring the victim's face and rendering the victim's hand useless. The victim testified that the defendant beat the victim repeatedly, causing many injuries, including a scar above the victim's eye and trauma to the victim's hand that left the hand useless for several weeks; furthermore, there was photographic evidence of the injuries. Mack v. State, 294 Ga. App. 518, 669 S.E.2d 487 (2008).

Evidence that the defendant shot the victim at close range; that the victim, who knew the defendant well, identified the defendant from a photo line-up and at trial; and that a witness told police of driving the defendant to find the victim and of witnessing the shooting was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated battery, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of those crimes. Spencer v. State, 296 Ga. App. 828, 676 S.E.2d 274 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault and aggravated battery. The evidence showed that the defendant and other gang members opened fire on a crowd of rival gang members and that the bullets also wounded two people inside a duplex; the jury chose to disbelieve the defendant's alibi witnesses and to believe that of the eyewitnesses. Lopez v. State, 297 Ga. App. 618, 677 S.E.2d 776 (2009), overruled on other grounds, State v. Gardner, 286 Ga. 633, 690 S.E.2d 164 (2010).

Convictions of aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24, aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, were not supported by sufficient evidence because, although the defendant's conduct before the crime was suspicious, the circumstantial evidence against the defendant was insufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6; the state did not show that the defendant was anywhere near the scene at the time of the shooting, did not present evidence connecting a weapon used in the shooting to the defendant, and, although a witness testified that three days before the shooting, the witness saw the defendant's brother hand the defendant a gun, the witness could not identify the type of gun involved, and this testimony did not connect the defendant with the shooting. The state also failed to adduce evidence that the defendant intentionally aided, abetted, or encouraged the commission of the crimes of which the defendant was convicted. Gresham v. State, 298 Ga. App. 136, 679 S.E.2d 344 (2009).

Defendant's aggravated battery conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) was supported by evidence that the defendant and the codefendant burned the victim's hand and that the codefendant placed a red ant nest on the victim's body, resulting in numerous bites. Wilkinson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 190, 679 S.E.2d 766 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, armed robbery, and kidnapping. The victims' in-court identifications of the defendant and the codefendant were buttressed by the evidence that a cell phone in the defendants' possession matched that taken from the victims, that a car of the type used by the robbers contained guns similar to those used in the robbery, and the fact that the codefendant had a key to that car. Wright v. State, 300 Ga. App. 32, 684 S.E.2d 102 (2009).

Evidence supported the jury's determination that the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of aggravated assault and aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-5-24, because although the victim was under the influence of alcohol and in severe pain when making statements to the police and the emergency room physician, it was within the jury's province to find the victim's statements more credible than the victim's trial testimony; the victim's statements in a request to dismiss the charges, which acknowledged that the defendant was the individual who attacked the victim, did not occur while the victim was under any physical impairment. Works v. State, 301 Ga. App. 108, 686 S.E.2d 863 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0458, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 251 (Ga. 2010).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), sexual battery, O.C.G.A.

§ 16-6-22.1(b), aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), and assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1), because the victim's testimony that the defendant raped, sodomized, punched, burned, and threatened to kill the victim was sufficient to authorize the defendant's convictions. Harris v. State, 308 Ga. App. 523, 707 S.E.2d 908 (2011).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of armed robbery under O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), burglary under O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1(a)(2), possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b), and conspiracy to possess cocaine under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-8 and 16-13-30(a) as a conspirator because, while the uncorroborated testimony of one accomplice was insufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the evidence sufficed to sustain the defendant's conviction when an additional accomplice provided testimony to corroborate that of the first accomplice. Both codefendants testified that the defendant was present from the robbery's inception through the robbery's execution, that the defendant was aware of the conspiracy to obtain the victim's money and cocaine by armed robbery, and that the defendant willingly participated in the crimes and shared the criminal intent of those who committed the crimes inside the victim's residence by supplying the defendant's car and acting as a get-away driver. Watson v. State, No. A11A0090, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 295 (Mar. 28, 2011).

Attack with a bottle sufficient for conviction. — Evidence that the defendant attacked the victim with a bottle and bit off one of the victim's ears is sufficient to support a conviction. Drayton v. State, 167 Ga. App. 477, 306 S.E.2d 731 (1983).

Injury to nose sufficient for conviction. — Evidence that defendant struck the victim in the face with such force that the blow fractured the victim's nose was sufficient to support conviction. Pollard v. State, 230 Ga. App. 159, 495 S.E.2d 629 (1998).

Evidence showing that the defendant shattered the victim's nasal bone and caused permanent injury to the victim's sinuses was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated battery. Silvers v. State, 245 Ga. App. 486, 538 S.E.2d 135 (2000).

When the indictment alleged that the defendant deprived the victim of a bodily member, the victim's nose, the evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction, and there was not a fatal variance between the indictment and the proof; a nose is a bodily member under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), and the victim's nasal drainage and blood leakage prior to surgery, as well as the victim's testimony that the victim's nose was still not "all the way" at the time of trial, could constitute evidence of loss of use. Jones v. State, 283 Ga. App. 631, 642 S.E.2d 331 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for aggravated battery against child. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendants' convictions of cruelty to children and aggravated battery when the medical testimony concerning the extent and possible cause of the victim's injuries, evidence of defendants' complacent demeanor, and testimony concerning their access to the victim were but some of the factors from which the jury could find the defendants guilty. Thomas v. State, 262 Ga. App. 492, 589 S.E.2d 243 (2003).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for cruelty to children and aggravated battery because there were a multitude of factors from which the jury could determine defendant's guilt. Hood v. State, 273 Ga. App. 430, 615 S.E.2d 244 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions on four counts of aggravated battery and one count of cruelty to children in the first degree after the 17-month-old child of a love interest was found with hot-water immersion burns incurred while the defendant was watching the child for the love interest; the jury was free to reject the explanation that defendant had no criminal intent at the time the burns were incurred and find that the only reasonable hypothesis was that defendant maliciously and intentionally immersed the baby in hot water after the baby soiled a diaper, especially since the explanations were not consistent with the evidence. Lee v. State, 275 Ga. App. 93, 619 S.E.2d 767 (2005).

Evidence that the defendant kicked and slammed the infant child of the defendant's love interest, breaking an arm and legs, and that, although the defendant knew the severity of the child's injuries, failed to procure medical treatment for the child on the day of the incident and for the following three days was sufficient to enable a jury to conclude that the defendant was guilty of the offense of aggravated battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). McKee v. State, 275 Ga. App. 646, 621 S.E.2d 611 (2005).

Evidence supported defendants' convictions for aggravated battery and cruelty to children because the jury was free not only to reject defendants' explanations of the child's injuries as unreasonable, but to find that the state's case, including testimony as to the extent and cause of the child's injuries and as to defendants' access to the child, excluded every reasonable possibility save defendants' guilt. Hunnicutt v. State, 276 Ga. App. 547, 623 S.E.2d 714 (2005).

Trial court properly denied a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1(a) since there was ample circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 for the jury to have found that the defendant was guilty of aggravated battery, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a); the defendant's claim that the defendant tripped and fell while carrying the infant child was contradicted by expert testimony that the injury to the infant's brain was caused by shaken baby syndrome. Lindo v. State, 278 Ga. App. 228, 628 S.E.2d 665 (2006).

Evidence, including the defendant's admission to squeezing and shaking the child and the testimony of the forensic pediatrician that the child's injuries were consistent with being squeezed, was sufficient to convict the defendant of child cruelty in the first degree under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) and aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Bass v. State, 282 Ga. App. 159, 637 S.E.2d 863 (2006).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault, aggravated battery, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct in connection with the death of the 16-month-old victim after: the defendant repeatedly fed the victim tomatoes despite the victim's allergic reactions to the tomatoes; two days before the victim's fatal injuries, the victim had numerous bruises, a black eye, and a split bottom lip; while the victim was in the hospital for the fatal injuries, the defendant repeatedly asked a babysitter to persuade the defendant's five-year-old child to say that the child had taken the victim out of the bathtub; the defendant asked medical personnel whether it could be proven that the victim was shaken; and medical evidence showed that the victim's death was consistent with violent shaking by a person of adult strength. Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions for the felony murder and aggravated battery of the defendant's two-month-old child: (1) the child, who had been in good health at a pediatric checkup earlier in the day, was limp and cold when the defendant brought the child to an office where the child's other parent had an appointment; (2) the child was diagnosed as a "shaken baby"; and (3) the defendant was the only person with the child during and immediately prior to the onset of the child's symptoms. Smith v. State, 283 Ga. 237, 657 S.E.2d 523 (2008).

Jury resolves issue of self defense. — Evidence was sufficient to affirm defendant's aggravated battery conviction; whether defendant engaged in unprovoked attacks or acted in self-defense or in defense of defendant's love interest was for the jury to resolve, and the jury obviously resolved the question in defendant's disfavor. Chalvatzis v. State, 265 Ga. App. 699, 595 S.E.2d 558 (2004).

Aggravated battery by juvenile against parent. — Delinquency judgment upon a determination that a juvenile committed acts which, if committed by an adult, would have constituted the felony of aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), was proper. The juvenile's acts of grabbing, shoving, and pinning the juvenile's parent down and with such force so as to cause a knee injury exceeded the bounds of justification. In the Interest of A.D., 295 Ga. App. 750, 673 S.E.2d 116 (2009).

Compelled medical examination. — Victim could not be compelled to undergo an independent medical examination of victim's eye based on defendant's claim that the injuries were preexisting or did not deprive the victim of eye nor render it useless. Park v. State, 230 Ga. App. 274, 495 S.E.2d 886 (1998).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated battery when defendant maliciously and seriously disfigured a detective's face, ear, and arm, where the defendant cut the detective several times with a boxcutter inflicting a wound requiring 65 stitches and reattachment of the detective's ear. Ramsey v. State, 233 Ga. App. 810, 505 S.E.2d 779 (1998).

There was sufficient evidence to conclude that defendant was the person who attacked the victim with a machete, and that by doing so the defendant was guilty of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon resulting in serious bodily injury, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), and aggravated battery by maliciously causing bodily harm and serious disfigurement, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a); the victim and two other people identified the defendant, and a witness testified that the defendant confided in the witness that the defendant had hit a person with a machete after someone threw an object at the defendant's car. Emerson v. State, 271 Ga. App. 773, 611 S.E.2d 83 (2005).

Factor for death sentence. — Evidence supported the jury's finding of an aggravated battery for purposes of the death penalty under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30(b)(7), after finding petitioner inmate guilty of felony murder, because the evidence showed that the inmate severely beat the victim in the face with a heavy stick, and then finished the victim off by crushing the victim's skull with a log after the victim fell to the ground. Jefferson v. Terry, 490 F. Supp. 2d 1261 (N.D. Ga. 2007), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 570 F.3d 1283 (11th Cir. Ga. 2009).

Sentencing. — Trial court did not err in sentencing defendant because the sentence it imposed on defendant was 10 years in prison and 10 years probation for aggravated assault, 10 years in prison to run concurrently for aggravated battery, and five years confinement to run consecutively for possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, as each part of defendant's sentence was well within the statutory limits for the respective crime involved; accordingly, defendant's sentence would not be modified on appeal. King v. State, 269 Ga. App. 658, 605 S.E.2d 63 (2004).

Trial court erred by failing to merge a defendant's two aggravated battery count convictions for sentencing purposes as the two counts were based on a disfigurement of the victim's back and buttocks and rendering of the victim's legs useless by the single act of the defendant pushing the victim out of a moving car; thus, that act did not violate two distinct statutory provisions. Rather, the state prosecuted the same act for two alleged violations of the same statutory provision, which was not appropriate; therefore, the defendant was entitled to have the two aggravated battery counts merged for sentencing purposes. Gonzales v. State, 298 Ga. App. 821, 681 S.E.2d 248 (2009).

Trial court did not err in sentencing the defendant on two counts of aggravated battery because the indictment alleged that the defendant committed two separate acts against the victim that caused the victim bodily harm; evidence was presented to show that the defendant's act of fracturing the victim's skull was separate from the defendant's act of violently shaking the victim. Eskew v. State, No. A10A2224, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 312 (Mar. 30, 2011).

Consecutive sentences. — When the trial court sentenced the defendant to consecutive 20-year sentences on two aggravated battery convictions, after the defendant was convicted of breaking the victim's ribs and both orbital bones of the victim's eyes, the sentences were not cruel and unusual under the Eighth Amendment; the sentences were within the statutory limits under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), (b), and (h) and did not shock the conscience. Ware v. State, 259 Ga. App. 267, 576 S.E.2d 649 (2003).

Jury Instructions

Charging on lesser included offense. — When the same facts were used to support aggravated assault and aggravated battery charges, the trial court erred in sentencing defendant on the aggravated assault count, the lesser included offense. Riden v. State, 226 Ga. App. 245, 486 S.E.2d 198 (1997).

Trial court did not err in refusing to give defendant's requested charge on reckless conduct, where defendant's own testimony showed that defendant committed a culpable act with criminal intent when defendant threw gasoline on the victim and tossed a lighted match toward the victim. McClain v. State, 232 Ga. App. 282, 502 S.E.2d 266 (1998).

Trial court gave the jury the option to find the defendant guilty of the lesser included offense of misdemeanor battery or of felony aggravated battery as indicted, but since the jury rejected the misdemeanor battery charge and found the additional aggravating elements to warrant a felony conviction, the idea that the jury might have reached a different result had the jury also been charged on the even less culpable misdemeanor of simple battery is not reasonable. Christensen v. State, 245 Ga. App. 165, 537 S.E.2d 446 (2000).

Curative instructions prevented prejudice and obviated mistrial. — In the prosecution of the defendant for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and resisting arrest, because the trial court's curative instructions to the jury obviated the need for a mistrial with respect to statements from a potential juror and cured any prejudice which might have resulted from the prosecutor's closing argument, convictions of those crimes were upheld on appeal. Mitchell v. State, 284 Ga. App. 209, 644 S.E.2d 147 (2007).

Charge on lesser included crimes not required. — When there is uncontradicted evidence that the victim died, it is not necessary to charge on the lesser included crimes of aggravated assault and aggravated battery. Sanders v. State, 251 Ga. 70, 303 S.E.2d 13 (1983).

During the defendant's trial for aggravated battery, the trial court did not err in refusing to give a jury charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct because the defendant did not submit a written request for a reckless conduct charge but orally requested such charge at the close of the evidence. Eskew v. State, No. A10A2224, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 312 (Mar. 30, 2011).

Trial court did not sua sponte err in failing to charge jury on identity as: (1) there was Georgia law requiring a trial judge to warn the jury against the possible dangers of mistaken identification of an accused as the person committing a crime; and (2) such was not required after the jury had already been charged as to the presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, burden of proof, credibility of witnesses, and impeachment of witnesses. Lee v. State, 281 Ga. 776, 642 S.E.2d 835 (2007).

Omitting statutory definition of "visible bodily harm" from instruction error. — By omitting the statutory definition of "visible bodily harm" contained in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1(b), the trial court failed to give the jury the proper framework for evaluating whether a laceration to the victim's nose was severe enough to merit a finding of aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24 or whether only a finding of battery was merited. Thus, the charge was fatally insufficient. Carroll v. State, 293 Ga. App. 721, 667 S.E.2d 708 (2008).

Instructions to jury. — Trial court is not required to define the meaning of "seriously" with regard to the phrase "seriously disfiguring the person's body or a body part" and may properly instruct the jury that the "disfigurement may be temporary." Perkins v. State, 269 Ga. 791, 505 S.E.2d 16 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1118, 119 S. Ct. 1768, 143 L. Ed. 2d 798 (1999).

There was no conflict between the trial court's charge that the victim's loss of the use of an eye need not be permanent and the allegation in the indictment that defendant rendered the victim's eye "useless." Christensen v. State, 245 Ga. App. 165, 537 S.E.2d 446 (2000).

Trial court's jury instructions in defendant's criminal trial on multiple charges arising out of a domestic dispute were proper, as: (1) there was no requirement that the jury be instructed on the element of assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20) in order to be properly instructed on the crime of aggravated assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21); (2) the methods of committing an aggravated battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), were properly defined based on the methods asserted in the indictment; (3) there was no support for a requested charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b); and (4) there was no possibility of a lesser included conviction for false imprisonment (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41), such that instruction only on the indicted offense of kidnapping (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40) was proper. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

At a trial in which defendant was on trial for aggravated battery, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24, and an instruction was provided to the jury on the lesser included offenses of battery and simple battery as they related to the charged offense, the trial court judge did not commit reversible error in responding to the jury's questions, during deliberations, as to which offenses were felonies, as there was no discussion as to the possible sentences associated with each offense. Quintana-Camporredondo v. State, 275 Ga. App. 859, 622 S.E.2d 66 (2005).

In a prosecution for aggravated battery, false imprisonment, and kidnapping, a written Allen charge issued by the court was not coercive, despite the court's use of the phrase "must be decided", given that said language was only a small portion of an otherwise fair and balanced charge, the trial court urged the jury to take their time, and the defendant was acquitted of the kidnapping charge. Benson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 643, 634 S.E.2d 821 (2006).

Reversal of the defendant's aggravated battery conviction was not warranted based on a challenged jury instruction on that offense, as the charge as a whole limited the jury's consideration to the specific manner of committing the crime alleged in the indictment. Walls v. State, 283 Ga. App. 560, 642 S.E.2d 195 (2007).

On appeal from a conviction for voluntary manslaughter as a lesser-included offense of malice murder, the appeals court found that no error or prejudice resulted from the trial court's denial of the defendant's request for an aggravated battery charge as a forcible felony in support of the defendant's justification claim, and affirmed the trial court's choice to charge on aggravated assault and rape, as the defendant failed to present evidence of any reasonable belief that the use of force was necessary to prevent the commission of an aggravated battery. Wicker v. State, 285 Ga. App. 294, 645 S.E.2d 712 (2007).

Because the trial court properly instructed the jury on the law regarding the use of prior consistent statements and on the defense of accident, the appeals court lacked any reason to reverse the defendant's aggravated battery and cruelty to children convictions. Watkins v. State, 290 Ga. App. 41, 658 S.E.2d 812 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault and battery, since the trial court's jury charge tracked the language of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24, the charge was a correct statement of law and the charge was properly tailored to the allegation in the indictment that the victim was deprived of the use of the victim's lower body. As a result, there was no impermissible amendment to the indictment with regard to that charge. Binns v. State, 296 Ga. App. 537, 675 S.E.2d 265 (2009).

Trial court correctly instructed the jury that, under Georgia law, a person committed the offense of aggravated battery when he or she maliciously caused bodily harm to another by seriously disfiguring the person's body or a member thereof because the instruction, which was taken from the pattern jury instructions, was adequately tailored to the indictment and adjusted to the evidence admitted in court; the trial court was not required to instruct the jury on the meaning of "serious disfigurement," and the jury's verdict was supported by ample evidence that the victim's injuries were "seriously disfiguring." Seymore v. State, 300 Ga. App. 523, 685 S.E.2d 772 (2009).

In an aggravated assault case in which the defense was justification under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a), trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a charge defining aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) as a forcible felony for which the use of force was justified. Also, there was no showing that the outcome of the trial would have been different if such a charge had been given. Lewis v. State, 302 Ga. App. 506, 691 S.E.2d 336 (2010).

16-5-25. Opprobrious or abusive language as justification for simple assault or simple battery.

A person charged with the offense of simple assault or simple battery may introduce in evidence any opprobrious or abusive language used by the person against whom force was threatened or used; and the trier of facts may, in its discretion, find that the words used were justification for simple assault or simple battery. (Laws 1833, Cobb's 1851 Digest, p. 786; Code 1863, § 4576; Code 1868, § 4597; Code 1873, § 4694; Code 1882, § 4694; Penal Code 1895, § 103; Penal Code 1910, § 103; Code 1933, § 26-1409; Code 1933, § 26-1306, enacted by Ga. #### JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Opprobrious words are not absolute defense to charge of assault and battery; much less would they be an absolute defense to a charge of contempt of court by acts occurring in the presence of the trial judge in the courtroom during the progress of a trial. Cohran v. Sosebee, 120 Ga. App. 115, 169 S.E.2d 624 (1969).

Past opprobrious words may never serve as a justification for assault and battery. Cawley v. State, 74 Ga. App. 214, 39 S.E.2d 427 (1946); Ailstock v. State, 159 Ga. App. 482, 283 S.E.2d 698 (1981).

Opprobrious words must by nature arouse passions and be said in assaulting party's presence. Opprobrious words which justify an assault and battery must be such as are uttered in the presence of the assaulting party and which, in their nature, are supposed to arouse the passions, and justify, under certain circumstances to be adjudged by the jury, instant and appropriate resentment, not disproportional to the provocation. Berry v. State, 105 Ga. 683, 31 S.E. 592 (1898); Cowart v. State, 9 Ga. App. 169, 70 S.E. 891 (1911); Haygood v. State, 137 Ga. 168, 73 S.E. 81 (1911); Robinson v. De Vaughn, 59 Ga. App. 37, 200 S.E. 213 (1938).

Grimaces or facial expressions do not constitute such words. Behling v. State, 110 Ga. 754, 36 S.E. 85 (1900).

Threats are not necessarily opprobrious. Kimberly v. State, 4 Ga. App. 852, 62 S.E. 571 (1908).

Insulting language used by child of nine years does not furnish adult justification for assault and battery. McKinley v. State, 121 Ga. 193, 48 S.E. 917 (1904).

Exchange of opprobrious words would not necessarily bar first speaker from pleading justification. — Exchange of opprobrious words between two parties immediately leading to an assault would not under all circumstances bar the party who first used such words from pleading justification. Bagley v. State, 85 Ga. App. 570, 69 S.E.2d 799 (1952).

Speaker of opprobrious words entitled to resist provoked assault. — If the assault upon the accused is made with a weapon likely to produce death, and a manner apparently dangerous to life, the fact that the accused provoked the assault by opprobrious words would not put the accused in the wrong for resisting it, so far as is necessary to the accused's defense; and a seeming necessity, if acted on in good faith, is equivalent to a real necessity. Mitchell v. State, 54 Ga. App. 254, 187 S.E. 675 (1936).

Battery cannot be disproportionate to opprobrious words used, and never to the extent of taking life, intentionally or unintentionally where the battery is excessive. Any step beyond proportionate resentment carries one into the mire of unlawfulness, whether there be one or many blows. Collum v. State, 65 Ga. App. 740, 16 S.E.2d 483 (1941).

Opprobrious words do not justify homicide. Robinson v. State, 118 Ga. 198, 44 S.E. 985 (1903).

Publication in newspaper is no excuse for assault and battery. Haygood v. State, 10 Ga. App. 394, 73 S.E. 423 (1912).

Conduct not amounting to justification may be pleaded and proved in extenuation and mitigation of damages. Robinson v. De Vaughn, 59 Ga. App. 37, 200 S.E. 213 (1938).

When proof of deceased's violent and turbulent character is admissible. — Proof of violent and turbulent character of deceased is admissible only when it is shown prima facie that deceased was assailant, that accused had been assailed, and that defendant was honestly seeking to defend self. Ailstock v. State, 159 Ga. App. 482, 283 S.E.2d 698 (1981).

Testimony concerning victim's general reputation for violence is admissible to corroborate testimony of accused that deceased was violent on occasion in question on theory that one with general reputation for violence is more likely to have been violent toward accused than one with a gentle reputation. Ailstock v. State, 159 Ga. App. 482, 283 S.E.2d 698 (1981).

Justification for battery is jury question. — Justification for a battery based on former Code 1933, § 26-1409 is always a question for the jury in each case under all the facts and circumstances adduced on the trial. Collum v. State, 65 Ga. App. 740, 16 S.E.2d 483 (1941).

Use of opprobrious words justifying battery is jury issue. — Use of opprobrious words may or may not justify a battery, according to the nature and extent of it, and abusive language will not justify a battery which is excessive and disproportionate to the language used — all of which the jury should determine. Reid v. State, 71 Ga. 865 (1883).

Question for jury whether provocation was sufficient or not. Nobles v. State, 12 Ga. App. 355, 77 S.E. 184 (1913).

Jury may consider conduct of person assaulted and degree of force justified. — Jury may consider the actions and conduct of the person assaulted at the time of the assault with other facts in determining if force, and what degree of force, on the part of the defendant was justified, and if not justified, what, if any, effect should be given to such facts as in mitigation. Hutcheson v. Browning, 34 Ga. App. 276, 129 S.E. 125 (1925).

Failing to charge that plaintiff's opprobrious words could justify or mitigate damages. — The court erred in failing to charge the jury upon written request, in an action for damages on account of an assault and battery, that defendant could give in evidence any opprobrious words or abusive language used by the plaintiff to its servant or agent, in order to justify the servant or agent's conduct or mitigate the damages, and it was for the jury to determine whether such language amounted to a justification or only to a mitigation of damages recoverable. Exposition Cotton Mills v. Crawford, 67 Ga. App. 135, 19 S.E.2d 835 (1942).

Duty of court to charge former Penal Code 1895, § 103 (see now O.C.G.A. § 16-5-25) when opprobrious words are relied on as defense; it is obligatory for the court to charge that section. Buchanan v. State, 100 Ga. 75, 25 S.E. 843 (1896).

It was not error to refuse to charge on the "abusive language" defense since defendant was not charged with simple battery and simple battery was not a lesser included offense in the case. Christensen v. State, 245 Ga. App. 165, 537 S.E.2d 446 (2000).

Court may determine, as matter of law, that words are not of opprobrious nature where the words used are obviously not of an opprobrious nature, so as to justify an assault and battery. Robinson v. De Vaughn, 59 Ga. App. 37, 200 S.E. 213 (1938).

Court's discretion to give general charge. — It is not error to fail to give the exact language requested by the defendant when the same principles are fairly given to the jury in the court's general charge. Rider v. State, 207 Ga. App. 519, 428 S.E.2d 423 (1993).

16-5-26. Publication of second or subsequent conviction of simple assault, simple battery, or battery; cost of publication; good faith publications immune from liability.

(a) The clerk of the court in which a person is convicted of a second or subsequent violation of Code Section 16-5-20 and is sentenced pursuant to subsection (d) of such Code section, Code Section 16-5-23 and is sentenced pursuant to subsection (f) of such Code section, or Code Section 16-5-23.1 shall cause to be published a notice of conviction for such person. Such notice of conviction shall be published in the manner of legal notices in the legal organ of the county in which such person resides or, in the case of nonresidents, in the legal organ of the county in which the person was convicted. Such notice of conviction shall be one column wide by two inches long and shall contain the photograph taken by the arresting law enforcement agency at the time of arrest; the name and address of the convicted person; the date, time, and place of arrest; and the disposition of the case and shall be published once in the legal organ of the appropriate county in the second week following such conviction or as soon thereafter as publication may be made.

(b) The convicted person for which a notice of conviction is published pursuant to this Code section shall be assessed $25.00 for the cost of publication of such notice and such assessment shall be imposed at the time of conviction in addition to any other fine imposed.

(c) The clerk of the court, the publisher of any legal organ which publishes a notice of conviction, and any other person involved in the publication of an erroneous notice of conviction shall be immune from civil or criminal liability for such erroneous publication, provided that such publication was made in good faith. (Code 1981, § 16-5-26, enacted by Ga. L. 2004, p. 621, § 3A; Ga. L. 2005, p. 60, § 16/HB 95.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2004, p. 621, § 9(b), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that this Code section shall apply to offenses committed on or after July 1, 2004.

16-5-27. (Effective until January 1, 2013. See note.) Female genital mutilation.

(a) Any person:

- (1) Who knowingly circumcises, excises, or infibulates, in whole or in part, the labia majora, labia minora, or clitoris of a female under 18 years of age;
- (2) Who is a parent, guardian, or has immediate custody or control of a female under 18 years of age and knowingly consents to or permits the circumcision, excision, or infibulation, in whole or in part, of the labia majora, labia minora, or clitoris of such female; or
- (3) Who knowingly removes or causes or permits the removal of a female under 18 years of age from this state for the purpose of circumcising, excising, or infibulating, in whole or in part, the labia majora, labia minora, or clitoris of such female shall be guilty of female genital mutilation.

(b) A person convicted of female genital mutilation shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(c) This Code section shall not apply to procedures performed by or under the direction of a physician, a registered professional nurse, a certified nurse midwife, or a licensed practical nurse licensed pursuant to Chapter 34 or 26, respectively, of Title 43 when necessary to preserve the physical health of the female. This Code section shall also not apply to any autopsy or limited dissection as defined by Code Section 45-16-21 which is conducted in accordance with Article 2 of Chapter 16 of Title 45.

(d) Consent of the female under 18 years of age or the parent, guardian, or custodian of the female under 18 years of age shall not be a defense to the offense of female genital mutilation. Religion, ritual, custom, or standard practice shall not be a defense to the offense of female genital mutilation.

(e) The statutory privileges provided by Chapter 9 of Title 24 shall not apply to proceedings in which one of the parties to the privilege is charged with a crime against a female under 18 years of age, but such person shall be compellable to give evidence only on the specific act for which the defendant is charged. (Code 1981, § 16-5-27, enacted by Ga. L. 2005, p. 820, § 1/HB 10.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2005, p. 820, § 2, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that this Act shall apply to all offenses committed on or after July 1, 2005.

Code Section 16-5-27 is set out twice in this Code. The first version is effective until January 1, 2013, and the second version becomes effective on that date.

16-5-27. (Effective January 1, 2013. See note.) Female genital mutilation.

(a) Any person:

- (1) Who knowingly circumcises, excises, or infibulates, in whole or in part, the labia majora, labia minora, or clitoris of a female under 18 years of age;
- (2) Who is a parent, guardian, or has immediate custody or control of a female under 18 years of age and knowingly consents to or permits the circumcision, excision, or infibulation, in whole or in part, of the labia majora, labia minora, or clitoris of such female; or
- (3) Who knowingly removes or causes or permits the removal of a female under 18 years of age from this state for the purpose of circumcising, excising, or infibulating, in whole or in part, the labia majora, labia minora, or clitoris of such female

shall be guilty of female genital mutilation.

(b) A person convicted of female genital mutilation shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(c) This Code section shall not apply to procedures performed by or under the direction of a physician, a registered professional nurse, a certified nurse midwife, or a licensed practical nurse licensed pursuant to Chapter 34 or 26, respectively, of Title 43 when necessary to preserve the physical health of the female. (d) Consent of the female under 18 years of age or the parent, guardian, or custodian of the female under 18 years of age shall not be a defense to the offense of female genital mutilation. Religion, ritual, custom, or standard practice shall not be a defense to the offense of female genital mutilation.

(e) The statutory privileges provided by Chapter 5 of Title 24 shall not apply to proceedings in which one of the parties to the privilege is charged with a crime against a female under 18 years of age, but such person shall be compellable to give evidence only on the specific act for which the accused is charged. (Code 1981, § 16-5-27, enacted by Ga. L. 2005, p. 820, § 1/HB 10; Ga. L. 2011, p. 99, § 25/HB 24.)

The 2011 amendment, effective January 1, 2013, in subsection (e), substituted “Chapter 5” for “Chapter 9” near the beginning and substituted “accused is charged” for “defendant is charged” at the end. See editor’s note for applicability.

Editor’s notes. — Code Section 16-5-27 is set out twice in this Code. The first version is effective until January 1, 2013, and the second version becomes effective on that date.

Ga. L. 2011, p. 99, § 101, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that this Act shall apply to any motion made or hearing or trial commenced on or after January 1, 2013.

16-5-28. Assault on an unborn child.

(a) For the purposes of this Code section, the term “unborn child” means a member of the species homo sapiens at any stage of development who is carried in the womb.

(b) A person commits the offense of assault of an unborn child when such person, without legal justification, attempts to inflict violent injury to an unborn child.

(c) Any person convicted of the offense of assault of an unborn child shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

(d) Nothing in this Code section shall be construed to permit the prosecution of:

(1) Any person for conduct relating to an abortion for which the consent of the pregnant woman, or person authorized by law to act on her behalf, has been obtained or for which such consent is implied by law;

(2) Any person for any medical treatment of the pregnant woman or her unborn child; or

(3) Any woman with respect to her unborn child. (Code 1981, § 16-5-28, enacted by Ga. L. 2006, p. 643, § 1/SB 77.)

16-5-29. Battery of an unborn child.

(a) For the purposes of this Code section, the term “unborn child” means a member of the species homo sapiens at any stage of development who is carried in the womb.

(b) A person commits the offense of battery of an unborn child when such person, without legal justification, intentionally inflicts physical harm upon an unborn child.

(c) A person convicted of the offense of battery of an unborn child shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

(d) Nothing in this Code section shall be construed to permit the prosecution of:

(1) Any person for conduct relating to an abortion for which the consent of the pregnant woman, or person authorized by law to act on her behalf, has been obtained or for which such consent is implied by law;

(2) Any person for any medical treatment of the pregnant woman or her unborn child; or

(3) Any woman with respect to her unborn child. (Code 1981, § 16-5-29, enacted by Ga. L. 2006, p. 643, § 1/SB 77.)

16-5-40. Kidnapping.

(a) A person commits the offense of kidnapping when such person abducts or steals away another person without lawful authority or warrant and holds such other person against his or her will.

(b)(1) For the offense of kidnapping to occur, slight movement shall be sufficient; provided, however, that any such slight movement of another person which occurs while in the commission of any other offense shall not constitute the offense of kidnapping if such movement is merely incidental to such other offense.

(2) Movement shall not be considered merely incidental to another offense if it:

(A) Conceals or isolates the victim;

(B) Makes the commission of the other offense substantially easier;

(C) Lessens the risk of detection; or

(D) Is for the purpose of avoiding apprehension.

(c) The offense of kidnapping shall be considered a separate offense and shall not merge with any other offense.

(d) A person convicted of the offense of kidnapping shall be punished by:

(1) Imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 20 years if the kidnapping involved a victim who was 14 years of age or older;

(2) Imprisonment for life or by a split sentence that is a term of imprisonment for not less than 25 years and not exceeding life imprisonment, followed by probation for life, if the kidnapping involved a victim who is less than 14 years of age;

(3) Life imprisonment or death if the kidnapping was for ransom; or

(4) Life imprisonment or death if the person kidnapped received bodily injury.

(e) Any person convicted under this Code section shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Sections 17-10-6.1 and 17-10-7.

(f) The offense of kidnapping is declared to be a continuous offense, and venue may be in any county where the accused exercises dominion or control over the person of another. (Laws 1833, Cobb's 1851 Digest, p. 788; Code 1863, §§ 4266, 4267; Code 1868, §§ 4301, 4302; Code 1873, §§ 4367, 4368; Ga. L. 1876, p. 39, § 1; Ga. The 2009 amendment, effective July 1, 2009, in subsection (a), substituted "such person" for "he", substituted "another" for "any", inserted "other", and inserted "or her" near the end; added subsections (b) and (c); redesignated former subsections (b) and (c) as present subsections (d) and (e), respectively; and added subsection (f).

L. 1994, p. 1959), provided that persons convicted of one of seven serious violent felonies shall serve minimum mandatory terms of imprisonment which shall not otherwise be suspended, stayed, probated, deferred, or withheld by the sentencing court; (2) That in State v. Allmond, 225 Ga. App. 509 (1997), the Georgia Court of Appeals held, notwithstanding the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' that the provisions of the First Offender Act would still be available to the sentencing court, which would mean that a person who committed a serious violent felony could be sentenced to less than the minimum mandatory ten-year sentence; and (3) That, contrary to the decision in State v. Allmond, it is the expressed intent of the General Assembly that persons who commit a serious violent felony specified in the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994' shall be sentenced to a mandatory term of imprisonment of not less than ten years and shall not be eligible for first offender treatment."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

The General Assembly further finds that the state has a compelling interest in protecting the public from sexual offenders and in protecting children from predatory sexual activity, and there is sufficient justification for requiring sexual offenders to register and for requiring community and public notification of the presence of sexual offenders. The General Assembly declares that in order to protect the public, it is necessary that the sexual offenders be registered and that members of the community and the public be notified of a sexual offender's presence. The designation of a person as a sexual offender is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from the conviction of certain crimes. Likewise, the designation of a person as a sexual predator is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from findings by the Sexual Offender Registration Review Board and a court if requested by a sexual offender."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

General Consideration

Editor's notes. — Many of the cases noted below were decided prior to the 1994 amendment to subsection (b).

Constitutionality. — See Albert v. State, 180 Ga. App. 779, 350 S.E.2d 490 (1986).

Constitutionality of mandatory 25-year sentence. — Trial court decision that the mandatory 25-year sentence set forth in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b)(2) for kidnapping of a child under the age of 14 constituted cruel and unusual punishment as applied to a defendant was premature as the defendant's motion for a new trial on the two relevant kidnapping charges had to be remanded for reconsideration of other issues as an ineffective assistance of counsel issue had been waived. State v. Jones, 284 Ga. 302, 667 S.E.2d 76 (2008).

Jurisdiction over juvenile defendant. — When either the juvenile court or the superior court properly could have exercised jurisdiction, no petition alleging delinquency was ever filed in juvenile court, and the superior court first took jurisdiction through indictment, jurisdiction properly vested in the superior court and no transfer hearing pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 15-11-39 was required. Taylor v. State, 194 Ga. App. 871, 392 S.E.2d 57 (1990).

Jurisdiction when offense in multiple states. — Under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-1(b)(1), Georgia had subject matter jurisdiction over a kidnapping case even though the victim was killed in South Carolina. As the victim was abducted in Georgia, the kidnapping occurred there; when the victim was later injured in South Carolina, it was nevertheless a bodily injury for purposes of the Georgia kidnapping. Hunsberger v. State, 299 Ga. App. 593, 683 S.E.2d 150 (2009).

Failure to define "bodily injury" in subsection (b). — That O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40 does not define "bodily injury" does not render present subsection (b) (former subsection (c)), providing punishment for kidnapping with bodily injury, unconstitutionally vague. Waters v. State, 248 Ga. 355, 283 S.E.2d 238 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3551, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398 (1983).

There was no merit in a defendant's challenge to the statute proscribing kidnapping with bodily injury, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, on the ground that the statute was unconstitutionally vague by not defining the term "bodily injury" because bodily injury was a term that was commonly understood. Harper v. State, 300 Ga. App. 757, 686 S.E.2d 375 (2009).

Venue. — Venue in cases of kidnapping is proper in the county where the victim was seized. Harris v. State, 165 Ga. App. 249, 299 S.E.2d 924 (1983).

By applying the provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e) and (h), the jury could conclude that venue was proper because there was evidence that the victim's presence in the car remained voluntary until it became clear that defendant was not mistakenly driving toward Alabama and that defendant would not accommodate the victim's wish that the victim not be taken there; the jury could determine that the crime of kidnapping was complete when defendant refused to turn the car around or to stop and let the victim exit. Pruitt v. State, 279 Ga. 140, 611 S.E.2d 47, cert. denied, 546 U.S. 866, 126 S. Ct. 165, 163 L. Ed. 2d 152 (2005).

Georgia trial court was an improper venue for trying the kidnapping offense, as the kidnapping offense, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), was complete when the defendant allegedly forced the victim into the defendant's truck in Tennessee and drove away; the victim testified that the victim was forced into the defendant's truck in Tennessee. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 64, 635 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Kidnapping is not a continuing offense, and the crime is consummated when the victim is seized; thus, the prosecution failed to prove venue in a county in Georgia when the evidence showed that the victim was seized in another state. Miller v. State, 174 Ga. App. 42, 329 S.E.2d 252 (1985); Jordan v. State, 242 Ga. App. 408, 530 S.E.2d 42 (2000), overruled on other grounds, Shields v. State, 276 Ga. 669, 581 S.E.2d 536 (2003).

Kidnapping is not a continuing crime; it was completed when the victim moved from one room in the store to another and the armed robbery occurred subsequently.

Sharp v. State, 255 Ga. App. 485, 565 S.E.2d 841 (2002).

"Bodily injury" includes any physical injury. — For purposes of construing O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b), "bodily injury" is a term of common usage requiring no legal definition. Thus, "bodily injury" is accomplished, within the meaning of the statute, by inflicting any physical injury upon the victim's body, however slight. Green v. State, 193 Ga. App. 894, 389 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 193 Ga. App. 909, 389 S.E.2d 358 (1989).

Bruises which the victim testified were on the victim's neck and the evidence that defendant kept a hand tightly around the victim's neck while defendant moved the victim from room to room was sufficient to support a conviction of kidnapping with bodily injury. Bluain v. State, 242 Ga. App. 125, 529 S.E.2d 155 (2000).

Under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b), kidnapping with bodily injury only requires that an injury, no matter how slight, occur during the kidnapping; the evidence was sufficient to support a kidnapping conviction with bodily injury conviction after defendant forced the victim into defendant's truck, drove away, and the victim received cuts to the victim's throat, face, hand, and back as a result of the kidnapping. Bailey v. State, 269 Ga. App. 262, 603 S.E.2d 786 (2004).

Timing of injury. — An injury does not have to be inflicted at the same moment as the initial abduction. Whether the injury occurs at the beginning of the kidnapping incident or after the victim has been abducted is immaterial for purposes of proving the elements of the crime. Hewitt v. State, 277 Ga. 327, 588 S.E.2d 722 (2003).

Supreme Court of Georgia adopts the Berry test, which assesses four factors in determining whether the movement at issue constitutes asportation: (1) the duration of the movement; (2) whether the movement occurred during the commission of a separate offense; (3) whether such movement was an inherent part of that separate offense; and (4) whether the movement itself presented a significant danger to the victim independent of the danger posed by the separate offense. To the extent prior case law and, specifically, the "slight movement" standard are inconsistent with this approach, those cases and that standard are hereby overruled. Garza v. State, 284 Ga. 696, 670 S.E.2d 73 (2008).

Refusal to sever charges. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in failing to sever a charge against the defendant for possession of methamphetamine in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30(a) and a charge against the defendant for kidnapping with bodily injury in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40; when the defendant was arrested for possession, the kidnapping was ongoing, as the victim remained locked in the camper where the defendant had bound the victim, and it was not an abuse of discretion for a trial judge to deny a motion for severance since the crimes alleged were part of a continuous transaction and from the nature of the entire transaction it would have almost been impossible to present to a jury evidence of one of the crimes without also permitting evidence of the other. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 7, 635 S.E.2d 278 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by denying defendant's motion to sever 12 counts of robbery and kidnapping because all 12 counts involved a distinctive modus operandi and took place over a period of less than a month in a single county and showed a common scheme, which justified the denial of the defendant's motion to sever. Fielding v. State, 299 Ga. App. 341, 682 S.E.2d 675 (2009).

Distance victim is carried is not material. Any carrying away is sufficient. Brown v. State, 132 Ga. App. 399, 208 S.E.2d 183 (1974); Lockett v. State, 217 Ga. App. 328, 457 S.E.2d 579 (1995); Lumsden v. State, 222 Ga. App. 635, 475 S.E.2d 681 (1996); Lloyd v. State, 226 Ga. App. 401, 487 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

Only the slightest movement of the victim is required to constitute the necessary element of asportation. Helton v. State, 166 Ga. App. 662, 305 S.E.2d 592 (1983).

Any asportation of victim, however slight, is sufficient. Haynes v. State, 159 Ga. App. 34, 283 S.E.2d 25 (1981), rev'd on other grounds, 249 Ga. 119, 288 S.E.2d 185 (1982), overruled on other grounds by Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

There is no minimum requirement as to the distance of asportation. That asportation was of short duration is without legal significance. Giddens v. State, 190 Ga. App. 723, 380 S.E.2d 274 (1989).

Unlawful asportation, however slight, is sufficient to support a kidnapping conviction. Williams v. State, 178 Ga. App. 581, 344 S.E.2d 247 (1986).

Only the slightest movement of the victim is required to establish the element of asportation, and this element was satisfied by evidence that defendant grabbed victim by the forearm and pushed the victim to the rear of the premises. Robinson v. State, 210 Ga. App. 175, 435 S.E.2d 466 (1993).

Slightest movement of the victim is sufficient to establish asportation. Williams v. State, 236 Ga. App. 351, 511 S.E.2d 910 (1999).

Movement for a short distance satisfies the asportation element of kidnapping. Hardy v. State, 240 Ga. App. 115, 522 S.E.2d 704 (1999).

Despite the fact that the movement of a victim to the floor to bind that victim's arms and legs was slight, because it was clear that the movement materially facilitated the commission of an aggravated assault on that victim, that movement was sufficient to support the defendant's kidnapping conviction. Mercer v. State, 289 Ga. App. 606, 658 S.E.2d 173 (2008).

Aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), was completed when the defendant pointed a gun at the victim and grabbed the victim around the neck, while the asportation for the kidnapping occurred when the defendant then dragged the victim into another room. The movement of the victim from one room to another within the hotel room, even though of minimal duration, created an additional danger to the victim by enhancing the defendant's control over the victim, and the movement was not an inherent part of the aggravated assault. Williams v. State, 307 Ga. App. 675, 705 S.E.2d 906 (2011).

Kidnapping by force. — Offense of kidnapping was complete when defendant forced the victim into the pecan grove and held the victim against the victim's will. Dawson v. State, 203 Ga. App. 146, 416 S.E.2d 125, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 905, 416 S.E.2d 125 (1992).

Movement of person 15 feet against that person's will may constitute crime of kidnapping. Brown v. State, 132 Ga. App. 399, 208 S.E.2d 183 (1974).

Forcing women, at gunpoint, to move 100 yards constituted kidnapping. — Kidnapping occurred where undisputed evidence showed that two women were forced, at gunpoint, to march 100 yards from their car to a woods. Waters v. State, 248 Ga. 355, 283 S.E.2d 238 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3551, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398 (1983).

"Asportation" of the victim, necessary for conviction of kidnapping, was sufficiently shown by the evidence that the appellant, armed with a handgun, forced the victim to walk from the victim's desk about 25 feet to the office of the hotel manager, to whom defendant made a demand for $20,000, and that defendant held the victim there against the victim's will for 20 hours. Haynes v. State, 249 Ga. 119, 288 S.E.2d 185 (1982), overruled on other grounds by Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

Evidence showing that boys in house during robbery by defendant were forced to go into several rooms and the attic of the house against their will, but were never carried away from the house, was sufficient to support conviction for kidnapping. Chambley v. State, 163 Ga. App. 502, 295 S.E.2d 166 (1982).

Defendant forced a nurse into the office of an emergency room. Upon seeing that defendant was armed, the three women who were already in the office ran to a location where they felt they would be afforded a degree of relative safety. The women acted on their own volition and, accordingly, the asportation element was not established. Briard v. State, 188 Ga. App. 490, 373 S.E.2d 239, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 911, 373 S.E.2d 239 (1988).

Evidence showed the unlawful asportation of a security guard who was coerced into entering an office against the guard's will by defendant's threats to injure female captives, where, once the guard was in the office, defendant threatened the guard with a gun and directed the guard to sit down. Briard v. State, 188 Ga. App. 490, 373 S.E.2d 239, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 911, 373 S.E.2d 239 (1988).

Evidence that defendant dragged the victim at gunpoint down the hall to the victim's bedroom was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict that defendant kidnapped the victim. Humphrey v. State, 218 Ga. App. 574, 462 S.E.2d 641 (1995).

When the defendant willingly drove the victims around the corner of the parking lot while the victims were being robbed at gunpoint, there was sufficient evidence to authorize the defendant's conviction as a party to the kidnapping. Williams v. State, 236 Ga. App. 351, 511 S.E.2d 910 (1999).

Asportation for purposes of kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) supported defendant's conviction since defendant: (1) grabbed a victim as the victim was trying to run out of the store, forcing that victim back in the store, and moving the victim approximately six to eight feet during the struggle; (2) pushed another victim; and (3) then tried to pull both victims back to the bathrooms. Phillips v. State, 259 Ga. App. 331, 577 S.E.2d 25 (2003).

Victim's testimony that the defendant's accomplice ordered the victim to move from the victim's vehicle to the ground during the hijacking of the victim's vehicle was sufficient to support the asportation element of the kidnapping offense. Boykin v. State, 264 Ga. App. 836, 592 S.E.2d 426 (2003).

Defendant's conviction for kidnapping was affirmed as there was sufficient evidence of asportation since the defendant pulled a handgun on a car salesperson as the defendant slowed a car down, at which time the salesperson was seized against the salesperson's will, and defendant then forced the salesperson to the shoulder of the road. Mullins v. State, 280 Ga. App. 689, 634 S.E.2d 850 (2006).

Evidence that defendant forcibly moved the victim from the living room to the kitchen, and then from the kitchen to the bedroom, where defendant threw the victim on and off the bed, was more than sufficient to support defendant's kidnapping conviction. Gilbert v. State, 291 Ga. App. 898, 663 S.E.2d 299 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 883 (Ga. 2008).

Under the four-factor test for assessing whether a victim's movement constituted asportation, neither of the two distinct movements of the victim during the victim's false imprisonment constituted the necessary asportation to support a kidnapping conviction. Both the act of falling to the floor and the act of rising to sit in the chair where the victim was bound were of minimal duration and were incidental to the false imprisonment of the victim and the victim's children; the blow that caused the victim's fall was an inherent part of an aggravated assault; and the victim's movements did not significantly increase the dangers to the victim over those the victim faced from the false imprisonment or the aggravated assault. Garza v. State, 284 Ga. 696, 670 S.E.2d 73 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence of asportation with regard to the kidnapping convictions. The movement of the victims from the street to inside a car was not an inherent part of the robbery offense, which had begun outside the car when the victims were ordered to "give it up" and one victim relinquished a wallet, and the movement created an additional danger to the victims by enhancing the control of the robbers over the victims. Wright v. State, 300 Ga. App. 32, 684 S.E.2d 102 (2009).

With regard to a kidnapping with bodily injury charge, the defendant's movement of the victim from the defendant's yard to the defendant's carport and later from the carport to the defendant's television cabinet constituted asportation. Although the duration of both movements was minimal, not all of the Berry factors had to favor the state in order to prove asportation; the movements were not an inherent part of the defendant's other crimes; both movements created an additional danger to the victim independent of any of the other offenses; and both movements served to conceal the victim from the potential view of neighbors and diminished the victim's opportunity for rescue or escape. Abernathy v. State, 299 Ga. App. 897, 685 S.E.2d 734 (2009).

Asportation of the victim, necessary for kidnapping, was sufficiently shown, even though defendant only moved the victim two times because the moving occurred after the other crimes were completed and the moving was intended to prevent the victim's escape. Hammond v. State, 303 Ga. App. 176, 692 S.E.2d 760 (2010).

Release as asportation. — Although releasing an individual from confinement necessitates movement of that individual, it is movement away from the control of the defendant and is not the type of movement that constitutes asportation. Gibson v. State, 233 Ga. App. 838, 505 S.E.2d 63 (1998).

Shoving was not asportation. — Shoving a victim without moving the victim from one location to another, or merely pushing a victim to the ground, is not sufficient to satisfy the element of asportation for purposes of kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a). Phillips v. State, 259 Ga. App. 331, 577 S.E.2d 25 (2003).

Consent of child victim. — Insofar as a five year old child can be said to have gone with the defendant "willingly" or "voluntarily" because of enticement, when the victim was hit on the head and lost consciousness, the victim was deprived of the capacity to choose to remain with the defendant voluntarily, and thus was held against the victim's will. Taylor v. State, 194 Ga. App. 871, 392 S.E.2d 57 (1990).

Common-law marriage as defense. — When the existence of a common-law marriage was raised as a defense to kidnapping, there was no presumption in defendant's favor, and it was defendant's burden to prove that such marriage existed which gave defendant lawful authority to take the child from the child's mother. Dixon v. State, 217 Ga. App. 267, 456 S.E.2d 758 (1995).

When the existence of a common-law marriage was raised as a defense to kidnapping, even though the trial court erred in failing to charge that defendant's burden to prove the marriage was only a preponderance of the evidence, the error was harmless since no evidence was cited to prove two of the elements as required by O.C.G.A. § 19-3-2. Dixon v. State, 217 Ga. App. 267, 456 S.E.2d 758 (1995).

Victim voluntarily getting into defendant's car. — Although the victim got in defendant's car voluntarily, once the defendant refused to let the victim out of the car and held the victim against the victim's will, a kidnapping occurred. Helton v. State, 166 Ga. App. 662, 305 S.E.2d 592 (1983).

There was no merit to the defendant's claim that the victim's getting into a car willingly precluded a finding that a kidnapping thereafter occurred; this is simply not the law, as an abduction and holding against one's will could certainly take place thereafter. Winfrey v. State, 286 Ga. App. 450, 649 S.E.2d 561 (2007).

Being forced into a car can substantially isolate the victim from protection or rescue, see Wright v. State, 300 Ga. App. 32, 684 S.E.2d 102 (2009).

Testimony by victim concerning whether consent was given or withheld was not essential under former Code 1933, § 26-1311 since other evidence can be utilized to establish the victim was abducted and held against the victim's will. Strozier v. State, 156 Ga. App. 241, 274 S.E.2d 633 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40).

Victim's testimony was sufficient to convict and physical evidence not required. — Because the victim's statement of sexual abuse was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to convict defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, the victim's testimony did not have to be corroborated by physical evidence. Gartrell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 726, 613 S.E.2d 226 (2005).

Noncooperation of victim as not rendering kidnapping a mere attempt. — Fact that victim did not obey all of assailant's commands did not transpose offense from that of kidnapping to that of mere criminal attempt. Padgett v. State, 170 Ga. App. 98, 316 S.E.2d 523 (1984).

Defendant's repeated shooting of victim rendered the victim abducted against the victim's will because: (1) the victim would not have willingly remained with defendant to be further harmed or (2) the victim was so badly wounded that the victim had lost the capacity to make a voluntary choice to remain with the defendant. Wright v. State, 209 Ga. App. 128, 433 S.E.2d 99 (1993).

Forcible abduction not required. — There was sufficient evidence for the jury to find that victim was abducted when the victim was induced by persuasion, enticement, or fraud to get back in the car so defendant could supposedly take the victim to get medical assistance. Wright v. State, 209 Ga. App. 128, 433 S.E.2d 99 (1993).

Whether abduction was forcible or by enticement is immaterial, so long as the victim is unlawfully held "against his will." Fredrick v. State, 181 Ga. App. 600, 353 S.E.2d 41 (1987).

Movement of victim need not be clandestine. — Offense of kidnapping does not require proof that the movement of the victim was made in a clandestine or surreptitious manner. Cosby v. State, 234 Ga. App. 723, 507 S.E.2d 551 (1998).

Kidnapping for ransom. — Legislature clearly intended that kidnapping for ransom be higher grade of offense of kidnapping. Krist v. State, 227 Ga. 85, 179 S.E.2d 56 (1970).

Showing that ransom was actually paid is not necessary to constitute offense, but is one method of demonstrating the intent of the defendant at the time the victim's person is seized. Krist v. State, 227 Ga. 85, 179 S.E.2d 56 (1970).

State may allege in indictment the way and manner in which bodily harm was inflicted upon kidnap victim. Roberts v. State, 158 Ga. App. 309, 279 S.E.2d 753 (1981).

Severance of trials. — When defendants were convicted of kidnapping, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by denying their motions to sever their trials, as defendants failed to make a clear showing of prejudice and a denial of due process protection. Attaway v. State, 259 Ga. App. 822, 578 S.E.2d 529 (2003).

Because the evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of rape, sexual battery, false imprisonment, and kidnapping with a scheme or a common modus operandi, the trial court properly denied defendant's motions for a directed verdict and to sever the offenses; without a completed offense, there was no basis for a lesser-included offense instruction. Quenga v. State, 270 Ga. App. 141, 605 S.E.2d 860 (2004).

Evidence of gun used in kidnapping. — Kidnapping was completed when defendant seized the victims and forcibly moved them from one location in the store to another, and then defendant committed the armed robbery; accordingly, convictions for both offenses did not amount to two punishments for the same conduct, nor was one offense included in the other as a matter of fact. Phillips v. State, 259 Ga. App. 331, 577 S.E.2d 25 (2003).

When the defendants were convicted of kidnapping, the trial court did not err by admitting a shotgun used in the crime spree into evidence without establishing an appropriate chain of custody as the state was not required to prove a chain of custody of the exhibit since the gun was a distinct and recognizable physical object which could be identified upon mere observation. Attaway v. State, 259 Ga. App. 822, 578 S.E.2d 529 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support the first defendant and the second defendant's convictions for murder, kidnapping, armed robbery, and burglary as the evidence showed that the defendants were involved in a scheme to rob a person who the defendants believed to be selling large amounts of marijuana from the apartment, that the defendants burst into the person's apartment brandishing guns, that one of the defendants fatally shot the person, and that the other defendant forced two people present to lie on the ground and divulge the location of a safe in the apartment that held money and marijuana. Howard v. State, 279 Ga. 166, 611 S.E.2d 3 (2005).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim did not warrant a new trial in a prosecution for rape, kidnapping, aggravated stalking, and two counts of stalking; because of the limited nature of a challenged witnesses' trial testimony, defense counsel made a strategic decision not to seek recusal of the trial judge, who was the brother of the challenged witness, and counsel discussed with the defendant the reasons for not seeking recusal. Pirkle v. State, 289 Ga. App. 450, 657 S.E.2d 560 (2008).

Relationship to Other Offenses

Kidnapping with bodily injury distinct offense. — Although the statute does not make it explicit, the courts have treated kidnapping with bodily injury as a distinct offense separate from and greater than kidnapping. Hester v. State, 216 Ga. App. 400, 454 S.E.2d 604 (1995).

Charges against the defendant for kidnapping and aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2) and 16-5-40(a), did not merge as a matter of law because the aggravated assault occurred when the defendant pointed a gun at one store owner to hold the owner at bay while the other owner was being robbed, and the kidnapping of that same owner who was assaulted occurred when the defendant and the defendant's cohort then forced both owners into the store's back office; the assault and kidnapping were supported by facts that were separate from each other. Owens v. State, 271 Ga. App. 365, 609 S.E.2d 670 (2005).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper, even though defendant was acquitted of kidnapping with bodily injury, false imprisonment, and aggravated assault as Georgia did not recognize the inconsistent verdict rule; further, the convictions were not necessarily inconsistent as the jury could have found that defendant raped the victim, but did not commit the other crimes. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Aggravated assault with intent to rape did not merge with kidnapping.

— Evidence showed that the kidnapping conviction, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), was based on evidence showing that when the victim attempted to escape the initial attack, defendant grabbed the victim and dragged the victim to a more secluded area of the trailer park and the aggravated assault with intent to rape conviction, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, was based on evidence that defendant beat the victim with the defendant's hands and fists with the intention of raping the victim; thus, the two crimes were separate offenses supported by different facts that did not merge as a matter of law. McGuire v. State, 266 Ga. App. 673, 598 S.E.2d 55 (2004).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, which was based on the defendant's striking the victim with a pistol, did not merge with the defendant's kidnapping conviction, which was based on the defendant's forcing the victim upstairs, because the assault occurred prior to the kidnapping and was not necessary to accomplish the kidnapping. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

Aggravated assault did not merge with kidnapping with bodily injury or aggravated battery, and aggravated battery did not merge with kidnapping, as each count referred to a separate cut of the victims with a decorative sword that defendant pulled off the wall during a domestic dispute with defendant's spouse and child. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Aggravated assault with a rope and kidnapping with bodily injury offenses did not merge for sentencing purposes as one crime was completed before the other took place, and the crimes were established by separate and distinct facts. McCaskell v. State, 285 Ga. App. 592, 646 S.E.2d 761 (2007).

Because there was independent evidence to support each of the offenses as indicted, a defendant's aggravated assault conviction did not merge as a matter of fact with either the aggravated battery or kidnapping with bodily injury convictions. Pitts v. State, 287 Ga. App. 540, 652 S.E.2d 181 (2007).

Trial court did not err under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7 in failing to merge convictions for aggravated assault and aggravated battery with a conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury as each crime required proof of at least one different element, and the state presented independent evidence to prove each individual crime as set out in the indictment. Evidence that the defendant pointed a gun at the victim and fired the gun at the floor near the victim, that the defendant used a wooden stick resembling a baseball bat to repeatedly hit the victim, and that the defendant hit and kicked the victim while the victim was tied up supported the three aggravated assault counts; aggravated battery was established by evidence that the defendant broke the victim's nose, wrist, and shoulder and knocked out two teeth and by evidence that the defendant burned the victim's hand and caused the victim to be bitten by fire ants; and kidnapping with bodily injury was proven by evidence of injuries to the victim due to being bound by rope. Rouse v. State, 295 Ga. App. 61, 670 S.E.2d 869 (2008).

Trial court correctly sentenced the defendant for both aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and kidnapping with bodily injury, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, because the crimes did not merge since each of the two crimes required proof of at least one fact that the other did not, and the state provided such proof. Kidnapping required proof of asportation, holding the victim against the victim's will, and bodily injury, which was not required to prove aggravated assault; and aggravated assault required proof that the defendant used the defendant's hands, with either the intent to cause a violent injury or which placed the victim in reasonable fear of receiving a violent injury, but the kidnapping charge did not require such proof. Mayberry v. State, 301 Ga. App. 503, 687 S.E.2d 893 (2009).

Trial court correctly sentenced the defendant for both aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and kidnapping with bodily injury, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, because the evidence was sufficient to support the charge of kidnapping, apart from the evidence of choking, since even though the victim did not testify at trial that the defendant struck the victim, there was at least some evidence to support such a conclusion. The emergency room doctor testified that upon noticing bruising on the victim's face, the doctor "vaguely" recalled the victim saying that the victim could have been struck in the eye or struck below the eye; in addition, the evidence at trial showed that the victim had bruising not just on the victim's neck, but also on the victim's face. Mayberry v. State, 301 Ga. App. 503, 687 S.E.2d 893 (2009).

Aggravated assault and armed robbery. — Trial court's decision not to merge the conviction of kidnapping, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, with defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and armed robbery, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-8-41, was proper under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a), as the facts that supported the kidnapping were not the same as those that supported the convictions for the other offenses; the kidnapping occurred when defendant forced three store employees into an office, the aggravated assaults occurred when defendant pointed a gun at one employee's head and hit another employee with it, and the armed robbery occurred when defendant took money from the store safe. Hill v. State, 279 Ga. App. 666, 632 S.E.2d 443 (2006).

Essential difference between kidnapping and false imprisonment is that kidnapping involves the additional element of asportation. Raysor v. State, 191 Ga. 422, 382 S.E.2d 162 (1989).

Evidence was sufficient to support a verdict of guilty of kidnapping where the transcript reveals that defendant assisted the sister by carrying and lifting the victim into defendant's truck and dumping the body in another county. Vincent v. State, 203 Ga. App. 874, 418 S.E.2d 138 (1992).

False imprisonment as lesser included offense of kidnapping. — When defendant had been convicted of kidnapping with bodily injury, subsequent charges of false imprisonment, arising out of the same set of facts, were barred by former jeopardy under the "required evidence test" because false imprisonment was a lesser included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury. Sallie v. State, 216 Ga. App. 502, 455 S.E.2d 315 (1995).

Kidnapping as defined may be com- mitted without use of deadly weapon. Bill v. State, 153 Ga. App. 131, 264 S.E.2d 582 (1980); Helton v. State, 166 Ga. App. 662, 305 S.E.2d 592 (1983).

Aggravated battery did not merge with kidnapping with bodily injury because the battery was concluded when defendant delivered the initial blow to the victim's head before moving the victim to another place. Deal v. State, 233 Ga. App. 79, 503 S.E.2d 288 (1998).

Rape of victim is sufficient evidence of bodily injury to authorize conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury to victim. Peek v. State, 239 Ga. 422, 238 S.E.2d 12 (1977).

Kidnapping is a lesser included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury, lacking only the element of bodily injury. Hunter v. State, 228 Ga. App. 846, 493 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

Kidnapping with bodily injury and rape. — Since kidnapping with bodily injury constituted the greater of two offenses in a kidnapping with bodily injury and rape conviction, the 20-year sentence imposed on the rape conviction should have been vacated, rather than the mandatory life sentence of kidnapping with bodily injury. Gober v. State, 203 Ga. App. 5, 416 S.E.2d 292, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 906, 416 S.E.2d 292 (1992).

When the victim alleged the defendant robbed and raped the victim at knifepoint, identified the defendant from a photo lineup and at trial, DNA on the victim's clothes matched that of the defendant, the defendant testified the defendant had consensual sex with the victim for money, and the detective who first interviewed the defendant testified that the defendant never told the detective that the defendant had consensual sex, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of rape and kidnapping. Munn v. State, 263 Ga. App. 821, 589 S.E.2d 596 (2003).

Offenses of kidnapping and aggravated assault with intent to rape were not included in each other in law or in fact. Strozier v. State, 171 Ga. App. 703, 320 S.E.2d 764 (1984).

Battery, simple assault, and aggravated assault as lesser included offenses. — Battery, simple assault, and aggravated assault are not lesser included offenses of kidnapping. Boxer X v. State, 237 Ga. App. 526, 515 S.E.2d 668 (1999).

Relationship to Other Offenses (Cont'd)

Kidnapping within aggravated sodomy offense. — Defendant's conviction was reversed when the kidnapping offense was included within a charged aggravated sodomy offense because the element requiring that the victim be held "against his will" was proven by the same evidence used to establish the aggravated sodomy offense. Fredrick v. State, 181 Ga. App. 600, 353 S.E.2d 41 (1987).

Kidnapping and aggravated sodomy not included offenses. — Kidnapping and aggravated sodomy are not included offenses as a matter of law and, even though they may be included as a matter of fact, where the same evidence was not used to prove both crimes, the trial court did not err by refusing to find a merger. Hardy v. State, 210 Ga. App. 811, 437 S.E.2d 790 (1993).

Evidence of victim's murder can also be basis for conviction of kidnapping with bodily injury. — Evidence of the murder of a given victim can be used as the basis for the separate conviction of the murder count and also as the basis for the conviction of kidnapping with bodily injury to the same victim. Brown v. State, 247 Ga. 298, 275 S.E.2d 52, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 366, 70 L. Ed. 2d 192 (1981), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. Zant, 249 Ga. 373, 290 S.E.2d 442 (1982), but see, Morgan v. State, 267 Ga. 203, 476 S.E.2d 747 (1996).

Kidnapping and sexual battery. — Jury's verdict finding the defendant not guilty of aggravated sexual battery was not necessarily logically inconsistent with the verdict finding the defendant guilty of kidnapping with bodily injury since the evidence was that the victim suffered bodily injury during a kidnapping when one of the men involved sexually assaulted the victim, but the victim could not identify which of the three men it was. Kimble v. State, 236 Ga. App. 391, 512 S.E.2d 306 (1999).

Kidnapping is not included in crime of robbery as a matter of law. Chambley v. State, 163 Ga. App. 502, 295 S.E.2d 166 (1982).

Armed robbery and kidnapping are clearly not included offenses as a matter of law. Nor are they included offenses as a matter of fact where the two offenses are based on separate acts. Emmett v. State, 199 Ga. App. 650, 405 S.E.2d 707 (1991), cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 905, 405 S.E.2d 707 (1991).

Since the sentences imposed upon an inmate upon the inmate's convictions for armed robbery and kidnapping were within the statutory guidelines under both O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-40(b) and 16-8-41(b), they were upheld; further, because armed robbery and kidnapping did not merge, the inmate was properly sentenced separately for those different crimes. Benjamin v. State, 269 Ga. App. 232, 603 S.E.2d 733 (2004).

Merging kidnapping and robbery as matter of fact. — When facts supporting robbery charge included taking property in presence of boys, and facts showing appellant's additional conduct of forcing the children into various rooms and the attic and tying the children were incidental to, but not part of, the robbery, that conduct constituted a separate crime, kidnapping, which did not merge with the robbery as a matter of fact. Chambley v. State, 163 Ga. App. 502, 295 S.E.2d 166 (1982).

Kidnapping did not merge with attempted armed robbery. — Convictions for burglary, kidnapping, terroristic threats, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony did not merge with attempted armed robbery conviction because the attempted armed robbery was complete before the crimes were committed inside the residence; the defendant discussed with the co-worker the idea to dress up as a heating and air technician to perform a robbery, traveled to the residence armed with handguns and a hollow clipboard used to conceal the handgun, and pointed the handgun at a victim before entering the house. McKinney v. State, 274 Ga. App. 32, 619 S.E.2d 299 (2005).

No merger of kidnapping and robbery by intimidation. — When defendant's kidnapping conviction was premised on the victim's testimony that after defendant entered the victim's home without the victim's permission, the defendant forced the victim to move from a living room into the victim's bedroom with the insinuation the defendant had a weapon, the crime of kidnapping was complete. Defendant's subsequent act of asking the victim for money and taking a bank envelope from the victim's purse without permission constituted the separate crime of robbery by intimidation. Hickey v. State, 267 Ga. App. 724, 601 S.E.2d 157 (2004).

Trial court did not err in refusing to merge kidnapping charge into rape charge since the evidence authorized the jury to find that defendant, armed with a pistol, forced defendant's way into the victim's car and drove off with the victim to a secluded area where defendant raped and beat the victim, and moved to another location and again raped and abused the victim and then drove away with the victim's car and the property in the car, leaving the naked victim behind. Clark v. State, 166 Ga. App. 366, 304 S.E.2d 494 (1983).

Malice murder and kidnapping are not "same offense" for double jeopardy purposes under Georgia law even though they involve the same transaction and considerably overlap each other factually. Stephens v. Zant, 631 F.2d 397 (5th Cir. 1980), modified, 648 F.2d 446 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1035, 102 S. Ct. 575, 70 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1981), rev'd on other grounds, 462 U.S. 862, 103 S. Ct. 2733, 77 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1983).

When it was clear petitioner was tried and convicted for malice murder and that crime was not the "same offense" as the kidnapping with bodily injury for which petitioner was convicted in the first proceeding, the double jeopardy clause did not bar the malice murder conviction. Stephens v. Zant, 631 F.2d 397 (5th Cir. 1980), modified, 648 F.2d 446 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1035, 102 S. Ct. 575, 70 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1981), rev'd on other grounds, 462 U.S. 862, 103 S. Ct. 2733, 77 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1983).

Once the state tried and convicted petitioner for kidnapping, the state would be barred from prosecuting petitioner for felony murder only if the underlying felony upon which that prosecution was based were that same kidnapping. Stephens v.

Zant, 631 F.2d 397 (5th Cir. 1980), modified, 648 F.2d 446 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1035, 102 S. Ct. 575, 70 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1981), rev'd on other grounds, 462 U.S. 862, 103 S. Ct. 2733, 77 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1983).

Murder and kidnapping with bodily injury not included offenses as matter of fact and of law. — When the defendant was convicted for the murder of and kidnapping with bodily injury of the same victim, the bodily injury alleged was the killing of the victim. As a matter of fact, as well as a matter of law, the murder of the victim and the kidnapping of the victim with bodily injury were not included offenses so as to bar the defendant from being prosecuted and subsequently convicted of both crimes. Brown v. State, 247 Ga. 298, 275 S.E.2d 52, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 366, 70 L. Ed. 2d 192 (1981), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. Zant, 249 Ga. 393, 290 S.E.2d 442 (1982).

Aggravated assault is included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury. — Because the elements of the crime of aggravated assault must have been proved in order to sustain a conviction for the crime of kidnapping with bodily injury, the aggravated assault is an included offense of the crime of kidnapping with bodily injury. Brown v. State, 247 Ga. 298, 275 S.E.2d 52, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 366, 70 L. Ed. 2d 192 (1981); Herring v. State, 224 Ga. App. 809, 481 S.E.2d 842 (1997).

Aggravated assault and kidnapping. — Aggravated assault, with intent to rob as the factor in aggravation, is not a lesser included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury. Brown v. State, 232 Ga. App. 787, 504 S.E.2d 452 (1998).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-1-6 and 16-1-7, as defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and kidnapping, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-5-40(a), respectively, did not merge as a matter of law, as only aggravated assault and kidnapping with bodily injury merged as a matter of law; further, the crimes did not merge as a matter of fact, as the crimes were based on separate and distinct facts, and due to the timing of defendant's actions during the incident, the separate convictions were proper. Walker v. State, 275 Ga. App. 862, 622 S.E.2d 64 (2005).

Convictions for aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), and kidnapping, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, did not merge because the aggravated assault was completed when the defendant pointed a gun at the victim and grabbed the victim around the neck, while the asportation for the kidnapping occurred when the defendant then dragged the victim into another room. The movement of the victim from one room to another within the hotel room, even though of minimal duration, created an additional danger to the victim by enhancing the defendant's control over the victim, and the movement was not an inherent part of the aggravated assault. Williams v. State, 307 Ga. App. 675, 705 S.E.2d 906 (2011).

Aggravated assault, rape, and kidnapping. — Kidnapping, aggravated assault, and rape were separate offenses, completed individually, and did not merge as a matter of fact; thus, the trial court did not err in refusing to merge the kidnapping counts into the aggravated assault and rape counts for purposes of sentencing. Dasher v. State, 281 Ga. App. 326, 636 S.E.2d 83 (2006).

Kidnapping and false imprisonment all separate offenses. — Charge of false imprisonment did not merge with a kidnapping charge either as a matter of fact or as a matter of law since the kidnapping (the asportation of the victim to a place where the victim did not wish to go) involved conduct distinct from that which constituted false imprisonment, which embraced appellant's chasing the victim each time the victim managed to escape from the appellant's automobile and forcing the victim to re-enter the car and remain there until it suited the appellant to release the victim. Johnson v. State, 195 Ga. App. 723, 394 S.E.2d 586 (1990).

Because the evidence against the defendant showed that a charge of kidnapping and a charge of false imprisonment were not proven by the same facts, but: (1) the former occurred when the defendant abducted the victim outside of a mobile home and forced that victim inside of the home, completing the kidnapping crime at that time; and (2) the latter occurred when the defendant kept the victim inside the mobile home against the victim's will, the trial court did not err in holding that the crimes did not merge. Chatman v. State, 283 Ga. App. 673, 642 S.E.2d 361 (2007).

Because the kidnapping and false imprisonment convictions entered against the defendant were based on different conduct, the two did not merge. Snelson v. State, 286 Ga. App. 203, 648 S.E.2d 647 (2007).

Defendant committed false imprisonment by forcing the victim into a closet, binding the closet doors closed, and ordering the victim under threat of death to remain there until the defendant left. As the crime of kidnapping occurred and was complete prior to that, when the defendant forced the victim into a bedroom and held the victim there against the victim's will, the kidnapping and false imprisonment offenses were proven by different facts and did not merge. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

False imprisonment and kidnapping merged. — Trial court erred in failing to merge defendant's false imprisonment conviction into defendant's kidnapping conviction because false imprisonment was an integral part of the kidnapping charge, requiring the same evidence except for asportation and, accordingly, the offense of false imprisonment merged with the offense of kidnapping as a matter of fact, even though the offenses did not merge as a matter of law. Upshaw v. State, 249 Ga. App. 741, 549 S.E.2d 526 (2001), overruled on other grounds, Wallace v. State, 275 Ga. 879, 572 S.E.2d 579 (2002).

Because a jury convicted a defendant on both an indicted charge of kidnapping and an unindicted lesser charge of false imprisonment without any intervention of the trial court, the rule in Camphor v. State, 272 Ga. 408, 529 S.E.2d 121 (2000) did not apply; thus, the trial court properly merged the false imprisonment with the kidnapping and properly entered judgment on the jury's verdict finding the defendant guilty of the kidnapping. Manning v. State, 296 Ga. App. 376, 674 S.E.2d 408 (2009).

Aggravated assault did not merge with kidnapping and armed robbery charges because each count relied on separate facts. Howard v. State, 230 Ga. App. 437, 496 S.E.2d 532 (1998).

Theft by receiving stolen property and kidnapping. — Kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), had no element that the accused either stole property or received stolen property; in a case where defendant kidnapped the victim, then stole the victim's car, defendant's conviction for theft by receiving the stolen car, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-7(a), was not mutually exclusive of a kidnapping conviction and did not preclude prosecution for the kidnapping charge. State v. Fuller, No. A03A1918, 2004 Ga. App. LEXIS 329 (Mar. 9, 2004).

Interference with custody as lesser included offense. — Interference with custody was not a lesser included offense of kidnapping, as a matter of law or fact, since the indictment did not allege that the mother of the child was the victim of any crime. Stroud v. State, 200 Ga. App. 387, 408 S.E.2d 175 (1991).

Interference with custody is not a lesser included offense of kidnapping. Valdez-Hardin v. State, 201 Ga. App. 126, 410 S.E.2d 354 (1991).

Jury Instructions

Failure to instruct on bodily injury requires retrial of capital offense. — When the judge failed to offer the jury any specific instructions on the importance of a finding of bodily injury in making kidnapping a capital offense at both the guilt/innocence and sentencing trials, a retrial at both stages was required. Potts v. Zant, 734 F.2d 526 (11th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1068, 106 S. Ct. 1386, 89 L. Ed. 2d 610 (1986).

Jury sufficiently instructed on essential element of "bodily injury". — See Messer v. Kemp, 760 F.2d 1080 (11th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1088, 106 S. Ct. 864, 88 L. Ed. 2d 902 (1986).

Trial court's instructions that merely informed the jury that it was necessary that the injury was received during or as a result of the kidnapping was not in conflict with O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40. Lamunyon v. State, 218 Ga. App. 782, 463 S.E.2d 365 (1995).

In a prosecution for kidnapping with bodily injury, it was not error to instruct the jury that the jury must find that bodily injury occurred in conjunction with the alleged kidnapping because there was no requirement that the injury occur at the precise moment the victim was first kidnapped, and the crime, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b), required only that an injury, no matter how slight, occur during the kidnapping, so whether the bodily injury occurred at the beginning of the kidnapping or after the victim was abducted was immaterial. Nelson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 548, 629 S.E.2d 410 (2006).

Slight movement as part of instruction. — Trial court erred in charging the jury that "slight movement" was sufficient to prove asportation, but the error did not require reversal of the defendant's conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury because the evidence of asportation was overwhelming and undisputed; it was highly probable that any alleged error in giving the defendant's requested charge that "slight movement" was sufficient to prove asportation did not contribute to the judgment. Leverette v. State, 303 Ga. App. 849, 696 S.E.2d 62 (2010).

Conviction for kidnapping was not reversed because it was highly probable that the jury charge that the slightest movement sufficiently established asportation did not contribute to the judgment. Williams v. State, 307 Ga. App. 675, 705 S.E.2d 906 (2011).

Failure to instruct on bodily injury was reversible error. — Failure to instruct the jury that bodily injury is an essential element of kidnapping with bodily injury was reversible error, even though defendant failed to reserve any objection to the charge. Hunter v. State, 228 Ga. App. 846, 493 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

Instruction on conspiracy may be proper though conspiracy not charged. — In a trial for armed robbery and kidnapping, the trial court does not err in instructing the jury on the law of conspiracy although conspiracy is not charged in the indictment, where the conspiracy instruction is properly adjusted to the evidence. Spencer v. State, 180 Ga. App. 498, 349 S.E.2d 513 (1986).

False imprisonment charge not warranted. — Evidence did not require the trial court to give defendant's requested charge on false imprisonment as a lesser included offense of kidnapping. Williams v. State, 237 Ga. App. 555, 515 S.E.2d 862 (1999).

Trial court's jury instructions in defendant's criminal trial on multiple charges arising out of a domestic dispute were proper as: (1) there was no requirement that the jury be instructed on the element of assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20) in order to be properly instructed on the crime of aggravated assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21); (2) the methods of committing an aggravated battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), were properly defined based on the methods asserted in the indictment; (3) there was no support for a requested charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b); and (4) there was no possibility of a lesser included conviction for false imprisonment (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41), such that instruction only on the indicted offense of kidnapping (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40) was proper. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Counsel was not ineffective for not requesting a charge on false imprisonment as a lesser included offense of kidnapping. The only evidence was either that the defendant kidnapped the victim by dragging the victim by the hair or that the victim went with the defendant voluntarily. Eller v. State, 294 Ga. App. 77, 668 S.E.2d 755 (2008).

As the crime of kidnapping was complete when the defendant seized law office employees and forced the employees to a back office, and when the defendant taped up and moved an attorney from place to place in the office, the defendant was not entitled to a charge on a lesser included offense because there was no evidence that the defendant was guilty of merely false imprisonment. Brower v. State, 298

Ga. App. 699, 680 S.E.2d 859 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1845, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 13 (Ga. 2010).

Charge of simple kidnapping as a lesser included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury was not warranted because the evidence showed that after the defendant lured the victim into the van, the defendant drove to another location and assaulted and injured the victim; the victim was never free to leave until the defendant finally dropped the victim off after sexually assaulting and injuring the victim. Robertson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 376, 629 S.E.2d 79 (2006).

Jury instruction proper. — Trial court's jury charge in defendant's trial on charges of kidnapping by bodily injury in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40 was proper even though there was no evidence of persuasion or enticement, as indicated in the instruction, but only of abduction by force; an abduction need not be by force, actual or constructive, as inducement, persuasion, or fraud is sufficient, and the jury could possibly have interpreted the facts in such a way as to have found that defendant persuaded the victim to go to defendant's truck. Mann v. State, 264 Ga. App. 631, 591 S.E.2d 495 (2003), overruled on other grounds, Kaiser v. State, 285 Ga. App. 63, 646 S.E.2d 84 (2007).

Trial court, in response to a request by the jury during deliberations, did not erroneously give the jury a written copy of the charge on the definition of kidnapping, as such was within the court's discretion and the defendant failed to show an abuse of that discretion. McCaskell v. State, 285 Ga. App. 592, 646 S.E.2d 761 (2007).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy, rape, and other related crimes, trial counsel's decision not to object to the jury charge on kidnapping with bodily injury did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel as the trial court employed the language of the relevant statute (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40) and instructed the jury that the offense of kidnapping with bodily injury occurs when a person abducts "or" steals away any person. The fact that the indictment charged the defendant with abducting "and" stealing away the victim did not require trial counsel to object to the jury charge as the statute provided only one way in which kidnapping can be committed, namely by abducting or stealing away the victim, and the jury charge using the statutory language was appropriate, even though the indictment used the conjunctive. Greene v. State, 295 Ga. App. 803, 673 S.E.2d 292 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0862, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 259 (Ga. 2009).

Allen instruction proper. — In a prosecution for aggravated battery, false imprisonment, and kidnapping, a written Allen charge issued by the court was not coercive, despite the court's use of the phrase "must be decided", given that the language was only a small portion of an otherwise fair and balanced charge, the trial court urged the jury to take their time, and the defendant was acquitted of the kidnapping charge. Benson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 643, 634 S.E.2d 821 (2006).

Charge tracking statutory language sufficient. — Since the statutory law stated that kidnapping occurred when a person abducted or stole away another without lawful authority and held that other person against the other person's will, the statutory law only permitted one way in which kidnapping could be committed; accordingly, the trial court did not err in charging the jury on the kidnapping charge and petitioner's appellate counsel could not have provided ineffective assistance for not challenging that instruction on appeal since the jury charge did not permit petitioner to be found guilty in a manner not listed in the indictment. Specifically, "bodily injury" in regard to the offense of kidnapping with bodily harm was not part of the definition of the offense of kidnapping which could only be committed in one manner; rather, bodily injury was addressed only in a statutory subsection addressing punishment and the jury was, therefore, not able to convict petitioner of kidnapping with bodily harm based on harm that was inflicted but was not listed in the indictment. Lewis v. McDougal, 276 Ga. 861, 583 S.E.2d 859 (2003).

Defendant cited no authority and the trial court found no authority requiring the trial court to use and explain the term asportation as formerly used in the kidnapping statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a); additionally, defendant did not request any additional charges on kidnapping to prevent any confusion on the requirements of asportation and, thus, could not complain about the trial court's failure to give an unrequested instruction on a collateral issue, especially when the omission was not clearly harmful and erroneous as a matter of law. McGuire v. State, 266 Ga. App. 673, 598 S.E.2d 55 (2004).

Since the language "with bodily injury" was not included in the kidnapping counts in the indictment, the trial court could not sentence the defendant to life on kidnapping charges, despite the fact that one of the kidnapping victims suffered bodily injury. Smith v. State, 302 Ga. App. 222, 690 S.E.2d 867 (2010).

Jury sufficiently instructed on asportation. — In a defendant's trial for kidnapping with bodily injury and related offenses, the trial court committed no error in instructing the jury on the asportation element of kidnapping; the instruction given, which stated that the victim's slightest movement was sufficient to prove asportation, accurately stated the law with regard to that element of the crime. Wright v. State, 282 Ga. App. 649, 639 S.E.2d 581 (2006).

Defendant's requested charge on asportation was properly denied because the charge was not a correct statement of the law and the actual jury charge correctly stated the law on asportation. Hammond v. State, 303 Ga. App. 176, 692 S.E.2d 760 (2010).

Punishment

Simple kidnapping is not a capital felony, but kidnapping for ransom or with bodily injury is. — Since the court charged only "kidnapping" and the jury found only "kidnapping," the jury's finding could not support the death penalty. Patrick v. State, 247 Ga. 168, 274 S.E.2d 570 (1981), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1089, 103 S. Ct. 575, 74 L. Ed. 2d 936 (1982).

Since kidnapping when no bodily injury occurs was not a capital crime at the time O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30 was enacted, such an offense cannot serve as a statutory aggravating circumstance. Crawford v. State, 254 Ga. 435, 330 S.E.2d 567 (1985), cert.

denied, 489 U.S. 1040, 109 S. Ct. 1098, 103 L. Ed. 2d 239 (1989); Crawford v. State, 256 Ga. 57, 344 S.E.2d 215, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 989, 107 S. Ct. 583, 93 L. Ed. 2d 585 (1986).

Question of whether a kidnapping is punishable as a capital offense is a question of the grade of crime charged in the indictment and proved at the innocence/guilt phase of the trial. The court must instruct the jury at the guilt/innocence phase that it is considering the charge of a crime involving bodily injury and the jury is required to make a specific finding or verdict as to this element. Potts v. Zant, 575 F. Supp. 374 (N.D. Ga. 1983), aff'd, 734 F.2d 526 (11th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1068, 106 S. Ct. 1386, 89 L. Ed. 2d 610, judgment vacated, 478 U.S. 1017, 106 S. Ct. 3328, 92 L. Ed. 2d 734 (1986) (remanded for further consideration in light of Rose v. Clark, 478 U.S. 570 (1986)), aff'd, 814 F.2d 1512 (11th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 876, 110 S. Ct. 214, 107 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1989).

Punishment of death does not invariably violate Constitution. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1976).

Statutorily specified aggravating circumstance must be found beyond reasonable doubt. — Before a convicted defendant may be sentenced to death, the jury, or the trial judge in cases tried without a jury, must find beyond a reasonable doubt one of the 10 aggravating circumstances specified in former Code 1933, § 27-2534.1 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30). Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1976).

Death sentence for simple kidnapping is not authorized. Jarrell v. Zant, 248 Ga. 492, 284 S.E.2d 17 (1981).

Sentence for kidnapping with bodily injury. — Upon a conviction of kidnapping with bodily injury, the trial court did not err in entering a life sentence without conducting a pre-sentence hearing, since the only sentences authorized were life imprisonment or death, and the state did not seek the death penalty. Hasty v. State, 210 Ga. App. 722, 437 S.E.2d 638 (1993).

Defendant was convicted of kidnapping with bodily injury, which carries a minimum life sentence; thus, the trial court did not err when it denied defendant's oral request for a presentence investigation prior to sentencing. Bolick v. State, 244 Ga. App. 567, 536 S.E.2d 242 (2000).

Defendant's life sentence for kidnapping with bodily injury was not improper or illegal as that crime carried the punishment of life imprisonment or death. Fulcher v. State, 259 Ga. App. 648, 578 S.E.2d 264 (2003).

Sentence for kidnapping without bodily injury. — There is no requirement that a kidnapping victim receive bodily injury when sentencing is pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1; moreover, as defendant had also been convicted of armed robbery, the trial court correctly imposed a mandatory life without parole sentence for either of the defendant's second serious violent felonies: kidnapping and armed robbery. Moorer v. State, 286 Ga. App. 395, 649 S.E.2d 537 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 806 (Ga. 2007).

First Offender Act treatment unavailable. — There was no error in the trial court's failure to convict defendant of kidnapping and armed robbery, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-40 and 16-8-41, respectively, under the First Offender Act, as O.C.G.A. § 42-8-66 specifically stated that the Act did not apply to sentences for violent felonies outlined in O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1, and those two crimes were listed as serious violent felonies. Isaac v. State, 275 Ga. App. 254, 620 S.E.2d 483 (2005).

Plea not invalid when defendant received bargained for sentence. — Although the record did not reveal that the defendant was advised of the mandatory minimum sentences on the charges to which the defendant pled guilty, as contemplated by Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 33.8(C)(4), given that the defendant received the sentence the defendant bargained for, the defendant could not establish that the defendant suffered adverse consequences from not knowing the mandatory minimum sentences for armed robbery and kidnapping. Belcher v. State, 304 Ga. App. 645, 697 S.E.2d 300 (2010).

Merger. — Defendant's aggravated assault convictions were to be merged with armed robbery and kidnapping convictions as the same set of facts were used to prove the offenses. Lenon v. State, 290 Ga. App. 626, 660 S.E.2d 16 (2008).

No merger with false imprisonment. — Defendant's kidnapping and false imprisonment sentences did not merge for sentencing purposes where the victim had been made to drive around at gunpoint, then taken to an apartment before being forced into some woods and shot in the head; thus, the crime of false imprisonment was complete before the victim was forced into the woods and shot. John v. State, 282 Ga. 792, 653 S.E.2d 435 (2007).

No merger with aggravated assault. — Movement of each of the victims from the kitchen to the bedroom, where the intruders attempted to tie them up, was sufficient to convict the defendant for the kidnapping of both victims; the kidnappings occurred independently of the aggravated assault (pistol-whipping) of another victim and independently of the armed robbery of still another victim's purse; thus, the trial court properly declined to merge the kidnapping convictions with the aggravated assault and armed robbery convictions for sentencing purposes. Maddox v. State, 277 Ga. App. 580, 627 S.E.2d 166 (2006).

Defendant's guilty pleas for aggravated assault with intent to rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) and kidnapping in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) were not accepted in violation of the constitutional prohibition against double jeopardy because the offenses did not merge as a matter of law since each of the offenses were separate and required proof of different facts; the state asserted that the defendant dragged the victim from the front of a laundromat facility into a bathroom in the back of the facility, which formed a basis for the kidnapping charge, and that the defendant sexually assaulted the victim while holding the victim in the bathroom, which formed a basis for the aggravated assault with the intent to rape charge. Shelton v. State, 307 Ga. App. 599, 705 S.E.2d 699 (2011).

Simple assault did not merge with kidnapping. — Trial court did not err in declining to merge a defendant's convictions for assault and kidnapping with bodily injury because assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(2) was established by evidence that the victim was placed in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury when defendant told the victim the defendant had a gun, and kidnapping with bodily injury in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), on the other hand, was established by evidence that defendant abducted and held the victim against the victim's will in the victim's car, driving from one location to another, during which time the victim received bodily injuries. Walker v. State, 306 Ga. App. 16, 701 S.E.2d 523 (2010).

Sentence proper. — Trial court did not impose an unjustifiably lengthy sentence merely because a defendant chose to require the prosecution to prove the defendant's guilt at trial rather than to enter a plea of guilty because the trial court sentenced defendant to the maximum term of 20 years in prison for kidnapping and on each of the aggravated assault counts, the trial court also exercised the court's discretion to run all of the counts concurrently instead of consecutively; the defendant's claim that the trial court punished the defendant for exercising the defendant's right to a jury trial was not supported by the transcript, which revealed that the sentence imposed by the trial court was based on the defendant's lack of remorse. Brown v. State, 299 Ga. App. 782, 683 S.E.2d 874 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for out-of-time appeal to vacate a void sentence because the defendant's sentence of 40 years imprisonment for aggravated assault with intent to rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1) and kidnapping in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) fell within the statutory range and was not void; the offenses of aggravated assault and kidnapping both carry maximum sentences of 20 years, §§ 16-5-21(b) and 16-5-40(b)(1). Shelton v. State, 307 Ga. App. 599, 705 S.E.2d 699 (2011).

offense of kidnapping, and it was not necessary to the burglary charge to prove that defendant actually committed the offense of kidnapping, the offense of kidnapping was not included in the offense of burglary as a matter of fact or of law, and defendant therefore was convicted properly of both offenses. Childs v. State, 257 Ga. 243, 357 S.E.2d 48, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1987).

Evidence showing that the victim was forced to go into several rooms of the victim's house against the victim's will was sufficient evidence to support a kidnapping conviction. Williams v. State, 178 Ga. App. 581, 344 S.E.2d 247 (1986).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions as a party to the offenses of armed robbery, kidnapping, false imprisonment, burglary, and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21, 16-5-40, 16-5-41, 16-7-1, and 16-8-41 because: (1) defendant received information from the defendant's love interest, about the victims' house, the location of safes, where money was located, and about the alarm system; (2) the day after the home invasion the love interest saw defendant and the defendant showed the love interest a stack of cash, and the defendant told the love interest it might be the victim's money; and (3) an FBI informant met with defendant and defendant told the informant that defendant had been shorted money from the robbery, and that the defendant got the layout of the house from the defendant's love interest. Pope v. State, 266 Ga. App. 658, 598 S.E.2d 48 (2004).

Double jeopardy did not bar retrial. — Defendant could be retried on a kidnapping charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b) after defendant was acquitted of felony murder under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1(c) and a mistrial was declared on the underlying felony of kidnapping; the jury could have based its acquittal on the felony murder charge on factors other than defendant's participation in the crimes that preceded the homicide. State v. Lambert, 276 Ga. App. 668, 624 S.E.2d 174 (2005).

Kidnapping and aggravated sodomy crimes did not merge since there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could have found that the defendant's action in choking the victim almost to the point of unconsciousness after forcibly taking the victim from the living room to the bedroom constituted the bodily injury necessary to establish all the elements of kidnapping with bodily injury, which was completed before the defendant committed the aggravated sodomy. Olsen v. State, 191 Ga. App. 763, 382 S.E.2d 715 (1989).

Voluntarily entering car. — Fact that victims got into defendant's car voluntarily did not protect defendant from a kidnapping prosecution since the defendant did not allow the victims to leave the vehicle after driving past the gas station to which the victims had asked to be taken. George v. State, 192 Ga. App. 840, 386 S.E.2d 669, cert. denied, 192 Ga. App. 901, 386 S.E.2d 669 (1989).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction of kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40 although the victim entered the defendant's vehicle voluntarily; the victim testified that the defendant refused to take the victim to the victim's home despite the victim's request that the defendant do so, and that was when the kidnapping began. Clark v. State, 282 Ga. App. 248, 638 S.E.2d 397 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for attempt to kidnap, since the victim was grabbed and restrained against the victim's will and there was evidence from which the jury could find that the defendant intended to take the victim away in the defendant's truck and was thwarted only by the victim's resistance. McGinnis v. State, 183 Ga. App. 17, 358 S.E.2d 269 (1987).

Convictions of criminal attempt to commit kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), and aggravated assault with intent to rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), were supported by sufficient evidence since the victim positively identified the defendant as the attacker when the defendant was captured and again at trial, and since a store owner also identified the defendant at trial and testified that the store owner maintained sight of the defendant from which the store owner saw the defendant attacking the victim until the defendant's capture; additionally, since the defendant made no attempt to take the victim's purse or keys, and the evidence showed that the defendant had pornographic photos of someone who looked similar to the victim, the jury was authorized to find that the defendant had the requisite intent to detain, abduct, and rape the victim as charged. Mobley v. State, 279 Ga. App. 476, 631 S.E.2d 491 (2006).

Evidence sufficient to support conviction for hijacking, battery, and kidnapping. — Defendant's convictions of hijacking a motor vehicle, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b), battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23, and two counts of kidnapping with bodily injury, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b), were affirmed because sufficient evidence was presented at trial to support the charges as the victim testified that the defendant forced the defendant's way into the car at gunpoint while the victim and an infant child were in the vehicle and then sexually assaulted the victim after threatening to harm the child, the defendant's wallet was found in the abandoned car, and the defendant admitted to the hijacking. Adams v. State, 276 Ga. App. 319, 623 S.E.2d 525 (2005).

Evidence admissible despite incidentally placing character in issue. — Evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of assault with a deadly weapon, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and kidnapping; the victim's statement that the victim's sister was afraid of defendant because defendant had done the same thing to the sister was clearly admissible as part of the res gestae even if it incidentally placed defendant's character in evidence. McLendon v. State, 258 Ga. App. 133, 572 S.E.2d 763 (2002).

Kidnapping by hospital. — Hospital did not commit kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40 when, after the hospital employee reported the children's situation to child services, child services took the children into custody. Gwinnett Health Sys. v. DELU, 264 Ga. App. 863, 592 S.E.2d 497 (2003).

Kidnapping occurring in two counties but same offense. — In a warden's appeal, the grant of habeas corpus relief to an inmate based on ineffective assistance of counsel was upheld as the kidnapping charges in the two counties charged against the inmate were for the same offense and being advised by defense counsel to plead guilty in one county to avoid prosecution in the other was erroneous since double jeopardy would have barred any additional prosecution. Upton v. Johnson, 282 Ga. 600, 652 S.E.2d 516 (2007).

Guilty plea free and voluntary. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to two counts of kidnapping and two counts of aggravated assault as the trial court was well aware of the medications the defendant was taking when the plea was entered, the medications did not affect the defendant's ability to understand the proceedings, and an expert opined that the defendant was feigning hallucinations and was competent to stand trial; hence, at that point, the trial court had no duty to make any further inquiries into the defendant's ability to competently tender a plea. McDowell v. State, 282 Ga. App. 754, 639 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Factual basis sufficient for guilty plea. — Sufficient factual basis was established for a defendant's guilty plea to armed robbery, kidnapping, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime when the prosecutor stated that the defendant and an accomplice entered the victims' apartment, forced the victims into rooms at gunpoint, tied the victims up, and stole some items; the prosecutor also noted that much of the crime had been recorded by a 9-1-1 operator; defense counsel stated that counsel had discussed the facts with the defendant; and the defendant conceded guilt. Therefore, it was not necessary that the indictment be read into the record. Leary v. State, 291 Ga. App. 754, 662 S.E.2d 733 (2008).

Evidence sufficient to support conviction. — See Moore v. State, 176 Ga. App. 882, 339 S.E.2d 271 (1985); Huston v. State, 256 Ga. 276, 347 S.E.2d 556 (1986); Westbrook v. State, 256 Ga. 776, 353 S.E.2d 504 (1987); Riseden v. State, 181 Ga. App. 453, 352 S.E.2d 634 (1987); Williams v. State, 258 Ga. 281, 368 S.E.2d

When the evidence showed that defendant both held the victim at gunpoint in a motel room and took possession of the victim's wallet and car keys after they had been removed from the victim's person, the evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of armed robbery and kidnapping beyond a reasonable doubt. Spencer v. State, 180 Ga. App. 498, 349 S.E.2d 513 (1986), cert. denied.

Evidence presented by the prosecution was sufficient to enable any rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty of armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault with intent to rob. Conway v. State, 183 Ga. App. 573, 359 S.E.2d 438 (1987).

Evidence showing that defendant forcibly took his wife from the steps of her parents' residence; that she asked him to let her go; and that she was taken to another town against her will sufficed for a conviction. Williams v. State, 207 Ga. App. 371, 427 S.E.2d 846 (1993).

Testimony by the victim, in which the victim positively identified defendant as the man who entered defendant's home, and committed the crimes of robbery by intimidation, kidnapping, aggravated assault, aggravated assault with a knife, aggravated battery and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, charged in the indictment and eyewitness testimony that defendant entered the victim's premises minutes before the attack of the victim was sufficient to authorize the jury's finding that defendant was guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt, of committing the crimes charged in the indictment. Mobley v. State, 211 Ga. App. 709, 441 S.E.2d 73 (1994).

Victim's testimony that defendant forced the victim out of defendant's car at gunpoint and grabbed the victim's arm when the victim tried to escape, causing the victim to fall and scrape the victim's knees was sufficient to authorize the jury's finding that defendant was guilty of kidnapping with bodily injury. Fields v. State, 216 Ga. App. 184, 453 S.E.2d 794 (1995).

Evidence that the defendant kidnapped his estranged wife, told her he would kill her and locked her in the car trunk, and that the wife received injuries in her attempts to escape was sufficient to find the defendant guilty of kidnapping with bodily injury. Stubbs v. State, 220 Ga. App. 106, 469 S.E.2d 229 (1996).

Although largely circumstantial, evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to find defendant guilty of attempted kidnapping. Simonds v. State, 231 Ga. App. 692, 499 S.E.2d 744 (1998).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for kidnapping where the defendant tried to force the victim into the victim's truck and succeeded in moving the victim a short distance toward that objective. Estes v. State, 234 Ga. App. 150, 505 S.E.2d 840 (1998).

Evidence that the defendant was one of a group of armed men who broke into the victims' apartment and, while attempting to steal money and property, forced the victims to move from the bedrooms to the living room to the bathroom was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for kidnapping. Cosby v. State, 234 Ga. App. 723, 507 S.E.2d 551 (1998).

Victim's injury satisfied the requirement that injury occur during a kidnapping, when the defendant threw the victim from the back of a moving truck and the victim was injured while holding on to the tailgate and being dragged along the ground. Reynolds v. State, 234 Ga. App. 884, 508 S.E.2d 674 (1998).

Proof that the defendant held his wife at knife point, stabbed her with a long kitchen knife, and then dragged her from the living room to the bedroom was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict that he was guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt, of kidnapping with bodily injury. Respers v. State, 244 Ga. App. 689, 536 S.E.2d 586 (2000).

Evidence was sufficient to show asportation of the victim and to support a conviction for kidnapping since the victim went from one room in the victim's apartment to another in response to the defendant's threatening command. Woodson v. State, 273 Ga. 557, 544 S.E.2d 431 (2001).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for armed robbery and kidnapping since defendant grabbed the store clerk by the arm at gunpoint, forced the clerk behind the check out counter, emptied the store's cash register, took money from the safe, forced the clerk into a storeroom located at the rear of the store, and then, after the clerk escaped, chased the clerk with a vehicle. Duncan v. State, 253 Ga. App. 239, 558 S.E.2d 783 (2002).

Armed robbery and kidnapping convictions were upheld, despite defendant's contention that defendant could only be found guilty of no more than a theft by taking, because defendant participated in the crime upon the codefendant's representation that the victim was among those who planned such events and was an active participant therein; however, an accomplice's testimony to the contrary, corroborated by the victim, supported the state's theory. Turner v. State, 258 Ga. App. 867, 575 S.E.2d 727 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for kidnapping as the testimony of a laborer who worked at the home where the offense occurred established that the laborer entered the house because defendant and another individual forced the laborer to go inside and the laborer feared for the laborer's own life because defendant and the other individual threatened to shoot the laborer if the laborer ran, even though the laborer did not actually see either the defendant, the individual, or even a gun. Singleton v. State, 259 Ga. App. 184, 577 S.E.2d 6 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for kidnapping since defendant attempted to choke the victim, the victim's parent found defendant holding the victim wrapped in a sheet, and the parent identified defendant as the kidnapper in a photographic lineup. Palmer v. State, 260 Ga. App. 670, 580 S.E.2d 539 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions of two counts of armed robbery, two counts of theft by taking, three counts of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), three counts of simple battery, three counts of kidnapping, and two counts of possessing a firearm during the commission of a crime since: (1) there was evidence that defendant entered a store, placed a knife to the neck of one of the three victims, forced that victim to the back of the store, aided another assailant who was armed with a gun to bind the victims and drag them to the back of the store, and stole money and other items from two of the victims; (2) defendant confessed to the crimes during interviews with law enforcement officials; and (3) defendant's confessions were corroborated by the testimony of one of the victims who, despite earlier being unable to identify the robbers, ultimately identified defendant as one of the robbers. The corroborating victim's initial inability to identify defendant posed an issue of credibility for the jury's resolution and did not require reversal. Phanamixay v. State, 260 Ga. App. 177, 581 S.E.2d 286 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions of rape, kidnapping, burglary, and aggravated assault since: (1) the victim testified that the victim discovered a strange person in the victim's den who grabbed the victim as the victim tried to run away, that the person held a knife to the victim's face and told the victim that the person would kill the victim if the victim screamed, that person then forced the victim to go from room to room in the victim's home to turn out the lights, and that the person then raped the victim; (2) the victim identified defendant as the victim's attacker after hearing the defendant's voice; and (3) a DNA analyst testified that, with a probability of error of one in a trillion, DNA from defendant's blood matched the DNA found in vaginal swabs that were taken from the victim. McKinney v. State, 261 Ga. App. 218, 582 S.E.2d 463 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of armed robbery, kidnapping, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, where defendant directed victim at gunpoint to walk toward a cash machine that could be used with the cash card in the victim's wallet, and where both the victim and a bystander had opportunities to view defendant. Wade v. State, 261 Ga. App. 587, 583 S.E.2d 251 (2003).

Evidence in the form of testimony from defendant's accomplices that defendant repeatedly struck the victim in the face while asking the victim "where the money was" and choked the victim when the victim could not immediately find the money in the victim's truck after defendant took the victim to the truck because the victim told defendant that the money was there, coupled with defendant's possession of the victim's beeper, was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for robbery, kidnapping with bodily injury, and aggravated battery. Rutledge v. State, 263 Ga. App. 308, 587 S.E.2d 808 (2003).

When the defendant participated in a carjacking, drove the victim's car from the scene of a murder, asked the defendant's love interest to lie about the defendant's whereabouts, and lied repeatedly to the police about what happened, a jury was free to conclude that the defendant participated in an armed robbery and kidnapping as an accomplice under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-2-20(a), 16-5-40(a), and 16-8-41(a); thus, the trial court did not err in denying a directed verdict. Owens v. State, 263 Ga. App. 478, 588 S.E.2d 265 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for kidnapping as the evidence showed that defendant shot the victim in the chest and then helped load the victim in another person's car, which was then driven to another location where the person was shot to death. Conaway v. State, 277 Ga. 422, 589 S.E.2d 108 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of malice murder, felony murder, burglary, aggravated assault, kidnapping with bodily injury, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony where defendant: (1) planned the defendant's crimes, and was armed with a gun and handcuffs; (2) broke into the defendant's in-laws' house after severing their phone line; (3) shot and killed the defendant's father-in-law and wounded the defendant's mother-in-law while they lay in bed; (4) handcuffed the defendant's bleeding mother-in-law to the mother-in-law's nine-year-old child and left them tethered to a bed rail in a room with the dead father-in-law and defendant's two-year-old child; and (5) abducted the defendant's estranged spouse and the spouse's 17-year-old sibling to a mobile home where the defendant made them take showers while the defendant watched, and then raped them both. Sallie v. State, 276 Ga. 506, 578 S.E.2d 444, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 902, 124 S. Ct. 251, 157 L. Ed. 2d 185 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support all but one of defendant's convictions for burglary, kidnapping, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime because the testimony of the three shooting victims was entirely consistent in all material respects, and any conflicts in the witnesses' testimony raised a credibility issue for jury resolution. Squires v. State, 265 Ga. App. 673, 595 S.E.2d 547 (2004).

Since defendant's spouse testified that after taping the spouse's wrists together, the defendant forced the spouse into the car against the spouse's will and that while driving, the defendant backhanded the spouse on the spouse's face three or four times and "hit me upside my head across my face" with the defendant's forearm, a rational trier of fact could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offense of kidnapping with bodily injury. Carter v. State, 268 Ga. App. 688, 603 S.E.2d 56 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support burglary, aggravated assault, kidnapping, false imprisonment, and armed robbery convictions where one of the victims opened the door to the victim's home when the victim recognized one of defendant's accomplices, where defendant and another then pushed the door open and rushed inside, and where defendant grabbed the first victim, pointed a gun at the first victim's head, took money from the second victim's wallet, kept the gun pointed at both victims during the entire incident, ripped the telephone cord out of the wall, and instructed the accomplices to bind and blindfold the victims, which they did; the victims both identified defendant as the gunman from a police photo array, plus made an in-court identification at trial, and any conflict between the victims' testimony that the gunman had a tattoo on the gunman's arm and a trial demonstration revealing no tattoo on defendant's arm was a matter for the jury to resolve and did not affect the sufficiency of the identification. Kates v. State, 269 Ga. App. 8, 603 S.E.2d 342 (2004).

Evidence supported defendant's robbery by intimidation and false imprisonment convictions and codefendant's armed robbery and kidnapping with bodily injury convictions as defendant lured the victim to defendant's apartment where codefendant struck the victim in the back of the head and robbed the victim at gunpoint. Smith v. State, 269 Ga. App. 133, 603 S.E.2d 445 (2004).

When the defendant's victim identified the defendant from a photo lineup and at trial as the person who forced the victim to open the vaults in the fast-food restaurant where the victim worked, then duct-taped the victim's limbs and repeatedly struck the victim as the victim lay face down on the floor, the evidence was sufficient beyond a reasonable doubt to allow the jury to convict the defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of certain crimes. Banks v. State, 269 Ga. App. 653, 605 S.E.2d 47 (2004).

Sufficient evidence, including testimony from the child victim identifying defendant's vehicle, evidence of defendant's DNA matching that of the victim and expert testimony that the frequency of such occurrence was approximately one in two billion in the Caucasian population, and similar transaction evidence, supported defendant's kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, and first-degree cruelty to children convictions. Morita v. State, 270 Ga. App. 372, 606 S.E.2d 595 (2004).

Defendant's multiple convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, kidnapping, possessing a firearm during the commission of a felony, burglary, and kidnapping with bodily injury, were supported by sufficient evidence because the defendant and another robbed a store while holding the two owners at gunpoint, defendant led police on a high-speed car chase, and the defendant broke into and robbed two homes, one of which had an occupant that defendant beat; only one store owner's testimony was needed to establish the facts to support the aggravated assault conviction. Owens v. State, 271 Ga. App. 365, 609 S.E.2d 670 (2005).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, burglary, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and three counts of kidnapping arising from an incident in which the defendant and a companion robbed the defendant's victim at gunpoint, then forced the victim and the victim's children into their house and tied the victim up with duct tape; the victim identified the defendant from a photo line-up, the defendant's fingerprints were found at the scene, a store video showed the defendant buying the duct tape which was used, and the store manager identified the defendant as the buyer of the duct tape. Brownlee v. State, 271 Ga. App. 475, 610 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to allow a rational finder of fact to convict defendant of kidnapping, three counts of armed robbery, and two firearms offenses beyond a reasonable doubt because defendant committed the crimes at a restaurant where defendant was a regular customer, so the victims were able to identify defendant to police, a neutral witness saw defendant hurrying away from the direction of the restaurant right after the time of the robbery, and, when defendant was arrested, new clothes and receipts dated after the robbery were discovered. Strahan v. State, 273 Ga. App. 116, 614 S.E.2d 227 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault as, notwithstanding the absence of an in-court identification of defendant and the state's failure to present fingerprint evidence, a victim's testimony concerning the victim's on-the-scene identification supported the finding that defendant perpetrated the crimes; there was also sufficient evidence that the cash seized from defendant's love interest's house had been put there by defendant. Oliver v. State, 273 Ga. App. 754, 615 S.E.2d 846 (2005).

Evidence, including a gun and penny wrappers and a green coin basket found in defendant's bedroom, was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of armed robbery and kidnapping after a restaurant was robbed; the basket matched a basket used by the restaurant and the pennies had been exchanged at the same bank that supplied the restaurant. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 66, 619 S.E.2d 759 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, kidnapping with bodily injury, and possession of a knife during the commission of a felony, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2), 16-5-24, 16-5-40, and 16-11-106, respectively, were supported by the evidence, as defendant was engaged in a domestic dispute with defendant's spouse and child, wherein defendant argued, threatened to kill them, and locked them in a bathroom, punched and hit the spouse, and stabbed them each multiple times with a decorative sword that defendant removed from the wall; there was sufficient evidence to show that defendant did not stab them in the midst of a struggle over possession of the sword, but instead, that defendant intended to stab or cut them. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for armed robbery, kidnapping, and kidnapping with bodily injury, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-41 and 16-5-40, respectively, were supported by sufficient evidence, as defendant robbed a restaurant manager at gunpoint, forced the manager and others into the restaurant freezer, and defendant caused injury and made threats to the victims; defendant's claim that defendant was forced against defendant's will to participate in the crime, which was also committed by three codefendants, was not found credible, and several victims testified that defendant not only held a gun, but that defendant also threatened them with bodily harm if they did not cooperate. Isaac v. State, 275 Ga. App. 254, 620 S.E.2d 483 (2005).

Because the weight to be given eyewitness testimony about the victim's fear, resistance, and attempts to escape was for the jury to decide, the evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of kidnapping. Carter v. State, 275 Ga. App. 483, 621 S.E.2d 503 (2005).

Trial court's denial of defendant's motion for acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, was proper, as there was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions for kidnapping, rape, and robbery by intimidation, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-40, 16-6-1, and 16-8-41, respectively, because the victim positively identified defendant upon the arrest and at trial, there was similar transaction evidence from another victim who was approached and threatened in the same manner, and there was also corroborative physical evidence; defendant threatened the victim, who was at a bus stop, with a gun, robbed the victim, forced the victim to a storage area in a garage, and raped the victim. Sims v. State, 275 Ga. App. 836, 621 S.E.2d 869 (2005).

Evidence regarding defendant's forcing the defendant's love interest down a street and stabbing the defendant's love interest, sustained the convictions for kidnapping with bodily injury. Smith v. State, 276 Ga. App. 41, 622 S.E.2d 413 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for malice murder, felony murder during the commission of a kidnapping, and kidnapping because defendant refused to turn the car around or to stop and let the victim exit the car; after the victim grabbed the steering wheel and fled the car, defendant shot the victim, fatally. Pruitt v. State, 279 Ga. 140, 611 S.E.2d 47, cert. denied, 546 U.S. 866, 126 S. Ct. 165, 163 L. Ed. 2d 152 (2005).

Evidence that defendant took money from the one man, beat the man while doing so, that defendant was armed at the time, that defendant had the victim removed from defendant's house by the co-defendants so that the one victim could be murdered elsewhere, and that the second victim was removed from defendant's house by another codefendant, all after the one victim and the second victim were suspected of plotting to rob defendant, who was selling illegal drugs from defendant's home, was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for malice murder, kidnapping, armed robbery, and being in possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Mason v. State, 279 Ga. 636, 619 S.E.2d 621 (2005).

Sufficient evidence supported convictions for aggravated assault, kidnapping, armed robbery, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, even though none of the victims could identify the defendant as the gunman in the robbery due to the fact that the defendant wore a mask, because defendant was found shortly after the robbery with cash, weapons, a ski mask, a car and clothing matching the victims' description; surveillance videotape of the robbery was shown to the jury to determine whether defendant was the person on the videotape. Johnson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 41, 625 S.E.2d 411 (2005).

Convictions for kidnapping, aggravated assault, and malice murder, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-40, 16-5-21, and 16-5-1, respectively, were supported by sufficient evidence when defendant got into a dispute with the victim over a drug deal, defendant and the codefendants kidnapped the victim, drove the victim to a remote area, and shot the victim several times. Morris v. State, 280 Ga. 179, 626 S.E.2d 123 (2006).

Despite the victim's recantation of the events that occurred leading up to the rape, kidnapping, and aggravated assault committed by defendant, the evidence presented of the victim's statements and the testimony of the other state witnesses and medical personnel as to the extent of the victim's injuries, was sufficient to support the convictions. Hambrick v. State, 278 Ga. App. 768, 629 S.E.2d 442 (2006).

Victim's testimony that the victim did not voluntarily walk to the bathroom where the victim was found, after defendant attacked the victim, and evidence that there was blood spattered in a hallway and on the bathroom cabinet and walls, that the victim's body was found wedged between a bathtub and toilet with ceramic pieces from the toilet base embedded in the victim's scalp and an electrical cord tied around the victim's neck, allowed a jury to find that the defendant forced the victim, who may have been unconscious, into the bathroom, pushed the victim's head into the toilet base and choked the victim with an electrical cord, and this was sufficient to convict defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-40(a) and 16-5-40(b). Nelson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 548, 629 S.E.2d 410 (2006).

Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish a fact under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, and defendant's convictions for kidnapping, burglary, aggravated sodomy, rape, and false imprisonment were supported by sufficient evidence where the victim testified that defendant forced the victim into a train boxcar, threatened to kill the victim, and had vaginal and oral sex with the victim against the victim's will and without the victim's consent; there was also circumstantial evidence showing the victim's lack of consent, including the victim's fleeing from the boxcar while naked, the victim's outcry to a train engineer that the victim had been raped, and the victim's injuries. Davis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 628, 629 S.E.2d 537 (2006).

Conviction of kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, was supported by sufficient evidence, including testimony from the victim that the defendant forced the victim into the defendant's car at gunpoint, then drove the victim to various locations, sexually assaulted the victim, knocked the victim unconscious, grabbed the victim by the neck when the victim tried to leave the defendant's presence, strangled the victim to the point that the victim passed out, and put the victim in the trunk of the defendant's car. Moody v. State, 279 Ga. App. 440, 631 S.E.2d 485 (2006).

Convictions for kidnapping and aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence, including testimony from the victim that, when the victim stopped the victim's car at a stop sign, the defendant jumped in the car, held a knife to the victim's throat and demanded money, that, as the victim drove, the defendant held the knife on the victim and continued to demand money, that, when the victim spotted a police station, the victim sped into its parking lot, at which point, the defendant fled on foot. Adcock v. State, 279 Ga. App. 473, 631 S.E.2d 494 (2006).

In a case in which the victim was allegedly bound and beaten by the defendant and thrown into a camper, which the defendant towed to a motel, the victim's testimony was sufficient to support a conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, as the testimony of a single witness was all that was necessary under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 7, 635 S.E.2d 278 (2006).

Convictions for kidnapping, aggravated sexual battery, sexual battery, and attempted rape were all upheld on appeal, as a photo lineup was not impermissibly suggestive, similar transaction evidence was properly admitted, the defendant had notice of the evidence, and the jury was authorized to find the victim credible and to accept the victim's testimony; hence, a rational trier of fact could have found from the evidence presented that the defendant committed the charged crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. Watley v. State, 281 Ga. App. 244, 635 S.E.2d 857 (2006).

Because sufficient evidence showed that the defendant, by posing as a police officer and driving the victims to remote locations, used fear and intimidation to ensure that said victims would cooperate and agree to have sex, the defendant was not entitled to an acquittal as to the charges of impersonating an officer, aggravated sodomy, attempted aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault and rape; furthermore, though both victims willingly got into the defendant's car, after the victims pleaded to be let go and the defendant refused to grant those pleas, said act amounted to a kidnapping. Dasher v. State, 281 Ga. App. 326, 636 S.E.2d 83 (2006).

Based on the evidence provided by a defendant that: (1) the defendant and others severely beat the victim over a drug debt; (2) the victim wanted a ride back to a bar, but the codefendants would not allow it; (3) the defendant's former love interest testified that the defendant admitted to killing the victim; and (4) the state introduced similar transaction evidence that the defendant stood by while a codefendant savagely beat another person, the defendant's kidnapping conviction was upheld on appeal and the jury was authorized to find that the victim was involuntarily held, and that the defendant was a party to that crime. Reagan v. State, 281 Ga. App. 708, 637 S.E.2d 113 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a defendant's conviction for kidnapping as the asportation element was shown by evidence that the defendant dragged the victim toward an open window, outside of which the defendant's truck waited with an open passenger door; evidence the defendant dragged the victim a few feet was sufficient to support the kidnapping with bodily injury conviction. Ellis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 17, 637 S.E.2d 729 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 66 (2007).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of enticing a child for indecent purposes under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5(a) and kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a); the victim testified that the defendant carried the victim into the defendant's bedroom and would not allow the victim to leave until the defendant had finished abusing the victim. Anderson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 58, 637 S.E.2d 790 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a defendant's convictions for a total of 20 counts of armed robbery, possessing a firearm during the commission of a crime, terroristic threats and acts, kidnapping, and aggravated assault arising out of four separate robberies because the victims' testimony, the physical evidence, and one victim's identification of the defendant as the robber provided sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the defendant's accomplice. Metoyer v. State, 282 Ga. App. 810, 640 S.E.2d 345 (2006).

Pictures of a defendant withdrawing money from a victim's ATM account and evidence that the defendant repeatedly asked the victim for the PIN number for the victim's ATM card, held a knife to the victim's neck, cut the cord used to tie the victim, and had cash, an ATM receipt, and the victim's car keys when the defendant was arrested were sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, two counts of aggravated assault, kidnapping with bodily injury, and two counts of possessing a knife during the commission of a crime. Wright v. State, 282 Ga. App. 649, 639 S.E.2d 581 (2006).

Defendant's claim on appeal that convictions for aggravated assault and kidnapping had to be reversed because the victim's testimony was unworthy of belief lacked merit, as it was the role of the fact finder, not the appellate court, to determine whether a witness was credible; moreover, the testimony of the victim alone was sufficient to support a finding of guilt. Bragg v. State, 285 Ga. App. 408, 646 S.E.2d 508 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a kidnapping conviction since having the victim sit in a chair so that the defendant could tape the victim's hands, then moving the victim to a mattress so that the defendant could tape the victim's feet, sufficed to show asportation; further, testimony that the victim had a red mark on a cheek, puffiness and redness around the eyes and ears, and red marks where the victim had been bound, sufficed to show physical injury during the kidnapping. Phillips v. State, 284 Ga. App. 683, 644 S.E.2d 535 (2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of malice murder, two counts of felony murder, kidnapping with bodily injury, two counts of armed robbery, and aggravated battery since: the defendant had been seen fleeing the victim's home in a car registered to the defendant; the defendant told the defendant's spouse to discard the defendant's bloody clothing; the defendant sought treatment at a hospital after being shot during the crimes; and the defendant had initiated conversations in which the defendant described the actions of the defendant's companions in discarding guns used in the crimes and offered to reveal the names of the companions in exchange for not being charged with murder. Davis v. State, 281 Ga. 871, 644 S.E.2d 113 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions of child molestation, kidnapping with bodily injury, kidnapping, and aggravated assault, when the defendant, who lived with an ex-girlfriend and her teenage daughter, called them into a bedroom and bound the ex-girlfriend's arms, legs, and mouth with duct tape, threatened the women with a hatchet, and led the daughter to another bedroom where the defendant duct-taped her hands and feet and forced her to have intercourse with him. Phillips v. State, 284 Ga. App. 683, 644 S.E.2d 535 (2007).

Evidence supported a kidnapping conviction when, although the victim got into a car with the defendant willingly, the defendant then held a gun to the victim's face and forced the victim to drive with the defendant to a remote area, shot the victim in the toe after the victim jumped out of the moving car, dragged the victim back into the car, and forced the victim at gunpoint to return to and stay in the defendant's home. Winfrey v. State, 286 Ga. App. 450, 649 S.E.2d 561 (2007).

Because sufficient evidence was presented consisting of the victim's identification of the defendant as the perpetrator of a burglary, who threatened the victim with a sharp, knife-like letter opener, forcing the victim into a closet, and stealing the victim's camera upon fleeing, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's burglary, armed robbery, aggravated assault, and kidnapping convictions. Bryant v. State, 286 Ga. App. 493, 649 S.E.2d 597 (2007).

In a case where a 12-year-old victim testified that the victim was watching television in the den when the victim heard a loud noise in the garage and went to investigate, and the perpetrators subsequently moved the victim into the living room where the victim was kept under guard while the house was ransacked and the victim's mother was sexually molested, sufficient evidence existed to support the jury's conclusion that the defendant was guilty of kidnapping; only the slightest movement of the victim was required to constitute the necessary element of asportation. Allen v. State, 286 Ga. App. 82, 648 S.E.2d 677 (2007).

Legally sufficient evidence existed to convict the defendant of kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40 because the movement of the victim, who was handcuffed in a bathroom of the apartment the victim shared with the defendant, from the bathroom to the closet, although slight, met the requirement of the element of asportation. Austin v. State, 286 Ga. App. 149, 648 S.E.2d 414 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 687 (Ga. 2007).

Because the eyewitness testimony showed that the defendant pushed, pulled, and then carried the victim out of a restaurant as the victim yelled for a co-worker to call the police, and which was direct, not circumstantial, evidence that the victim did not go with the defendant willingly, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's kidnapping conviction. Holden v. State, 287 Ga. App. 472, 651 S.E.2d 552 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 153 (Ga. 2008).

There was no merit to the defendant's argument that the evidence did not support a kidnapping conviction because the victim had failed to take advantage of several escape opportunities; the victim had testified that the victim did not try to escape before convincing the defendant to go to a fast-food restaurant because the victim feared that if the victim tried to escape in a deserted area, the defendant would catch the victim and beat the victim to death, and furthermore the jury could determine that once the defendant refused the victim's offer of the victim's money in exchange for the defendant's agreement to let the victim go, the crime of kidnapping had been completed. Smith v. State, 287 Ga. App. 222, 651 S.E.2d 133 (2007).

Defendant persuaded victims' parents that defendant was going to get defendant's own children from school and then take all of the children, including the victims, back to defendant's house to play, but instead defendant took the victims to defendant's house, while no one else was there and tied them up; thus, defendant's actions in deceiving the parents to give their permission and in inducing the children to go with defendant constituted an abduction within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a). Ayers v. State, 286 Ga. App. 898, 650 S.E.2d 370 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 117 (Ga. 2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions of malice murder, armed robbery, kidnapping, third-degree arson, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime when the evidence showed that the defendant made the defendant's accomplice shoot a convenience store clerk after the defendant forced the clerk at gunpoint into a wooded area, took money from a cash register in the store, and started a fire in the store. The accomplice's testimony was sufficiently corroborated by the defendant's admission that the defendant owned the shotgun that was used in the shooting, the defendant's admission that the defendant gave the shotgun to the accomplice, the testimony of a third person that the accomplice gave the third person the shotgun after the robbery, and the fact that shotgun shells found in the defendant's home matched shells taken from the clerk's body. Judkins v. State, 282 Ga. 580, 652 S.E.2d 537 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions as a party to malice murder, felony murder, kidnapping with bodily injury, false imprisonment, and aggravated assault since: the victim, who claimed to have been robbed of money the defendant and a codefendant gave the victim for drugs, had been made to drive around while a codefendant pointed a gun at the victim; the victim was later taken to an apartment where the victim was threatened and pistol-whipped; the victim was taken out of the apartment, forced into some woods, and fatally shot; and following the killing, the defendant and a codefendant moved the victim's car from the apartment complex to a parking lot where the defendant and others had met the victim earlier that evening. John v. State, 282 Ga. 792, 653 S.E.2d 435 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and kidnapping under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-41, 16-5-21, 16-5-40, and 16-11-106 as: (1) a robber ordered two store employees at gunpoint to give the robber money, then ordered the employees to go into a back room; (2) the employees described the robber and the robber's vehicle in detail; (3) the employees positively identified the defendant as the robber 15 to 20 minutes after the crime following a pursuit during which the defendant fled from police first in the defendant's vehicle, then on foot; and (4) the defendant had $281 in a pocket at the time of arrest. Lenon v. State, 290 Ga. App. 626, 660 S.E.2d 16 (2008).

Evidence including the victim's testimony of being dragged out of the victim's car into a house and tied up before the victim escaped bonds and broke a window, photographs of the victim's injuries, a broken window, bullets found in defendant's car, and items identified by the victim as being used by the robbers, supported a kidnapping conviction; credibility of witnesses was a question for the jury and the fact that the defendant was acquitted of related charges did not require reversal as that verdict might reflect a compromise or lenity rather than inconsistent factual conclusions. Rogers v. State, 291 Ga. App. 202, 661 S.E.2d 615 (2008).

In defendant's convictions for armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault in connection with robbery of a fast food restaurant, sufficient evidence existed to support defendant's convictions based on a restaurant employee identifying defendant as one of two perpetrators who confronted that employee and manager at gunpoint and threatened to shoot if the victims did not comply with defendant's demand for money; also, evidence showed that defendant forced the manager out of the manager's car at gunpoint, ordered the manager back across the parking lot and into the restaurant, and stole over $300 from the restaurant's safe as well as a cellular phone before fleeing. Holsey v. State, 291 Ga. App. 216, 661 S.E.2d 621 (2008).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of burglary, kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, and theft by taking when a treating physician stated that the 86-year-old victim's injuries, including blood inside her vagina and bruises and contusions on her vagina, were consistent with forcible penetration; when the defendant admitted entering the victim's home, removing her clothing, restraining her with electrical cords, hitting her, putting a plastic bag over her head, forcing her from one room to another, and taking her money and her car; and when DNA from the defendant matched the DNA of two hair roots found on the victim's living room floor. Smith v. State, 291 Ga. App. 545, 662 S.E.2d 323 (2008).

Brandishing a gun, a masked individual moved a wheelchair-bound restaurant manager to a hidden safe and ordered the manager to open the safe. The manager's identification of the perpetrator as the defendant, a former employee, from the defendant's distinctive voice, and the perpetrator's knowledge of the safe's location, authorized the jury to find defendant guilty of kidnapping by moving the victim's wheelchair towards the safe. Johnson v. State, 293 Ga. App. 728, 667 S.E.2d 637 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support a kidnapping conviction when the defendant shot the defendant's child's mother and then took the child from the home where the child lived with the mother. Because there was evidence that the child was born out of wedlock and was not legitimated, the defendant had no right to lawful custody of the child and thus had no authority to take the child; furthermore, the facts and circumstances of the bloody and violent incident, parts of which took place in the child's bedroom, supported the inference that the child was taken from the home against the child's will. Allen v. State, 284 Ga. 310, 667 S.E.2d 54 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support a kidnapping conviction when there was evidence that the defendant grabbed the victim by the hair and dragged the victim into or toward some woods against the victim's will. Eller v. State, 294 Ga. App. 77, 668 S.E.2d 755 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to uphold a defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy and kidnapping based on the testimony of the victim; who identified the defendant as the attacker who forced the victim into a vehicle by threat of a knife; there was evidence of various injuries on the victim consistent with the victim's description of the attack; the defendant admitted to having sexual intercourse with the victim but asserted that the intercourse was consensual; and forensic biologists testified as state expert witnesses that the swab of the victim's rectal cavity contained sperm and that DNA found on that swab matched DNA from the defendant's blood sample. Smith v. State, 294 Ga. App. 692, 670 S.E.2d 191 (2008).

Victim's uncorroborated testimony that the defendant entered the victim's home by removing the back door from its hinges, ordered the victim at gunpoint to get in the defendant's truck, and did not bring the victim back home for hours was sufficient to convict the defendant of burglary and kidnapping. Hollis v. State, 295 Ga. App. 529, 672 S.E.2d 487 (2009).

Evidence that a defendant moved the victim from the victim's vehicle to a house and then from the house to the garage against the victim's will was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for kidnapping. Likewise, the victim's testimony that the defendant took the victim into the house and tied the victim's hands against the victim's will was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for false imprisonment. Cornette v. State, 295 Ga. App. 877, 673 S.E.2d 531 (2009).

Evidence that a defendant falsely induced his victim to get into the defendant's car and to go to the defendant's home where, instead of fixing a promised meal, the defendant attempted to rape the victim, satisfied the asportation element of a kidnapping charge and was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction on the kidnapping charge beyond a reasonable doubt. Manning v. State, 296 Ga. App. 376, 674 S.E.2d 408 (2009).

Evidence supported the defendant's conviction for kidnapping even if the defendant initially abducted the victim in order to facilitate robbing the victim since the evidence would support a finding that the defendant held the victim for a significant period after the initial assault and robbery were completed. Not only did the victim's detention in a car make it easier for the defendant to commit the assault and robbery, it also placed the victim at risk of physical harm from the driver's intoxicated state. Epps v. State, 297 Ga. App. 66, 676 S.E.2d 791 (2009).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, kidnapping, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and financial transaction card fraud. Shortly after a man called the store where the victim worked to see if the store was open, a masked man with a gun came into the store, ordered the victim to the back, and then robbed the store and took the victim's credit cards; soon afterward that same morning, the defendant bought sneakers with the victim's credit card; the clerk who sold the defendant the sneakers identified the defendant at trial and in a photographic lineup and testified that the clerk knew the defendant because the defendant was a regular customer; and the defendant's cell phone records showed that just before the robbery, the defendant called the victim's store and blocked the defendant's number. Anderson v. State, 297 Ga. App. 733, 678 S.E.2d 498 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 159, 695 S.E.2d 26 (Ga. 2010).

Following evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated sodomy, rape, and robbery by intimidation: 1) the victim's testimony of being repeatedly raped by the defendant at knife point, forced to perform oral sex, beaten, robbed, and threatened with death; 2) a nurse's testimony that the victim was crying, rocking back and forth, and had bruised cheeks; and 3) evidence that the defendant's DNA matched sperm cell DNA found on the victim's body. Sanders v. State, 297 Ga. App. 897, 678 S.E.2d 579 (2009).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), and aggravated sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(2) involving four different victims on three separate dates; both the husband and the wife, the victims in the first criminal incident, identified the defendant in court as the perpetrator of the crimes. Two separate DNA analyses testified to by two forensic biologists showed that the defendant's sperm was present in the vaginas of the other two female victims. Robins v. State, 298 Ga. App. 70, 679 S.E.2d 92 (2009).

Defendant's conviction for kidnapping with injury under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b)(4) was supported by evidence that the defendant helped the codefendant load up the victim into the back of the codefendant's pickup truck so that the victim could be driven to a different location and that the victim suffered many injuries during the kidnapping. Wilkinson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 190, 679 S.E.2d 766 (2009).

Because defendant moved the victim from a closet to the dining room and then took the victim in a car after assaulting the victim, either scenario argued by the state supported a kidnapping conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40. Horne v. State, 298 Ga. App. 601, 680 S.E.2d 616 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1835, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 46 (Ga. 2010).

Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of armed robbery and kidnapping as a store clerk testified that the defendant, brandishing a knife, ordered the clerk to open the cash register; that the defendant took money from the register; that the defendant forced the clerk into a bathroom, blocked the door with boxes, and fled. Further, both the clerk and a customer identified the defendant from a photo lineup and at trial. Hill v. State, 298 Ga. App. 677, 680 S.E.2d 702 (2009).

As witnesses made in-court identifications of the defendant, and the codefendant's statements to police placed the defendant at the scene of the kidnapping of the victim in Georgia and the shooting of the victim in South Carolina, any rational trier of fact could have found the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of kidnapping with bodily injury. Hunsberger v. State, 299 Ga. App. 593, 683 S.E.2d 150 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for kidnapping, hijacking a motor vehicle, armed robbery, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, carrying a concealed weapon, and possession of a weapon on school property were authorized because pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the victim's testimony alone established the essential elements of the offenses. Lester v. State, No. A10A1665, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 310 (Mar. 30, 2011).

When the victim and the victim's two-year-old granddaughter were washing their hands in a department store ladies' restroom when the defendant stormed out of one of the stalls with a stun gun, which the defendant fired into the victim's neck and demanded that the victim join the defendant in the stall and where a violent struggle ensued, with the victim trying to exit the restroom with the victim's granddaughter while the defendant fought with the victim and cut the victim with a knife in trying to prevent the victim from leaving, the evidence was sufficient to establish the asportation element of kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) because the defendant moved the victim in trying to force the victim into the bathroom stall and away from the bathroom exit; the movement enhanced the defendant's control over both victims by substantially isolating the victims from the protection of rescuers who were trying to reach the victims on the other side of the door. However, the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury on the lesser-included offense of false imprisonment under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a) because the elements of the two crimes were the same except that kidnapping also required the element of asportation, and the jury could have found that element lacking. Hall v. State, No. A10A2226, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 296 (Mar. 28, 2011).

Evidence sufficient to support juvenile's delinquency adjudication. — Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, defendant juvenile's statements to the police corroborated an accomplice's testimony that the juvenile struck a woman unconscious, caused her serious bodily injury, used force to steal her pocketbook, and dragged her down onto her front yard; accordingly, the evidence was sufficient to adjudicate the juvenile delinquent under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2), 16-5-40(a), and 16-8-40(a)(1). In re D. T., 294 Ga. App. 486, 669 S.E.2d 471 (2008).

Evidence insufficient to support conviction. — See Gibson v. State, 233 Ga. App. 838, 505 S.E.2d 63 (1998).

Evidence was insufficient to support one of defendant's kidnapping convictions as there was no evidence that the younger sibling was moved against the sibling's will and, thus, the state failed to prove the asportation element of kidnapping; the only evidence was the sibling's testimony that the sibling "somehow" got into the house and, when asked why the sibling was in the kitchen, the sibling testified that it was a natural reaction because the other sibling was being choked in there. Squires v. State, 265 Ga. App. 673, 595 S.E.2d 547 (2004).

Because no eyewitnesses saw a third defendant participate in an armed robbery, a kidnapping, an aggravated assault, or possess a firearm during the commission of the crimes, and because the third defendant was not implicated by the other defendants, did not confess to the crimes, and did not flee the jurisdiction, the evidence was insufficient to support a conviction for the third defendant. Johnson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 499, 627 S.E.2d 116 (2006).

Insufficient evidence of asportation. — Conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), was not supported by sufficient evidence of asportation, as the defendant brandished a gun at the victim and attempted to have the victim get into the car but instead, the victim braced the victim's back against the car and refused to move, whereupon a struggle ensued between them and they fell to the ground; such movement of the victim did not constitute asportation, and the trial court erred in denying a motion for a directed verdict pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1. Leppla v. State, 277 Ga. App. 804, 627 S.E.2d 794 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, and kidnapping of a couple in a residence were reversed on appeal as evidence that one victim was ordered from a standing to a lying position and that another was dragged around the home was insufficient to establish asportation to support the kidnapping counts since the movement was short in duration and incidental to the crimes of armed robbery and aggravated assault. Rayshad v. State, 295 Ga. App. 29, 670 S.E.2d 849 (2008).

Kidnapping conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) was not supported by the evidence as the asportation element was not met because the victim's movement during a defendant's robbery of a restaurant was brief, occurred during and incidental to the armed robbery, and did not enhance the risk the victim already faced. Crawford v. State, 297 Ga. App. 187, 676 S.E.2d 843 (2009).

Evidence was insufficient to support the asportation element of kidnapping. The defendant's movement of the victim, a restaurant manager who was made to open a money cabinet and a cash register, was brief, occurred during and incidental to the armed robbery, and did not enhance significantly the risk the victim already faced as a victim of armed robbery. Grimes v. State, 297 Ga. App. 720, 678 S.E.2d 167 (2009).

Evidence was insufficient to establish the asportation element of kidnapping. The defendant's movement of the victim into a bathroom was of minimal duration; occurred during the defendant's batteries and in furtherance of the batteries; and did not itself present a significant danger to the victim independent of the danger the victim already faced from the defendant's attacks. Hargrove v. State, 299 Ga. App. 27, 681 S.E.2d 707 (2009).

Fifteen-foot movement of a jewelry store employee across the floor to the safe, which was located in the same showroom, did not constitute the necessary asportation to support a kidnapping conviction because it was of minimal duration and was incidental to the armed robbery and aggravated assault crimes. Harper v. State, 300 Ga. App. 757, 686 S.E.2d 375 (2009).

Evidence that defendant moved the victim from the living room to the bedroom where a safe was located occurred during and was incidental to the offense of armed robbery and therefore was insufficient evidence of asportation; therefore, defendant's kidnapping conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) was reversed. Ham v. State, 303 Ga. App. 232, 692 S.E.2d 828 (2010).

Evidence that, during an armed bank robbery, a defendant moved a bank employee and customer from an office out to the main lobby area of the bank was insufficient evidence of asportation to support defendant's kidnapping convictions because the movement was minimal, did not isolate the victims, and was incidental to the robbery. Williams v. State, 304 Ga. App. 787, 697 S.E.2d 911 (2010).

Victim was not moved in a way sufficient to establish asportation and, consequently, kidnapping, because the movement, a push of at most three or four feet, had extremely short duration, the movement occurred during at least three separate offenses, and the movement could be a part of criminal attempt to commit child molestation or cruelty to a child since the push preceded trying to remove a piece of duct tape, which could be used to bind or gag the victim as part of the defendant's effort to molest the child; the push did not present a significant danger to the victim independent of the fact that a person with a knife and duct tape was already in the stall blocking a sixth-grade girl from leaving. Kirt v. State, No. A10A1933, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 247 (Mar. 22, 2011).

Sufficient evidence of asportation.

— Despite the fact that the defendant helped to drag the victim only 10 feet in order to conceal from sight the act of continuing to beat the victim, the jury was authorized to conclude that such asportation was sufficient to support a conviction for kidnapping. Scott v. State, 288 Ga. App. 738, 655 S.E.2d 326 (2007).

In a delinquency adjudication proceeding, sufficient evidence existed for the finding of delinquency for the act of kidnapping because, although the juvenile originally appeared to focus on stealing the victim's car, at one point the juvenile appeared to change plans and grabbed the victim around the waist and began to force the victim toward the victim's residence. When the victim told the juvenile that someone was in the house, the juvenile moved the victim back toward the car and told the victim to get into the car, which was sufficient evidence to establish a kidnapping that was not merely incidental to the other criminal acts. In the Interest of B.A.C., 289 Ga. App. 588, 657 S.E.2d 652 (2008).

As the defendant's forced removal of a child from a visible area to a secluded dark area behind the child's home was not essential to the defendant's molestation itself, but was instead an attempt to isolate the child from protection and rescue, thus increasing the danger the child faced, there was sufficient evidence of asportation to support the defendant's kidnapping conviction. Flores v. State, 298 Ga. App. 574, 680 S.E.2d 609 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1796, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 27 (Ga. 2010).

Defendant's movement of a clerk from one room to another within a store in the course of an armed robbery was sufficient to establish the asportation element of kidnapping as: 1) the victim's movement was not an inherent part of the robbery as the movement occurred after the robbery had been completed; 2) the movement created an additional danger to the victim by enhancing the defendant's control over the victim; and 3) the movement con-

sealed the victim while allowing the defendant to escape from the scene. Hill v. State, 298 Ga. App. 677, 680 S.E.2d 702 (2009).

As physically forcing law firm employees to a room in a more isolated area of the law office showed that their movement was not incidental to any other crime; placed the employees in additional danger by enhancing the defendant's control over the employees; and isolated the employees from protection or rescue, the element of asportation was established and the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's kidnapping convictions. Brower v. State, 298 Ga. App. 699, 680 S.E.2d 859 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1845, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 13 (Ga. 2010).

Sufficient evidence supported a conviction of kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, under circumstances in which, after a drug purchase, the defendant and the victim went to the basement of the home where the defendant lived and there, the defendant, among other things, raped the victim twice and tied the victim to a pole with duct tape; the defendant's movement of the victim after the second alleged rape constituted asportation beyond a reasonable doubt. Although the duration of the movement was minimal, not all elements of the Berry test had to favor the prosecution to prove asportation. Brashier v. State, 299 Ga. App. 107, 681 S.E.2d 750 (2009).

During armed robberies, defendant forced the victims into restaurants' walk-in coolers at gunpoint, told the victims not to leave, shut the door, and made the victims stay in the cooler for several minutes. As these actions were not a necessary or inherent part of the robberies, and the actions created additional dangers to the victims by subjecting the victims to cold temperatures, isolating the victims and reducing the victims chance of rescue, and enhancing the defendant's control over the victims, there was sufficient evidence of asportation to support the defendant's kidnapping convictions under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40. Verdree v. State, 299 Ga. App. 673, 683 S.E.2d 632 (2009).

Evidence that, after defendant robbed a fast-food restaurant, the defendant dragged a captive employee from inside the restaurant to an outdoor parking lot was sufficient to prove kidnapping in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) because the movement of the employee was not part of the robbery and put the employee in substantial additional danger. Dixon v. State, 300 Ga. App. 183, 684 S.E.2d 679 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to establish the asportation element of the crime of kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), because the evidence at trial showed that the defendant dragged the victim from the front to the rear of a house, forced the victim to get into a car, and drove a short distance before the victim escaped and jumped out of the car, and although the duration of the movement was relatively brief, the defendant's asportation of the victim ended only when the victim escaped and fled from the vehicle in fear for the victim's life; while it was arguable that at least some of the movement occurred during the commission of the theft of the victim's car, it was not an inherent part of that separate offense because the defendant did not have to force the victim back into the car in order to take the car, and the defendant's asportation of the victim presented a significant danger to the victim independent of the danger posed by the theft when it isolated the victim from contact with anyone who could have been able to provide help and further enhanced the defendant's control over the victim. Payne v. State, 301 Ga. App. 515, 687 S.E.2d 851 (2009).

Evidence of asportation and the remaining elements of kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40, were sufficient to support the defendant juvenile's delinquency adjudication for kidnapping because, after the victim told defendant that the victim did not have any money, the defendant forced the victim to continue walking to an isolated yard behind an abandoned house, where sodomy occurred. That action was not a necessary or inherent part of aggravated sodomy and created additional dangers to the victim by isolating the victim, reducing the victim's chance of rescue, and enhancing defendant's control over the victim. In the Interest of D. S., 302 Ga. App. 873, 691 S.E.2d 897 (2010).

Defendant's action in pulling a rape victim back inside a hotel room as the victim tried to escape was sufficient evidence of asportation under the kidnapping statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40. Although the duration of the movement was minimal, it was not a part of the other offenses of rape and aggravated assault and posed a significant danger to the victim by isolating the victim from other hotel guests. Dixon v. State, 303 Ga. App. 517, 693 S.E.2d 900 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of kidnapping with bodily injury because the element of asportation was sufficiently established when the evidence showed that the defendant beat the victim, abducted the victim, and held the victim against the victim's will; the victim's abduction was not an inherent part of aggravated assault or robbery but occurred after the offense of aggravated assault and before the offense of robbery had been completed, and the abduction of the victim through a parking lot created an additional danger to the victim independent of the assault or robbery because the movement isolated the victim from rescue or protection by the other people in the parking lot who came forward as witnesses. Leverette v. State, 303 Ga. App. 849, 696 S.E.2d 62 (2010).

Evidence that a defendant moved the victim, a 13-year-old child, from a relatively open back yard into the child's house was sufficient evidence of asportation to support the defendant's kidnapping conviction because the movement was not incidental to another crime, and the movement placed the boy in further danger by isolating the child from rescue. Bryant v. State, 304 Ga. App. 755, 697 S.E.2d 860 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to have found the essential elements of the crime of kidnapping beyond a reasonable doubt because the victim was dragged down the entire length of a steep hill, from a place with some light to a darker place, and when the victim attempted to escape the victim's attacker the victim was again forced down the hill;

the movement that occurred presented a significant danger to the victim independent of the danger posed by the other offenses for which the defendant was convicted, rape, aggravated sodomy, and aggravated assault, by further enhancing the defendant's control over the victim, and by dragging the victim down the hill, away from a more lighted place to a darker and more isolated place, the defendant reduced the possibility of the victim obtaining help from others or of the victim making an escape. Humphries v. State, 305 Ga. App. 69, 699 S.E.2d 62 (2010).

Defendant's conviction for kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), was authorized because the defendant's asportation of the victim from a school parking deck to various locations, ultimately ending at an apartment complex where the victim was released two hours later, was sufficient asportation to authorize the kidnapping conviction. Lester v. State, No. A10A1665, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 310 (Mar. 30, 2011).

It was not error for the trial court to deny the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on the kidnapping charge because during the incident, as the victim exited the defendant's truck, the defendant grabbed the victim by the neck and moved the victim away from the more public area near the truck into a backyard, and after beating the victim in that location, the defendant moved the victim deeper into the backyard toward the tree line; when the defendant finished beating the victim the defendant picked the victim up and carried the victim to a trailer, and the defendant moved the victim away from the area before the defendant began the beating, which was not necessary to the battery and independently increased the victim's danger and prevented the victim from making an escape, calling for help, or being spotted by witnesses. Amaya v. State, 308 Ga. App. 460, 708 S.E.2d 28 (2011).

Proof of rape and kidnapping with bodily injury. — Separate offenses of rape and kidnapping with bodily injury were shown where the evidence used to prove the kidnapping was the asportation of the victim from one room to another and bruises the victim suffered in the struggle with defendant before the subsequent intercourse which supported the rape charge. Roberson v. State, 219 Ga. App. 160, 464 S.E.2d 262 (1995).

Kidnapping with bodily injury. — Burning of the victim's face with a stun gun at the outset of the kidnapping constituted the bodily harm necessary to support the conviction of kidnapping with bodily injury. James v. State, 239 Ga. App. 541, 521 S.E.2d 465 (1999).

Despite the defendant's contention that the circumstantial evidence presented by the state was insufficient, both malice murder and kidnapping by bodily injury convictions were upheld on appeal as: (1) the plain error rule did not apply to the identification evidence admitted via the defendant's aggravated assault and armed robbery victim, and evidence of the gun used in that case was relevant in the instant prosecution because the gun connected the defendant to the identification documents presented to police in close proximity to the victim's body; (2) a due process claim regarding the admission of a purportedly impermissibly suggestive pre-trial identification, followed by an in-court identification, was waived due to failure to object at trial; and (3) trial counsel was not ineffective by failing to seek suppression of the identification evidence or attack the reliability of the same. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 514, 640 S.E.2d 280 (2007).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting: (i) a prior difficulty between the defendant and the victim; (ii) evidence that the defendant sought to hire a hit man to kill the victim; and (iii) a prior inconsistent statement of a reluctant witness who claimed to have a loss of memory as that evidence was relevant to show the defendant's motive and state of mind in committing the crime of kidnapping with bodily injury and the trial court properly ruled that the reluctant witness was a hostile witness, and allowed the state to ask leading questions, as well as admission of that witness's prior inconsistent statement as substantive evidence. LeBlanc v. State, 283 Ga. App. 434, 641 S.E.2d 646 (2007).

Impact of significant mental and psychological impairments. — When petitioner was sentenced to death, remand was warranted as to petitioner's ineffective assistance claim because the state court curtailed a more probing prejudice inquiry by placing undue reliance on the assumed reasonableness of counsel's mitigation theory, and failed to apply the proper prejudice inquiry; a proper analysis of prejudice would have taken into account the newly uncovered evidence of petitioner's "significant" mental and psychological impairments. Sears v. Upton, No. 09-8854, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 5540 (2010).

Prosecution for false imprisonment and kidnapping barred by statute of limitations. — Defendant's prosecution for the crimes of false imprisonment, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41, and kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), were barred by the statute of limitations, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1, because the state did not indict the defendant on those charges until after the four-year statute of limitations ran; the state's decision to reissue the indictment to include the false imprisonment and kidnapping counts substantially amended the original charges because those offenses contained elements separate and distinct from any of the crimes charged in the original indictment. Martinez v. State, 306 Ga. App. 512, 702 S.E.2d 747 (2010).

When offenders under 17 years to be placed in custody of Department of Offender Rehabilitation. — Kidnapping, not being punishable by death or imprisonment for life, is not an offense which requires the offender under 17 years of age to be placed in the sole custody of the Department of Offender Rehabilitation; where the offender under 17 years of age is convicted of kidnapping for ransom or kidnapping in which the victim receives bodily injury, both being offenses punishable by life imprisonment or death, the juvenile offender shall only be sentenced into the custody of the Department of Offender Rehabilitation. 1975 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 75-73.

16-5-41. False imprisonment.

(a) A person commits the offense of false imprisonment when, in violation of the personal liberty of another, he arrests, confines, or detains such person without legal authority.

(b) A person convicted of the offense of false imprisonment shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years.

(c) Any person convicted under this Code section wherein the victim is not the child of the defendant and the victim is less than 14 years of age shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2. (Laws 1833, Cobb's 1851 Digest, p. 788; Code 1863, §§ 4263, 4264; Code 1868, §§ 4298, 4299; Code 1873, §§ 4364, 4365; Code 1882, §§ 4364, 4365; Penal Code 1895, §§ 106, 107; Penal Code 1910, §§ 106, 107; Code 1933, §§ 26-1501, 26-1502; Code 1933, § 26-1308, enacted by Ga. Cross references. — Civil action for false imprisonment, § 51-7-20 et seq.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

General Consideration

Statute not unconstitutionally vague. — Georgia's false imprisonment statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a), was not unconstitutionally vague, as the word in it "confine" had a commonly understood meaning which would place a person of common intelligence on notice of the prohibited acts; accordingly, defendant's conviction under that statute would not be overturned on constitutional grounds. Alexander v. State, 279 Ga. 683, 620 S.E.2d 792 (2005).

Essential difference between kidnapping and false imprisonment is that kidnapping involves the additional element of asportation. Raysor v. State, 191 Ga. 422, 382 S.E.2d 162 (1989).

Evidence was sufficient to support a verdict of guilty of kidnapping where the transcript reveals that defendant assisted sister by carrying and lifting the victim into defendant's truck and dumping the body in another county. Vincent v. State, 203 Ga. App. 874, 418 S.E.2d 138 (1992).

Conviction for aider and abettor. — See Vincent v. State, 210 Ga. App. 6, 435 S.E.2d 222 (1993), aff'd, 264 Ga. 234, 442 S.E.2d 748 (1994).

Convictions as aider and abettor proper despite lack of personal involvement. — Defendant's contention that the crimes against a stabbing victim were solely committed by the codefendant was rejected pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(a), as ample evidence existed to conclude that defendant either committed the crimes or was a party to the crimes, including that both defendant and the codefendant drove to the stabbing victim's home, that victim was stabbed to death, and the victim's wallet and checkbook were stolen so that both defendants could have money to buy more drugs. Odom v. State, 279 Ga. 599, 619 S.E.2d 636 (2005).

When private person arrests fugitive from justice, that person must deliver prisoner to qualified officer without unreasonable delay, or that person becomes liable for false arrest. Lavina v. State, 63 Ga. 513 (1879).

To arrest one illegally and detain that person for any length of time is a criminal offense and a tort for which an action for damages will lie. Duchess Che- nilles, Inc. v. Masters, 84 Ga. App. 822, 67 S.E.2d 600 (1951).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41, on its face, does not require that the false imprisonment be for a specific length of time, only that there be an arrest, confinement or detention without legal authority and against that person's will. Rehberger v. State, 235 Ga. App. 827, 510 S.E.2d 594 (1998).

False imprisonment is tort for which an action for damages will lie. Holliday v. Coleman, 12 Ga. App. 779, 78 S.E. 482 (1913); Duchess Chenilles, Inc. v. Masters, 84 Ga. App. 822, 67 S.E.2d 600 (1951).

"Custody" is synonymous with "imprisonment," which is detention of person contrary to that person's will. Everett, Ridley & Co. v. Holcomb, 1 Ga. App. 794, 58 S.E. 287 (1907).

Simple battery is not a lesser included offense of false imprisonment.

— See Reynolds v. State, 231 Ga. App. 22, 497 S.E.2d 580 (1998).

Court abused the court's discretion in denying defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to false imprisonment charges because the state conceded that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel as to the less serious armed robbery and kidnapping offenses that were part of the same negotiated plea agreement, that were included in the same indictment, and that involved the same codefendants; defendant should have been permitted to withdraw the guilty plea in order to avoid a manifest injustice. Clue v. State, 273 Ga. App. 672, 615 S.E.2d 800 (2005).

Ga. 600, 652 S.E.2d 516 (2007); Boyd v. State, 289 Ga. App. 342, 656 S.E.2d 864 (2008); Hyde v. State, 291 Ga. App. 662, 662 S.E.2d 764 (2008); Jennings v. State, 292 Ga. App. 149, 664 S.E.2d 248 (2008); Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 633, 667 S.E.2d 899 (2008); Greene v. State, 295 Ga. App. 803, 673 S.E.2d 292 (2009).

Application

False imprisonment charge did not merge with a kidnapping charge either as a matter of fact or as a matter of law, where the kidnapping (the asportation of the victim to a place where the victim did not wish to go) involved conduct distinct from that which constituted false imprisonment, which embraced appellant's chasing the victim each time the victim managed to escape from the appellant's automobile and forcing the victim to re-enter the car and remain there until it suited appellant to release the victim. Johnson v. State, 195 Ga. App. 723, 394 S.E.2d 586 (1990).

Because the evidence against the defendant showed that a charge of kidnapping and a charge of false imprisonment were not proven by the same facts but: (1) the kidnapping occurred when the defendant abducted the victim outside of a mobile home and forced that victim inside the home, completing the kidnapping crime at that time; and (2) the false imprisonment occurred when the defendant kept the victim inside the mobile home against the victim's will, the trial court did not err in holding that the crimes did not merge. Chatman v. State, 283 Ga. App. 673, 642 S.E.2d 361 (2007).

Because the kidnapping and false imprisonment convictions entered against the defendant were based on different conduct, the two did not merge. Snelson v. State, 286 Ga. App. 203, 648 S.E.2d 647 (2007).

Defendant committed false imprisonment by forcing the victim into a closet, binding the closet doors closed, and ordering the victim under threat of death to remain there until the defendant left. As the crime of kidnapping occurred and was complete prior to that, when the defendant forced the victim into a bedroom and held the victim there against the victim's will, the kidnapping and false imprisonment offenses were proven by different facts and did not merge. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

False imprisonment charge did not merge with burglary charge. — False imprisonment charge did not merge with a burglary charge because evidence that supported the former charge was that defendant prevented the victim from escaping the victim's home by grabbing the victim by the hair and then ordering the victim to lie on the floor while threatening the victim with a lead pipe and none of this evidence overlapped with evidence supporting the burglary conviction. Watkins v. State, 249 Ga. App. 302, 548 S.E.2d 56 (2001).

False imprisonment does not merge with armed robbery. — Offense of false imprisonment requires proof of at least one additional fact which the offense of armed robbery does not. Consequently, under the "required evidence" test, a defendant's false imprisonment conviction did not merge into the defendant's armed robbery conviction. Simpson v. State, 293 Ga. App. 760, 668 S.E.2d 451 (2008).

Trial court did not err in failing to merge false imprisonment with robbery because robbery did not require proof that the victim was confined and detained without legal authority and false imprisonment did not require a theft. Bonner v. State, No. A10A1670, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 298 (Mar. 28, 2011).

Separate offenses. — Criminal defendant's false imprisonment of a victim was not merely incidental to the other crimes charged and was a distinct offense which can be punished separately since the evidence showed that the defendant confined and detained the victim from the time defendant grabbed the victim from behind and stuck the knife in the victim's ribs until defendant began the actual physical assaults upon the victim. Butler v. State, 194 Ga. App. 895, 392 S.E.2d 324 (1990).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper, even though defendant was acquitted of kidnapping with bodily injury, false imprisonment, and aggravated assault, as Georgia did not recognize the inconsistent verdict rule; further, the convictions were not necessarily inconsistent as the jury could have found that defendant raped the victim, but did not commit the other crimes. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Because the sequential crimes of false imprisonment and robbery by intimidation were complete and independent of each other, each proven by different facts, the crimes did not merge. Lancaster v. State, 281 Ga. App. 752, 637 S.E.2d 131 (2006).

False imprisonment and aggravated sodomy not included offenses. — Trial court did not err in failing to merge a false imprisonment offense with an attempt to commit aggravated sodomy offense. Howard v. State, 272 Ga. 242, 527 S.E.2d 194 (2000).

False imprisonment charge warranted. — It could not be said under the circumstances of the crimes that the state used up the evidence establishing false imprisonment in proving the aggravated assault charge as each offense was established by proof of separate and distinct facts. Webb v. State, 210 Ga. App. 27, 435 S.E.2d 251 (1993).

False imprisonment as lesser included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury. — Since the defendant had been convicted of kidnapping with bodily injury, subsequent charges of false imprisonment, arising out of the same set of facts, were barred by former jeopardy under the “required evidence test” because false imprisonment was a lesser included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury. Sallie v. State, 216 Ga. App. 502, 455 S.E.2d 315 (1995).

Kidnapping and false imprisonment. — Trial court did not err in failing to merge defendant’s convictions for kidnapping and false imprisonment where the convictions were supported by evidence of complete, independent acts directed toward one of the victims. Upshaw v. State, 249 Ga. App. 741, 549 S.E.2d 526 (2001), overruled on other grounds, Wallace v. State, 275 Ga. 879, 572 S.E.2d 579 (2002).

Trial court erred in failing to merge defendant’s false imprisonment conviction into defendant’s kidnapping conviction because false imprisonment was an integral part of the kidnapping charge, requiring the same evidence except for asportation and, accordingly, the offense of false imprisonment merged with the offense of kidnapping as a matter of fact, even though the offenses did not merge as a matter of law. Upshaw v. State, 249 Ga. App. 741, 549 S.E.2d 526 (2001), overruled on other grounds, Wallace v. State, 275 Ga. 879, 572 S.E.2d 579 (2002).

Defendant’s kidnapping and false imprisonment sentences did not merge for sentencing purposes when the victim had been made to drive around at gunpoint, then taken to an apartment before being forced into some woods and shot in the head; thus, the crime of false imprisonment was complete before the victim was forced into the woods and shot. John v. State, 282 Ga. 792, 653 S.E.2d 435 (2007).

After a jury convicted a defendant on both an indicted charge of kidnapping and an unindicted lesser charge of false imprisonment without any intervention of the trial court, the rule in Camphor v. State, 272 Ga. 408, 529 S.E.2d 121 (2000) did not apply; thus, the trial court properly merged the false imprisonment with the kidnapping and properly entered judgment on the jury’s verdict finding the defendant guilty of the kidnapping. Manning v. State, 296 Ga. App. 376, 674 S.E.2d 408 (2009).

Cruelty to children conviction did not merge with aggravated assault or false imprisonment. — Defendant’s cruelty to children in the first degree charge did not merge with the aggravated assault or false imprisonment charge because neither aggravated assault nor false imprisonment required proof that the victim suffered cruel or excessive physical or mental pain. Kirt v. State, No. A10A1933, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 247 (Mar. 22, 2011).

Convictions for aggravated child molestation and false imprisonment properly not merged. — Trial court was not required to merge the defendant’s false imprisonment and aggravated child molestation convictions since the false imprisonment and aggravated child molestation convictions could be sustained based on different conduct; therefore, separate convictions were appropriate. Specifically, the indictment averred that the defendant committed false imprisonment by unlawfully detaining the victim in violation of the victim's personal liberty and committed aggravated child molestation by forcing the victim to perform oral sex on the defendant and there was evidence that on one occasion, the defendant locked the victim in the home and would not let the victim leave and, as to the aggravated child molestation conviction, there was evidence that the defendant forced the victim to perform oral sex on the defendant on repeated occasions spanning several years. Metts v. State, 297 Ga. App. 330, 677 S.E.2d 377 (2009).

False imprisonment convictions and rape convictions did not merge, where a rational trier of fact could reasonably have concluded from the evidence that the confinement and detention of the victim far exceeded that which was immediately associated with the acts of sexual intercourse. Moua v. State, 200 Ga. App. 49, 406 S.E.2d 557 (1991).

False imprisonment charge did not merge with aggravated battery charge. — Because a victim was held against the victim's will throughout a beating ordeal, even when the defendant was not striking the victim, the crime of false imprisonment was proved by facts separate and distinct from those used for the defendant's aggravated battery conviction. The state did not use up the evidence establishing false imprisonment in proving the battery charge because each offense was established by proof of separate and distinct facts. Pierce v. State, 301 Ga. App. 167, 687 S.E.2d 185 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0549, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 244 (Ga. 2010).

Evidence was properly excluded under rape shield law. — Trial court properly applied O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 by refusing to allow testimony that a victim of domestic violence had been seen working as a prostitute because that information had no relevance to the aggravated assault and false imprisonment charges for which a defendant was convicted, and further, the defendant failed to produce any evidence that could have provided a nexus between the alleged prostitution and a conclusion that someone else might have inflicted the victim's injuries. Moorer v. State, 290 Ga. App. 216, 659 S.E.2d 422 (2008).

Similar transaction evidence was properly admitted against defendant charged with rape and false imprisonment as the state showed sufficient evidence of a proper purpose for the admission, specifically, that both sex offenses involved attacks by force against the victims for the purpose of forcing sexual intercourse upon the victims, and that both incidents occurred behind a shopping center where defendant drove after promising to take the victims home. Ingram v. State, 280 Ga. App. 467, 634 S.E.2d 430 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 868 (Ga. 2007).

False imprisonment occurring during rape. — Defendants' false imprisonment convictions were supported by the victim's testimony to the effect that the defendants had held the victim captive over a period of several hours, between separate episodes of rape. Moua v. State, 200 Ga. App. 49, 406 S.E.2d 557 (1991).

Since the victim's and a police officer's testimonies about the crime location established venue, and defendant induced a jury question as to whether a toy gun was a firearm but did not object to the trial court's instruction, defendant was properly convicted of rape, false imprisonment, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-41(a), 16-6-1(a), and 16-11-106(b). Bravo v. State, 269 Ga. App. 242, 603 S.E.2d 669 (2004).

Since the rape victim testified that the victim tried to leave, but defendant would not permit the victim to do so, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to convict defendant of false imprisonment. Reynolds v. State, 269 Ga. App. 268, 603 S.E.2d 779 (2004).

Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish a fact under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, and defendant's convictions for kidnapping, burglary, aggravated sodomy, rape, and false imprisonment were supported by sufficient evidence where the victim testified that defendant forced the victim into a train boxcar, threatened to kill the victim, and had vaginal and oral sex with the victim against the victim's will and without the victim's consent; there was also circumstantial evidence showing the victim's lack of consent, including the victim fleeing from the boxcar while naked, the victim's outcry to a train engineer that the victim had been raped, and the victim's injuries. Davis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 628, 629 S.E.2d 537 (2006).

Defendant's convictions of rape, aggravated sodomy, false imprisonment, and two counts of aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence in the form of the victim's injuries, and the victim's testimony that, among other things, after the victim refused the defendant's request for sex, the defendant threw the victim on the bed, hit her in the back and on the arms with hedge clippers, ordered the victim to remove the victim's clothes, dragged the victim by the hair back into the house after the victim had escaped through a window, grabbed the victim, twisted the victim's arm, and said, "I'm trying — bitch, I'm going to kill you," hit the victim in the arm and leg with the hedge clippers, punched the victim on the lips and on the forehead, threw the victim on the bed and raped the victim and made the victim perform oral sex on the defendant. Tarver v. State, 280 Ga. App. 89, 633 S.E.2d 415 (2006).

Evidence sufficient to support conviction. — See Furlow v. State, 297 Ga. App. 375, 677 S.E.2d 412 (2009); Bearfield v. State, 305 Ga. App. 37, 699 S.E.2d 363 (2010); Tucker v. State, 275 Ga. App. 611, 621 S.E.2d 562 (2005).

Evidence that defendant unlawfully detained the victim over five days during which period the victim's will was overborne by the victim's fear of the brutal beatings the victim sustained day and night at defendant's hands was sufficient to support conviction. Grier v. State, 218 Ga. App. 637, 463 S.E.2d 130 (1995).

Evidence that defendant forcibly prevented the victim from leaving a hotel room by putting defendant's foot in front of the door and that defendant covered the victim's mouth with defendant's hand when the victim screamed was sufficient to support conviction. Mayorga v. State, 225 Ga. App. 496, 484 S.E.2d 292 (1997).

Evidence that defendant held the victim against the victim's will while defendant made physical advances against the victim and physically caused the victim harm was sufficient to convict defendant of false imprisonment and simple battery. Reynolds v. State, 231 Ga. App. 22, 497 S.E.2d 580 (1998).

Evidence that defendants detained the victims under arms and color of authority was sufficient to authorize the jury verdicts that defendants were guilty of false imprisonment. Thompson v. State, 240 Ga. App. 26, 521 S.E.2d 876 (1999).

Evidence showing that defendant forced the victim at gun point to sit on the floor of the pharmacy and remain there while defendant searched the pharmacy shelves was sufficient to find defendant guilty of false imprisonment. Brabham v. State, 240 Ga. App. 506, 524 S.E.2d 1 (1999).

Defendant's conviction for false imprisonment was supported by evidence that the victim was bashed on the head during an armed robbery, dragged outside, placed into the back of a car with a gun to the head and driven to another location where the victim was dragged out of the car and left for dead. Barnett v. State, 244 Ga. App. 585, 536 S.E.2d 263 (2000).

As the jury could have believed the victim's testimony that defendant held the victim against the victim's will but discounted the victim's testimony that defendant pushed the victim into the car, defendant's conviction of false imprisonment, a lesser-included offense of the charged crime of kidnapping, was affirmed. Shue v. State, 251 Ga. App. 50, 553 S.E.2d 348 (2001).

Evidence that defendant raped the victim, would not allow the victim to leave the apartment, that the victim was fearful of what else defendant might do, that the defendant had struck, beaten, and attacked the victim on previous occasions, and that the victim had a bruised face shortly after the incident, sufficiently showed false imprisonment under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a). Laredo v. State, 253 Ga. App. 155, 558 S.E.2d 742 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of false imprisonment after defendant entered the premises where the victims worked brandishing a gun, instructed the victims not to move, and then tied the victims up with telephone cords. Phoukphanh v. State, 256 Ga. App. 580, 569 S.E.2d 259 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendants' false imprisonment convictions under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a) after defendants' bound the victim, hung the victim from the victim's feet, and struck the victim, allegedly to punish the victim following a citizen's arrest for theft under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60; the defense of justification was not so broad as to permit a private citizen to mete out judgment as the citizen saw fit, and the trial court properly refused to instruct the jury as to justification when there was no evidence to support it, and since, as justification was an affirmative defense, defendant failed to admit the crime. McPetrie v. State, 263 Ga. App. 85, 587 S.E.2d 233 (2003).

Evidence that a store employee recognized one of the robbers' voices as belonging to defendant, that defendant's car was found behind the store with proceeds of the robbery and a loaded pistol, and that defendant was found in a dumpster behind the store was sufficient to support convictions for false imprisonment and armed robbery. Woods v. State, 266 Ga. App. 53, 596 S.E.2d 203 (2004).

Evidence that defendants entered the victim's apartment, took the victim by the hands and demanded money, shoved a gun into the victim's side and removed the victim's ring, watch, and money, and then forced the victim into a closet blocked with a heavy table with instructions not to come out until the defendants had left was sufficient to support convictions for false imprisonment, armed robbery, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Pinson v. State, 266 Ga. App. 254, 596 S.E.2d 734 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions as a party to the offenses of armed robbery, kidnapping, false imprisonment, burglary, and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21, 16-5-40, 16-5-41, 16-7-1, and 16-8-41 because: (1) defendant received information from the defendant's love interest, about the victims' house, the location of safes, where money was located, and about the alarm system; (2) the day after the home invasion the love interest saw defendant and defendant showed the love interest a stack of cash, and defendant told the love interest it might be the victim's money; and (3) an FBI informant met with defendant and defendant told the informant that defendant had been shorted money from the robbery, and that defendant got the layout of the house from the love interest. Pope v. State, 266 Ga. App. 658, 598 S.E.2d 48 (2004).

Jury was authorized to find that defendant was a party to the crime of false imprisonment, and the conviction was affirmed, since the evidence demonstrated that defendant, along with two other co-defendants, took an active role in confining and/or detaining the victims; the victims testified that defendant was positioned at the foot of their bed, participated in tying the victims up, and, despite defendant's claim that defendant was a reluctant participant acting out of fear, that defendant never seemed afraid or intimidated. Adcock v. State, 269 Ga. App. 9, 603 S.E.2d 340 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support burglary, aggravated assault, kidnapping, false imprisonment, and armed robbery convictions after one of the victims opened the door to the victim's home when the victim recognized one of defendant's accomplices, when defendant and another then pushed the door open and rushed inside, and when defendant grabbed the first victim, pointed a gun at the first victim's head, took money from the second victim's wallet, kept the gun pointed at both victims during the entire incident, ripped the telephone cord out of the wall, and instructed defendant's accomplices to bind and blindfold the victims, which they did; the victims both identified defendant as the gunman from a police photo array, plus made an in-court identification at trial, and any conflict between the victims' testimony that the gunman had a tattoo on the gunman's arm and a trial demonstration revealing no tattoo on defendant's arm was a matter for the jury to resolve and did not affect the sufficiency of the identification. Kates v. State, 269 Ga. App. 8, 603 S.E.2d 342 (2004).

Evidence supported defendant's robbery by intimidation and false imprisonment convictions and codefendant's armed robbery and kidnapping with bodily injury convictions as defendant lured the victim to defendant's apartment where the codefendant struck the victim in the back of the head and robbed the victim at gunpoint. Smith v. State, 269 Ga. App. 133, 603 S.E.2d 445 (2004).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's false imprisonment conviction because, in responding to a 9-1-1 call, a deputy witnessed the defendant's actions toward the victim, heard the defendant running from the bedroom and observed that the bedroom had been barricaded while the defendant had the victim inside the bedroom. Pitts v. State, 272 Ga. App. 182, 612 S.E.2d 1 (2005), aff'd, 280 Ga. 288, 627 S.E.2d 17 (2006).

Defendant's convictions of aggravated stalking, burglary, aggravated assault, and false imprisonment, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-91, 16-7-1, 16-5-21, and 16-5-41, were supported by sufficient evidence because, despite the victim's recantation at trial, the victim stated to police earlier that defendant broke into the victim's apartment, scratched and damaged furniture and other property, tied the victim up, locked the victim in the bedroom for several hours, harmed the victim, threatened that defendant and defendant's friends were going to lock the victim in a basement for a few months, and defendant had been waiting for the victim to arrive home. Andrews v. State, 275 Ga. App. 426, 620 S.E.2d 629 (2005).

Even in the absence of proffered evidence that an alleged victim voluntarily went to the codefendant's house for purposes of prostitution, evidence that the victim was forced into a closet against the victim's will was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction on a false imprisonment charge. Grier v. State, 276 Ga. App. 655, 624 S.E.2d 149 (2005).

Sufficient evidence supported convictions for aggravated assault, kidnapping, armed robbery, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, even though none of the victims could identify the defendant as the gunman in the robbery due to the fact that the defendant wore a mask because defendant was found shortly after the robbery with cash, weapons, a ski mask, a car, and clothing matching the victims' description; surveillance videotape of the robbery was shown to the jury to determine whether defendant was the person on the videotape. Johnson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 41, 625 S.E.2d 411 (2005).

Convictions of armed robbery, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, false imprisonment, and hijacking a motor vehicle were supported by sufficient evidence since a perpetrator identified as the defendant robbed a pizza restaurant at gunpoint, ordered everyone into a cooler, and took the restaurant manager's vehicle, after which an officer discovered the defendant the next day driving the manager's vehicle and wearing a hat identical to that worn by the perpetrator, and since a customer at the restaurant identified the defendant as the robber in a photo line-up and at trial; while three of the four crimes arising out of the incident were committed after the customer, who was the only witness to identify defendant, was ordered into the cooler, only one robber entered the restaurant and the jury was authorized to infer that the man identified by the customer also committed the crimes committed after the customer was in the cooler. Head v. State, 279 Ga. App. 608, 631 S.E.2d 808 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for robbery, battery, false imprisonment, and obstruction of an emergency telephone call were all upheld on appeal as no error flowed from: (1) the trial court's admission of an audio recording of the attack on the victim and order granting the state two hearings regarding the admissibility of that recording; (2) the trial court's failure to give a curative instruction after the prosecutor injected a personal experience with domestic violence into the closing argument; (3) the trial court's failure to strike the testimony of similar transaction witnesses and issue a curative instruction; and (4) the trial court's order restricting the counsel's closing argument. Ellis v. State, 279 Ga. App. 902, 633 S.E.2d 64 (2006).

Given that all three victims identified the defendant as the perpetrator of the crimes of armed robbery and false imprisonment, the defendant's theft of the father's money at gunpoint, as well as duct-taping the parents and detaining all three victims in the basement, the evidence sufficed to sustain the conviction for one count of armed robbery and three counts of false imprisonment; moreover, conflicts in the testimony, even between the state's witnesses, went to the credibility of the witnesses, which was a matter for the jury to resolve. Feldman v. State, 282 Ga. App. 390, 638 S.E.2d 822 (2006).

Because the victim's testimony, standing alone, was sufficient to establish the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, when the evidence showed: (1) two separate aggravated assaults, one with a knife and one with a hammer; (2) two separate instances of simple battery; and (3) a hours-long detention of the victim by the defendant, the evidence amply supported the jury's conviction on the charges of false imprisonment, aggravated assault, and simple battery. Brigman v. State, 282 Ga. App. 481, 639 S.E.2d 359 (2006).

Evidence that the defendant and other perpetrators bound the victim with an electrical cord was sufficient for a jury to find that the victim was illegally detained against the victim's will to support the defendant's conviction for false imprisonment; similarly, the jury could have found that the victim's babies were confined without legal authority during the hour-long ordeal, and therefore the evidence supported the verdict convicting the defendant of false imprisonment. Bills v. State, 283 Ga. App. 660, 642 S.E.2d 352 (2007).

Legally sufficient evidence existed to convict the defendant of false imprisonment under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a) because the defendant's live-in girlfriend, the victim, testified that the victim was held against the victim's will and handcuffed in a bathroom all night long; the victim was then shoved into a closet and also held there against the victim's will. Austin v. State, 286 Ga. App. 149, 648

Evidence that defendant bound victims with rope was sufficient for a jury to find that the victims were illegally detained against their will. Ayers v. State, 286 Ga. App. 898, 650 S.E.2d 370 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 117 (Ga. 2008).

Because contradictions and uncertainties in the testimony did not render the evidence against the defendant insufficient, but were ultimately for the jury to decide, and the defendant's statement to the police was corroborated by other evidence, the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, false imprisonment, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony were upheld on appeal. Sheely v. State, 287 Ga. App. 92, 650 S.E.2d 762 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions as a party to malice murder, felony murder, kidnapping with bodily injury, false imprisonment, and aggravated assault since: the victim, who claimed to have been robbed of money the defendant and a codefendant gave the victim for drugs, had been made to drive around while a codefendant pointed a gun at the victim; the victim was later taken to an apartment where the victim was threatened and pistol-whipped; the victim was taken out of the apartment, forced into some woods, and fatally shot; and following the killing, the defendant and a codefendant moved the victim's car from the apartment complex to a parking lot where the defendant and others had met the victim earlier that evening. John v. State, 282 Ga. 792, 653 S.E.2d 435 (2007).

Given the undisputed evidence from two eyewitnesses that the defendant detained the murder victim at gunpoint despite the victim's pleas to be released, the elements of false imprisonment were established and supported the defendant's conviction of that offense. Clark v. State, 283 Ga. 234, 657 S.E.2d 872 (2008).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for a new trial, and there was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for false imprisonment, based on the evidence that defendant went to the victim's home uninvited; forced entry into the victim's home; assaulted the victim; and forced the victim to wait in a bathroom and refused to allow the victim to exit. Griffin v. State, 291 Ga. App. 618, 662 S.E.2d 171 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant on a charge of false imprisonment since the defendant failed to carry the initial burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was involuntarily intoxicated at the time the defendant went into the victim's home and held the victim at knife point, and there was at least some evidence before the jury of each element of false imprisonment that the state was required to prove. Stewart v. State, 291 Ga. App. 846, 663 S.E.2d 278 (2008).

Evidence was legally sufficient to convict a defendant on charges of armed robbery, aggravated assault, false imprisonment, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime; the testimony of one of the defendant's accomplices, which implicated the defendant in the crimes, was corroborated by evidence that the defendant was captured with the two accomplices shortly after the robbery, that defendant had a large amount of cash, a gun, and a roll of duct tape, and that the victim was able to identify all three men as the ones who robbed and assaulted the victim. Spragg v. State, 292 Ga. App. 37, 663 S.E.2d 389 (2008).

Testimony by a victim that the defendant and an accomplice, armed with handguns, forcibly entered the victim's apartment, raped and sodomized the victim, struck the victim with a gun, stole jewelry, bound the victim, and escaped in a car owned by the victim's prospective spouse, and evidence that 24 fingerprints lifted from the apartment and car matched the defendant's, was sufficient to convict the defendant of false imprisonment. Crawford v. State, 292 Ga. App. 463, 664 S.E.2d 820 (2008).

Evidence that a defendant moved the victim from the victim's vehicle to a house and then from the house to the garage against the victim's will was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for kidnapping. Likewise, the victim's testimony that the defendant took the victim into the house and tied the victim's hands against the victim's will was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for false imprisonment. Cornette v. State, 295 Ga. App. 877, 673 S.E.2d 531 (2009).

Victim's testimony that the victim was unable to leave the victim's apartment because the defendant was holding the victim, along with evidence that the defendant dragged the victim from room to room by the victim's hair while beating the victim, was enough evidence for the jury to determine the victim was detained against the victim's will and sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction for false imprisonment. Pierce v. State, 301 Ga. App. 167, 687 S.E.2d 185 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0549, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 244 (Ga. 2010).

There was sufficient corroboration of the defendant as a perpetrator of the principal crime, and, ultimately, sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, false imprisonment, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and burglary because there was circumstantial evidence to show that the defendant committed a similar transaction after the first incident, that the same gun an accomplice bought and used in the first crime was used in the second crime and ended up in a car at the house of the defendant's mother afterwards, and that the defendant was nervous and felt guilty about events that the defendant participated in with the accomplice, whom the defendant had only known a short time; that corroborative evidence connected the accomplice to the crimes. Ward v. State, 304 Ga. App. 517, 696 S.E.2d 471 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for new trial under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-21 after a jury convicted the defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated assault, and false imprisonment because the evidence was legally sufficient to support the crimes of which the defendant was convicted; the victim was shown a photo array containing six photographs and immediately picked the defendant's photo as the man who held a gun to the victim's head during the incident, and the victim also identified the defendant in court. Delgiudice v.

State, 308 Ga. App. 397, 707 S.E.2d 603 (2011).

False imprisonment of a child. — Verdict for false imprisonment was supported by evidence that defendant illegally confined a 15-year-old child to the defendant's van, threatening to kill the child if the child disobeyed defendant's orders. Walker v. State, 245 Ga. App. 693, 538 S.E.2d 563 (2000).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions of armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, false imprisonment, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony when the state showed that the defendant intentionally aided and abetted a home invasion in which the home was burglarized and the homeowner's teenage child was detained and robbed by use of a handgun. Even in the absence of evidence sufficient to show that the defendant directly committed the charged offenses, there was sufficient evidence that the defendant was a party to the offenses in that the defendant and a person armed with a gun loaded a truck with property stolen from the home during the two-hour home invasion, the defendant was present speaking with the armed person during the home invasion, and the defendant confirmed that the child was home alone. Whitley v. State, 293 Ga. App. 605, 667 S.E.2d 447 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation, child molestation, and false imprisonment with regard to allegations that the defendant forced a romantic friend's minor child to perform oral sex on the defendant several times over a three year period, based on the testimony of the victim (which alone was sufficient), the videotaped forensic interview of the victim, the testimony of the police investigator and the victim's mother concerning what the victim told them, as well as the testimony of the victim's siblings, who were eyewitnesses to one incident. Further, the testimony of the victim that the defendant locked the victim in the house and would not let the victim leave supported the conviction on the false impris-

False imprisonment of spouse. — Evidence, in the form of testimony that defendant handcuffed the defendant's spouse to the bedposts so that the defendant's spouse would not leave the residence, was sufficient to support the defendant's false imprisonment conviction, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41. Jones v. State, 259 Ga. App. 698, 577 S.E.2d 878 (2003).

Reviewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict, the evidence was sufficient to support the verdicts against defendant for false imprisonment, aggravated battery, and simple assault in regard to acts of domestic violence against the victim, defendant's spouse, as the evidence showed that defendant dragged the spouse down a hallway by the spouse's hair and held the spouse in a bedroom against the spouse's will, that defendant broke the spouse's nose and arm, and that defendant beat the spouse with a car-washing brush. Mize v. State, 262 Ga. App. 486, 585 S.E.2d 913 (2003).

False imprisonment of a love interest. — Evidence was sufficient to support convictions of aggravated assault with a knife, aggravated assault with defendant's fists and feet, and false imprisonment since the police found defendant's love interest laying on the floor of a hotel room, bruised, there were knives in the hotel room, and the love interest testified that the defendant had kicked and hit the love interest. Banks v. State, 260 Ga. App. 515, 580 S.E.2d 308 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to find defendant committed false imprisonment after defendant repeatedly attacked the victim over a 26-hour period and did not allow the victim to leave until the victim finally told defendant what defendant wanted to hear — that the victim loved the defendant and that they could start a new life together. Hammonds v. State, 263 Ga. App. 5, 587 S.E.2d 161 (2003).

Evidence that defendant forced the defendant's love interest to remain in the love interest's car against the love interest's will, that the defendant chased the love interest with the love interest's car when the love interest tried to escape, that the defendant hit the love interest with the car, and that the love interest suffered a broken ankle was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for false imprisonment and aggravated assault. Scott v. State, 268 Ga. App. 889, 602 S.E.2d 893 (2004).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for false imprisonment, simple assault, and criminal trespass with regard to actions the defendant took toward the victim, who was a prior romantic friend, as the evidence established that the defendant went to the victim's home uninvited and entered the home; as the victim exited the bathroom, the defendant was standing in the hallway in front of the victim; alarmed, the victim attempted to flee into an adjacent room at which time the victim and the defendant struggled as the defendant attempted to prevent the victim from passing the defendant; once in the adjacent room, the defendant took the telephone from the victim as the victim tried to call 9-1-1; and the victim ultimately pushed out the screen and successfully exited the residence through an open window despite the defendant's attempt to pull the victim back inside. Port v. State, 295 Ga. App. 109, 671 S.E.2d 200 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to prove false imprisonment because the defendant's girlfriend testified that the defendant repeatedly pushed her away from the front door of her townhouse, that she could not get to the door, and that the defendant stood right in front of the door the whole time; the defendant eventually threw the girlfriend down the stairs into the basement, where the defendant attempted to lock her in. Wilson v. State, 304 Ga. App. 743, 698 S.E.2d 6 (2010).

False imprisonment of jailer. — Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of robbery, under O.C.G.A. § 16-8-40(a), and false imprisonment, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a), after the defendant tricked a jailer into letting the defendant out of the defendant's cell, subsequently elbowed the jailer in the stomach, spun the jailer around, locked the jailer in the cell, and retrieved the jailer's key from the floor where the key had fallen during the scuffle. Forehand v.

State, 270 Ga. App. 365, 606 S.E.2d 589 (2004).

False imprisonment by officer. — When sufficient evidence was presented that defendant: (1) detained the victim in the defendant's patrol car without legal authority; and (2) grabbed the victim when the victim attempted to escape, threw the victim into the back seat of the patrol car, held the victim down, and raped the victim, a jury could have found that defendant arrested, detained, or confined the victim without legal authority and without consent; thus, defendant's false imprisonment conviction was upheld. Walker v. State, 267 Ga. App. 155, 598 S.E.2d 875 (2004).

Impersonating a peace officer and handcuffing victim. — Evidence that defendant and another person burst into a home after they had lured the victim brandishing an automatic gun and wearing black t-shirts that said "Sheriff," handcuffed the victim, took the victim's money, and forced the victim to write a bill of sale for the victim's motorcycle was sufficient to support convictions for robbery by intimidation, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), false imprisonment, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a), aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), and impersonating a peace officer, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-23. Powers v. State, 303 Ga. App. 326, 693 S.E.2d 592 (2010).

Insufficient evidence to support conviction. — There was no evidence to indicate that the defendant at any time confined or detained the victim in violation of the victim's personal liberty (i.e., against the victim's will), and consequently there was no evidentiary basis for defendant's conviction of false imprisonment. Lucas v. State, 183 Ga. App. 637, 360 S.E.2d 12 (1987).

There was no evidence supporting the claim of false imprisonment under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a) as the hospital employee did not falsely imprison the children by accepting the children from the parent. Gwinnett Health Sys. v. DELU, 264 Ga. App. 863, 592 S.E.2d 497 (2003).

Defendant's conviction for falsely imprisoning a young woman was reversed, but the defendant's conviction for falsely imprisoning male victims was affirmed because the evidence showed that there were four men in the house, and an officer testified as to their names, but there was no evidence regarding false imprisonment of the woman. Ward v. State, 304 Ga. App. 517, 696 S.E.2d 471 (2010).

Prosecution for false imprisonment and kidnapping barred by statute of limitations. — Defendant's prosecution for the crimes of false imprisonment, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41, and kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), were barred by the statute of limitations, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1, because the state did not indict the defendant on those charges until after the four-year statute of limitations ran; the state's decision to reissue the indictment to include the false imprisonment and kidnapping counts substantially amended the original charges because those offenses contained elements separate and distinct from any of the crimes charged in the original indictment. Martinez v. State, 306 Ga. App. 512, 702 S.E.2d 747 (2010).

False imprisonment charge not warranted. — Evidence did not require the trial court to give defendant's requested charge on false imprisonment as a lesser included offense of kidnapping. Williams v. State, 237 Ga. App. 555, 515 S.E.2d 862 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for false imprisonment, as it showed that defendant entered the home of a relative through a window without permission, placed a hand over the relative's mouth, and pinned the relative to the bed, thereby restricting the relative's movement; defendant admitted as much and other family members identified defendant as the intruder. Alexander v. State, 279 Ga. 683, 620 S.E.2d 792 (2005).

Charge of simple kidnapping as a lesser included offense of kidnapping with bodily injury was not warranted because the evidence showed that after the defendant lured the victim into the van, the defendant drove to another location and assaulted and injured the victim; the victim was never free to leave until the defendant finally dropped the victim off after sexually assaulting and injuring the victim. Robertson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 376, 629 S.E.2d 79 (2006).

When error for trial court not to instruct jury on defense. — When, on the trial of a state patrolman for false imprisonment, it appears from the evidence that the patrolman's sole defense was that the arrest for drunkenness was made upon the public highway without a warrant when the patrolman in good faith had probable cause to believe that such offense was being committed in the patrolman's presence, it is error requiring the grant of a new trial for the trial court to fail to instruct the jury on this defense. Henderson v. State, 95 Ga. App. 830, 99 S.E.2d 270 (1957).

Jury instructions proper. — Trial court's jury instructions in defendant's criminal trial on multiple charges arising out of a domestic dispute were proper as: (1) there was no requirement that the jury be instructed on the element of assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20) in order to be properly instructed on the crime of aggravated assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21); (2) the methods of committing an aggravated battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), were properly defined based on the methods asserted in the indictment; (3) there was no support for a requested charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b); and (4) there was no possibility of a lesser included conviction for false imprisonment (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41), such that instruction only on the indicted offense of kidnapping (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40) was proper. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Jury instruction on false imprisonment should have been given. — When the victim and the victim's two-year-old granddaughter were washing their hands in a department store ladies' restroom when the defendant stormed out of one of the stalls with a stun gun, which the defendant fired into the victim's neck and demanded that the victim join the defendant in the stall and where a violent struggle ensued, with the victim trying to exit the restroom with the victim's granddaughter while the defendant fought with the victim and cut the victim with a knife in trying to prevent the victim from leaving, the evidence was sufficient to establish the asportation element of kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a) because the defendant moved the victim in trying to force the victim into the bathroom stall and away from the bathroom exit; the movement enhanced the defendant's control over both victims by substantially isolating the victims from the protection of rescuers who were trying to reach the victims on the other side of the door. However, the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury on the lesser-included offense of false imprisonment under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41(a) because the elements of the two crimes were the same except that kidnapping also required the element of asportation, and the jury could have found that element lacking. Hall v. State, No. A10A2226, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 296 (Mar. 28, 2011).

Giving of Allen charge. — In a prosecution for aggravated battery, false imprisonment, and kidnapping, a written Allen charge issued by the court was not coercive, despite the court's use of the phrase "must be decided", given that the language was only a small portion of an otherwise fair and balanced charge, the trial court urged the jury to take their time, and the defendant was acquitted of the kidnapping charge. Benson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 643, 634 S.E.2d 821 (2006).

False imprisonment charge not warranted. — As the crime of kidnapping was complete when the defendant seized law office employees and forced the employees to a back office, and when the defendant taped up and moved an attorney from place to place in the office, the defendant was not entitled to a charge on a lesser included offense because there was no evidence that the defendant was guilty of merely false imprisonment. Brower v. State, 298 Ga. App. 699, 680 S.E.2d 859 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1845, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 13 (Ga. 2010).

Sentence

Fifteen-year sentence for false imprisonment is illegal. Stevanus v. State, 185 Ga. App. 7, 363 S.E.2d 322 (1987).

Sentence was proper. — Defendant's sentence to 10 years for false imprisonment, 12 months for sexual battery, and 12 months for simple battery, to run concurrently, provided that upon service of four years in custody, defendant could serve the remaining six years on probation, was not void as it fell within the allowable sentencing ranges of no less than one nor more than 10 years for false imprisonment, and up to 12 months each for sexual battery and simple battery. Rehberger v. State, 267 Ga. App. 778, 600 S.E.2d 635 (2004).

Judge's sentencing explanation was proper. — Because the judge correctly explained that the defendant's suspended sentence could not possibly be revoked for more than defendant's ten-year sentence on false imprisonment because ten years was the maximum sentence for that crime, any alleged error that could have occurred in the first part of the judge's explanation was harmless in light of the explanation as a whole. Watson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 174, 620 S.E.2d 176 (2005).

No review of sentence within statutory limit. — Since the sentence for false imprisonment was within the statutory limits, the court would not review the sentence, holding that any question as to the excessiveness of the sentence should be addressed to the sentence review panel. Rehberger v. State, 235 Ga. App. 827, 510 S.E.2d 594 (1998).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Sheriff subject to liability for false imprisonment for illegal arrest. — If the sheriff, in capacity as a law enforcement officer of this state, undertakes to arrest an individual under circumstances which do not give the sheriff the authority to make arrests, it is an illegal arrest and as such may subject the sheriff to liability for false imprisonment. 1972 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 72-24.

16-5-42. False imprisonment under color of legal process.

When the arrest, confinement, or detention of a person by warrant, mandate, or process is manifestly illegal and shows malice and oppression, an officer issuing or knowingly and maliciously executing the same shall, upon conviction thereof, be removed from office and punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years. ### 16-5-43. Malicious confinement of sane person in an asylum.

A person who maliciously causes the confinement of a sane person, knowing such person to be sane, in any asylum, public or private, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years. (Ga. L. 1890-91, p. 237, § 4; Penal Code 1895, § 560; Penal Code 1910, § 575; Code 1933, § 26-1504; Code 1933, § 26-1310, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Convictions did not merge as a matter of fact. — Defendant's convictions for false swearing under O.C.G.A. § 16-10-71, proven by evidence that defendant made false statements in an affidavit seeking an involuntary commitment order for the victim, and malicious confinement under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-43, supported by proof apart from the execution of the false affidavit, did not merge as a matter of fact. Washington v. State, 271 Ga. App. 764, 610 S.E.2d 692 (2005).

Failure to raise void for vagueness claim not deficient performance. — Trial counsel's failure to raise a novel legal argument, that O.C.G.A. § 16-5-43 was unconstitutionally vague, did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel. Washington v. State, 271 Ga. App. 764, 610 S.E.2d 692 (2005).

Failure to hire an expert. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to hire an expert to testify to the detrimental effects of cocaine use in a trial in which defendant was charged with violating O.C.G.A. § 16-5-43 after swearing in an affidavit that the victim was suicidal and was using crack cocaine; the relevant consideration was what defendant knew or could show concerning the victim's mental state at the time defendant had the victim confined because the defendant had not seen the victim for several months and could not have observed the victim on the date or during the time frame stated in the affidavit. Washington v. State, 271 Ga. App. 764, 610 S.E.2d 692 (2005).

16-5-44. Hijacking an aircraft.

(a) A person commits the offense of hijacking an aircraft when he (1) by use of force or (2) by intimidation by the use of threats or coercion places the pilot of an aircraft in fear of immediate serious bodily injury to himself or to another and causes the diverting of an aircraft from its intended destination to a destination dictated by such person.

(b) The offense of hijacking is declared to be a continuing offense from the point of beginning, and jurisdiction to try a person accused of the offense of hijacking shall be in any county of this state over which the aircraft is operated.

(c) A person convicted of the offense of hijacking an aircraft shall be punished by death or life imprisonment. (Code 1933, § 26-3301, enacted by Ga. L. 1969, p. 741, § 1.)

16-5-44.1. Hijacking a motor vehicle.

(a) As used in this Code section:

(1) "Firearm" means any handgun, rifle, shotgun, or similar device or weapon which will or can be converted to expel a projectile by the action of an explosive or electrical charge and includes stun guns and tasers as defined by subsection (a) of Code Section 16-11-106, as amended, and any replica, article, or device having the appearance of a firearm.

(2) "Motor vehicle" means any vehicle which is self-propelled.

(3) "Weapon" means an object, device, or instrument which when used against a person is likely to or actually does result in serious bodily injury or death or any replica, article, or device having the appearance of such a weapon including, but not limited to, any object defined as a weapon by Code Section 16-11-127.1 or as a dangerous weapon by Code Section 16-11-121.

(b) A person commits the offense of hijacking a motor vehicle when such person while in possession of a firearm or weapon obtains a motor vehicle from the person or presence of another by force and violence or intimidation or attempts or conspires to do so.

(c) A person convicted of the offense of hijacking a motor vehicle shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 20 years and a fine of not less than $10,000.00 nor more than $100,000.00, provided that any person who has previously committed an offense under the laws of the United States or of Georgia or of any of the several states or of any foreign nation recognized by the United States which if committed in Georgia would have constituted the offense of hijacking a motor vehicle shall be punished by imprisonment for life and a fine of not less than $100,000.00 nor more than $500,000.00. For purposes of this subsection, "state" shall include the District of Columbia and any territory, possession, or dominion of the United States.

(d) The offense of hijacking a motor vehicle shall be considered a separate offense and shall not merge with any other offense; and the punishment prescribed by subsection (c) of this Code section shall not be deferred, suspended, or probated.

(e) Any property which is used, intended for use, derived, or realized, directly or indirectly, from a violation of this Code section is forfeited to the state and no property interest shall exist therein. Any action declaring such forfeiture shall be governed by the provisions of Code Section 16-13-49. (Code 1981, § 16-5-44.1, enacted by Ga. L. 1994, p. 1625, § 3.)

Code Commission notes. — Pursuant to Code Section 28-9-5, in 1994, "subsection (c)" was substituted for "subsection (b)" in subsection (d).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1994, p. 1625, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly,

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutional challenge waived. — While a defendant challenged the constitutionality of the non-merger provision of the hijacking a motor vehicle statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(d), the Supreme Court, after the initial appeal had been filed under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. VI, Para. II, had determined that the challenge was untimely and thus had been waived; thus, the defendant could not pursue the challenge at the appellate court level after the case had been transferred. Rutland v. State, 296 Ga. App. 471, 675 S.E.2d 506 (2009).

Double jeopardy. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(d) supersedes the double jeopardy provisions of O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7 in carjacking cases. Campbell v. State, 223 Ga. App. 484, 477 S.E.2d 905 (1996).

Statute prohibiting the hijacking of a motor vehicle does not violate the prohibition against double jeopardy since the double jeopardy clause of the Georgia Constitution does not prohibit additional punishment for a separate offense which the General Assembly has deemed to warrant separate sanction. Mathis v. State, 273 Ga. 508, 543 S.E.2d 712 (2001).

Defendant's conviction of hijacking a motor vehicle and armed robbery were properly entered, despite defendant's contention that the state used the same facts to establish both offenses and that defendant should have only been convicted of and sentenced for one of the offenses, as: (1) hijacking a motor vehicle was considered a separate offense and did not merge with any other offense; (2) O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1 superseded the double jeopardy provisions of O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7 in motor vehicle hijacking cases; (3) O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(d) did not violate the prohibition against double jeopardy, since the double jeopardy clause of the Georgia Constitution did not prohibit additional punishment for a separate offense which the legislature deemed to warrant separate sanction; and (4) defendant failed to offer any evidence in support of defendant's allegation that O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(d) otherwise violated defendant's double jeopardy rights. Holman v. State, 272 Ga. App. 890, 614 S.E.2d 124 (2005).

Defendant's separate convictions for armed robbery and hijacking a motor vehicle did not violate the prohibitions against double jeopardy as O.C.G.A.

§ 16-5-44.1(d) provided that hijacking a motor vehicle was a separate offense and did not merge and it therefore superseded the state statutory double jeopardy provision; further, the Georgia Constitution did not prohibit additional punishment for a separate offense that the Georgia legislature had deemed to warrant a separate sanction; defendant failed to show how the hijacking statute violated the federal double jeopardy clause. Mullins v. State, 280 Ga. App. 689, 634 S.E.2d 850 (2006).

Separate convictions for armed robbery and hijacking a motor vehicle did not violate the state and federal prohibitions against double jeopardy as the latter constituted a separate offense warranting a separate sanction under Georgia law, thus warranting an additional punishment. Dumas v. State, 283 Ga. App. 279, 641 S.E.2d 271 (2007).

Defendant's argument that separate convictions for armed robbery and hijacking a motor vehicle violated prohibitions against double jeopardy was properly rejected because O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(d) expressly provided that hijacking a motor vehicle was a separate offense, superseding the statutory double jeopardy provisions of O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7. Souder v. State, 301 Ga. App. 348, 687 S.E.2d 594 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0536, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 343 (Ga. 2010).

"Person or presence." — Jury was authorized to find that defendant took the car from the victim's "person or presence" for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1, when, although the victim, a store clerk, was not actually in the victim's car, it was parked just outside the store, and the car keys were taken directly from the victim's person upon threat of injury. Johnson v. State, 246 Ga. App. 109, 539 S.E.2d 605 (2000).

Because the family members in a home invasion were bound and lying in the foyer of their home when their vehicle was taken from the attached garage, the jury could have concluded that the theft of the vehicle was in the husband's presence, because the defendants took the keys to the vehicle which were under the husband's control, or the jury could have concluded that the vehicle was under the husband's control simply because the vehicle was located in the attached garage. Kollie v. State, 301 Ga. App. 534, 687 S.E.2d 869 (2009).

"Firearm." — For purposes of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1, threatening someone with a gun constitutes intimidation, as well as force and violence. Collis v. State, 252 Ga. App. 659, 556 S.E.2d 221 (2001).

"Obtain." — Because the text of the hijacking statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1, does not define "obtain", a court looks to the ordinary meaning of that word given that it was not a term of art or a technical term pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 1-3-1(b); ordinarily, "obtain" means to gain or attain possession, usually by some planned action or method, and applying the ordinary meaning of "obtain", the offense of hijacking a motor vehicle is concluded when possession of the motor vehicle is attained. Jackson v. State, No. A10A2164, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 309 (Mar. 30, 2011).

Included offenses. — Theft by receiving a motor vehicle is not a lesser included offense of hijacking a motor vehicle. Middlebrooks v. State, 241 Ga. App. 193, 526 S.E.2d 406 (1999).

Trial court did not err in failing to give a requested jury instruction on a lesser offense of theft by receiving stolen property as theft by receiving stolen property is not a lesser included offense of armed robbery, theft by taking, or hijacking a motor vehicle. Mullins v. State, 267 Ga. App. 393, 599 S.E.2d 340 (2004).

Merger of offenses. — Offense of hijacking did not merge with defendant's armed robbery conviction for sentencing purposes. Dillard v. State, 223 Ga. App. 405, 477 S.E.2d 674 (1996).

Aggravated assault offense was properly not merged with the offense of hijacking a motor vehicle because the latter crime was considered a separate offense and would not merge with any other offense charged. Kemper v. State, 251 Ga. App. 665, 555 S.E.2d 40 (2001).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(d) supersedes the double jeopardy provision contained in O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a). Thus, the trial court did not err in refusing to merge the defendant's armed robbery and hijacking convictions. Boykin v. State, 264 Ga. App. 836, 592 S.E.2d 426 (2003).

Physical manifestation requirement. — Because no evidence was offered to establish the physical manifestation requirement necessary to sustain a reasonable inference that the defendant had a gun, a weapon, or any object, defendant's conviction was reversed. Bradford v. State, 223 Ga. App. 424, 477 S.E.2d 859 (1996).

Weapon. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b) does not authorize a conviction for hijacking a motor vehicle since no weapon or instrument was used other than the defendant's own hands and feet. Haugland v. State, 253 Ga. App. 423, 560 S.E.2d 50 (2002).

Proof of venue. — State failed to prove venue for armed robbery and hijacking a motor vehicle since the facts showed that the victim was forced at gunpoint into the victim's car in a parking lot in one county and then ordered the victim to drive into a second county (the place of trial) since the victim was taken from the car and shot; both offenses were complete in the first county and neither O.C.G.A. § 16-8-1 nor O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(d) were applicable to confer venue in the second county. Bradley v. State, 272 Ga. 740, 533 S.E.2d 727 (2000).

Occupancy of vehicle not required. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1 does not require that the person be in the motor vehicle; thus, evidence that the cars were taken from the "presence of" the victims was sufficient to prove the elements of the crime. Stephens v. State, 245 Ga. App. 823, 538 S.E.2d 882 (2000).

Identification of defendant. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for hijacking a motor vehicle, as defendant's challenge to that conviction was meritless; defendant's contention that the evidence was insufficient had to be rejected because it was premised on the argument that the victims' identification of defendant as a perpetrator was tainted by an impermissibly suggestive photographic lineup and the photographic lineup procedure was not impermissibly suggestive. Evans v. State, 261 Ga. App. 22, 581 S.E.2d 676 (2003).

Denial of motion to sever. — In a prosecution on two counts of attempting to hijack a motor vehicle, four counts of aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and criminal trespass, because the offenses committed by a defendant and a codefendant amounted to a series of continuous acts connected together both in time and the area in which committed, and there was no likelihood of confusion, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the defendant's motion to sever the trial from that of the codefendant; furthermore, the mere fact that the codefendants' defenses were antagonistic was insufficient in itself to warrant separate trials. Diaz v. State, 280 Ga. App. 413, 634 S.E.2d 160 (2006).

Evidence insufficient for conviction. — Evidence did not authorize a finding that the defendant committed the crime of hijacking a motor vehicle, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b), because the defendant did not use a gun as a concomitant to induce the owner of the vehicle to relinquish possession of the car, but the gun was used only after the defendant had attained possession of the vehicle; when the gun was pointed at the car's owner the defendant was already inside the car and was driving away in the car, and by that point, the car had already been attained by the defendant. Jackson v. State, No. A10A2164, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 309 (Mar. 30, 2011).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — See Anderson v. State, 246 Ga. App. 189, 539 S.E.2d 879 (2000).

Defendant's possession of a recently stolen vehicle within minutes of its hijacking; defendant's flight from the police when they attempted to stop the vehicle; the presence of a gun, which did not belong to the victim, in the victim's vehicle after defendant's arrest; and the victim's positive identification of defendant at the arrest scene not long after the hijacking, was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions of armed robbery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), and hijacking a motor vehicle in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b). Lane v. State, 255 Ga. App. 274, 564 S.E.2d 857 (2002).

There was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of hijacking a motor vehicle since the defendant had a weapon and took a vehicle from the person or presence of another while in possession of the weapon, and defendant used force, violence or intimidation to accomplish the taking. Pearson v. State, 258 Ga. App. 651, 574 S.E.2d 820 (2002).

When the defendant took a cab driver's fare money, a gold coin, and the cab and was apprehended after a chase, the evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of armed robbery, hijacking a motor vehicle, and obstruction of a police officer. Frazier v. State, 263 Ga. App. 12, 587 S.E.2d 173 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's hijacking a motor vehicle conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b) where: (1) the car was registered to an owner in another state, but the victim primarily used it; (2) although another person was holding the keys at the time of the taking, the victim was standing by the car when a gunman pointed a gun at both individuals; and (3) the gunman took the keys, and drove away. Mullins v. State, 267 Ga. App. 393, 599 S.E.2d 340 (2004).

Victim's testimony and in-court identification was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of hijacking the victim's motor vehicle at a gas station and of aggravated assault for shooting the victim three times; furthermore, the photo lineup was not unduly suggestive. Weeks v. State, 268 Ga. App. 886, 602 S.E.2d 882 (2004).

In addition to the second codefendant's testimony, the state showed that, shortly after the murder, the defendant was in possession of the victim's cab, that the victim's blood was found in the vehicle and on the defendant, and that the defendant made incriminating admissions to others; thus, the evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find proof beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt of malice murder, armed robbery, aggravated assault, hijacking a motor vehicle, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Wicks v. State, 278 Ga. 550, 604 S.E.2d 768 (2004).

Evidence that the defendant and others approached two separate victims while the defendant brandished a shotgun, that defendant threatened the victims with the gun, and that defendant and the compatriots stole both of the victims' cars, sufficed to sustain convictions of two counts of hijacking a motor vehicle, two counts of armed robbery, two counts of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, and two counts of possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony; the jury was free to disbelieve defendant's testimony that defendant was coerced into threatening the victims at gunpoint and participating in the car thefts. Martinez v. State, 278 Ga. App. 500, 629 S.E.2d 485 (2006).

Evidence identifying the defendant as the perpetrator who stole a victim's car and purse at gunpoint, coupled with evidence of the defendant's flight from police, possession of the stolen car, and possession of the revolver used in the crimes, was sufficient to support convictions for hijacking a motor vehicle, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, armed robbery, and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon; however, the conviction and sentence for aggravated assault merged as a matter of fact into the armed robbery conviction and sentence. Doublette v. State, 278 Ga. App. 746, 629 S.E.2d 602 (2006).

Convictions of armed robbery, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, false imprisonment, and hijacking a motor vehicle were supported by sufficient evidence since a perpetrator identified as the defendant robbed a pizza restaurant at gunpoint, ordered everyone into a cooler, and took the restaurant manager's vehicle, after which an officer discovered the defendant the next day driving the manager's vehicle and wearing a hat identical to that worn by the perpetrator, and since a customer at the restaurant identified the defendant as the robber in a photo line-up and at trial; while three of the four crimes arising out of the incident were committed after the customer, who was the only witness to identify defendant, was ordered into the cooler, only one robber entered the restaurant and the jury was authorized to infer that the person identified by the customer also committed the crimes committed after the customer was in the cooler. Head v. State, 279 Ga. App. 608, 631 S.E.2d 808 (2006).

Sufficient circumstantial evidence excluded every reasonable hypothesis of innocence in the armed robbery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41 and hijacking a motor vehicle in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1 case; after the victim's car was stolen, the defendant used the victim's cell phone, a search of the defendant's residence uncovered the victim's and the victim's spouse's keys, and prints in the car matched the defendant's prints. Huff v. State, 281 Ga. App. 573, 636 S.E.2d 738 (2006).

Because: (1) the trial court did not err in admitting certain identification evidence alleged to be hearsay, as testimony relative to that evidence was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted; (2) the defendant's requested instruction was not tailored to the facts and was potentially confusing; and (3) the defendant's character was not placed in issue, convictions of armed robbery, hijacking a motor vehicle, and obstruction were all upheld on appeal. Jennings v. State, 285 Ga. App. 774, 648 S.E.2d 105 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1576, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 667 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court properly convicted defendant of armed robbery and hijacking of a motor vehicle because: (1) there was sufficient evidence to establish defendant committed the crimes based on the testimony of the victim, who identified defendant as the individual who approached the victim's vehicle, pointed a gun, and demanded the vehicle; (2) two officers testified as to observing defendant driving the stolen vehicle the same night; and (3) the victim's cell phone was found on defendant's person when the defendant was arrested. Culver v. State, 290 Ga. App. 321, 659 S.E.2d 390 (2008).

Testimony by a victim that the defendant and an accomplice, armed with handguns, forcibly entered the victim's apartment, raped and sodomized the victim, struck the victim with a gun, stole jewelry, bound the victim, and escaped in a car owned by the victim's prospective spouse, and evidence that 24 fingerprints lifted from the apartment and car matched the defendant's, was sufficient to convict the defendant of hijacking a motor vehicle. Crawford v. State, 292 Ga. App. 463, 664 S.E.2d 820 (2008).

Defendant's possession of a vehicle within minutes of the vehicle's hijacking, the defendant's attempted flight when police ordered the defendant out of the car, the recovery of a .40 caliber handgun in the car, and the victim's positive identification of the defendant authorized the jury to find the defendant guilty of hijacking a motor vehicle and of possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony. Wilcox v. State, 297 Ga. App. 201, 677 S.E.2d 142 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1285, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 342 (Ga. 2009).

Even if defendant was not physically present during the hijacking, given the evidence of the defendant's agreement with defendant's passenger to steal a car, any act done in pursuance of that association by the defendant's passenger would, in legal contemplation, be the act of defendant. Additionally, defendant could have been convicted of hijacking a motor vehicle even if the defendant had no knowledge that the defendant's passenger was planning to use a gun to perpetrate the crime because defendant's passenger's use of the gun was naturally or necessarily done in furtherance of the conspiracy to steal a vehicle even though not part of the original agreement; therefore, given that the evidence supported defendant's conviction under the theories of conspiracy and parties to a crime, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of hijacking a motor vehicle in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b). Johnson v. State, 299 Ga. App. 706, 683 S.E.2d 659 (2009).

Although under Georgia law, a defendant could not be convicted solely upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the evidence corroborated some particulars of the accomplice's testimony implicating the codefendants in the charged crimes since all three of the victims from the three separate gas stations provided descriptions of their assailants that generally matched the codefendants and the accomplice, and all three victims also testified that their assailants brandished a handgun and a shotgun, which were indeed the weapons that were found at the scene where the stolen SUV crashed and where the accomplice was arrested. Accordingly, the evidence corroborating the accomplice's testimony was sufficient to authorize the jury's determination that the codefen-dants were guilty beyond a reasonable doubt as parties to armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41, hijacking a motor vehicle, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1, aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, theft by taking, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-2, theft by receiving, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-7, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106. Daniels v. State, 306 Ga. App. 577, 703 S.E.2d 41 (2010).

Defendant's convictions for kidnapping, hijacking a motor vehicle, armed robbery, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, carrying a concealed weapon, and possession of a weapon on school property were authorized because, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the victim's testimony alone established the essential elements of the offenses. Lester v. State, No. A10A1665, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 310 (Mar. 30, 2011).

Other conduct or crimes. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting similar transaction evidence of a first car-jacking to show bent of mind, course of conduct, and identity where: (1) both incidents constituted car-jackings committed with a gun pointed at the victim; (2) the incidents occurred within six days of each other; (3) the first car-jacking involved a car of the same make and color as one used in the car-jacking that was being tried; (4) the victim of the first car-jacking positively identified defendant as the perpetrator of the first car-jacking; and (5) the testimony of the victim of the first car-jacking was sufficient to meet the elements of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b). Mullins v. State, 267 Ga. App. 393, 599 S.E.2d 340 (2004).

Conviction for hijacking, battery, and kidnapping supported by evidence. — Convictions for hijacking a motor vehicle in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b), battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23, and two counts of kidnapping with bodily injury under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(b) were supported by sufficient evidence because the victim testified that defendant forced a way into the car at gunpoint while defendant and the infant child were in the vehicle and then sexually assaulted the victim after threatening to harm the child, defendant's wallet was found in the abandoned car, and

Jury instructions. — Specific inclusion of conspiracy as a method of committing the crime of hijacking a motor vehicle does not alter the general rule that a conspiracy can be proven and charged without being indicted; therefore, the trial court did not err by reading the entire hijacking statute or defining "conspiracy" in response to a jury question. Middlebrooks v. State, 241 Ga. App. 193, 526 S.E.2d 406 (1999).

Defendant was properly convicted of hijacking where defendant was seen leaving a party with a pistol, discussed robbing a cab driver with two accomplices, was seen entering the victim's cab, was identified as one of the accomplices, and was identified as the person who shot the victim in the head, after which defendant participated in stealing $ 50 from the cab. Chinn v. State, 276 Ga. 387, 578 S.E.2d 856 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in the manner in which the court recharged the jury. It did not appear that the jury was confused or misled by the lack of a recharge on hijacking; moreover, counsel did not request one or submit an alternate request to charge. Wilcox v. State, 297 Ga. App. 201, 677 S.E.2d 142 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1285, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 342 (Ga. 2009).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in charging the jury on the definitions of a firearm and a weapon in response to the jury's question regarding the offense of hijacking a motor vehicle because those terms were included within the definition of hijacking a motor vehicle. Smith v. State, 304 Ga. App. 708, 699 S.E.2d 742 (2010).

Sentencing. — Defendant convicted under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1 who was originally sentenced to the maximum 20 years under the recidivist provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-10-7, with ten of the 20 years to be served on probation, was properly re-sentenced because O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1 provides that the prescribed punishment "shall not be deferred, suspended, or probated." Stephens v. State, 245 Ga. App. 823, 538 S.E.2d 882 (2000).

Because the trial court imposed consecutive sentences upon the defendant's conviction of hijacking a motor vehicle because it mistakenly believed it had no discretion to do otherwise, the sentence was vacated and a resentencing was ordered on remand, as O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(d) did not mandate the sentence. Smith v. State, 278 Ga. App. 858, 630 S.E.2d 125 (2006).

16-5-45. Interference with custody.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term:

(1) "Child" means any individual who is under the age of 17 years or any individual who is under the age of 18 years who is alleged to be a deprived child or an unruly child as such terms are defined in Code Section 15-11-2.

(2) "Committed person" means any child or other person whose custody is entrusted to another individual by authority of law.

(3) "Lawful custody" means that custody inherent in the natural parents, that custody awarded by proper authority as provided in Code Section 15-11-45, or that custody awarded to a parent, guardian, or other person by a court of competent jurisdiction.

(4) "Service provider" means an entity that is registered with the Department of Human Services pursuant to Article 7 of Chapter 5 of Title 49 or a child welfare agency as defined in Code Section 49-5-12 or an agent or employee acting on behalf of such entity or child welfare agency.

(b)(1) A person commits the offense of interference with custody when without lawful authority to do so, the person:

(A) Knowingly or recklessly takes or entices any child or committed person away from the individual who has lawful custody of such child or committed person;

(B) Knowingly harbors any child or committed person who has absconded; provided, however, that this subparagraph shall not apply to a service provider that notifies the child's parent, guardian, or legal custodian of the child's location and general state of well being as soon as possible but not later than 72 hours after the child's acceptance of services; provided, further, that such notification shall not be required if:

(i) The service provider has reasonable cause to believe that the minor has been abused or neglected and makes a child abuse report pursuant to Code Section 19-7-5;

(ii) The child will not disclose the name of the child's parent, guardian, or legal custodian, and the Division of Family and Children Services within the Department of Human Services is notified within 72 hours of the child's acceptance of services; or

(iii) The child's parent, guardian, or legal custodian cannot be reached, and the Division of Family and Children Services within the Department of Human Services is notified within 72 hours of the child's acceptance of services; or

(C) Intentionally and willfully retains possession within this state of the child or committed person upon the expiration of a lawful period of visitation with the child or committed person.

(2) A person convicted of the offense of interference with custody shall be punished as follows:

(A) Upon conviction of the first offense, the defendant shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not less than $200.00 nor more than $500.00 or shall be imprisoned for not less than one month nor more than five months, or both fined and imprisoned;

(B) Upon conviction of the second offense, the defendant shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not less than $400.00 nor more than $1,000.00 or shall be imprisoned for not less than three months nor more than 12 months, or both fined and imprisoned; and

(C) Upon the conviction of the third or subsequent offense, the defendant shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years.

(c)(1) A person commits the offense of interstate interference with custody when without lawful authority to do so the person knowingly or recklessly takes or entices any minor or committed person away from the individual who has lawful custody of such minor or committed person and in so doing brings such minor or committed person into this state or removes such minor or committed person from this state.

(2) A person also commits the offense of interstate interference with custody when the person removes a minor or committed person from this state in the lawful exercise of a visitation right and, upon the expiration of the period of lawful visitation, intentionally retains possession of the minor or committed person in another state for the purpose of keeping the minor or committed person away from the individual having lawful custody of the minor or committed person. The offense is deemed to be committed in the county to which the minor or committed person was to have been returned upon expiration of the period of lawful visitation.

(3) A person convicted of the offense of interstate interference with custody shall be guilty of a felony and shall be imprisoned for not less than one year nor more than five years. (Code 1933, § 26-1312, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 1978, p. 1420, § 1; Ga. L. 1982, p. 970, § 2; Ga. L. 1986, p. 1325, § 1; Ga. L. 1987, p. 561, § 1; Ga. L. 1999, p. 81, § 16; Ga. L. 2000, p. 20, § 5; Ga. L. 2011, p. 470, § 2/SB 94.)

The 2011 amendment, effective July 1, 2011, in paragraph (a)(1), inserted "or an unruly child", substituted "such terms are defined" for "such is defined", and deleted ", relating to juvenile proceedings" following "Code Section 15-11-2" from the end; added paragraph (a)(4); inserted a comma in paragraph (b)(1); and, in subparagraph (b)(1)(B), added the proviso in the introductory language and added divisions (b)(1)(B)(i) through (b)(1)(B)(iii).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Editor's notes. — In light of the similarity of the issues involved, decisions under former Penal Code 1910, § 110 and former Code 1933, § 26-1602, as it read prior to revision of the title by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, and former Code Section 16-5-40(b), are included in the annotations for this Code section.

Defendant cannot be in violation unless terms of custody order are clear. — Defendant cannot be in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-45 unless the terms of the custody order are so clear that the parties have exact notice of the line which may not be transgressed. Brassell v. State, 259 Ga. 590, 385 S.E.2d 665 (1989).

Interference with custody was not a lesser included offense of kidnapping, as a matter of law or fact, where the indictment did not allege that the mother of the child was the victim of any crime.

Stroud v. State, 200 Ga. App. 387, 408 S.E.2d 175 (1991).

Interference with custody is lesser included offense of kidnapping in some cases. — Term "committed person" included a dependent child under age 16, and in some cases interference with custody becomes a lesser included offense of kidnapping under former Code 1933, § 26-1311(b). All the same facts would be proven if the child taken was under age 16. The essential difference in the two crimes laid in the degree of culpability required to establish the commission of each crime. Watson v. State, 235 Ga. 461, 219 S.E.2d 763 (1975) (decided prior to 1982 amendment of § 16-5-40 and this section).

Venue. — Evidence was sufficient to authorize a finding that the unlawful intent to interfere with custody coincided with the taking of a child in a county so as to establish venue in that county. Avery v. State, 149 Ga. App. 414, 254 S.E.2d 408 (1979).

When a parent lawfully removes the child from the state, but unlawfully retains custody out of state, the legislature intended that the victim's domicile, i.e., the custodial parent, should be the venue of any criminal prosecution. State v. Evans, 212 Ga. App. 415, 442 S.E.2d 287 (1994).

Court erred in making findings of facts on the venue issue, including the subjective intent of the accused; these factual issues are for the jury. State v. Evans, 212 Ga. App. 415, 442 S.E.2d 287 (1994).

When child has parent or guardian and when child has neither. — Former Code 1933, § 26-1602 prescribes two offenses: (1) when the child has a parent or guardian; and (2) where the child has neither. In the former, the crime is against the parent. It is the fraudulent deprivation of the parent of the parent's right to the custody and dominion of a child, and the substitution of defendant's own dominion, custody, and control over the child for that of the parent. It is only when the parental control has been wrongfully attacked and abrogated that the offense of interference with custody is complete. Irby v. State, 57 Ga. App. 717, 196 S.E. 101 (1938) (decided under former Code 1933, § 26-1602); LeCroy v. State, 77 Ga. App. 851, 50 S.E.2d 148 (1948) (decided under former Code 1933, § 26-1602).

Kidnapping by fraudulently enticing child from parent without consent or against parent's will. — If a child be fraudulently decoyed or enticed away from its parent without the consent or against the will of the parent, it is not necessary to show that either force or malice entered into the transaction. The parental control has been wrongfully attacked and abrogated, though the child may have been willing to go away, without the necessity for the use of force, and where the accused had no ill will whatever against either parent or child. Rowell v. State, 41 Ga. App. 499, 153 S.E. 371 (1930) (decided under former Penal Code 1910, § 110).

On an indictment based on former Penal Code 1910, § 110 it is not necessary to prove that the child was "forcibly" or "maliciously" carried away, if it be shown that the child was fraudulently enticed away without the consent or against the will of the parent. Rowell v. State, 41 Ga. App. 499, 153 S.E. 371 (1930) (decided under former Penal Code 1910, § 110).

There is no violation if parent has lost parental control over child alleged to have been kidnapped as when the child has married. Irby v. State, 57 Ga. App. 717, 196 S.E. 101 (1938) (decided under former Code 1933, § 26-1602).

Crime under former § 16-5-40(b) is against right of parent or guardian of the child and not against the child, and the consent of the child is immaterial. Sawyer v. State, 112 Ga. App. 885, 147 S.E.2d 60 (1966) (former § 16-5-40(b) related to the kidnapping of a child under the age of 16).

Consent of victim. — That the child may have willingly allowed oneself to be enticed was of no consequence in a prosecution for kidnapping by maliciously enticing the child away against the will of the child's parents. Coker v. State, 164 Ga. App. 493, 297 S.E.2d 68 (1982).

Interference with custody can be lesser included offense of kidnapping. — Term "committed person" includes a dependent child under age 16 and in some cases interference with custody becomes a lesser included offense of kidnapping under former Code 1933, § 26-1311(b). All the same facts would be proven if the child taken was under age 16. The essential difference in the two crimes lies in the degree of culpability required to establish the commission of each crime. Watson v. State, 235 Ga. 461, 219 S.E.2d 763 (1975) (decided under former Code 1933, § 26-1311(b)).

Delusion suffered by defendant that defendant could give victim better life economically does not justify kidnapping a child. Kirk v. State, 168 Ga. App. 226, 308 S.E.2d 592 (1983).

Father's testimony sufficient to infer lack of consent. — Mother's lack of consent is an essential element of the offense of enticing away a female child under the age of 16 (now 17) years against the will of her parents. But the father's testimony alone that neither he nor his wife had given consent, together with the defendant's acknowledgment that he had not known the victim or her parents prior to the abduction, is sufficient to authorize the jury to infer want of parental consent. Kirk v. State, 252 Ga. 133, 311 S.E.2d 821 (1984).

Misapprehension as to age is not excuse. — Fact that the accused was ignorant of the child's age, and that the accused believed, in good faith, and had good grounds to believe, that the child was more than eighteen years of age (now 17), is no defense to an indictment under former Penal Code 1910, § 110. Smiley v. State, 34 Ga. App. 513, 130 S.E. 359, cert. denied, 34 Ga. App. 836 (1925) (decided under former Penal Code 1910, § 110).

Parent taking child from parent with temporary custody is not guilty of kidnapping. — As between the mother and father, when parental control has not been lost, and in the absence of a decree of court awarding custody, the general rule is that a parent does not commit the crime of kidnapping by taking exclusive control of the child. Adams v. State, 218 Ga. 130, 126 S.E.2d 624, answer conformed to, 106 Ga. App. 531, 127 S.E.2d 477 (1962), commented on in 25 Ga. St. B.J. 327 (1963).

Evidence insufficient to authorize

finding of guilt. — Evidence showing that defendant retained possession of the minor child beyond the authorized visitation period because of unavoidable vehicle breakdowns was insufficient to authorize a finding of guilt. Scott v. State, 198 Ga. App. 10, 400 S.E.2d 677 (1990).

Conduct of defendant in taking a 15-year-old child to defendant's apartment when the child was supposed to be in school did not constitute a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-45. Thompson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 396, 537 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Evidence insufficient to authorize finding of guilt. — Interference with custody not shown under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-45(b)(1)(A) after a hospital employee reported the situation to child services who then took the children away. Gwinnett Health Sys. v. DELU, 264 Ga. App. 863, 592 S.E.2d 497 (2003).

Sentence beyond statutory maximum. — Sentence of 12 months confinement upon a conviction of interference with custody exceeded the applicable statutory maximum and was therefore void; furthermore, contrary to the state's contention, the defendant's failure to first file a motion to correct the sentence in the trial court did not deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction to consider the issue. Arnold v. State, 278 Ga. App. 188, 628 S.E.2d 605 (2006).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Authority of Georgia Crime Information Center to maintain records. — Georgia Crime Information Center is authorized to maintain records of reported crime and, in some instances, to record information identifying persons charged with the commission of crime; however, the center is not authorized to maintain records identifying persons charged with disorderly conduct except when the charge is directly connected with or directly related to certain statutory offenses including interference with custody. 1976 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 76-33.

16-5-46. Trafficking of persons for labor or sexual servitude.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term:

(1) "Coercion" means:

(A) Causing or threatening to cause bodily harm to any person, physically restraining or confining any person, or threatening to physically restrain or confine any person;

(B) Exposing or threatening to expose any fact or information or disseminating or threatening to disseminate any fact or information that would tend to subject a person to criminal or immigration proceedings, hatred, contempt, or ridicule;

(C) Destroying, concealing, removing, confiscating, or possessing any actual or purported passport or other immigration document, or any other actual or purported government identification document, of any person;

(D) Providing a controlled substance, as such term is defined by Code Section 16-13-21, to such person for the purpose of compelling such person to engage in labor or sexual servitude against his or her will; or

(E) Causing or threatening to cause financial harm to any person or using financial control over any person.

(2) "Deception" means:

(A) Creating or confirming another's impression of an existing fact or past event which is false and which the accused knows or believes to be false;

(B) Maintaining the status or condition of a person arising from a pledge by that person of his or her personal services as security for a debt, if the value of those services as reasonably assessed is not applied toward the liquidation of the debt or the length and nature of those services are not respectively limited and defined, or preventing a person from acquiring information pertinent to the disposition of such debt; or

(C) Promising benefits or the performance of services which the accused does not intend to deliver or perform or knows will not be delivered or performed. Evidence of failure to deliver benefits or perform services standing alone shall not be sufficient to authorize a conviction under this Code section.

(3) "Labor servitude" means work or service of economic or financial value which is performed or provided by another person and is induced or obtained by coercion or deception.

(4) "Performance" shall have the same meaning as set forth in Code Section 16-12-100.

(5) "Sexually explicit conduct" shall have the same meaning as set forth in Code Section 16-12-100.

(6) "Sexual servitude" means:

(A) Any sexually explicit conduct or performance involving sexually explicit conduct for which anything of value is directly or indirectly given, promised to, or received by any person, which conduct is induced or obtained by coercion or deception or which conduct is induced or obtained from a person under the age of 18 years; or

(B) Any sexually explicit conduct or performance involving sexually explicit conduct which is performed or provided by any person, which conduct is induced or obtained by coercion or deception or which conduct is induced or obtained from a person under the age of 18 years.

(b) A person commits the offense of trafficking a person for labor servitude when that person knowingly subjects another person to or maintains another person in labor servitude or knowingly recruits, entices, harbors, transports, provides, or obtains by any means another person for the purpose of labor servitude.

(c) A person commits the offense of trafficking a person for sexual servitude when that person knowingly subjects another person to or maintains another person in sexual servitude or knowingly recruits, entices, harbors, transports, provides, or obtains by any means another person for the purpose of sexual servitude.

(d) The age of consent for sexual activity or the accused's lack of knowledge of the age of the person being trafficked shall not constitute a defense in a prosecution for a violation of this Code section.

(e) The sexual history or history of commercial sexual activity of a person alleged to have been trafficked or such person's connection by blood or marriage to an accused in the case or to anyone involved in such person's trafficking shall be excluded from evidence if the court finds at a hearing outside the presence of the jury that the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury.

(f)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any accused who commits the offense of trafficking a person for labor or sexual servitude shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 20 years, a fine not to exceed $100,000.00, or both.

(2) Any accused who commits the offense of trafficking a person for labor or sexual servitude against a person who is under the age of 18 years shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 20 years, a fine not to exceed $100,000.00, or both; provided, however, that if the offense is committed against a person under 18 years of age and such person under the age of 18 years was coerced or deceived into being trafficked for labor or sexual servitude, the accused shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 25 nor more than 50 years or life imprisonment, a fine not to exceed $100,000.00, or both.

(g) All real and personal property of every kind used or intended for use in the course of, derived from, or realized through a violation of this Code section shall be subject to forfeiture to the state. Forfeiture shall be had by the same procedure set forth in Code Section 16-14-7. Prosecuting attorneys and the Attorney General may commence forfeiture proceedings under this Code section.

(h) Prosecuting attorneys and the Attorney General shall have concurrent authority to prosecute any criminal cases arising under the provisions of this Code section and to perform any duty that necessarily appertains thereto.

(i) Each violation of this Code section shall constitute a separate offense and shall not merge with any other offense.

(j) A corporation may be prosecuted under this Code section for an act or omission constituting a crime under this Code section only if an agent of the corporation performs the conduct which is an element of the crime while acting within the scope of his or her office or employment and on behalf of the corporation and the commission of the crime was either authorized, requested, commanded, performed, or within the scope of his or her employment on behalf of the corporation or constituted a pattern of illegal activity that an agent of the company knew or should have known was occurring. (Code 1981, § 16-5-46, enacted by Ga. L. 2006, p. 105, § 3/SB 529; Ga. L. 2011, p. 217, § 1/HB 200.)

The 2011 amendment, effective July 1, 2011, rewrote this Code section.

Code Commission notes. — Pursuant to Code Section 28-9-5, in 2011, a comma was inserted following “of this subsection” in paragraph (f)(1).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2006, p. 105, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: ‘This Act shall be known and may be cited as the ‘Georgia Security and Immigration Compliance Act.’ All requirements of this Act concerning immigration or the classification of immigration status shall be construed in conformity with federal immigration law.’

Ga. L. 2006, p. 105, § 10(b), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that this Code section shall not apply to any offense committed prior to July 1, 2007.

16-5-60. Reckless conduct causing harm to or endangering the bodily safety of another; conduct by HIV infected persons; assault by HIV infected persons or hepatitis infected persons.

(a) Any term used in this Code section and defined in Code Section 31-22-9.1 shall have the meaning provided for such term in Code Section 31-22-9.1.

(b) A person who causes bodily harm to or endangers the bodily safety of another person by consciously disregarding a substantial and unjustifiable risk that his act or omission will cause harm or endanger the safety of the other person and the disregard constitutes a gross deviation from the standard of care which a reasonable person would exercise in the situation is guilty of a misdemeanor.

(c) A person who is an HIV infected person who, after obtaining knowledge of being infected with HIV:

(1) Knowingly engages in sexual intercourse or performs or submits to any sexual act involving the sex organs of one person and the mouth or anus of another person and the HIV infected person does not disclose to the other person the fact of that infected person's being an HIV infected person prior to that intercourse or sexual act;

(2) Knowingly allows another person to use a hypodermic needle, syringe, or both for the introduction of drugs or any other substance into or for the withdrawal of body fluids from the other person's body and the needle or syringe so used had been previously used by the HIV infected person for the introduction of drugs or any other substance into or for the withdrawal of body fluids from the HIV infected person's body and where that infected person does not disclose to the other person the fact of that infected person's being an HIV infected person prior to such use;

(3) Offers or consents to perform with another person an act of sexual intercourse for money without disclosing to that other person the fact of that infected person's being an HIV infected person prior to offering or consenting to perform that act of sexual intercourse;

(4) Solicits another person to perform or submit to an act of sodomy for money without disclosing to that other person the fact of that infected person's being an HIV infected person prior to soliciting that act of sodomy; or

(5) Donates blood, blood products, other body fluids, or any body organ or body part without previously disclosing the fact of that infected person's being an HIV infected person to the person drawing the blood or blood products or the person or entity collecting or storing the other body fluids, body organ, or body part, is guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than ten years.

(d) A person who is an HIV infected person or hepatitis infected person and who, after obtaining knowledge of being infected with HIV or hepatitis, commits an assault with the intent to transmit HIV or hepatitis, using his or her body fluids (blood, semen, or vaginal secretions), saliva, urine, or feces upon:

(1) A peace officer while the peace officer is engaged in the performance of his or her official duties or on account of the peace officer's performance of his or her official duties; or

(2) A correctional officer while the correctional officer is engaged in the performance of his or her official duties or on account of the correctional officer's performance of his or her official duties is guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years. (Code 1933, § 26-2910, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 1988, p. 1799, § 3; Ga. L. 2003, p. 306, § 1.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1988, p. 1799, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly finds that Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS) and its causative agent, including Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), pose a grave threat to the health, safety, and welfare of the people of this state. In the absence of any effective vaccination or treatment for this disease, it threatens almost certain death to all who contract it. The disease is largely transmitted through sexual contacts and intravenous drug use, not through casual contact, and, while deadly, is therefore preventable. The key component of the fight against AIDS is education. Through public education and counseling our citizens can learn how the disease is transmitted and, thus, how to protect themselves and prevent its spread. The Department of Human Resources is encouraged to continue its efforts to educate all Georgians about the disease, its causative agent, and its means of transmission. In addition, voluntary testing should be encouraged for anyone who feels at risk of infection. While education, counseling, and voluntary testing are vital to the elimination of this epidemic, other measures are needed to protect the health of our citizens, and it is the intention of the General Assembly to enact such measures in the exercise of its police powers in order to deal with AIDS and HIV infection."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Former Code 1933, § 26-2910 was constitutional. Mitchell v. State, 154 Ga. App. 399, 268 S.E.2d 360, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1011, 101 S. Ct. 567, 66 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2910 was sufficiently definite to give person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that such conduct was forbidden by the statute. Horowitz v. State, 243 Ga. 441, 254 S.E.2d 828 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60).

Unconstitutionally vague as applied. — Because O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60 failed to provide defendant with fair notice that defendant could be held criminally responsible for leaving children in the care of an older son, the statute failed to clearly define the statutory prohibitions, rendering the statute unconstitutionally vague as applied. Hall v. State, 268 Ga. 89, 485 S.E.2d 755 (1997).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60 was not unconstitutionally vague as applied when the defendant was accused of taking direct, physical, and adverse action against an infant; that statute provided ample notice to the defendant that the conduct of which defendant was accused was prohibited since roughly handling an infant clearly may endanger the bodily safety of the infant and that risk is clear, substantial and unjustifiable, and disregarding such a risk would be a gross deviation from the standard of care a reasonable person would exercise in the situation. State v. Boyer, 270 Ga. 701, 512 S.E.2d 605 (1999).

Statute not unconstitutionally vague. — Defendant's conviction for misdemeanor reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b) was affirmed as the statute was not unconstitutionally vague under the Fourteenth Amendment since the statute gave a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that the statute prohibited a person from leaving one's children, one an infant and the other a toddler, unsupervised on the upper floor of a two-story home that was not equipped with any device to keep the children from falling down a nearby flight of stairs. Baker v. State, 280 Ga. 822, 633 S.E.2d 541 (2006).

Civil liability. — In a wrongful death action alleging that defendant negligently passed a loaded handgun to the shooter just before the fatal shooting of plaintiffs' decedent, the trial court erred in granting defendant's motion in limine to exclude plaintiffs' claim against defendant based on defendant's alleged violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Key v. Grant, 238 Ga. App. 818, 520 S.E.2d 277 (1999).

Mentally retarded individuals. — Jury was authorized to convict a mentally retarded defendant of the offense of reckless conduct when defendant admitted knowing defendant should not discharge a gun within the city limits; defendant knew defendant was already in trouble for shooting a dog and defendant knew defendant was still holding the gun when defendant turned and pointed the gun at a person. Cox v. State, 216 Ga. App. 86, 453 S.E.2d 471 (1995).

Suppression motion. — Trial court erroneously suppressed the statements given by the defendant to law enforcement, because, given the totality of the circumstances apparent from the record, the defendant: (1) spoke clearly; (2) did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol or drugs; (3) appeared to understand what was read; (4) was not threatened or coerced in any way; (5) appeared very calm; (6) was not promised anything by police in exchange for defendant's cooperation; (7) did not appear to have any mental issues; (8) had only been detained for approximately 20 minutes before defendant was Mirandized; and (9) asked the investigator to come back to speak with defendant after a brief interruption in the interview; the mere fact that there was no written Miranda waiver or electronic recording of the waiver did not render the waiver involuntary. State v. Hardy, 281 Ga. App. 365, 636 S.E.2d 36 (2006).

Defendant's threat to get a gun and shoot the officer's car, whereby defendant then turned back toward defendant's tavern, may very well have constituted the crime of terroristic threats under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-37, but it was not such an "act or omission" which "causes bodily harm to or endangers the bodily safety of another person" as support a conviction for reckless conduct. Gay v. State, 179 Ga. App. 430, 346 S.E.2d 877 (1986).

When defendant uses gun in self-defense in "unlawful manner," defendant is guilty of reckless conduct, and thus the act is not a "lawful act" within the meaning of former Code 1933, § 26-1103(b). Crawford v. State, 245 Ga. 89, 263 S.E.2d 181 (1980); Farmer v. State, 246 Ga. 253, 271 S.E.2d 166 (1980); Appleby v. State, 247 Ga. 587, 278 S.E.2d 366 (1981) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-3(b)).

Firing shots into wall. — When the defendant, while holding the victims at gunpoint, intentionally fired what the defendant termed "warning shots" into a wall and a trash can, the defendant's act was either an act of insanity or constituted a felony, and the court did not err in refusing to give a requested charge on the misdemeanor offense of reckless conduct. Briard v. State, 188 Ga. App. 490, 373 S.E.2d 239, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 911, 373 S.E.2d 239 (1988).

Firing shots through a door. — When the defendant fired a shot through a door, knowing a group of law enforcement officers were present on the other side, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of reckless conduct. Beaton v. State, 255 Ga. App. 901, 567 S.E.2d 113 (2002).

In a criminal case wherein a gun discharged in an adjacent apartment and the bullet lodged in the head of an infant after traveling through the wall, insufficient evidence existed to support a defendant's conviction for reckless conduct since it could be inferred from the discharge of the weapon that the defendant acted recklessly, but it could also have been inferred that the weapon discharged accidentally. Allison v. State, 288 Ga. App. 482, 654 S.E.2d 628 (2007).

Juvenile firing BB gun. — Juvenile court properly denied a juvenile's motion for a new trial with regard to the juvenile's delinquency adjudication finding the juvenile guilty for aggravated assault, criminal property damage, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct arising from the shooting of a BB gun at a passing car. The juvenile was the only Caucasian identified in the group of youth; the juvenile admitted to hiding the BB gun; the juvenile did not dispute that the juvenile encouraged another youth to shoot the gun; and the judge was the final arbiter of the credibility and witness issues and had the province to reject the testimony of the juvenile and a parent that the juvenile did not shoot the gun. In the Interest of A.A., 293 Ga. App. 827, 668 S.E.2d 323 (2008).

Pitbull attack. — Fact that there was no state law at the time of a pitbull attack specifically forbidding ownership of pitbulls or specifically outlawing any one of the defendant's isolated acts regarding the dogs did not preclude a jury from finding that the defendant's conduct was reckless; the state was not required to prove that the defendant knew of the dogs' propensity to attack, bite, and injure a child as occurred in circumstances giving rise to the charge against the defendant. Turnipseed v. State, 186 Ga. App. 278, 367 S.E.2d 259 (1988).

Defendant's pit bull mauled a child. The defendant's conviction in recorder's court of violating a county ordinance by failing to exercise ordinary care in controlling the defendant's pet for the protection of others was sufficiently separate from a misdemeanor reckless conduct charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b), which required proof of a gross deviation from the standard of care, that a successive prosecution for violating § 16-5-60(b) did not violate the double jeopardy ban. State v. Stepp, 295 Ga. App. 813, 673 S.E.2d 257 (2009).

Defendant's conviction of violating DeKalb County, Ga., Ordinance § 5-2(a), an animal control ordinance, did not bar the defendant's subsequent prosecution for reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b) under double jeopardy principles because each offense required proof of an element that the other offense did not require: the ordinance required proof of ownership of the animal (in this case, a pitbull) and the reckless conduct statute required proof of actual bodily harm being caused (in this case, mauling of a child). Stepp v. State, 286 Ga. 556, 690 S.E.2d 161 (2010).

A DUI accusation must allege harm or danger in order to render reckless conduct a lesser included offense. Barber v. State, 204 Ga. App. 94, 418 S.E.2d 436 (1992).

Running over victim. — When defendant was accused of beating the victim with a pistol and running over the victim with a car, the trial court did not err in refusing to charge on the lesser included offenses of vehicular homicide and reckless conduct. The defendant's theory was that other individuals committed the crime and that the defendant accidentally ran over the victim; thus, the evidence showed either the commission of the offenses as charged or the commission of no offense. Lupoe v. State, 284 Ga. 576, 669 S.E.2d 133 (2008).

Reckless conduct was not lesser included offense of cruelty to children. — Trial court did not err in not charging reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70; if the jury believed the defendant's testimony, there was no conscious disregard of a substantial and unjustifiable risk, and the state's evidence was that the defendant maliciously caused the child's suffering. Banta v. State, 282 Ga. 392, 651 S.E.2d 21 (2007).

When the defendants were charged with first-degree cruelty to children under

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 on the ground that the children had caused the victim physical and mental pain by binding the victim's arms and legs, the trial court properly refused to charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Reckless conduct involved bodily harm, not mental pain; furthermore, as the defendants claimed that the defendants had acted out of love to prevent the victim from using drugs, their theory of defense was one of justification, on which the trial court had instructed. Hafez v. State, 290 Ga. App. 800, 660 S.E.2d 787 (2008).

In a shaken baby death, an involuntary manslaughter verdict was not mutually exclusive of a guilty verdict for felony murder/cruelty to children because, consistent with its guilty verdict on the felony murder charge, an offense requiring criminal intent, the jury predicated its involuntary manslaughter verdict on a misdemeanor involving criminal intent, battery or simple battery under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-23(a) and 16-5-23.1(a), although the jury was also instructed on reckless conduct, a misdemeanor committed by criminal negligence. O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Drake v. State, 288 Ga. 131, 702 S.E.2d 161 (2010).

Reckless conduct as lesser included offense of aggravated assault. — Refusal to give a requested charge on reckless conduct, as a lesser included offense of aggravated assault, was not error where defendant admitted firing a gun with the intent to scare the victim, although defendant testified that there was no intent to hit the victim, since using a deadly weapon to commit an act which places another in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury amounts to an aggravated assault, absent justification. The act testified to by defendant was either justified as an act of self-defense or constituted a felony. Riley v. State, 181 Ga. App. 667, 353 S.E.2d 598 (1987); Bright v. State, 238 Ga. App. 876, 520 S.E.2d 48 (1999).

Requested charge of reckless conduct as a lesser included offense was properly denied where the evidence was that defendant was guilty of two offenses of aggravated assault, as averred, or was not guilty of any crime under the particular indictment counts. Morris v. State, 228 Ga. App. 90, 491 S.E.2d 190 (1997).

Refusal to instruct on reckless conduct was proper where the evidence presented only two possibilities: either defendant was unarmed and never fired a shot or defendant committed aggravated assault by walking toward some men and deliberately opening fire. Carter v. State, 228 Ga. App. 403, 492 S.E.2d 259 (1997).

Refusal to give a requested charge on reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of aggravated assault was not error where evidence showed that defendant either was unarmed and never fired a shot or defendant committed aggravated assault by intentionally firing a gun toward the victims. Hy v. State, 232 Ga. App. 247, 501 S.E.2d 583 (1998).

When the evidence indicated that the defendant might have merely fired a gun up into the air while the police were chasing the car in which the defendant was riding, the trial court erred in refusing to charge the jury on the offense of reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of aggravated assault by attempting to injure. Shaw v. State, 238 Ga. App. 757, 519 S.E.2d 486 (1999).

When the evidence, including the defendant's own admissions, clearly established that the defendant repeatedly fired a weapon with the intention of scaring the victims, even if the defendant did not intend to hit them, the evidence established aggravated assault, and there was no error in the failure to give an instruction on reckless conduct. Huguley v. State, 242 Ga. App. 645, 529 S.E.2d 915 (2000).

It was not error to refuse to give the requested charge on reckless conduct as a lesser included offense where there was no evidence that defendant was simply negligently handling the knife when swinging it at the victims, using profane language, and telling them they had "messed up" while lunging at them with the knife. Merneigh v. State, 242 Ga. App. 735, 531 S.E.2d 152 (2000).

Defendant's requested charge of reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of aggravated assault was properly denied since the only testimony was that in pointing the pistol at the victim, the defendant did so intentionally, not "consciously dis-regarding a substantial and unjustifiable risk that his act or omission would cause harm or endanger victim's safety." Stobart v. State, 272 Ga. 608, 533 S.E.2d 379 (2000).

Because defendant failed to make a written request for a lesser included offense instruction on reckless conduct in a trial for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), there could be no error found on appeal for the trial court's failure to give such an instruction. Barber v. State, 273 Ga. App. 129, 614 S.E.2d 105 (2005).

Trial court did not err in refusing a request to instruct the jury on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60, in a criminal trial on a charge of aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), as the essential elements of the assault charge were all shown by the evidence; the defendant's firing of a gun into a parking lot that was crowded, and in the direction of the victim, was not criminal negligence that would have supported a reckless conduct charge, but rather, was deemed intentional. Thompson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 323, 626 S.E.2d 825 (2006).

After threatening to kill the victim, because the defendant's actions in continuing to drive away, as the victim was caught on the outside of the car screaming, supported the crime of either aggravated or simple assault, and not simple negligence, the trial court did not err in rejecting a reckless conduct instruction. Martin v. State, 283 Ga. App. 652, 642 S.E.2d 340 (2007).

Because the evidence showed that defendant committed an assault with intent and a deadly weapon, the crime constituted an aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2); therefore, a charge on the lesser-included offenses of simple assault or reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-20(a)(2) and 16-5-60(b) was not warranted. Paul v. State, 296 Ga. App. 6, 673 S.E.2d 551 (2009).

Defendant admitted firing a gun to frighten the victims, but asserted the affirmative defense of justification. The defendant was not entitled to a jury charge on reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of the charged offense of aggravated assault as the evidence established either the commission of an aggravated assault, or no offense at all. Hudson v. State, 296 Ga. App. 692, 675 S.E.2d 578 (2009).

Merger with aggravated battery. — Appellate court rejected the defendant's claim that insufficient evidence with respect to the requisite criminal intent failed to support an aggravated battery conviction as the jury could infer intent by: (1) the defendant's act of twisting the victim's head all the way around to the left and slamming it towards the car floorboard; (2) the fact that the incident occurred during a heated argument that extended over several hours and had previously resulted in physical violence towards the victim; (3) the defendant's refusal to take the victim to a hospital or call the victim's mother after the incident; (4) the defendant's subsequent flight from law enforcement; and (5) evidence of two prior similar transactions admitted against the defendant involving assaults on a previous girlfriend. But, while the aforementioned was also sufficient to support the defendant's reckless conduct conviction, such merged as a matter of fact into the aggravated battery conviction, as the state conceded at the beginning of sentencing, and the trial court erred in failing to so find. Collins v. State, 283 Ga. App. 188, 641 S.E.2d 208 (2007).

No merger of nonhomicide counts. — Defendant's convictions of involuntary manslaughter while in the commission of a simple battery, aggravated assault, aggravated battery, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct were not mutually exclusive, and the trial court did not err in not merging the nonhomicide counts upon sentencing. Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Reckless driving and reckless conduct do not merge. — Trial court did not err by failing to merge the crimes of reckless driving, O.C.G.A. § 40-6-390, and reckless conduct, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60, for punishment because the two offenses did not merge for sentencing when §§ 40-6-390 and 16-5-60 each had a provision that required proof of a fact that the other did not, and to establish a violation of § 40-6-390, the state only had to prove that the defendant drove the car in a manner exhibiting reckless disregard for the safety of persons or property; reckless conduct requires proof of harm or an actual threat of harm to the bodily safety of another person and does not require that the crime be committed while driving a motor vehicle, but reckless driving does not require that there be an injured or threatened party and instead merely requires that the state prove a general disregard for the safety of persons or property while driving a motor vehicle. Howard v. State, 301 Ga. App. 230, 687 S.E.2d 257 (2009).

Aggravated assault. — Because defendant's pointing of a firearm placed the victims in reasonable apprehension of immediate violent injury, the felony of aggravated assault, rather than the misdemeanor of intentionally and without legal justification pointing or aiming a gun or pistol at another, whether the gun or pistol was loaded or unloaded, had occurred. Savage v. State, 274 Ga. 692, 558 S.E.2d 701 (2002).

Aggravated assault on emergency medical technician. — Evidence that a defendant hit an emergency medical technician who was working on a patient, screamed obscenities, and pulled a pocket knife out and opened the knife was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and interference with emergency medical professionals. Because defense witnesses testified that the defendant did not threaten the technician with a knife, there was no evidence to support a charge on reckless conduct in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Prince v. State, 306 Ga. App. 604, 702 S.E.2d 785 (2010).

Since defendant knew that defendant was HIV-infected, evidence that defendant attempted to bite a police officer was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for reckless endangerment. Burk v. State, 223 Ga. App. 530, 478 S.E.2d 416 (1996).

As the defendant testified of knowing the defendant was HIV-positive long before the defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim, and witnesses corrobororated the victim's testimony that the defendant denied being HIV-positive, the defendant was properly convicted of violating O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(c)(1), even though the defendant and two other witnesses testified that the defendant had disclosed the defendant's infection to the victim. Ginn v. State, 293 Ga. App. 757, 667 S.E.2d 712 (2008).

Sequential charges on aggravated assault and reckless battery were proper since the jury's finding that defendant committed aggravated assault required a finding of an intentional infliction of injury, which precluded the element of criminal negligence in reckless conduct. Sheats v. State, 210 Ga. App. 622, 436 S.E.2d 796 (1993).

Reckless conduct charge was not warranted in a prosecution for aggravated assault because there was no evidence that defendant's brandishing of a knife in the presence of named victims was only criminally negligent rather than intentional. Marion v. State, 224 Ga. App. 413, 480 S.E.2d 869 (1997).

Reckless conduct conviction no bar to aggressive driving conviction. — Defendant's previous conviction for reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60 did not bar later conviction for aggressive driving under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-397 when both convictions arose out of the same incident, and since conviction for aggressive driving did not require proof of the fact that defendant endangered the bodily safety of the other driver and the other driver's family, while the reckless conduct conviction did not require proof of fact that defendant drove with intent to annoy, harass, intimidate, and injure another; thus, each crime required proof of a fact that the other did not, so neither offense was included in the other so as to violate the substantive bar against double jeopardy of O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7. Winn v. State, 291 Ga. App. 16, 660 S.E.2d 883 (2008).

Reckless conduct charge was not warranted in a prosecution for cruelty to children in the first degree since the evidence showed that defendant intended the actions and intended to cause pain to the victim. Allen v. State, 247 Ga. App. 10, 543 S.E.2d 45 (2000).

Driving recklessly through residential neighborhood. — Conviction was upheld where the evidence authorized the jury to conclude that by driving recklessly through a residential neighborhood the appellant consciously disregarded the substantial risk that appellant's conduct would endanger the safety of another. Horowitz v. State, 243 Ga. 441, 254 S.E.2d 828 (1979).

Driving recklessly near road construction site. — When it was shown that defendant drove on the wrong side of the road, extremely close to where defendant knew county employees were working in a ditch, and the side mirror of defendant's truck struck and seriously injured one of the workers, the evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of violating O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60. Cowan v. State, 218 Ga. App. 422, 461 S.E.2d 587 (1995).

Factors leading to charge. — There was no harmful error in a police officer's recitation of the factors that led the officer to initiate a reckless conduct charge against the defendant; the defendant's theory that the defendant had no legal duty to the defendant's nine-month-old and three-year-old children since the defendant did not live with them, despite being their parent, was rejected. Baker v. State, 280 Ga. 822, 633 S.E.2d 541 (2006).

Evidence sufficient to convict. — Evidence sufficient to enable rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond reasonable doubt of theft by taking and recklessly causing harm to or endangering bodily safety of another person. Lucas v. State, 183 Ga. App. 637, 360 S.E.2d 12 (1987).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's reckless conduct conviction, where defendant drove a truck toward the victim and slammed on the brakes, stopping so close to the victim that the victim had to jump out of the way for fear that the defendant would not stop. Wofford v. State, 196 Ga. App. 284, 395 S.E.2d 630 (1990).

Evidence of firing a .357 handgun near a person's head, while standing inside a building gripping the person's arm, was sufficient to authorize conviction. McDonald v. State, 224 Ga. App. 411, 481 S.E.2d 1 (1997).

Evidence was sufficient to show reckless conduct where the mother allowed her

3-year-old daughter to wander unsupervised for over an hour before the mother began looking for her, after which the daughter was found unconscious in a neighbor's yard, having been attacked by an animal and losing between 20 and 40 percent of her blood. Reyes v. State, 242 Ga. App. 170, 529 S.E.2d 192 (2000).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, because there was sufficient evidence to support the convictions for aggravated assault and reckless conduct, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2) and 16-5-60(b), respectively; defendant and the codefendants were involved in a physical altercation with two restaurant patrons, and a codefendant's testimony that defendant retrieved a gun and shot the victim was sufficiently repeated by the testimony of other witnesses, who also connected defendant with the shooting pursuant to the corroboration requirement in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Baker v. State, 273 Ga. App. 297, 614 S.E.2d 904 (2005).

Evidence supported the defendant's conviction for misdemeanor reckless endangerment as the act of leaving the defendant's nine-month old and three-year-old children unsupervised on the upper floor of a two-story home near an unprotected downward flight of stairs was a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would exercise and was in conscious disregard of a substantial and unjustifiable risk such that the act endangered the children's safety. Baker v. State, 280 Ga. 822, 633 S.E.2d 541 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for involuntary manslaughter as there was ample evidence that the state disproved the defendant's accident defense since: (1) the defendant was hurt by the fact that the defendant's significant other had begun a relationship with the victim; (2) the defendant threatened to blow the victim's and the significant other's heads off a few weeks before the shooting; (3) defendant testified that the victim was standing in the defendant's way, that the defendant was searching for a cell phone, and that the defendant pulled out several items, including a gun;

(4) a door hit the defendant in the back, causing the gun to discharge into the victim's chest; (5) the defendant testified that the defendant was careless with the gun; and (6) a detective testified that after the detective Mirandized the defendant, the defendant stated that "(the defendant) put a shell in every chamber" and that "(the defendant) fired every shell, every round." Noble v. State, 282 Ga. App. 311, 638 S.E.2d 444 (2006).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault, aggravated battery, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct in connection with the death of the 16-month-old victim after: the defendant repeatedly fed the victim tomatoes despite the victim's allergic reactions to the tomatoes; two days before the victim's fatal injuries, the victim had numerous bruises, a black eye, and a split bottom lip; while the victim was in the hospital for the fatal injuries, the defendant repeatedly asked a babysitter to persuade the defendant's five-year-old child to say that the child had taken the victim out of the bathtub; the defendant asked medical personnel whether it could be proven that the victim was shaken; and medical evidence showed that the victim's death was consistent with violent shaking by a person of adult strength. Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Because sufficient direct and circumstantial evidence showed that the defendant, a prior felon wielding a weapon, engaged in a fight with the two victims, fatally wounding one and shooting the other in the arm, and thereafter fled from police, the defendant's convictions for involuntary manslaughter, reckless conduct, fleeing and eluding, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon were upheld on appeal. Alvin v. State, 287 Ga. App. 350, 651 S.E.2d 489 (2007).

Intoxication as reckless conduct. — Reckless conduct was established where it was shown that codefendants, who had severe drinking problems in the past, became intoxicated and, in violation of order requiring them to get child care when they intended to drink, placed baby between them in bed, resulting in the baby's death. Bohannon v. State, 230 Ga. App. 829, 498 S.E.2d 316 (1998).

Evidence insufficient. — Defendant's conviction was reversed, where defendant's conduct in accusing the victim of theft and searching the victim did not cause bodily harm to or endanger the bodily safety of the victim, and defendant's action in running over the victim's foot was either an accident or a deliberate attack and did not constitute gross negligence so as to bring the incident within the scope of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Miller v. State, 200 Ga. App. 57, 406 S.E.2d 565 (1991).

Reckless conduct charge warranted in arson prosecution. — In a prosecution for felony murder and arson, the trial court erred in refusing to grant defendant's charge on reckless conduct where despite defendant's concession that defendant intentionally set the fire, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that the defendant set the fire without intending to burn down the motel building. Reinhardt v. State, 263 Ga. 113, 428 S.E.2d 333 (1993), overruled on other grounds, Vergara v. State, 283 Ga. 175, 657 S.E.2d 863 (2008).

Reckless conduct charge not warranted as lesser-included offense in felony obstruction prosecution. — Given that the state adduced sufficient evidence establishing all the elements of the offense of felony obstruction, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-10-24, the trial court did not err in refusing the defendant's request to charge on the lesser-included offense of reckless conduct. Helton v. State, 284 Ga. App. 777, 644 S.E.2d 896 (2007).

Acquittal of defendant of aggravated assault charges did not make evidence of reckless conduct any less sufficient; furthermore, even if the acquittal was inconsistent with the conviction, the inconsistency could not be used as an avenue to challenge the conviction because the "inconsistent-verdict rule" has been abolished. Kolokouris v. State, 271 Ga. 597, 523 S.E.2d 311 (1999).

Jury instructions. — Trial court did not err in refusing to charge the jury on reckless conduct in defendant's trial for felony murder where the record was devoid of evidence of reckless conduct. Salyers v. State, 276 Ga. 568, 580 S.E.2d 240 (2003).

Requested jury instruction on involuntary manslaughter was properly denied because defendant's conduct in producing and displaying a loaded revolver in close proximity to defendant's victim, who allegedly was under the influence of drugs, and the victim's young child, with defendant's finger inside the trigger guard while defendant was watching the road and trying to drive, constituted the crime of crime of reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Reed v. State, 279 Ga. 81, 610 S.E.2d 35 (2005).

Trial court's jury instructions in defendant's criminal trial on multiple charges arising out of a domestic dispute were proper, as: (1) there was no requirement that the jury be instructed on the element of assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20) in order to be properly instructed on the crime of aggravated assault (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21); (2) the methods of committing an aggravated battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), were properly defined based on the methods asserted in the indictment; (3) there was no support for a requested charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b); and (4) there was no possibility of a lesser included conviction for false imprisonment (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41), such that instruction only on the indicted offense of kidnapping (O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40) was proper. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 99, 619 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

In the defendant's prosecution for two counts of aggravated assault, the trial court properly refused to charge the jury on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60 because no evidence was presented that the defendant acted negligently rather than intentionally when the defendant fired a gun after a confrontation with the victims. Cain v. State, 288 Ga. App. 535, 654 S.E.2d 456 (2007).

In the defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a), the trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury on reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b) because the latter was not a lesser-included offense of the former; while both offenses proscribed the same general conduct, i.e., subjecting another to actual injury or the possibility of injury, aggravated assault required proof that the forbidden act was intentional, while in the case of reckless conduct, the forbidden act is the product of criminal negligence. Chambers v. State, No. A11A0034, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 272 (Mar. 24, 2011).

Conviction constituted a crime of moral turpitude and removal of alien appropriate. — Alien's conviction for criminal reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b) constituted a crime involving moral turpitude, and thus the alien was properly found removable under 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(i); such decision was not subject to judicial review under 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(C) since the alien raised no constitutional claims or questions of law. Keungne v. United States AG, 561 F.3d 1281 (11th Cir. 2009).

16-5-61. Hazing.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term:

(1) "Haze" means to subject a student to an activity which endangers or is likely to endanger the physical health of a student, regardless of a student's willingness to participate in such activity.

(2) "School" means any school, college, or university in this state.

(3) "School organization" means any club, society, fraternity, sorority, or a group living together which has students as its principal members.

(4) "Student" means any person enrolled in a school in this state.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to haze any student in connection with or as a condition or precondition of gaining acceptance, membership, office, or other status in a school organization.

(c) Any person who violates this Code section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. (Code 1981, § 16-5-61, enacted by Ga. L. 1988, p. 694, § 1; Ga. L. 1990, p. 1690, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Ministerial duty of school officials. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-61 did not transform the discretionary policing functions of school officials into a ministerial duty to

ARTICLE 5

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN

16-5-70. Cruelty to children.

(a) A parent, guardian, or other person supervising the welfare of or having immediate charge or custody of a child under the age of 18 commits the offense of cruelty to children in the first degree when such person willfully deprives the child of necessary sustenance to the extent that the child's health or well-being is jeopardized.

(b) Any person commits the offense of cruelty to children in the first degree when such person maliciously causes a child under the age of 18 cruel or excessive physical or mental pain.

(c) Any person commits the offense of cruelty to children in the second degree when such person with criminal negligence causes a child under the age of 18 cruel or excessive physical or mental pain.

(d) Any person commits the offense of cruelty to children in the third degree when:

(1) Such person, who is the primary aggressor, intentionally allows a child under the age of 18 to witness the commission of a forcible felony, battery, or family violence battery; or

(2) Such person, who is the primary aggressor, having knowledge that a child under the age of 18 is present and sees or hears the act, commits a forcible felony, battery, or family violence battery.

(e)(1) A person convicted of the offense of cruelty to children in the first degree as provided in this Code section shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years.

(2) A person convicted of the offense of cruelty to children in the second degree shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years.

(3) A person convicted of the offense of cruelty to children in the third degree shall be punished as for a misdemeanor upon the first or second conviction. Upon conviction of a third or subsequent offense of cruelty to children in the third degree, the defendant shall be guilty of a felony and shall be sentenced to a fine not less than $1,000.00 nor more than $5,000.00 or imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than three years or shall be sentenced to both fine and imprisonment. ## JUDICIAL DECISIONS

MERGER WITH OTHER OFFENSES

JURY ISSUES AND INSTRUCTIONS

General Consideration

Former Code 1933, § 26-2801 was constitutional. Williams v. State, 144 Ga. App. 130, 240 S.E.2d 890 (1977) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2801 was not void for vagueness. Davis v. State, 234 Ga. 730, 218 S.E.2d 20 (1975); Cabv. State, 249 Ga. 32, 287 S.E.2d 200 (1982); Morrow v. State, 272 Ga. 691, 532 S.E.2d 78 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 944, 121 S. Ct. 1408, 149 L. Ed. 2d 350 (2001) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70).

Statute is not void for overbreadth. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 is clearly not void for overbreadth. It is not designed to reach legitimate child-rearing functions, nor could it reasonably be so construed. Cabv. State, 249 Ga. 32, 287 S.E.2d 200 (1982).

Evidence of defendant's silence. — Because defendant's cross-examination impeached the investigator, inferring the investigator was negligent or underhanded in failing to take notes during defendant's interview on assault charges and charges of child cruelty under 18 U.S.C. §§ 7 and 13, and O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70, and the government's redirect rehabilitated the investigator by clarifying that the investigator had acted in accordance with the investigator's department's policy and that the failure to take notes was due to defendant ending the interview, no due process violation occurred. United States v. Francisco-Gutierrez, No. 06-14849, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 22596 (11th Cir. Sept. 21, 2007) (Unpublished).

Amendment to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 did not decriminalize conduct. — An amendment to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 did not decriminalize the conduct with which the defendants were charged. The result of the amendment was simply to move the language formerly found in § 16-5-70(c) to § 16-5-70(d) and to change the conduct described therein from second-degree to third-degree child cruelty. Hafez v. State, 290 Ga. App. 800, 660 S.E.2d 787 (2008).

No civil cause of action created by violation of statute. — Because O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 is a criminal statute, and the violation of a penal statute does not automatically give rise to a civil cause of action on the part of one who was injured thereby, the court declined to find such a private right of action after the plaintiff failed to direct the court to an instance in which the statute had been used to create such a private cause of action. Chisolm v. Tippens, 289 Ga. App. 757, 658 S.E.2d 147 (2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 576, 172 L.Ed.2d 431 (2008).

Meaning of "sustenance" as used in section. — "Sustenance" is that which supports life — food, victuals, provisions. O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70, in use of word "sustenance," means that necessary food and drink which is sufficient to support life and maintain health. Caby v. State, 249 Ga. 32, 287 S.E.2d 200 (1982); State v. Lawrence, 262 Ga. 714, 425 S.E.2d 280 (1993).

Indictment not required to allege party status. — Indictment's failure to allege that a defendant was a party to aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and first-degree child cruelty under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a), 16-5-24(a), and 16-5-70(b) did not require a showing that the defendant was the principal perpetrator under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-21; the defendant's status as a party to the crimes was not an essential element used to increase the sentences for the crimes, and the trial court did not err in instructing the jury that the defendant could be convicted either as the principal perpetrator of the crimes or as a party thereto. Hill v. State, 282 Ga. App. 743, 639 S.E.2d 637 (2006).

Sufficiency of indictment. — Indictment for second-degree cruelty to children which stated that the defendant failed to reasonably supervise and reasonably watch the defendant's children, who drowned, was good against a general demurrer; although the failure to reasonably supervise or watch one's children might not in and of itself constitute criminal negligence, such dereliction certainly could rise to that level depending on the circumstances. Kain v. State, 287 Ga. App. 45, 650 S.E.2d 749 (2007), cert. dismissed, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 125 (Ga. 2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on the ground that there was insufficient evidence that the crimes for which the defendant was charged, aggravated assault, making terroristic threats, and cruelty to children in the third degree, were committed on the date alleged in the indictment because there was sufficient evidence to support the allegations of the indictment; the exact date of the crimes was not a material allegation of the indictment because the exact date was not an essential element with respect to any of the charged offenses, and the date of the crimes proved at trial was prior to the return of the indictment and within the limitation periods for the crimes. Coats v. State, 303 Ga. App. 818, 695 S.E.2d 285 (2010).

Malice defined. — Malice, in the legal sense, imports the absence of all elements of justification, excuse and the presence of an actual intent to cause the particular harm produced, or the wanton or wilful doing of an act with an awareness of a plain and strong likelihood that such harm may result. Brewton v. State, 216 Ga. App. 346, 454 S.E.2d 558 (1995), rev'd on other grounds, 266 Ga. 160, 465 S.E.2d 668 (1996).

"Malice," for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70, imports the absence of all elements of justification or excuse and the presence of an actual intent to cause the particular harm produced, or the wanton and willful doing of an act with an awareness of a plain and strong likelihood that such harm may result. Hill v. State, 243 Ga. App. 614, 533 S.E.2d 779 (2000).

Term "maliciously" is of such obvious significance and common understanding as to need no definition by the judiciary. Gaddis v. State, 176 Ga. App. 526, 336 S.E.2d 587 (1985).

Elements of proof. — To prove the crime of cruelty to children in the first degree, there must be evidence establishing the age of the children, that the children suffered physical or mental pain, that the pain was cruel or excessive, that the defendant caused the pain, and that the defendant acted maliciously in so doing. Sims v. State, 234 Ga. App. 678, 507 S.E.2d 845 (1998).

Actual knowledge of an injury is not a required element of malice under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70. Barry v. State, 214 Ga. App. 418, 448 S.E.2d 243 (1994).

"Unreasonable" as element of "cruel or excessive" pain. — Implicit in the statutory definition of "cruel or excessive" pain is the element of unreasonableness. Boyce v. State, 198 Ga. App. 371, 401 S.E.2d 578 (1991), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. State, 277 Ga. 195, 586 S.E.2d 669 (2003).

Stepfather clearly falls within scope of former Code 1933, § 26-2801. See Morrow v. State, 155 Ga. App. 574, 271 S.E.2d 707 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70).

Father of illegitimate child within scope of section. — Evidence supported the conviction of a father for cruelty to his four-year-old illegitimate son by depriving him of necessary sustenance. Strickland v. State, 211 Ga. App. 48, 438 S.E.2d 161 (1993).

Permissible inference from evidence that victim was battered child.

— Evidence that victim was a battered child, coupled with proof that child was in sole custody of parent, may well permit jury to infer not only that child's injuries were not accidental, but that they occurred deliberately, at hands of parent. United States v. Bowers, 660 F.2d 527 (5th Cir. 1981).

Defendant's intent is a question of fact to be determined upon consideration of "words, conduct, demeanor, motive, and all other circumstances connected with the act for which the accused is prosecuted" under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-6, and the jury's finding is not to be set aside unless clearly erroneous. McGahee v. State, 170 Ga. App. 227, 316 S.E.2d 832 (1984).

Expert testimony about comparable child beatings relevant. — Testimony of witnesses from the Division of Family and Children's Services and the county about comparable child beatings over the course of their experience was relevant to the issue of excessive physical pain, an essential element of the crime of cruelty to children, since the witnesses were qualified as experts in this field and their testimony concerned the physical extent of the beatings at issue. Cherry v. State, 174 Ga. App. 145, 329 S.E.2d 580 (1985).

Alford plea to cruelty to children required registration as sexual offender. — As a defendant entered an Alford plea to two counts of cruelty to children by committing the acts alleged in the indictment, defendant acknowledged touching the breast and buttocks of the 14-year-old victim and although the defendant did not plead guilty to a sexual offense, the defendant pled guilty to conduct which, by its nature, was a sexual offense against a minor. Therefore, the defendant was required to register as a sexual offender under O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12(e)(1). Morrell v. State, 297 Ga. App. 592, 677 S.E.2d 771 (2009).

Conviction used to enhance federal sentence. — In a case in which defendant was sentenced to 18 months of imprisonment for violating 8 U.S.C. § 1326(a) and (b)(2), the district court did not err in applying the eight-level aggravated-felony enhancement in U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual (USSG) § 2L1.2(b)(1)(C), rather than the four-level other felony enhancement in USSG § 2L1.2(b)(1)(D), based on defendant's prior state guilty plea to three counts of cruelty to children in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70. The plea documents showed that defendant pled to maliciously causing cruel and excessive mental pain by, among other things, blatant use of force: threatening to hit a child. United States v. Castillo-Villagomez, No. 08-13290, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 22707 (11th Cir. Nov. 4, 2008) (Unpublished).

Improper sentence. — Despite enumerating such as error, a five-year concurrent sentence imposed against the defendant upon a conviction of misdemeanor cruelty to children was reversed, and the case was remanded for resentencing, as it was not authorized by law. Price v. State, 281 Ga. App. 844, 637 S.E.2d 468 (2006).

Application

Whipping of child. — Cruelty to children applies where a girl of 14 years of age was whipped for several hours, accompanied by abusive language. Stone v. State, 1 Ga. App. 292, 57 S.E. 992 (1907).

Sufficient evidence of malice. — Father acted maliciously in causing his children to suffer cruel or excessive mental pain when he repeatedly stabbed the children's mother in their presence, transported the wounded mother and children to a deserted place, and abandoned them there. Sims v. State, 234 Ga. App. 678, 507 S.E.2d 845 (1998).

Sufficient evidence supported the conviction of cruelty to children in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) because defendant did not obtain treatment for the child, who had a broken arm and two broken legs for three days; defendant knew both the cause of the child's injuries, abuse at the hands of defendant's love interest, and the severity of those injuries, as the child cried when the child's legs were touched, and this was sufficient to support a finding of willful and wanton inaction. Withrow v. State, 275 Ga. App. 110, 619 S.E.2d 714 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions against defendants, a parent and the parent's love interest, for cruelty to children, in violation of O.C.G.A.

§ 16-5-70(b), and to support denial of the parent's acquittal motion under O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, where they failed to seek medical care for the parent's 15-month-old child for over a week because they feared the child's removal from their care by a social services agency after the child was seriously burned by scalding bathwater; although the parent informed the parent's love interest that they should not seek medical attention, the parent's love interest exerted malice where the parent's love interest acceded to that demand despite being aware that the child needed medical assistance. Gore v. State, 277 Ga. App. 635, 627 S.E.2d 198 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) arising out of the repeated rape of the defendant's 11-year-old child was supported by sufficient evidence that the child pleaded for help during the period specified in the indictment; from the testimony of a neighbor, the jury could have inferred that the child screamed during the rapes, that the defendant was at home at the time and failed to intervene, that the defendant told the child that it would be over, and that these events took place after the rapist was released from jail and before the rapist's arrest, which corresponded with the time period specified in the indictment. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

There was sufficient evidence of malice to convict defendant of first degree cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-72(b) because the minor daughter of defendant's girlfriend had an untreated second degree burn on her leg, as well as numerous bruises on her body, and defendant failed to obtain medical care for the child. Garrett v. State, 300 Ga. App. 391, 685 S.E.2d 355 (2009).

Murder of mother in front of child. — Evidence supported defendant's conviction of cruelty to a child because defendant pointed a loaded revolver at the victim and pulled the trigger twice, while driving, fatally wounding the victim; the victim's two-year-old child was also in the car, defendant did not call 9-1-1 from defendant's cell phone, drove past a hospital, and the revolver had a hammer block, preventing the revolver from firing unless pressure was applied to the trigger. Reed v. State, 279 Ga. 81, 610 S.E.2d 35 (2005).

Murder of grandparent in front of child. — Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for cruelty to children because, after the entry of a family violence protective order, the defendant purchased a knife with a large blade, followed the victim, who was the defendant's estranged spouse, and attempted to talk with the victim, appeared at a grocery store where the victim was, yelled at the victim, and stabbed and slashed the victim multiple times, resulting in the victim's death in the presence of the victim's grandson. Weaver v. State, 288 Ga. 540, 705 S.E.2d 627 (2011).

Insufficient evidence of malice. — Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict on the charge of cruelty to children, as there was insufficient evidence to support the finding that defendant acted with the malicious intent to cause the minor victim mental pain when defendant had a sexual relationship with the victim; the charge required more than the fact of a sexual relationship with victim. Hightower v. State, 256 Ga. App. 793, 570 S.E.2d 22 (2002).

Conviction required reversal because evidence was improperly excluded. — During a trial for felony murder while in the commission of cruelty to a child arising from the death of a defendant's child from brain trauma sustained while the child was in the defendant's care, the defendant was improperly prevented from cross-examining a person who was in the apartment at the time about the person's history of inappropriate behavior toward the person's own child, including allegations of child abuse, because it was a crucial element of the defense that the person was a likely suspect, and, under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, the circumstantial evidence did not exclude the reasonable hypothesis that the person was the likely culprit; the defendant's conviction required reversal because it was not highly improbable that the jury's verdict would have been different if the evidence had been admitted, and the error therefore could not be considered harmless. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. 373, 637 S.E.2d 652 (2006).

Oxygen is not a "necessary sustenance" within the context of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(a). State v. Lawrence, 262 Ga. 714, 425 S.E.2d 280 (1993).

Blaming another child for injuries. — After defendant shot defendant's two-year old child and blamed the shooting on defendant's four-year-old child, blaming the child for such a violent act against a loved one which resulted in the child manifesting observable psychological pathology could have authorized the jury to conclude that defendant inflicted on the child mental pain which was unreasonably cruel or excessive. Boyce v. State, 198 Ga. App. 371, 401 S.E.2d 578 (1991), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. State, 277 Ga. 195, 586 S.E.2d 669 (2003).

Cruel and excessive mental pain. — Jury was entitled to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's two children suffered "cruel and excessive mental pain" when they watched their parent murder another sibling and that the defendant maliciously caused this pain by wantonly and wilfully shooting the defendant's child with the awareness of a plain and strong likelihood that such harm would result. Hall v. State, 261 Ga. 778, 415 S.E.2d 158 (1991), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1205, 112 S. Ct. 2993, 120 L. Ed. 2d 870 (1992).

Since the cruelty to children charge which was brought against the defendant was not based on battery and reckless conduct counts with which the defendant was also charged, but on the basis of the defendant's causing the defendant's small child "cruel and excessive mental pain by hitting, beating, and striking" the child's mother, the various charges did not contain the same elements, and an acquittal of the battery and reckless conduct charges did not require an acquittal on the child cruelty charge. Turney v. State, 235 Ga. App. 431, 509 S.E.2d 670 (1998).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for cruelty to children by proof defendant caused excessive mental pain by raping defendant's own daughter. Alford v. State, 243 Ga. App. 212, 534 S.E.2d 81 (2000).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's cruelty to children conviction as: (1)

a determination of what constituted excessive mental pain need not depend solely on the victim's testimony; and (2) testimony from the victim's parent, grandparent, a detective, and a forensic interviewer testified about the incident, that the victim became upset when the victim talked about it, and was undergoing counseling to help cope with it. Keith v. State, 279 Ga. App. 819, 632 S.E.2d 669 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) arising out of the repeated rape of the defendant's 11-year-old child was supported by sufficient evidence that the child suffered from excessive mental pain caused, at least in part, by the defendant's refusal to heed the child's outcries; from the testimony of a neighbor, the jury could have found that the child screamed during the rapes, that the defendant was at home at the time and did not intervene, and that the defendant told the child that it would be over. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Because there was testimony that a 14-month-old child died from multiple blunt force traumas while in the defendant's care, there was no merit to the defendant's contention that the evidence was insufficient to establish the pain element of cruelty to children; evidence of a child's age, the extent of injuries, the nature of the assault to which the child was subjected, and the force with which the child was struck was sufficient evidence from which a jury could conclude whether the defendant caused the child cruel or excessive physical pain. Moore v. State, 283 Ga. 151, 656 S.E.2d 796 (2008).

Trial court did not err in admitting the victim's testimony that just prior to trial, the victim had attempted suicide due to the stress caused by the molestation because this evidence was proper to show the excessive physical or mental pain needed for a cruelty-to-children conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b); the defendant's complaint that too much time had passed since the incidents to allow a jury to infer that the attempted suicide resulted from stress caused by the incidents was a matter for the jury to resolve.

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for cruelty to children because, after the defendant inappropriately touched the defendant's 16-year-old daughter in bed, the daughter fled to her boyfriend's house where she "couldn't talk" and was "shaking" and "hysterically crying." She had not spoken to her father since the incident, and for months after the incident, and when the daughter began speaking about the incident (which was rare), she began shaking. Cline v. State, 300 Ga. App. 615, 685 S.E.2d 501 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support a jury's finding that a defendant's acts of molestation caused the child victims, ages 7 and 9, cruel and excessive mental pain for purposes of the child cruelty statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), given evidence of school problems and aggressiveness and one victim's testimony that the victim was sad and uncomfortable. Bunn v. State, 307 Ga. App. 381, 705 S.E.2d 180 (2010).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of cruelty to children in the first degree, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), because a jury could infer from the evidence that the defendant maliciously intended to cause the victim cruel and excessive mental pain; the evidence showed that the defendant hid in the girls' bathroom with a knife, duct tape, and a camera, laid in wait for a young lady to come in, and then held the 12-year-old victim in a bathroom stall against her will as she screamed continuously for help, during which time the defendant tried to tear off a piece of duct tape and held a knife. Kirt v. State, No. A10A1933, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 247 (Mar. 22, 2011).

Cruel or excessive physical or mental pain. — Evidence was sufficient to allow the jury to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant caused the child cruel or excessive physical or mental pain by squeezing the child and causing serious abdominal injuries to the child and by failing to seek medical treatment for the fractured bones in both arms suffered by the child while the defendant and the child's parent were jointly caring for the child. Sabbs v. State, 248 Ga. App. 114, 545 S.E.2d 671 (2001).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction of cruelty to children in the first degree under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) as the victim testified that the victim saw the defendant shake their two-year-old child in a rage, that the victim was attacked by the defendant and two companions in the child's presence, and that the child, after the incident, just stared and looked into space. Souder v. State, 281 Ga. App. 339, 636 S.E.2d 68 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0113, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 97 (Ga. 2007).

After the defendant's 11-month-old child was seriously burned by extremely hot bath water, the defendant delayed calling for emergency medical assistance for over an hour; this evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find that the defendant maliciously caused the child cruel and excessive physical and mental pain by failing to promptly provide medical attention and treatment to the child. Williams v. State, 285 Ga. App. 628, 647 S.E.2d 324 (2007).

Defendant's argument that there was no evidence that the child victim suffered cruel or excessive physical or mental pain was rejected as: (1) a doctor testified that the victim's injuries were caused by "something with a lot of force that sheared at the same time"; (2) the victim had a bruised labia majora and a cut to the hymen that looked as if the cut had been bleeding at one time; (3) due to the defendant's warning, the child became visibly upset upon telling the mother about the charged incidents; and (4) in the days before the victim reluctantly told the mother about the abuse, the child was nervous and was not sleeping or eating well. Cortez v. State, 286 Ga. App. 170, 648 S.E.2d 488 (2007).

Denial of necessary and appropriate medical care can, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), constitute cruelty to a child when it causes the child "cruel or excessive physical or mental pain" but it does not constitute a denial of "sustenance," which is the offense proscribed in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(a). Howell v. State, 180 Ga. App. 749, 350 S.E.2d 473 (1986).

Evidence of malice necessary to sustain conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), the cruelty to children statute, was shown where evidence established that the babysitter made a deliberate decision not to seek immediate medical care while knowing the infant needed it but instead spent approximately 90 minutes trying to contact the infant's parents to inform them of infant's grave medical condition. Hoang v. State, 250 Ga. App. 403, 551 S.E.2d 813 (2001).

Sufficient evidence existed to uphold defendant's conviction for cruelty to children and felony murder predicated on that offense with regard to the birth of a premature infant by the defendant's 10-year-old step-daughter as a result of sexual molestation of the step-daughter by the defendant, which infant, after receiving no medical attention, died within a few hours of birth; failure to seek timely medical care for a child may form the basis for the offense of cruelty to children and the jury could reasonably have inferred that, as a result of the defendant's refusal to allow the baby to seek medical care, the baby suffocated to death and suffered cruel and excessive pain. Grayer v. State, 282 Ga. 224, 647 S.E.2d 264 (2007).

Although the evidence was sufficient to convict of first degree cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-72(b) because the minor daughter of defendant's girlfriend had an untreated second degree burn on her leg, as well as numerous bruises on her body, and contrary to the defense, an examining doctor testified that the burn was not caused by pouring hot bath water on the child, the failure of defendant to obtain medical care for the child also showed child cruelty. Garrett v. State, 300 Ga. App. 391, 685 S.E.2d 355 (2009).

Failure to procure medical treatment. — Being afraid because one might get in trouble is neither justification nor excuse for refusing to obtain medical care for one's injured child. Hill v. State, 243 Ga. App. 614, 533 S.E.2d 779 (2000).

Evidence that defendant kicked and slammed the defendant's love interest's infant child, breaking an arm and legs, and that, although defendant knew the severity of the child's injuries, failed to procure medical treatment for the child on the day of the incident and for the following three days was sufficient to enable a jury to conclude that defendant was guilty of the offense of cruelty to children in the first degree, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b). McKee v. State, 275 Ga. App. 646, 621 S.E.2d 611 (2005).

Jury was authorized to conclude that the defendant participated in a pattern of child cruelty over the course of several months, and aided and abetted in the malicious acts that caused the death of the child victim where, among other things, the defendant, the father of the child, regularly beat the child with a belt, the defendant was aware that the child had experienced seizures before the night in question, the defendant observed the child in extreme distress that night but offered no assistance, and the defendant realized that the child's condition had worsened during the night but still took no action to procure medical care until the next morning. Delacruz v. State, 280 Ga. 392, 627 S.E.2d 579 (2006).

Denying child one day's special formula. — State failed to establish that a denial of one day's special formula was sufficient to "jeopardize" the child's health, where there was no evidence that the child was denied any milk at any time or that the child's health had been jeopardized by the defendant's failure to utilize a prescribed special formula. Howell v. State, 180 Ga. App. 749, 350 S.E.2d 473 (1986).

Malnutrition. — Evidence of the lack of material in both the stomach and the gastrointestinal tract precluded a finding that the child had succumbed from the effects of malabsorption syndrome and thus, the evidence supported a finding that the infant's death was due to severe growth retardation secondary to malnutrition with marked dehydration; thus, a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 was authorized. Beasley v. State, 161 Ga. App. 29, 288 S.E.2d 828 (1982).

Evidence was sufficient to support a father's conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 where the defendant's 4 month old child was found severely malnourished, even though there was food in the house to feed the child properly and the child's mother and children received WIC food and formula vouchers. Knight v. State, 233 Ga. App. 819, 505 S.E.2d 796 (1998).

Defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly denied because evidence that defendant's 3-month-old child was underweight and severely malnourished to the point where it was too weak to feed and had to be fed initially through a naso-gastric tube, that defendant fed the child sugar water to avoid bothering with making formula, and that defendant sometimes propped up a bottle near the child instead of feeding the child, allowed a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the charge of cruelty to children by willfully depriving the child of necessary sustenance to the extent that the child's well-being was jeopardized. Wilson v. State, 257 Ga. App. 242, 570 S.E.2d 679 (2002).

Defendant was properly convicted of child cruelty where a doctor stated that defendant's two-month old child was suffering from one of the worse cases of malnutrition that the doctor had ever seen, as evidenced by the child's sunken eyeballs, delayed capillary refill, increased turgor of the skin, and poor reaction to the environment. Bosnak v. State, 263 Ga. App. 313, 587 S.E.2d 814 (2003).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict of acquittal on two counts of cruelty to children, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(a), in connection with the malnourishment of the defendant's live-in love interest's two-year-old twins was properly denied because there was direct medical, photographic, and testimonial evidence showing that the children were severely malnourished and that their health was jeopardized and that defendant wilfully deprived the children of necessary sustenance; the evidence included a doctor's testimony that the children had no subcutaneous fat, had bulging abdomens, could make sounds but not say any words, could not bear weight, had very delayed bone development, were severely malnourished, had no medical reason for their failure to thrive, and gained about as much weight during their first six weeks in foster care as they had in two years under defendant's care. Copeland v. State, 263 Ga. App. 776, 589 S.E.2d 319 (2003).

Because a pediatrician testified that a child victim's reflux condition could not have caused the degree of malnourishment that the pediatrician found in the victim, and that the child's extreme failure to thrive was caused by a failure to feed the child, because the state presented evidence that the victim was not fed, the trial court did not err in denying defendants' motion for a directed verdict of acquittal in defendants' trial for cruelty to children. Allen v. State, 278 Ga. App. 292, 628 S.E.2d 717 (2006).

Evidence supported the conviction of the defendants as: (1) the first defendant took custody of a healthy normal weight three-and-a-half-year-old child and after five months, the child was very ill and had lost 14 pounds; (2) having been told upon the child's discharge from a hospital to return for testing and to contact the child's regular pediatrician, the defendants did neither and took no steps to seek medical attention until the child was almost dead; (3) when the child was fed, despite the child's claimed celiac disease, the child thrived and gained weight and it was only when the child was with the defendants that the child became an emaciated waif; and (4) the first defendant's claims that the child's other biological parent caused the child's condition and that the sores on the child's body were not as severe as portrayed by the medical testimony and the photos in evidence were rejected by the jury. Revells v. State, 283 Ga. App. 59, 640 S.E.2d 587 (2006).

Raising a child in unsanitary conditions can constitute the offense of cruelty to children; however, there must be evidence establishing the age of the child, that the child suffered physical or mental pain, that the pain was cruel or excessive, that defendant caused the pain, and that defendant acted maliciously in so doing. Brewton v. State, 266 Ga. 160, 465 S.E.2d 668 (1996).

Evidence of unsanitary conditions is not enough, by itself, to prove the element of malice required for the offense of cruelty to children. Brewton v. State, 266 Ga. 160, 465 S.E.2d 668 (1996).

Holding child in scalding water. — Ample evidence concerning the child victim's condition and expert testimony regarding the same was presented to authorize the jury to find defendant guilty of committing felony murder by holding the child in scalding water, and guilty of committing cruelty to a child by failing to provide medical attention, and to reject the evidence and hypotheses defendant presented in an attempt to refute the charges. Robles v. State, 277 Ga. 415, 589 S.E.2d 566 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions on four counts of aggravated battery and one count of cruelty to children in the first degree after the 17-month-old child of defendant's love interest was found with hot-water immersion burns incurred while defendant was watching the child for the love interest; the jury was free to reject the explanation that defendant had no criminal intent at the time the burns were incurred and find that the only reasonable hypothesis was that defendant maliciously and intentionally immersed the baby in hot water after the baby soiled a diaper, especially since defendant's explanations were not consistent with the evidence. Lee v. State, 275 Ga. App. 93, 619 S.E.2d 767 (2005).

Felony murder conviction upheld. — Evidence that defendant shook child repeatedly until child went limp along with pathologist testimony that injury to child's skull resulted in the child's death was sufficient to conclude that defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of felony murder in the death of the child. McNeal v. State, 263 Ga. 397, 435 S.E.2d 47 (1993).

Evidence that the cause of death was loss of blood due to a laceration of the liver caused by blunt force trauma to the abdomen, most likely a punch with a fist, was sufficient to show either excessive pain or the malice required for a conviction of felony murder with cruelty to children. Folson v. State, 278 Ga. 690, 606 S.E.2d 262 (2004).

Evidence that there was an 80 to 90 percent chance that injuries that caused the death of a defendant's 10-month-old child were inflicted within an hour of the child's death, that the defendant left the apartment at 4:10 P.M., that an attending physician was called to the emergency room at 5:46 P.M., and that the child was dead on arrival at the emergency room was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for felony murder while in commission of cruelty to a child in the second degree, aggravated assault, and cruelty to a child in the first degree; the evidence permitted the jury to conclude that the time frame in which the child's injuries were inflicted included the time before the defendant left for work, there was evidence concerning the defendant's actions before and after the child's death that indicated the defendant's guilt, and the jury was not required to accept the defendant's version of events. White v. State, 281 Ga. 276, 637 S.E.2d 645 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported a conviction of felony murder while in the commission of cruelty to children in the first degree: (1) the pathologist who performed the child's autopsy testified that the 14-month-old child, who had been injured while left in the defendant's care, died from multiple blunt force injuries that were inconsistent with falling off a bed or being dropped, as claimed by the defendant; (2) a defense pathologist agreed that there were at least seven distinct impact sites on the child's head and about 105 impact sites on the child's body; and (3) there was evidence that two years before, the defendant's six-month-old child had been left in the defendant's care and had been returned to the child's parent with unexplained bruises and other injuries. Moore v. State, 283 Ga. 151, 656 S.E.2d 796 (2008).

Guilty verdict clearly supportable as matter of law. Fain v. State, 165 Ga. App. 188, 300 S.E.2d 197 (1983).

When the testimony of defendant's wife, who was charged and pled guilty as an accomplice, was corroborated by the testimony of the wife's sister who observed defendant beating the same victim on an earlier occasion, such evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction. Jackson v. State, 178 Ga. App. 378, 343 S.E.2d 122 (1986).

Evidence sufficient to sustain conviction on count charging defendant with causing child excessive physical pain by striking the child in the face. Howell v. State, 180 Ga. App. 749, 350 S.E.2d 473 (1986).

Evidence held sufficient for rational trier of fact to find cruelty to children. Sharp v. State, 183 Ga. App. 641, 360 S.E.2d 50 (1987); Lewis v. State, 191 Ga. App. 287, 381 S.E.2d 558 (1989); Rigenstrup v. State, 197 Ga. App. 176, 398 S.E.2d 25 (1990).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction, where the record showed that the victim had second-degree burns which, in the expert medical opinion of an attending physician, demonstrated that the victim had been dipped into hot water. Gatson v. State, 198 Ga. App. 279, 401 S.E.2d 71 (1991).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendants' convictions of cruelty to children and aggravated battery where the medical testimony concerning the extent and possible cause of the victim's injuries, evidence of defendants' complacent demeanor, and testimony concerning their access to the victim were but some of the factors from which the jury could find them guilty. Thomas v. State, 262 Ga. App. 492, 589 S.E.2d 243 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support conviction for cruelty to children because defendant, a police officer on duty, repeatedly threatened minor victim with prosecution if the victim did not have sex with defendant, the act was painful and upsetting to the victim, defendant forced the victim to touch defendant's genitals, and defendant had no justification for the actions. Wiggins v. State, 272 Ga. App. 414, 612 S.E.2d 598 (2005), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 280 Ga. 268, 626 S.E.2d 118 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's convictions of felony murder and cruelty to children where defendant admitted striking the child multiple times on the night in question, causing the child to bleed, but denied striking the child with sufficient force to cause the injuries the child sustained; the child's mother testified that the bruises the mother found on the child's head and body in the morning had not been present the previous evening. Sauerwein v. State, 280 Ga. 438, 629 S.E.2d 235 (2006).

Defendant's malice murder and cruelty to children convictions were affirmed on appeal as post-autopsy photographs were properly admitted to assist the jury in understanding both the internal injuries and the cause of the victim's death, and sufficient and overwhelming evidence was presented that the victim's injuries were not accidental. Thomas v. State, 281 Ga. 550, 640 S.E.2d 255 (2007).

Despite the defendant's claim that breaking defendant's infant daughter's arm was an accident and that the evidence of intent was insufficient to support a first-degree cruelty to children conviction, the conviction was upheld on appeal based on: (1) medical evidence regarding the normal frailty of an infant's bones; (2) evidence that the injury the child suffered was normally one caused by a non-accidental trauma; (3) evidence that the injury occurred shortly after the defendant angrily confronted the crying infant; and (4) prior difficulties evidence which showed the defendant began spanking the child when the child was two or three months old. Cochran v. State, 285 Ga. App. 175, 645 S.E.2d 662 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for directed verdict of acquittal after a jury convicted the defendant of two counts of cruelty to children in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) because the state did not fail to prove that the defendant used a bat and a belt as stated in the indictment; both victims, who were the defendant's adopted children, testified that the defendant beat the victims with a belt and a bat and that the beatings occurred when the victims did not complete the exercises that the defendant required the victims to do on a daily basis. Dinkler v. State, 305 Ga. App. 444, 699 S.E.2d 541 (2010).

Eyewitness testimony of child's mother was sufficient to support inferences that defendant had acted with malice in hitting the child and that defendant's acts had caused the child cruel and excessive physical pain. Martin v. State, 190 Ga. App. 486, 379 S.E.2d 170, cert. denied, 190 Ga. App. 898, 379 S.E.2d 170 (1989).

Marital privilege exception applied in child cruelty case, despite lack of physical contact. — Defendant's alleged violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(d), cruelty to children, was a "crime against the person of a minor child" within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-9-23(b), which provided an exception to the marital privilege against testifying in cases of crimes against the person of children, even though no physical contact was involved. Therefore, a trial court did not err in compelling defendant's spouse to testify against defendant despite invoking the privilege. Sherman v. State, 302 Ga. App. 312, 690 S.E.2d 915, cert. denied, No. S10C0961, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 545 (Ga. 2010).

Circumstantial evidence was sufficient to show that acts of cruelty committed by defendant on defendant's 13-year-old stepson were committed within the statute of limitation. Lee v. State, 232 Ga. App. 300, 501 S.E.2d 844 (1998).

Evidence that a defendant's 13-month-old child died while in the defendant's care from brain trauma caused by being struck by or against an object or violently shaken, at a time when one other person and that person's child were in the defendant's apartment, provided sufficient circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to enable a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of felony murder while in the commission of cruelty to a child; questions as to the reasonableness of hypotheses were to be decided by the jury, and the jury's authorized finding that evidence, though circumstantial, was sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt was not to be disturbed unless the guilty verdict was insupportable as a matter of law. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. 373, 637 S.E.2d 652 (2006).

Digital penetration sufficient. — Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of first degree cruelty to children, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), where the victim's testimony, the victim's mother's testimony, and the doctor's testimony all established that defendant digitally penetrated the victim, causing physical injury. Gearin v. State, 255 Ga. App. 329, 565 S.E.2d 540 (2002).

Admission of irrelevant evidence did not require mistrial. — During a trial for felony murder while in the commission of cruelty to a child, evidence that a defendant's romantic partner did not know that the defendant was married was irrelevant; although the defendant's objection to the admission of the evidence was improperly overruled, the defendant's motion for a mistrial was properly denied because a mistrial was not mandated. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. 373, 637 S.E.2d 652 (2006).

Similar transaction evidence properly admitted. — In a prosecution on two counts of second-degree cruelty to children and family violence battery, the trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence against the defendant for the limited purpose of showing the defendant's course of conduct and bent of mind as identity was not an issue and the similar transaction and the charged offense were the same, except for the fact that they were committed against different family members. Breazeale v. State, 290 Ga. App. 632, 660 S.E.2d 376 (2008).

Evidence properly admitted. — With regard to a defendant's conviction on three counts of cruelty to children in the first degree based on injuries to the child of defendant's love interest, the trial court did not err by admitting the incriminating statements that the defendant used too much force in putting the child into a swing, which the defendant made to the polygraph examiner during the pre-polygraph examination interview; the examiner and the investigator testified that, prior to making any statements, the defendant was read the defendant's Miranda warnings, had voluntarily signed a waiver of rights form, and had voluntarily signed a form stipulating that the results of the polygraph examination would be admissible evidence and both the waiver of rights form and the stipulation were produced for the trial court's review during a suppression hearing and were introduced into evidence at trial after defendant's motion to suppress was denied. Legan v. State, 289 Ga. App. 244, 656 S.E.2d 879 (2008).

Evidence that since being raped by defendant a victim had nightmares and had to sleep with her parents was properly admitted as proof that defendant had caused the victim the mental pain necessary to support a conviction for cruelty to a child. Mims v. State, 291 Ga. App. 777, 662 S.E.2d 867 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 768 (Ga. 2008).

In a case where a defendant was convicted of cruelty to children in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a mistrial or in refusing to strike certain testimony because hearsay statements by the defendant's daughter were admissible pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 since the daughter was available to appear at trial and, in fact, took the witness stand. Stegall v. State, 297 Ga. App. 425, 677 S.E.2d 441 (2009).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — See Black v. State, 261 Ga. 791, 410 S.E.2d 740 (1991), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 839, 113 S. Ct. 118, 121 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1992); Morris v. State, 202 Ga. App. 673, 415 S.E.2d 485 (1992); Weeks v. State, 220 Ga. App. 141, 469 S.E.2d 316 (1996); Glenn v. State, 228 Ga. App. 29, 491 S.E.2d 92 (1997); Goss v. State, 228 Ga. App. 411, 491 S.E.2d 859 (1997); Nunez v. State, 237 Ga. App. 808, 516 S.E.2d 357 (1999); Avila-Nunez v. State, 237 Ga. App. 649, 516 S.E.2d 335 (1999); Wilhelm v. State, 237 Ga. App. 682, 516 S.E.2d 545 (1999); Johnson v. State, 239 Ga. App. 886, 522 S.E.2d 478 (1999); Porter v. State, 243 Ga. App. 498, 532 S.E.2d 407 (2000); Bartlett v. State, 244 Ga. App. 49, 537 S.E.2d 362 (2000); Loveless v. State, 245 Ga. App. 555, 538 S.E.2d 464 (2000).

Evidence was sufficient for the jury to conclude that the mother was guilty of cruelty to children. Stokes v. State, 204 Ga. App. 586, 420 S.E.2d 84 (1992).

There was ample evidence in the record from which a rational trier of fact could find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty of cruelty to children by maliciously causing defendant's ward excessive physical pain. Strickland v. State, 212 Ga. App. 170, 441 S.E.2d 494 (1994); Keller v. State, 221 Ga. App. 846, 473 S.E.2d 194 (1996).

Convictions of cruelty to children and battery were supported by evidence that defendant caused defendant's eight-year-old child to suffer severe burns by forcing the child to sit in a bathtub filled with hot water and caustic chemicals. Mitchell v. State, 233 Ga. App. 92, 503 S.E.2d 293 (1998).

There was ample evidence to support the defendant's conviction of cruelty to children, where there was videotaped testimony by the child as well as testimony by the child's relatives that the victim experienced cruel and excessive mental pain, including testimony concerning: the victim's complaints of physical pain and apparent emotional distress; her vagina appearing to be red and irritated; the child's conduct in seeking to avoid the defendant; and regression in her toilet training. Clark v. State, 234 Ga. App. 503, 507 S.E.2d 241 (1998).

Father's repeated stabbing of the children's mother in the children's presence supported a finding that the father was guilty of cruelty to his children. Sims v. State, 234 Ga. App. 678, 507 S.E.2d 845 (1998).

Ample evidence sustained defendant's convictions for cruelty to children, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) where the evidence revealed that: (1) defendant took a two-year-old victim into the bathroom where the victim was burned; (2) the victim told other people that it was defendant who burned the victim; (3) the burns on the victim's body were consistent with purposeful immersion in excessively hot water; (4) doctors who initially treated the victim immediately suspected child abuse; and (5) the victim was burned to the point that skin melted from the victim's feet and the victim was in extreme physical and emotional pain. Ratledge v. State, 253 Ga. App. 5, 557 S.E.2d 458 (2001).

Considering the child's age, the child's injuries, and testimony that the defendant's blows were severe enough to make the child cry, the defendant was guilty of first degree cruelty to children where the evidence showed that the defendant maliciously struck the child in the head twice, causing numerous bruises and a fractured skull. Smith v. State, 261 Ga. App. 106, 581 S.E.2d 713 (2003).

Evidence that while in defendants' care the child suffered a fracture to the child's arm for which defendants refused to seek medical treatment and were evasive about explaining, although circumstantial, was sufficient to support convictions for child cruelty and contributing to the deprivation of a minor. Thompson v. State, 262 Ga. App. 17, 585 S.E.2d 125 (2003).

Defendant's proceeding pro se after three detailed trial court warnings was not an abuse of discretion; the defendant's conviction of two counts of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), aggravated assault, and one count of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(c), cruelty to children, (using defendant's car as a deadly weapon to run into the defendant's spouse's car with the spouse and child inside) was supported by sufficient evidence. Bush v. State, 268 Ga. App. 200, 601 S.E.2d 511 (2004).

Evidence of the victim alone was sufficient to authorize a guilty verdict in a child molestation case; there was no requirement that the victim's testimony be corroborated, and defendant's convictions of child molestation, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sexual battery, and cruelty to children were affirmed. McKinney v. State, 269 Ga. App. 12, 602 S.E.2d 904 (2004).

Sufficient evidence, including testimony from the child victim identifying defendant's vehicle, evidence of defendant's DNA matching that of the victim and expert testimony that the frequency of such occurrence was approximately one in two billion in the Caucasian population, and similar transaction evidence, supported defendant's kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, and first-degree cruelty to children convictions. Morita v. State, 270 Ga. App. 372, 606 S.E.2d 595 (2004).

Defendant's convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and two counts of cruelty to children in the first degree, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-70(b) and 16-6-4(a), (c), as well as the defendant's conviction for attempt to commit rape, were supported by evidence, including testimony by the defendant's two grandchildren who were the victims of the instant crimes, as well as the introduction of similar transaction evidence, including sex offense convictions and similar acts by the defendant against other minor victims; evidence of the similar transaction was properly admitted, as any issue as to its remoteness went to the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility. Shorter v. State, 271 Ga. App. 528, 610 S.E.2d 162 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) because the five-year-old victim told a detective and two Department of Family and Children Services employees that the child's parent and defendant hit the victim with a belt; the victim's injuries included a large black eye, facial swelling, multiple facial abrasions, and multiple contusions to the chest, thorax, legs, and arms; an emergency room physician testified that the force exerted must have been severe and that the bruises were "fresh" and had been inflicted within the last 48 hours; and the victim was temporarily living with defendant and the defendant's spouse, the victim's cousin. Morgan v. State, 272 Ga. App. 68, 611 S.E.2d 740 (2005).

Defendant's conviction of cruelty to children was supported by sufficient evidence which showed that defendant's six-year-old victim had fresh bruises, marks, and a swollen wrist at school, that the child identified defendant as the person who caused this, and that the victim's mother testified that defendant had struck the victim with a belt. Sims v. State, 273 Ga. App. 723, 615 S.E.2d 785 (2005).

Evidence supported defendants' convictions for aggravated battery and cruelty to children because the jury was free not only to reject defendants' explanations of the child's injuries as unreasonable, but to find that the state's case, including testimony as to the extent and cause of the child's injuries and as to defendants' access to the child, excluded every reasonable possibility save defendants' guilt. Hunnicutt v. State, 276 Ga. App. 547, 623 S.E.2d 714 (2005).

Despite allegations that: (1) the victim's testimony was contradicted by the victim's parent; and (2) the victim had a motive to lie about the defendant, the appeals court refused to disturb the jury's determination as to the same, given the jury's province to resolve the conflicts in the evidence; hence, the defendant's cruelty to children and attempted aggravated and child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal. Chalker v. State, 281 Ga. App. 305, 635 S.E.2d 890 (2006).

Despite the defendant's contentions that insufficient evidence as to a child's presence in the room when the victim was accosted required reversal of a cruelty to children conviction, such conviction was upheld, supported by the victim's testimony notifying the defendant of the presence of the child before the defendant fired a shot next to the victim's head. Price v. State, 281 Ga. App. 844, 637 S.E.2d 468 (2006).

Evidence, including the defendant's admission to squeezing and shaking the child and the testimony of the forensic pediatrician that the child's injuries were consistent with being squeezed, was sufficient to convict the defendant of child cruelty in the first degree under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) and aggravated battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Bass v. State, 282 Ga. App. 159, 637 S.E.2d 863 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and first-degree child cruelty pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a), 16-5-24(a), and 16-5-70(b) for participating in a drive-by shooting were supported by sufficient evidence because the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 and it was the function of the jury to evaluate the credibility of witnesses; based on the testimony of the witnesses to the shooting, a reasonable jury could have rejected the defendant's claims and determined that the defendant was a party to each of the crimes. Hill v. State, 282 Ga. App. 743, 639 S.E.2d 637 (2006).

Sufficient evidence existed to support the defendant's conviction of cruelty to children in the first degree since the jury was authorized to conclude that the defendant's actions of maliciously causing the child of defendant's girlfriend to incur cruel and excessive pain by throwing the child to the ground and by striking the child with the defendant's hand when the child attempted to remove the defendant off of the child's mother, who was being beaten by the defendant; the evidence showed that the defendant grabbed the 11-year-old child and slammed the child to the ground and then struck the child again after the child tried to protect the mother's face. Ferrell v. State, 283 Ga. App. 471, 641 S.E.2d 658 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions of malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, cruelty to children in the first degree, and possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony when the defendant waited for the victim at the victim's house, drove with the victim and the victim's 10-year-old child to a rural road and stopped, displayed a gun and refused to allow the victim to leave, and drove to the home of the defendant's child, where the defendant shot the victim in front of the victim's child. Dalton v. State, 282 Ga. 300, 647 S.E.2d 580 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict of guilty with regard to the defendant's convictions on three counts of cruelty to children in the first degree based on injuries to the child of defendant's love interest because the jury was not required to believe (1) the defendant's self-serving statements that the defendant did not intend to harm the child or (2) the defendant's statements to law enforcement officers that the defendant accidentally fell on the child because the defendant's hip gave out while putting the child in a swing, and that the child's ribs may have been broken when the defendant administered CPR to save the child after a choking incident. The jury was authorized to weigh those assertions against the other evidence, including the testimony of the doctors, who stated that the child's multiple bone fractures were not the result of accidental trauma or CPR, but were the result of child abuse. Legan v. State, 289 Ga. App. 244, 656 S.E.2d 879 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support convictions of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 and of third-degree cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70. The victim, who had formerly been romantically involved with the defendant, was leaving a motel with the victim's two children, three other children, and two friends when the defendant approached the victim from behind, put a gun to the victim's head, and told the victim that when the defendant did not care about the children anymore, the defendant was going to kill the victim, and the state introduced prior difficulties evidence about an earlier incident where the victim was asleep at a parent's house when the victim woke up to a punch in the face and saw the defendant running out the front door. McCullors v. State, 291 Ga. App. 393, 662 S.E.2d 197 (2008).

Evidence that a defendant forced himself on one young child and had intercourse with the child and that the defendant disciplined that child and the child's two siblings by forcing them to take their clothes off, whipping them with a belt, and beating or choking them was sufficient to convict the defendant of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), and cruelty to children, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b). Williams v. State, 293 Ga. App. 617, 668 S.E.2d 21 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's convictions on one count of enticing a child for indecent purposes, ten counts of child molestation, one count of aggravated child molestation, and three counts of cruelty to children in the first degree, regarding actions the defendant took toward three children and what the children were forced to do to each other by gunpoint while the defendant was a babysitter for the children, the state proved the charged offenses beyond a reasonable doubt based on the testimony of the three victims and the victims' videotaped forensic interviews. It was within the province of the jury to disbelieve the defendant's testimony that the defendant did not commit the charged crimes. Sullivan v. State, 295 Ga. App. 145, 671 S.E.2d 180 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0624, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 215 (Ga. 2009).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for a directed verdict with regard to two counts of first degree cruelty to children against the defendant regarding the defendant's two children as the medical evidence indicating significant physical injuries over a period of time on both the children was sufficient to find that the defendant acted maliciously in causing the physical pain or was a party to such action by a romantic friend. Further, the evidence that the defendant attempted to conceal the second child's injuries by leaving that child at the house of the romantic friend's sibling, encouraging that sibling to hide the boy, and denying to the authorities that a second child existed was sufficient evidence to enable a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of first degree cruelty to the second child. Hinds v. State, 296 Ga. App. 80, 673 S.E.2d 598 (2009).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction of misdemeanor cruelty to children in the third degree under circumstances in which the victim's father received a call originating from the victim's cell phone, and, when that number was called back, all that could be heard were noises, including gasping, gurgling, and children screaming during the second call, before the line was disconnected; officers later found the victim lying on the kitchen floor with a cell phone in the victim's hand, dead from a single gunshot wound to the head, and a handgun retrieved on the premises was later determined to have fired the bullet that killed the victim. The defendant testified that the defendant and the victim were arguing inside the home, that the argument became physical, that the defendant took the children and a gun out to the defendant's truck, that the defendant returned to the house, and that the defendant did not know what happened after that. Paslay v. State, 285 Ga. 616, 680 S.E.2d 853 (2009).

Inasmuch as the offense of first-degree child cruelty in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) was based on the victim's testimony that defendant's passenger pointed a gun at the victim's forehead, the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for first-degree child cruelty as a party and coconspirator. Johnson v. State, 299 Ga. App. 706, 683 S.E.2d 659 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendants' motion for a directed verdict because the evidence presented was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to have found the defendants guilty of cruelty to children in the first degree in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(a). Direct medical testimony revealed that the victim was severely malnourished and that the victim's health was jeopardized. Coleman v. State, No. A10A2255, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 274 (Mar. 24, 2011).

Death resulting from or part of cruelty to children. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for felony murder in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1(c) and child cruelty in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), where the record revealed that the eight-month old victim suffered a lacerated liver resulting from blunt force trauma to the abdomen, the injury was inflicted 12-24 hours prior to death, and that despite the infant's obvious pain and tenderness in the abdominal area, defendant refused to take the infant, or to allow the parent to take the infant, to seek medical attention for fear that the baby would be taken away; although the indictment did not charge that defendant committed the predicate act of child cruelty with malice within the count alleging felony murder, such was not insufficient because the separate count alleging child cruelty indicated that it was committed with malice. Mikenney v. State, 277 Ga. 64, 586 S.E.2d 328 (2003).

Medical evidence showing that a child died of a combination of being shaken, blunt force trauma to the head, and injuries to the spinal cord, and evidence of bruising on the child's head and torso, together with defendant's varying versions of the events leading to the child's death, authorized a jury to convict defendant of felony murder based on the crime of cruelty to a child. Miller v. State, 277 Ga. 707, 593 S.E.2d 659 (2004).

Jury was authorized to weigh the defendant's assertion that the defendant "gently" shook a child who died while in defendant's care against the other evidence, including the testimony of the child's doctors, who said that the child's injuries were the result of "major violent force." Johnson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 66, 628 S.E.2d 183 (2006).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault, aggravated battery, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct in connection with the death of the 16-month-old victim since: the defendant repeatedly fed the victim tomatoes despite the victim's allergic reactions to the tomatoes; two days before the victim's fatal injuries, the victim had numerous bruises, a black eye, and a split bottom lip; while the victim was in the hospital for the fatal injuries, the defendant repeatedly asked a babysitter to persuade the defendant's five-year-old child to say that the child had taken the victim out of the bathtub; the defendant asked medical personnel whether it could be proven that the victim was shaken; and medical evidence showed that the victim's death was consistent with violent shaking by a person of adult strength. Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of malice murder, felony murder, and cruelty to children as: the victim had not experienced any unusual injuries prior to the time the defendant moved in with the victim's mother; the defendant was alone in the house with the victim and the victim's young brothers prior to the time the victim's head began to swell and at various times on the night the victim died; the defendant told a co-worker that the defendant was beating the victim and the victim's brothers; and the defendant also told an uncle that the defendant could not do anything with the victim and felt like punching the victim in the head as hard as the defendant could. Collum v. State, 281 Ga. 719, 642 S.E.2d 640 (2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of malice murder, felony murder, and cruelty to children with regard to the death of the defendant's 15-month-old child; although the defendant claimed to have not noticed anything wrong with the child until a codefendant said that the child was having difficulty breathing, the evidence authorized the jury to find that the victim was beaten so severely that the victim's pancreas and duodenum were ruptured, that two to four hours was the maximum time that occurred between the injuries and the victim's death, that the victim would have begun vomiting immediately after the fatal injuries were inflicted, and that the victim would have

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of felony murder while in the commission of cruelty to children in the first degree and making a false statement to a government agency after a 23-month-old child whom the defendant had been baby-sitting died from severe aspiration pneumonia due to brain swelling and bleeding on the surface of the brain caused by multiple blows to the child's head and face; the defendant was the only adult with the child during the afternoon and early evening in question, the child had appeared uninjured and was walking when the child visited a store earlier in the day, the child had "pattern injury" contusions indicating that hair had been pulled out, a medical examiner testified that the child's brain swelling would have prevented the child from performing normal functions such as walking, talking, or waking, and the defendant told several conflicting stories about how the child had been injured. Banta v. State, 282 Ga. 392, 651 S.E.2d 21 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a conviction of felony murder, with cruelty to a child in the first degree as the underlying felony. The defendant was the child's sole caregiver from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. on October 30, the date that the child's parent came to pick up the child and found the child unresponsive; a neighbor denied the defendant's claim that the neighbor had said that the child's other parent had shaken the child the day before; and a forensic pathologist testified that had the injuries been inflicted before 7:00 a.m. on October 30, the child would not have been acting normally when the child was dropped off at the defendant's home as testified by the child's relatives. Bostic v. State, 284 Ga. 864, 672 S.E.2d 630 (2009).

Sufficient evidence was presented to convict a defendant of malice murder and cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) because the defendant testified that the defendant shook the five-year-old victim after the victim spit up dinner and in so doing, struck the victim's head against the railing of a bunk bed; the victim died a few days later of massive head trauma and intracranial bleeding. Wright v. State, 285 Ga. 57, 673 S.E.2d 249 (2009).

Evidence that a defendant was the only person home with defendant's 17-month-old son when the son became unresponsive, along with the defendant's admission that the defendant had shaken defendant's son to make the son stop crying and shaken the son again to try to wake the son up was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for involuntary manslaughter and child cruelty. Lewis v. State, 304 Ga. App. 831, 698 S.E.2d 365 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find defendants guilty of felony cruelty to children since both defendants repeatedly beat the defendants' eight-year-old son with a foot long glue stick, then forced the child into a wooden box, beating the boy about the head as the defendants did so, and when numerous medical experts testified that the cause of the child's death was either blunt force trauma or asphyxiation. Smith v. State, 288 Ga. 348, 703 S.E.2d 629 (2010).

Placing infant in plastic bag sufficient for conviction. — Determination of a defendant's intent to cause the particular harm, or the wanton and willful doing of an act with an awareness of a plain and strong likelihood that such harm might result, sufficient for conviction of the crime of cruelty to children is peculiarly a question for the jury; likewise, the determination of what is cruel or excessive physical or mental pain is a jury issue. The evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for cruelty where the jury could find that an infant was born alive and that defendant placed the child into plastic bags, thus causing the infant to suffocate; this evidence could support a jury finding that defendant maliciously caused the infant excessive physical or mental pain. Ferguson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 374, 599 S.E.2d 335 (2004).

Biting and kicking children. — Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of cruelty to children, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), because defendant admitted that defendant bit and kicked the child victim because defendant was angry and that defendant ripped hair from the child's scalp in a fit of rage; defendant's testimony that the child's injuries were accidental did not warrant a reversal of the conviction. Kennedy v. State, 272 Ga. App. 347, 612 S.E.2d 532 (2005).

Biting a child. — Despite the defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, specifically, that no evidence showed the malice element of a cruelty-to-children offense, and that the evidence failed to show the defendant harmed the police officer to support an obstruction offense, convictions on said offenses were upheld on appeal as: (1) the severity of the bite marks inflicted on the child victim allowed the court to infer malice; (2) actual harm to the officer was not an essential element of an obstruction charge; and (3) the defendant's act of swinging at the officer's face during an effort to resist arrest supported an obstruction. Sampson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 92, 640 S.E.2d 673 (2006).

Neglect in supervising sufficient. — There was sufficient evidence to support a conviction of second-degree cruelty to children based on the defendant's failure to supervise the children; the defendant admitted that the children had been out of the house unsupervised several times on the day they were found drowned, a neighbor saw the children playing outside unsupervised on the afternoon they drowned, and witnesses testified to the defendant's chronic neglect in supervising the children. Kain v. State, 287 Ga. App. 45, 650 S.E.2d 749 (2007), cert. dismissed, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 125 (Ga. 2008).

Children do not need adult language to describe offense. — Evidence was sufficient to support convictions of child molestation and cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4 and 16-5-70. From the testimony of the four-year-old victim, the victim's parent, and an interviewer, the jury was authorized to find that the victim used the word "tutu" to refer to the child's vaginal area, where the child said the defendant touched the child; it was completely unreasonable to require witnesses to describe the acts constituting the commission of a crime in statutory or technical language in order to prove the commission of such acts. Brookshire v. State, 288 Ga. App. 766, 655 S.E.2d 332 (2007).

Defense of involuntary intoxication not proved. — Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant on a charge of cruelty to children since the defendant failed to carry the initial burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was involuntarily intoxicated at the time the crime was committed, and there was at least some evidence before the jury of each element of cruelty to children that the state was required to prove. Stewart v. State, 291 Ga. App. 846, 663 S.E.2d 278 (2008).

Juvenile guilty of cruelty to children. — Juvenile court properly denied a juvenile's motion for a new trial with regard to the juvenile's delinquency adjudication finding the juvenile guilty for aggravated assault, criminal property damage, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct arising from the shooting of a BB gun at a passing car. The juvenile was the only Caucasian identified in the group of youth; the juvenile admitted to hiding the BB gun; the juvenile did not dispute that the juvenile encouraged another youth to shoot the gun; and the judge was the final arbiter of the credibility and witness issues and had the province to reject the testimony of the juvenile and a parent that the juvenile did not shoot the gun. In the Interest of A.A., 293 Ga. App. 827, 668 S.E.2d 323 (2008).

Merger with Other Offenses

Merger of charges against defendant for cruelty to children and contributing to the deprivation of a minor was not required because, although based on similar facts, each charge required proof of a fact not required to prove the other. Porter v. State, 243 Ga. App. 498, 532 S.E.2d 407 (2000).

Crimes of rape and cruelty to children did not merge as a matter of fact, as they constituted separate offenses and proof of separate elements; therefore, because the offenses did not merge, defendant was not punished twice for the same conduct. Currington v. State, 270 Ga. App. 381, 606 S.E.2d 619 (2004).

No merger of nonhomicide counts.

— Defendant's convictions of involuntary manslaughter while in the commission of a simple battery, aggravated assault, aggravated battery, cruelty to children, and reckless conduct were not mutually exclusive, and the trial court did not err in not merging the nonhomicide counts upon sentencing. Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Conviction for cruelty to children merged with felony murder. — Judgment convicting a defendant of cruelty to a child in the first degree and the sentence entered thereon were vacated because the crime should have merged for sentencing purposes with the defendant's felony murder conviction based on the underlying felony of cruelty to a child in the second degree; the state agreed that the crimes merged in fact, and an examination of the evidence in the context of the trial court's instructions to the jury indicated that the judgment and sentence had to be vacated. White v. State, 281 Ga. 276, 637 S.E.2d 645 (2006).

Convictions for aggravated battery and cruelty to children did not merge since the evidence established that the victim was subjected to multiple injuries in addition to a broken arm, and that none of the injuries were relevant to defendant's aggravated battery conviction, which was predicated upon the victim's broken arm. Mashburn v. State, 244 Ga. App. 524, 536 S.E.2d 208 (2000).

Aggravated battery and cruelty to children each requires proof of at least one additional element which the other does not, and the two crimes are not so closely related that multiple convictions are prohibited under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6 and O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7; accordingly, even if the same conduct establishes the commission of both aggravated battery and cruelty to children, the two crimes do not merge, and thus a defendant was properly convicted of both crimes (overruling Jones v. State, 276 Ga. App. 762 (624 SE2d 291) (2005); Etchinson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 449 (538 SE2d 87) (2000); and Harmon v. State, 208 Ga. App. 271 (430 SE2d 399) (1993)). Waits v. State, 282 Ga. 1, 644 S.E.2d 127 (2007).

Battery lesser included offense of cruelty to children. — When the evidence was sufficient to establish that defendant repeatedly struck defendant's nine-year-old child on the back, buttocks, and legs with defendant's hand, leaving several visible, handprint-shaped bruises, battery was a lesser included offense of cruelty to children. Bennett v. State, 244 Ga. App. 149, 534 S.E.2d 881 (2000).

Reckless conduct was not lesser included offense of cruelty to children.

— Trial court did not err in not charging reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70; if the jury believed the defendant's testimony, there was no conscious disregard of a substantial and unjustifiable risk, and the state's evidence was that the defendant maliciously caused the child's suffering. Banta v. State, 282 Ga. 392, 651 S.E.2d 21 (2007).

Cruelty to children merged with felony murder. — Conviction and sentence for cruelty to children merged with conviction and sentence for felony murder. Grayer v. State, 282 Ga. 224, 647 S.E.2d 264 (2007).

No merger with malice murder. — Offense of cruelty to children requires proof that the victim was younger than eighteen, whereas the offense of malice murder only requires proof that the victim was a human being. Accordingly, to prove cruelty to children, at least one fact — the age of the victim — had to be established in addition to the facts used to establish malice murder, and the offense of cruelty to children therefore was not included as a matter of fact in the offense of malice murder. McCartney v. State, 262 Ga. 156, 414 S.E.2d 227 (1992), overruled on other grounds, 287 Ga. 881, 700 S.E.2d 394 (2010).

In a prosecution for malice murder, the trial court did not err in refusing to give an instruction on cruelty to children as an included offense. Loren v. State, 268 Ga. 792, 493 S.E.2d 175 (1997).

When the defendant was convicted of malice murder, felony murder, and cruelty to children, and there was a single victim, it was error to sentence the defendant to multiple life terms on the malice murder and felony murder counts; because the victim's age was an element of the crime of cruelty to children that was not included in malice murder, the underlying cruelty to children conviction did not merge into malice murder as a matter of fact. Collum v. State, 281 Ga. 719, 642 S.E.2d 640 (2007).

Although both malice murder and cruelty to children required a malicious intent, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-1(a) and 16-5-70(b), the fact that such intent supported an element in each crime did not warrant merging of the sentences when other mutually exclusive elements of the crimes remained, and the other elements of the two offenses had to be compared; malice murder, but not cruelty to children, required proof that defendant caused the death of another human being, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1(a), and cruelty to children, but not malice murder, required proof that the victim was a child under the age of 18 who was caused cruel or excessive physical or mental pain, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b). Each crime required proof of at least one additional element which the other did not and the crimes of malice murder and cruelty to children were not so closely related that multiple convictions were prohibited under other provisions of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-1-6 and 16-1-7; accordingly, even if the same conduct established the commission of both malice murder and cruelty to children, the two crimes did not merge. Linson v. State, 287 Ga. 881, 700 S.E.2d 394 (2010).

Cruelty to children can be lesser included crime of aggravated assault with deadly weapon. — Cruelty to children, which requires only "maliciously [causing] the child cruel or excessive physical ... pain," can be a lesser included crime under an indictment for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Williams v. State, 144 Ga. App. 130, 240 S.E.2d 890 (1977).

Cruelty to children invoking felony-murder rule. See Holt v. State, 247 Ga. 648, 278 S.E.2d 390 (1981).

Cruelty to children may constitute the underlying felony in a felony murder prosecution. Estes v. State, 251 Ga. 347, 305 S.E.2d 778 (1983).

Convictions for involuntary manslaughter and cruelty to children were not inconsistent because the jury could have found from the evidence both that the defendant maliciously caused the victim excessive pain, and that defendant's actions caused the victim's death, though defendant may not have intended to kill the victim. Sanders v. State, 245 Ga. App. 561, 538 S.E.2d 470 (2000).

Verdicts of involuntary manslaughter and felony murder not mutually exclusive. — Verdicts convicting defendants of involuntary manslaughter under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-3 and felony murder were not mutually exclusive since the evidence authorized the jury to logically conclude that defendants had committed several acts of child abuse, some of which may have been non-felony acts of abuse that inadvertently led to or contributed to the child's death and others that may have constituted felony cruelty to children, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), which would have served as the underlying basis for the felony murder conviction. Smith v. State, 288 Ga. 348, 703 S.E.2d 629 (2010).

Aggravated assault charge. — Cruelty to children merged into count alleging aggravated assault, where both counts alleged the same facts, i.e., that defendant shot defendant's daughter. Cranford v. State, 186 Ga. App. 862, 369 S.E.2d 50 (1988).

Because separate cruelty to children and aggravated assault counts were based upon acts committed by the defendant on the day preceding the death of the victim, neither of those convictions merged into the felony murder count also filed against the defendant and, accordingly, separate sentences for those crimes were authorized. Christian v. State, 281 Ga. 474, 640 S.E.2d 21 (2007).

Cruelty to children conviction did not merge with aggravated assault or false imprisonment. — Defendant's cruelty to children in the first degree charge did not merge with the aggravated assault or false imprisonment charge because neither aggravated assault nor false imprisonment required proof that the victim suffered cruel or excessive physical or mental pain. Kirt v. State, No. A10A1933, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 247 (Mar. 22, 2011).

Conviction for cruelty to children did not merge with the rape convic- tion since the evidence supporting the rape conviction was not the same evidence that supported the cruelty to children conviction. Brown v. State, 190 Ga. App. 678, 379 S.E.2d 598, cert. denied, 190 Ga. App. 897, 379 S.E.2d 598 (1989).

Lesser offense of cruelty to children did not merge into the greater offenses of rape and aggravated child molestation, where the facts that the victim was threatened and terrorized, that the victim screamed in pain, and that the victim continued to experience pain and discomfort and would suffer forever from the venereal diseases the victim contracted from defendant were not needed to prove the elements of rape and aggravated child molestation. Ranalli v. State, 197 Ga. App. 360, 398 S.E.2d 420 (1990).

Defendant's convictions for rape and cruelty to a child did not merge for sentencing purposes, as additional evidence, beyond that necessary to prove rape, existed, specifically, that the rapes caused the victim cruel and excessive physical and mental pain; moreover, after the rapes, the victim was upset, fearful, did not feel safe at home, and cried repeatedly when recounting the episodes to a counselor. Barber v. State, 283 Ga. App. 129, 640 S.E.2d 696 (2006).

Trial court did not err in declining to merge the defendant's convictions of cruelty to a child and rape for purposes of sentencing because each required proof of a fact that the other did not; specifically, the offense of cruelty to a child required, among other things, a showing that the defendant maliciously caused cruel or excessive mental pain to a child while the offense of rape required, among other things, a showing that the defendant had carnal knowledge of the victim forcibly and against her will. Pendley v. State, No. A10A2301, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 283 (Mar. 25, 2011).

Multiple cruelty to children charges merged. — In a trial in which defendant was convicted of three counts of cruelty to children in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), the trial court erred in failing to merge those counts for sentencing; the criminal conduct constituted a single course of conduct, defendant's failure to obtain medical treatment for the child for three days despite the child's two broken legs and broken arm, and there was no evidence of legislative intent to allow multiple punishments for the same course of conduct. Withrow v. State, 275 Ga. App. 110, 619 S.E.2d 714 (2005).

Use of fighting words not lesser included offense. — Offense of use of fighting words is not included in the offense of cruelty to children as a matter of law. Shuler v. State, 195 Ga. App. 849, 395 S.E.2d 26 (1990).

Evidence authorized a jury charge on the offense of "fighting words," where defendant schoolteacher was indicted for battery and cruelty to children, and the proof tracked the indictment which set forth words defendant said to a student which would fall within the perimeter of that forbidden by the "fighting words" statute. Shuler v. State, 195 Ga. App. 849, 395 S.E.2d 26 (1990).

Murder conviction upheld, despite lesser-charge acquittal. — In a trial for the murder of a five-year-old child, the felony murder conviction need not be set aside because a finding of not guilty of cruelty to children is allegedly inconsistent with a finding of guilty of felony murder, when the underlying felony is cruelty to children, where there is no doubt that the evidence showed the elements of the underlying felony, cruelty to a child, and that the jury was authorized to find the defendant guilty of a felony murder. Robinson v. State, 257 Ga. 194, 357 S.E.2d 74 (1987).

Acquittal of defendant on a child molestation charge did not require an acquittal on the cruelty to children charge. Chastain v. State, 239 Ga. App. 602, 521 S.E.2d 657 (1999).

Multiple conviction for cruelty to children. — In a trial in which defendant's convictions for five counts of cruelty to children consisted of one count for injuring girlfriend's infant child and one count for each day that defendant did not obtain medical care for the child, the trial court, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), erred in failing to merge for sentencing purposes the four cruelty to children counts that were related to each day that defendant failed to obtain medical treatment for the injured child; the criminal conduct constituted a single course of conduct spanning four days, not a separate offense for each day. McKee v. State, 275 Ga. App. 646, 621 S.E.2d 611 (2005).

Because the inmate's 28 U.S.C. § 2254 petition was filed on March 19, 2009, some eight years after the one-year limitations period expired, the inmate's petition was clearly time-barred, and the inmate could not rely on the doctrine of equitable tolling to excuse the inmate from the untimely filing because: (1) the filing in state court could not serve to toll a limitations period that had already expired, nor could it reset the one-year period for the filing of a 28 U.S.C. § 2254 petition; (2) the inmate did not meet the first prong of the equitable tolling test, as the inmate had not established that the inmate pursued the inmate's rights diligently in the eight years between the inmate's conviction and first post-conviction filing in the state court, or in the nine years between the inmate's conviction and this habeas petition; (3) although it was true that a Georgia court may resentence a defendant at any time when the sentence was void, the inmate's sentence was not illegal or void; and (4) the inmate's argument that the two cruelty to children charges under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) should have merged was without merit because the first charge against the inmate was complete when the inmate bit the child, and the second arose when the inmate failed to provide the child with medical care, which meant defendant's sentence was not illegal or void. Edwards v. Owens, No. 7:09-CV-36 (HL), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12138 (M.D. Ga. Feb. 11, 2010).

Rule of lenity did not apply to multiple convictions. — In a criminal trial on charges that the defendant allowed the repeated rapes of the defendant's 11-year-old child, the rule of lenity did not require that the defendant's felony convictions for being a party to rape and cruelty to children should be subsumed by the misdemeanor conviction for contributing to the deprivation of children because different facts were necessary to prove the offenses; the rape conviction required proof under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-2-20 and 16-6-1(a)(1) that the defendant took affirmative steps to aid the rapist, the cruelty to children conviction required proof under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) that the defendant caused excessive mental pain to the child, and the conviction for contributing to the deprivation of a minor required proof under O.C.G.A. §§ 15-11-2(8)(A) and 16-12-1(b)(3) that the defendant failed to provide the child with proper care necessary for the child's health, which the state proved by showing that the defendant failed to seek prenatal care for the child even though the defendant knew that the child was pregnant. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Jury Issues and Instructions

Failure to charge on self-defense held reversible error. — Defendant's sole defense, self-defense, would have negated an element of the offense of child cruelty, malice, and it was error not to charge the jury accordingly. Stiles v. State, 242 Ga. App. 484, 529 S.E.2d 913 (2000).

Reckless conduct charge was not warranted in a prosecution for cruelty to children in the first degree since the evidence showed that defendant intended actions and intended to cause pain to the victim. Allen v. State, 247 Ga. App. 10, 543 S.E.2d 45 (2000).

When the evidence shows either the commission of the completed offense as charged or the commission of no offense, the trial court is not required to charge the jury on a lesser included offense. Therefore, since the jury could either believe the defendant's testimony that an infant was already dead when the defendant put the infant in a plastic bag, thus indicating that neither the crime of cruelty to children nor the crime of reckless conduct was committed, or that the child was alive, thus proving the crime of cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70, the trial court was not required to give the jury a charge on reckless conduct in the defendant's trial for cruelty. Ferguson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 374, 599 S.E.2d 335 (2004).

With regard to defendant's convictions on two counts of cruelty to children in the first degree and one count of aggravated battery, the trial court did not err in failing to charge the jury on reckless conduct as a lesser included offense of each of the indicted offenses as defendant admitted to beating the three-year-old victim with a belt once or twice a day for doing bad things and did so intentionally. It was inconsequential that defendant intended the beatings to constitute a form of discipline, as opposed to abuse, because every person is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of the person's conduct, particularly if that conduct is unlawful and dangerous to the safety or lives of others. Glover v. State, 292 Ga. App. 22, 663 S.E.2d 772 (2008).

Sufficiency of charge. — When there is no demurrer to the accusation charging the defendant with ill treating a named minor child contrary to law, and the court gives in the charge the exact language of the statute and then immediately gives in the exact language of the accusation the particular charge set out in it, the instructions, in the absence of request, sufficiently present the issue which they are to try and no reversible error appears when the charge is considered as a whole. Roseberry v. State, 78 Ga. App. 324, 50 S.E.2d 771 (1948).

Trial court did not err in charging the entire language of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) as the jury was also given an instruction which confined the elements of the crime charged to the material allegations in the indictment. Hendrix v. State, 230 Ga. App. 604, 497 S.E.2d 236 (1998).

Trial court did not commit reversible error by charging the jury on the entire code section of cruelty to children and failing to give limiting instruction in its recharge; the jury instructions, taken as a whole, did not mislead the jury or require defendant to defend against a charge of cruelty to children that was not alleged in the indictment. Wiggins v. State, 272 Ga. App. 414, 612 S.E.2d 598 (2005), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 280 Ga. 268, 626 S.E.2d 118 (2006).

Trial court's instruction to jury was proper and there was no reasonable possibility that the jury was misled as to the elements and proof needed to convict a defendant of cruelty to children, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b), where the defendant failed to seek medical treatment for the defendant's child's burns, as the count against the defendant charged the defendant with failing to do something and not with doing something, and the trial court's instructions made the distinction clear. Gore v. State, 277 Ga. App. 635, 627 S.E.2d 198 (2006).

Defendant's aggravated assault and cruelty to children convictions were upheld on appeal as: (1) the prosecutor's closing argument comments did not inject a personal opinion as to the veracity of the witnesses and the appeal to the jury was to make the community safer; (2) the trial court charged the jury fully on defendant's justification and self-defense claims, and thus, did not err in declining to instruct the jury on mistake of fact; and (3) the appeals court failed to see how jury charges on guilt by association, bare suspicion, or mere presence were appropriate. Navarro v. State, 279 Ga. App. 311, 630 S.E.2d 893 (2006).

Failure to charge on defense of accident not error. See Fain v. State, 165 Ga. App. 188, 300 S.E.2d 197 (1983).

Defendant's testimony held insufficient to raise the defense of accident. See Grubbs v. State, 167 Ga. App. 365, 306 S.E.2d 334 (1983).

Relevant evidence. — In a defendant's trial for cruelty to a child, a nurse's testimony as to her decision to report an incident to a child services agency was relevant to the child's care and future well-being; the trial court had wide discretion in determining relevancy and materiality and, when relevancy was doubtful, the evidence was properly admitted and the evidence's weight left for the jury's determination. Revells v. State, 283 Ga. App. 59, 640 S.E.2d 587 (2006).

Defense of accident. — Trial court was not required, sua sponte, to instruct the jury that the state had the burden to disprove a defense of accident beyond a reasonable doubt, and the trial court's instructions in defendant's trial on charges of felony murder and cruelty to children in the first degree were adequate in the absence of a request for an additional charge; however, the state supreme court remanded the case so the trial court could hold a hearing on defendant's claim that defendant was denied effective assistance of trial counsel. Shadron v. State, 275 Ga. 767, 573 S.E.2d 73 (2002).

Jury question. — What is cruel and unreasonable treatment of child is primarily question for jury. Crowe v. Constitution Publishing Co., 63 Ga. App. 497, 11 S.E.2d 513 (1940).

Inconsistent statements of victim went to weight and was for jury consideration. — There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for child cruelty for causing the defendant's child cruel and excessive pain by failing to seek medical attention for the child and instructing the child to conceal the cause of the injuries, which resulted from the defendant's romantic friend burning the child repeatedly with a cigar. The fact that the child gave inconsistent statements by acknowledging what happened to officials but disavowing the same at trial was an issue of witness credibility and the weight of the evidence was for the jury to decide. Freeman v. State, 293 Ga. App. 490, 667 S.E.2d 652 (2008).

Failure to instruct on child endangerment. — Conviction for child endangerment was reversed because the trial court failed to instruct the jury on the offense. Furlow v. State, 276 Ga. App. 332, 623 S.E.2d 186 (2005).

Failure to charge on involuntary manslaughter in child's death. — When the defendant was charged with felony murder, with cruelty to a child in the first degree as the underlying felony, the trial court properly denied the defendant's request for a jury instruction on felony involuntary manslaughter under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-3(a) as a lesser included offense. Contrary to the defendant's argument, the state did not present any evidence that the child died as a result of lack of medical care; furthermore, because the defendant argued that it was the child's parent who shook the child and that the defendant only tried to revive the child, such an instruction was not necessary because the evidence showed either the charged crime or no crime. Bostic v. State, 284 Ga. 864, 672 S.E.2d 630 (2009).

Failure to charge specifically on reasonable discipline not error. — Implicit in the definition of “cruelty to children” found in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 is an element of unreasonableness, and a failure on the court’s part to charge specifically on reasonable discipline was not error. Allen v. State, 174 Ga. App. 206, 329 S.E.2d 586 (1985).

Failure to charge on simple battery.

— Trial court did not err in refusing to charge on simple battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23 as a lesser included offense of cruelty to children; there was no evidence to support the offense of simple battery because the defendant claimed that the child accidentally fell while the defendant was playing with the child. Moore v. State, 283 Ga. 151, 656 S.E.2d 796 (2008).

Failure to charge on battery. — Although the trial court should have given the defendant’s requested charge on battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23.1, since the evidence authorized a finding that the defendant intentionally caused substantial physical harm and visible bodily harm to the victims by beating the victims with a bat and a belt, the failure to give the battery charge was harmless error in light of the overwhelming evidence of the commission of the greater offense, cruelty to children, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70; the indictment alleged that the defendant unlawfully and maliciously caused the victims cruel and excessive physical and mental pain by striking the victims about the body with a belt and wooden bat. Dinkler v. State, 305 Ga. App. 444, 699 S.E.2d 541 (2010).

Failure to charge on reckless conduct. — When the defendants were charged with first-degree cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70 on the ground that the defendants had caused the victim physical and mental pain by binding the victim’s arms and legs, the trial court properly refused to charge on the lesser included offense of reckless conduct under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60(b). Reckless conduct involved bodily harm, not mental pain; furthermore, as the defendants claimed that the defendants had acted out of love to prevent the victim from using drugs, their theory of defense was one of justification, on which the trial court had instructed. Hafez v. State, 290 Ga. App. 800, 660 S.E.2d 787 (2008).

Trial court did not err in failing to charge the jury that malice was an essential element of either second-degree cruelty to children or family violence battery, as malice, prior to a 2004 amendment, was not an element of cruelty to children, and was not an element to the offense of family violence battery. Breazeale v. State, 290 Ga. App. 632, 660 S.E.2d 376 (2008).

Failure to object to jury charge waived error. — Appeals court rejected the defendant’s argument that the trial court erroneously instructed the jury on cruelty to children in the third degree because a proper charge would have required the jury to find that the defendant committed a forcible felony, battery, or family violence battery, as the defendant failed to object to the charge or reserve objections at the conclusion of the jury instructions, and hence, waived any error. Amis v. State, 277 Ga. App. 223, 626 S.E.2d 192 (2006).

Denying request to recharge jury on affirmative defenses not reversible error. — Because no abuse of discretion resulted from the trial court’s order denying defense counsel’s request that the court recharge the jury on the affirmative defenses of accident and reasonable discipline of a minor, but the court granted the jury’s request for a recharge as to the offenses of malice murder and felony murder, the defendant’s felony murder and cruelty to children convictions were affirmed. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. 770, 642 S.E.2d 827 (2007).

Jury instructions proper. — Because the trial court properly instructed the jury on the law regarding the use of prior consistent statements and on the defense of accident, the appeals court lacked any reason to reverse the defendant’s aggravated battery and cruelty to children convictions. Watkins v. State, 290 Ga. App. 41, 658 S.E.2d 812 (2008).

Cruel or excessive physical pain is jury question. — Determination of what is cruel or excessive physical or mental pain is to be made by the jury. Hopkins v. State, 209 Ga. App. 376, 434 S.E.2d 74 (1993); Sims v. State, 234 Ga. App. 678, 507 S.E.2d 845 (1998).

“Cruel” and “excessive” are adjectives

that inherently require a consideration of degree; the law does not set a bright line but leaves to the trier of fact, taking into account societal norms generally accepted, whether certain behavior inflicts "cruel" or "excessive" pain. Sims v. State, 234 Ga. App. 678, 507 S.E.2d 845 (1998).

Defendant's intent is a question of fact to be determined upon consideration of "words, conduct, demeanor, motive, and all other circumstances connected with the act for which the accused is prosecuted" under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-6, and the jury's finding is not to be set aside unless clearly erroneous. McGahee v. State, 170 Ga. App. 227, 316 S.E.2d 832 (1984).

Good character charge erroneous.

— In a prosecution for cruelty to children, a good character charge was erroneous as: 1) the charge failed to inform the jury that the defendant's good character was a substantive fact, and that evidence of good character had to be considered in connection with all other evidence; and 2) the charge failed to instruct the jury that good character in and of itself could be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to guilt. Hobbs v. State, 299 Ga. App. 521, 26, 27.

Inconsistent verdict not reversible error. — Conviction for cruelty to children was not the result of reversible error, even though defendant was acquitted of rape, false imprisonment, and sexual battery; Georgia does not recognize the inconsistent verdict rule. Wiggins v. State, 272 Ga. App. 414, 612 S.E.2d 598 (2005), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 280 Ga. 268, 626 S.E.2d 118 (2006).

Verdict not inconsistent. — Verdicts were not necessarily inconsistent where the defendant was acquitted of family violence battery but convicted of third-degree cruelty to children because: (1) the appellate court could not know, and should not speculate, why a jury acquitted a defendant on a predicate offense, but convicted on the compound offense; (2) the jury was authorized to believe an officer's testimony about a red mark under the victim's right eye that was caused by an altercation between the victim and the defendant which occurred in the presence of the victim's children; and (3) the victim's prior inconsistent statement was admissible as substantive evidence of the defendant's guilt. Amis v. State, 277 Ga. App. 223, 626 S.E.2d 192 (2006).

16-5-71. Tattooing.

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person to tattoo the body of any person under the age of 18, except that a physician or osteopath licensed under Chapter 34 of Title 43, or a technician acting under the direct supervision of such licensed physician or osteopath, and in compliance with Chapter 9 of Title 31 shall be authorized to mark or color the skin of any person under the age of 18 by pricking in coloring matter or by producing scars for medical or cosmetic purposes.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of subsection (a) of this Code section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. (Code 1981, § 16-5-71, enacted by Ga. L. 1987, p. 443, § 1; Ga. L. 1994, p. 446, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Tattooing the body of minor. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to sever the offenses of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1), aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), tattooing the body of a minor, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-71(a), and the defendant's motion for new trial on that basis because all of the sex offenses were similar and showed the defendant's common motive, plan, scheme, or bent of mind to satisfy the defendant's sexual desires, and the circumstances surrounding the tattooing offenses would have been admissible at the trial of the sex offenses to show the defendant's lustful disposition and bent of mind; the case was not so complex as to impair the jury's ability to distinguish the evidence and apply the law intelligently as to each offense. Boatright v. State, 308 Ga. App. 266, 707 S.E.2d 158 (2011).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Fingerprintable offense. — Tattooing a person under the age of 16 is an offense for which those charged with its violation are to be fingerprinted. 1987 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 87-21.

16-5-71.1. Piercing of the body.

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person to pierce the body, with the exception of the ear lobes, of any person under the age of 18 for the purpose of allowing the insertion of earrings, jewelry, or similar objects into the body, unless the prior written consent of a custodial parent or guardian of such minor is obtained; provided, however, that the prohibition contained in this subsection shall not apply if:

- (1) Such person has been furnished with proper identification showing that the individual is 18 years of age or older; and
- (2) The person reasonably believes such minor to be 18 years of age or older.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of subsection (a) of this Code section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. (Code 1981, § 16-5-71.1, enacted by Ga. L. 1996, p. 645, § 1.)

Cross references. — Tattooing studios, § 31-40-1 et seq.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Age certification. — Defendant's conviction of piercing the body of a person under the age of 18, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-71.1(a), was proper since the defendant did not verify that an individual was, in fact, 18 years of age before the defendant pierced the individual's tongue. At the time, the individual was 17 years old. Sparks v. State, 292 Ga. App. 143, 664 S.E.2d 247 (2008).

16-5-72. Reckless abandonment.

(a) A parent, guardian, or other person supervising the welfare of or having immediate charge or custody of a child under the age of one year commits the offense of reckless abandonment of a child when the person willfully and voluntarily physically abandons such child with the intention of severing all parental or custodial duties and responsibilities to such child and leaving such child in a condition which results in the death of said child.

(b) Any person who violates subsection (a) of this Code section shall be guilty of a felony and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 25 years. (Code 1981, § 16-5-72, enacted by Ga. L. 1989, p. 1605, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Evidence sufficient to sustain conviction. — Evidence that the death of a child occurred following the mother's placing the child in a trash bag after giving birth and then putting the bag on the front porch was sufficient to support the finding of a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-72. In re B.L.M., 228 Ga. App. 664, 492 S.E.2d 700 (1997).

16-5-73. Prohibition against presence of children during manufacture of methamphetamine; punishment.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term:

(1) "Chemical substance" means anhydrous ammonia, as defined in Code Section 16-11-111; ephedrine, pseudoephedrine, or phenylpropanolamine, as those terms are defined in Code Section 16-13-30.3; or any other chemical used in the manufacture of methamphetamine.

(2) "Child" means any individual who is under the age of 18 years.

(3) "Intent to manufacture" means but is not limited to the intent to manufacture methamphetamine, which may be demonstrated by a chemical substance's usage, quantity, or manner or method of storage, including but not limited to storing it in proximity to another chemical substance or equipment used to manufacture methamphetamine.

(4) "Methamphetamine" means methamphetamine, amphetamine, or any mixture containing either methamphetamine or amphetamine, as described in Code Section 16-13-26.

(5) "Serious injury" means an injury involving a broken bone, the loss of a member of the body, the loss of use of a member of the body, the substantial disfigurement of the body or of a member of the body, or an injury which is life threatening.

(b)(1) Any person who intentionally causes or permits a child to be present where any person is manufacturing methamphetamine or possessing a chemical substance with the intent to manufacture methamphetamine shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than two nor more than 15 years.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) of this subsection wherein a child receives serious injury as a result of such violation shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years. (Code 1981, § 16-5-73, enacted by Ga. L. 2004, p. 57, § 4; Ga. L. 2005, p. 60, § 16/HB 95.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2004, p. 57, § 6, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that the amendment by that Act shall apply to all crimes which occur on or after July 1, 2004.

ARTICLE 6 FETICIDE

16-5-80. Feticide; voluntary manslaughter of an unborn child; penalties.

(a) For the purposes of this Code section, the term "unborn child" means a member of the species homo sapiens at any stage of development who is carried in the womb.

(b) A person commits the offense of feticide if he or she willfully and without legal justification causes the death of an unborn child by any injury to the mother of such child, which would be murder if it resulted in the death of such mother, or if he or she, when in the commission of a felony, causes the death of an unborn child.

(c) A person convicted of the offense of feticide shall be punished by imprisonment for life.

(d) A person commits the offense of voluntary manslaughter of an unborn child when such person causes the death of an unborn child under circumstances which would otherwise be feticide and if such person acts solely as the result of a sudden, violent, and irresistible passion resulting from serious provocation sufficient to excite such passion in a reasonable person; provided, however, that, if there should have been an interval between the provocation and the killing sufficient for the voice of reason and humanity to be heard, of which the jury in all cases shall be the judge, the killing shall be attributed to deliberate revenge and be punished as feticide.

(e) A person convicted of the offense of voluntary manslaughter of an unborn child shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than 20 years.

(f) Nothing in this Code section shall be construed to permit the prosecution of:

(1) Any person for conduct relating to an abortion for which the consent of the pregnant woman, or person authorized by law to act on her behalf, has been obtained or for which such consent is implied by law;

(2) Any person for any medical treatment of the pregnant woman or her unborn child; or

(3) Any woman with respect to her unborn child. (Code 1981, § 16-5-80, enacted by Ga. L. 1982, p. 2499, § 1; Ga. L. 2006, p. 643, § 2/SB 77.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2006, p. 643, § 5, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that the amendment by that Act shall apply to all offenses committed on or after July 1, 2006.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80 informs all of what actions the state prohibits with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand and thus is not unconstitutionally vague. Brinkley v. State, 253 Ga. 541, 322 S.E.2d 49 (1984).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80 is not unconstitutionally vague, since the case law of Georgia has long adopted the common-law understanding of "quick": when the fetus is so far developed as to be capable of movement within the mother's womb. Smith v. Newsome, 815 F.2d 1386 (11th Cir. 1987).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80 is not unconstitutional either because there is no unlawful taking of a human life or because an unborn child is not a "person" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, a proposition that is simply immaterial in the present context to whether a state can prohibit the destruction of a fetus. Smith v. Newsome, 815 F.2d 1386 (11th Cir. 1987).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80 does not violate equal protection by creating two classifications that are arbitrary and capricious; although O.C.G.A. § 16-12-140 punishes the offense of criminal abortion with imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than 10 years, while O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80 requires a life sentence, the distinction between the sentences required O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80 section and the abortion statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-12-140, is rationally related to legitimate governmental purposes. Smith v. Newsome, 815 F.2d 1386 (11th Cir. 1987).

Government not required to develop exculpatory evidence for de- fense. — In a case in which defendant was convicted of murdering defendant's girlfriend and an unborn child in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1111, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80, incorporated by 18 U.S.C. § 13, and 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(1) and (j), defendant's argument that the defendant's due process rights were violated because the case investigators intentionally and calculatingly refused to develop information which might implicate other suspects was without merit. The government was not required to develop exculpatory evidence for the defense. United States v. Natson, No. 07-11433, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 11228 (11th Cir. May 6, 2008) (Unpublished).

Merger with aggravated assault. — Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) and feticide in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-80(a) did not merge for sentencing purposes because the victim of the aggravated assault was the defendant's girlfriend, while the victim of the feticide was the girlfriend's unborn child; the merger doctrine does not apply if each of the charged crimes was committed against a different victim. Carmichael v. State, 305 Ga. App. 651, 700 S.E.2d 650 (2010).

Cited in Billingsley v. State, 183 Ga. App. 850, 360 S.E.2d 451 (1987); Bradshaw v. State, 284 Ga. 675, 671 S.E.2d 485 (2008).

16-5-90. Stalking; psychological evaluation.

(a)(1) A person commits the offense of stalking when he or she follows, places under surveillance, or contacts another person at or about a place or places without the consent of the other person for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the other person. For the purpose of this article, the terms "computer" and "computer network" shall have the same meanings as set out in Code Section 16-9-92; the term "contact" shall mean any communication including without being limited to communication in person, by telephone, by mail, by broadcast, by computer, by computer network, or by any other electronic device; and the place or places that contact by telephone, mail, broadcast, computer, computer network, or any other electronic device is deemed to occur shall be the place or places where such communication is received. For the purpose of this article, the term "place or places" shall include any public or private property occupied by the victim other than the residence of the defendant. For the purposes of this article, the term "harassing and intimidating" means a knowing and willful course of conduct directed at a specific person which causes emotional distress by placing such person in reasonable fear for such person's safety or the safety of a member of his or her immediate family, by establishing a pattern of harassing and intimidating behavior, and which serves no legitimate purpose. This Code section shall not be construed to require that an overt threat of death or bodily injury has been made.

(2) A person commits the offense of stalking when such person, in violation of a bond to keep the peace posted pursuant to Code Section 17-6-110, standing order issued under Code Section 19-1-1, temporary restraining order, temporary protective order, permanent restraining order, permanent protective order, preliminary injunction, or permanent injunction or condition of pretrial release, condition of probation, or condition of parole in effect prohibiting the harassment or intimidation of another person, broadcasts or publishes, including electronic publication, the picture, name, address, or phone number of a person for whose benefit the bond, order, or condition was made and without such person's consent in such a manner that causes other persons to harass or intimidate such person and the person making the broadcast or publication knew or had reason to believe that such broadcast or publication would cause such person to be harassed or intimidated by others.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (c) of this Code section, a person who commits the offense of stalking is guilty of a misdemeanor.

(c) Upon the second conviction, and all subsequent convictions, for stalking, the defendant shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than ten years.

(d) Before sentencing a defendant for any conviction of stalking under this Code section or aggravated stalking under Code Section 16-5-91, the sentencing judge may require psychological evaluation of the offender and shall consider the entire criminal record of the offender. At the time of sentencing, the judge is authorized to issue a permanent restraining order against the offender to protect the person stalked and the members of such person's immediate family, and the judge is authorized to require psychological treatment of the offender as a part of the sentence, or as a condition for suspension or stay of sentence, or for probation. (Code 1981, § 16-5-90, enacted by Ga. L. 1993, p. 1534, § 1; Ga. L. 1998, p. 885, § 1; Ga. L. 2000, p. 1283, § 1.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1998, p. 885, § 4, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that the 1998 amendment was applicable to conduct occurring or allegedly occurring on or after July 1, 1998.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90 is not unconstitutionally vague or overbroad. Johnson v. State, 264 Ga. 590, 449 S.E.2d 94 (1994).

Amendments. — When defendant's indictment, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a), prohibiting aggravated stalking, referenced instances of defendant's stalking behavior against the victim occurring within a single week, these acts evinced a pattern of prohibited behavior criminalized by the amended version of § 16-5-90(a), so the amendment did not render defendant's indictment void. Daker v. Williams, 279 Ga. 782, 621 S.E.2d 449 (2005).

When O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-90 and 16-5-91, regarding aggravated stalking, were amended without including a savings clause, before a final judgment was entered on defendant's convictions under the statutes, this did not invalidate those convictions because defendant was convicted of twice contacting the victim at the victim's home in violation of a condition of pretrial release, to harass and intimidate the victim, which was a crime both under the statutes' old version and under their amended version; under the amended statutes, aggravated stalking was committed when a person, "in violation of a condition of pretrial release contacts another person at or about a place or places without the consent of the other person for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the other person." Daker v. Williams, 279 Ga. 782, 621 S.E.2d 449 (2005).

Jurisdiction. — Family Violence Act, O.C.G.A. § 19-13-1 et seq., gave Georgia courts jurisdiction over a nonresident only if the act with which the nonresident was charged met the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 9-10-91(2), (3); further, the conduct giving rise to the offense occurred when the maker of the call spoke into the telephone; a parent's daily calls to Georgia from another state to speak to the parent's child or when the parent made the calls that allegedly threatened and harassed the other parent did not confer jurisdiction in Georgia. Anderson v. Deas, 279 Ga. App. 892, 632 S.E.2d 682 (2006).

Venue properly established. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict after a jury found the defendant guilty of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) because the evidence authorized the jury to find that venue in Lowndes County was properly established; the victim and the victim's family resided in Lowndes County, and the victim's mother testified that the defendant had sent the letter to their residence and that the letter was retrieved from the mailbox at their residence. Bowen v. State, 304 Ga. App. 819, 697 S.E.2d 898 (2010).

Statute does not create private cause of action. — Although O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90 establishes the public policy of the state, nothing in its provisions creates a private cause of action in tort in favor of the victim. Troncalli v. Jones, 237 Ga. App.

10, 514 S.E.2d 478 (1999); Hopkinson v. Hopkinson, 239 Ga. App. 518, 521 S.E.2d 453 (1999).

Sufficiency of indictment. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss an indictment that charged the defendant with aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), although the language used did not mention that the defendant's actions were intended to "intimidate" the victim, as such was implicit in the indictment where acts in violation of that statute which were allegedly done unlawfully were inferred to have been done for the purpose of harassing and intimidating and the definition of "harassing and intimidating" was singular pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1). Phillips v. State, 278 Ga. App. 198, 628 S.E.2d 631 (2006).

Harassing and intimidating conduct required. — Defendant's single violation of a permanent protective order was insufficient to prove aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), which required a showing of a pattern of harassing and intimidating conduct as defined in the simple stalking statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1). State v. Burke, 287 Ga. 377, 695 S.E.2d 649 (2010).

Attempt to commit stalking a crime. — Stalking is not "in essence a common law assault"; while the crimes may overlap in some circumstances, the rationale for not punishing an attempted assault does not apply to an attempted stalking which is the attempt to follow, place under surveillance, or contact another person; reversing Rooks v. State, 217 Ga. App. 643, 458 S.E.2d 667 (1995). State v. Rooks, 266 Ga. 528, 468 S.E.2d 354 (1996).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — See Hooper v. State, 223 Ga. App. 515, 478 S.E.2d 606 (1996); Hall v. State, 226 Ga. App. 380, 487 S.E.2d 41 (1997); Jerusheba v. State, 226 Ga. App. 696, 487 S.E.2d 465 (1997).

There was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of stalking; given defendant's history of violence toward the victim, the defendant's spouse, a jury could have found that defendant's actions at the health center, of following the victim in defendant's vehicle after the victim left the center, yelling at the victim, impeding the victim's movement, forcing the victim into oncoming lanes of traffic, and, on several occasions, bumping the victim's car, were intended to, and did, harass or intimidate the victim. Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 413, 579 S.E.2d 809 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction on a charge of aggravated stalking, as the evidence showed that defendant, without consent, sought to harass and intimidate defendant's former love interest, and that in order to do so, defendant violated a judicial order to stay away from defendant's former love interest, defendant contacted the former love interest by continuously telephoning the former love interest, and defendant appeared at the former love interest's apartment uninvited. Stevens v. State, 261 Ga. App. 73, 581 S.E.2d 685 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for stalking, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1), because defendant admitted that defendant went to a former love interest's place of employment and home, and the love interest did not consent to either visit and was frightened by both; defendant's intent to harass or intimidate was inferred from the circumstances, as defendant had a prior physical abuse history with the victim, it was late and he intended to contact the victim when the victim was alone, and threatened to kill the victim and the victim's spouse. Thomas v. State, 276 Ga. App. 79, 622 S.E.2d 421 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal as to two aggravated stalking charges, despite claims that: (1) the state failed to prove the defendant acted for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the victim; and (2) the defendant lacked the requisite intent to commit the crimes, as the former argument attacked the credibility of the witnesses, which the appeals court did not weigh, and, regarding the latter argument, the intention with which an act was committed was a jury question. Chatham v. State, 280 Ga. App. 695, 634 S.E.2d 856 (2006).

Aggravated stalking conviction was upheld on appeal, supported by sufficient evidence that the defendant continued to harass the victim and the victim's family, specifically, the victim's two daughters, despite a no contact order made part of the defendant's bond conditions, and that when coupled with a history of doing such, the defendant's actions harassed and intimidated the victims and placed them in fear for their safety. Hennessey v. State, 282 Ga. App. 857, 640 S.E.2d 362 (2006).

Appeals court rejected the defendant's claim that the state failed to show any intent to harass or intimidate the victim as the evidence demonstrated that the defendant violated an order prohibiting any contact with the victim by persistently calling the victim, sending the victim cards, showing up at the victim's home, and leaving the victim notes; moreover, given the history of these persistent, disturbing actions, and the defendant's refusal to leave the victim alone, a rational jury could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that such acts were intended to harass and intimidate the victim. Patterson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 780, 645 S.E.2d 38 (2007).

Evidence supported the defendant's stalking conviction because sufficient evidence showed that the defendant, over the victim's objection, followed and surveilled the victim while the victim was at work, with no valid reason for being anywhere near there, and because that caused the victim emotional distress and fear. Kilby v. State, 289 Ga. App. 457, 657 S.E.2d 567 (2008).

Testimony from a stalking victim that when the victim was contacted by the defendant by phone and realized that the defendant was not in jail the victim's heart dropped, and the victim became fearful of going outside because of threats the defendant made against the victim, established that the defendant was harassing and intimidating the victim as defined in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1). Davidson v. State, 295 Ga. App. 702, 673 S.E.2d 91 (2009).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1) as the defendant contacted the victim's employer to accuse the victim of making sexual suggestions, and the defendant also contacted the police in connection with an alleged hit-and-run by the victim in order to intentionally send a message to the victim; the evidence showed that the defendant acted in that way with the intent to harass or intimidate the victim. Harvill v. State, 296 Ga. App. 453, 674 S.E.2d 659 (2009).

Convictions of arson, O.C.G.A. § 16-7-60(a), and stalking, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90, were proper because the circumstantial evidence presented at trial included a kerosene-soaked, partially burned, mailing label addressed to the defendant found at the scene of a fire at the victim's home; the jury was entitled to infer from this evidence that the defendant left a virtual "calling card." The state also presented evidence of the defendant's escalating obsession with the victim and the threatening phone calls the defendant made to the victim shortly before the fire. Ransom v. State, 297 Ga. App. 902, 678 S.E.2d 574 (2009).

Evidence that defendant, the victim's eighth grade teacher, repeatedly attempted to communicate with the victim after the victim broke up with the defendant, including showing up at the victim's work and gym, leaving signs posted along the road the victim used, and sending the victim many text messages was sufficient to convict the defendant of stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(b). Placanica v. State, 303 Ga. App. 302, 693 S.E.2d 571 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict after a jury found the defendant guilty of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) because evidence of the defendant's continuing unauthorized contacts with the victim and repeated violations of restraining orders established a pattern of harassing behavior; a permanent restraining order had been entered that prohibited the defendant from having any contact with the victim, but the defendant violated that order by sending a letter to the victim that caused the victim to fear for the victim's own family and that of the victim's family. Bowen v. State, 304 Ga. App. 819, 697 S.E.2d 898 (2010).

When the victim obtained a protective order against the defendant after the defendant forced the victim into a house and ripped the engagement ring off the victim's finger, the victim's brake lines were also cut three times and the victim's tires were slashed; a surveillance video was played at trial and the victim identified the man bending over the tires as defendant; thus, the evidence was sufficient for the jury to convict the defendant of two counts of aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-90(a) and 16-5-91 and criminal trespass to property. Reed v. State, No. A10A2097, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 252 (Mar. 23, 2011).

Evidence insufficient for conviction. — Evidence was insufficient to support a defendant juvenile's adjudication of delinquency for stalking as: (1) a truck in which the defendant juvenile was riding drove into a deputy sheriff's driveway and sat in front of the house for a minute or a minute and a half; (2) neither the deputy sheriff nor the deputy sheriff's spouse testified that they were afraid or that this caused them any emotional distress; and (3) there was no evidence that the deputy sheriff or the deputy sheriff's spouse were harassed or intimidated. In the Interest of C.C., 280 Ga. App. 590, 634 S.E.2d 532 (2006).

Trial court erred in convicting the defendant of stalking because the state failed to establish a course of conduct or pattern of behavior required by O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1); the defendant's act of following the victim in the victim's vehicle to a store and watching the victim going into and out of the store fell short of demonstrating the requisite pattern of harassing and intimidating behavior. Autry v. State, 306 Ga. App. 125, 701 S.E.2d 596 (2010).

Summary judgment on stalking denied. — Even though the appellee admitted to committing certain acts which satisfied some of the elements under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90, based on a denial of the intent required under the statute, no abuse resulted in denying the appellant injunctive relief and setting the case for a bench trial. Anderson v. Mergenhagen, 283 Ga. App. 546, 642 S.E.2d 105 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for protective order. — Entry of a protective order in favor of a resident against a neighbor was supported by evidence that the neighbor had blared loud music at the resident's home, put a hand in the resident's trousers or grabbed the resident's crotch and made lewd motions towards the resident, and once gestured in this way towards the resident's child and a visitor. De Louis v. Sheppard, 277 Ga. App. 768, 627 S.E.2d 846 (2006).

Protective order against a former wife was warranted under the Family Violence Act, O.C.G.A. § 19-13-1, because there was sufficient evidence that she committed the predicate act of stalking her former husband under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90 by hiring a detective to follow him, by harassing him at his place of work, and by sending him threatening text messages. Quinby v. Rausch, 300 Ga. App. 424, 685 S.E.2d 395 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90 to support the entry of a stalking twelve-month protective order pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-94(d) against the defendant because the defendant contacted the victim via abusive emails numerous times and placed the victim under surveillance on several occasions without the victim's consent, and the frequency and nature of the defendant's contact and surveillance was such that the trial court could conclude that it was done for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the victim; there was also sufficient evidence that the contact and surveillance put the victim in reasonable fear for the victim's safety. Thornton v. Hemphill, 300 Ga. App. 647, 686 S.E.2d 263 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0413, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 342 (Ga. 2010).

Trial court did not err in granting a protective order under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1) against a foster parent who had placed a family under extensive surveillance through a combination of internet searches and third party observations of the family's home and contacted law enforcement, causing groundless investigations. The foster parent was not immune from liability under O.C.G.A. § 19-7-5(f) because the foster parent had not received any information that a child in the home had been subjected to abuse. Owen v. Watts, 307 Ga. App. 493, 705 S.E.2d 852 (2010).

Evidence insufficient for protective order. — Because a fire chief's actions taken against certain fire department employees did not constitute stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1), but were committed for the legitimate purpose of physical training and arose during legitimate training activities, the issuance of a permanent restraining order against the fire chief for those activities amounted to an abuse of discretion. Pilcher v. Stribling, 282 Ga. 166, 647 S.E.2d 8 (2007).

Evidence insufficient for protective order protecting priest against parishioner. — Trial court abused the court's discretion by granting a priest a stalking protective order against a former church organist as the priest never indicated fear for the priest's safety as a result of the former organist's disruptive and interfering behavior. Rather, the priest indicated weariness with regard to the former organist's behavior and that the behavior was interfering with the life of the parish, which was insufficient to justify the issuance of the protective order. Sinclair v. Daly, 295 Ga. App. 613, 672 S.E.2d 672 (2009).

Determining another incident of stalking. — Given that the defendant engaged for several years in a consistent pattern of abuse and harassment against defendant's daughter, a rational trier of fact could find that defendant's surveillance of her on another incident date evidenced yet another abusive, harassing act. Benton v. State, 256 Ga. App. 620, 568 S.E.2d 770 (2002).

Revocation of the bond of a person charged with stalking lies within the discretion of the trial judge; however, because a bond revocation involves the deprivation of one's liberty the decision must comport with at least minimal state and federal due process requirements. Hood v. Carsten, 267 Ga. 579, 481 S.E.2d 525 (1997).

Protective orders. — Publishing or discussing the former girlfriend's medical condition with others was not stalking since it did not threaten her or her family's safety; therefore, the prohibition in the protective order exceeded the statutory scope of authority. Collins v. Bazan, 256 Ga. App. 164, 568 S.E.2d 72 (2002).

Evidence that defendant, over the high school student's objections, repeatedly placed the student under surveillance, took pictures of the student, and shouted at the student was sufficient to show defendant was stalking the student and justified the entry of a protective order against defendant. Johnson v. Smith, 260 Ga. App. 722, 580 S.E.2d 674 (2003).

Protective order based on the anti-stalking statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1), was not supported by sufficient evidence where statements made by the child off the record to the trial court could not be used to uphold the trial court's decision; similarly, a letter written to the trial court by the child constituted hearsay without probative value, and the testimony of an officer and the parent was rank hearsay that lacked any probative value. Allen v. Clerk, 273 Ga. App. 896, 616 S.E.2d 213 (2005).

Violation of protective order. — There was sufficient evidence to support convictions for stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90 and aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) because defendant contacted the defendant's love interest in violation of a temporary restraining order, with the requisite intent, by sending two letters that the victim received after the protection order was granted, and the state established that defendant's conduct was for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the love interest; a rational jury could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that such acts were intended to harass and intimidate and reasonably placed the victim in fear for the victim's safety. Maskivish v. State, 276 Ga. App. 701, 624 S.E.2d 160 (2005).

Merger. — In a trial in which defendant was convicted of two counts of stalking, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1), they did not merge because they were based on factually distinct acts that occurred in different places and at different times; defendant had parked at the victim's place of employment and then a short time later, parked at the victim's home. Thomas v. State, 276 Ga. App. 79, 622 S.E.2d 421 (2005).

Jury instruction that omitted "intimidating." — Jury instruction on the offense of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), which omitted the word "intimidating" from the charge, was not error because the trial court defined the term "harassing" in accordance with the statutory definition of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1), and accordingly, the jury was informed of that element by way of definition; the omission was inconsequential and the charge, viewed as a whole, was not likely to mislead or confuse the jury. Phillips v. State, 278 Ga. App. 198, 628 S.E.2d 631 (2006).

Counsel not ineffective. — Defendant's stalking convictions were upheld on appeal, given that trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to present the testimony from a second psychiatrist regarding the defendant's mental condition, as the defendant failed to show how testimony from a second psychiatrist would have aided the defense, and a request for recharge alone did not prove that the jury was confused on the issue of the defendant's mental condition or that counsel had not provided them with sufficient evidence concerning it. Albert v. State, 283 Ga. App. 79, 640 S.E.2d 670 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim did not warrant a new trial in a prosecution for rape, kidnapping, aggravated stalking, and two counts of stalking; because of the limited nature of a challenged witnesses' trial testimony, defense counsel made a strategic decision not to seek recusal of the trial judge, who was the brother of the challenged witness, and counsel discussed with the defendant the reasons for not seeking recusal. Pirkle v. State, 289 Ga. App. 450, 657 S.E.2d 560 (2008).

Lack of record that oath was administered did not constitute reversible error. — On appeal from a stalking conviction, because the record failed to show that the oath was not administered to the jury, no reversible error existed, and the appeals court had to presume that the jury was sworn. Benton v. State, 286 Ga. App. 736, 649 S.E.2d 793 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 753 (Ga. 2007).

16-5-91. Aggravated stalking.

(a) A person commits the offense of aggravated stalking when such person, in violation of a bond to keep the peace posted pursuant to Code Section 17-6-110, temporary restraining order, temporary protective order, permanent restraining order, permanent protective order, preliminary injunction, good behavior bond, or permanent injunction or condition of pretrial release, condition of probation, or condition of parole in effect prohibiting the behavior described in this subsection, follows, places under surveillance, or contacts another person at or about a place or places without the consent of the other person for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the other person.

(b) Any person convicted of a violation of subsection (a) of this Code section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years and by a fine of not more than $10,000.00. The provisions of subsection (d) of Code Section 16-5-90 apply to sentencing for conviction of aggravated stalking. (Code 1981, § 16-5-91, enacted by Ga. L. 1993, p. 1534, § 1; Ga. L. 1995, p. 911, § 1; Ga. L. 1998, p. 885, § 2; Ga. L. 2002, p. 862, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Double jeopardy. — State may not prosecute a defendant for aggravated stalking based upon the same set of facts previously used to prosecute the same defendant for violation of a domestic violence order. Kinney v. State, 223 Ga. App. 418, 477 S.E.2d 843 (1996).

When a defendant was indicted for aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) in violation of a protective order issued under O.C.G.A. § 19-13-4, a criminal contempt proceeding based on the same incident could trigger the double jeopardy clause of the Fifth Amendment. The protective order violation contained no elements not contained in the criminal offense; furthermore, the protective order specifically enjoined the defendant from surveilling the subject of the order for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the subject as also proscribed by § 16-5-91(a). Tanks v. State, 292 Ga. App. 177, 663 S.E.2d 812 (2008).

Defendant's convictions for two counts of aggravated stalking based on the defendant following and contacting the victim did not merge for sentencing purposes because there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find that the defendant, in violation of a protective order, both followed the victim to a hotel and then contacted the victim; the act of following was complete when the defendant arrived at the premises of the hotel because at that time the defendant violated the protective order by coming within 500 feet of a place where the victim was residing. Louisyr v. State, 307 Ga. App. 724, 706 S.E.2d 114 (2011).

Sufficiency of indictment. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss an indictment that charged the defendant with aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), although the language used did not mention that the defendant's actions were intended to "intimidate" the victim, as such was implicit in the indictment where acts in violation of that statute which were allegedly done unlawfully were inferred to have been done for the purpose of harassing and intimidating and the definition of "harassing and intimidating" was singular pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1). Phillips v. State, 278 Ga. App. 198, 628 S.E.2d 631 (2006).

As to the offense of aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), the defendant unsuccessfully argued that because the indictment incorrectly alleged violation of a protective order, rather than a bond condition, the indictment was flawed; the type of prohibition was not material, only that defendant knew that a court order barred the defendant from following or contacting the victim. Fields v. State, 281 Ga. App. 733, 637 S.E.2d 136 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Indictment was sufficient because the indictment closely tracked the language of the aggravated stalking statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), and clearly informed the defendant that the defendant was charged with inappropriately affirmatively contacting the victim in violation of a prior order. Gaston v. State, 303 Ga. App. 502, 693 S.E.2d 841 (2010).

Meaning of “contact.” — Term “contact” is readily understood by people of ordinary intelligence as meaning to get in touch with or to communicate; indictment that tracked the contact language of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91 was not void for vagueness. Kinney v. State, 223 Ga. App. 418, 477 S.E.2d 843 (1996).

Construction of word “follow”. — Given that the word “follow” in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91 is not a term of art, but instead is a word of common understanding and meaning, the term includes a person going to a place to which he or she knows or believes another has gone and at which the other person may be found. Louisyr v. State, 307 Ga. App. 724, 706 S.E.2d 114 (2011).

Acts constituting “contact.” — Act of defendant in driving slowly by the victim’s home on a dead-end street where defendant had no business constituted “contact” within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91. Wright v. State, 232 Ga. App. 646, 502 S.E.2d 756 (1998).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant’s convictions for stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90 and aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) because defendant contacted the defendant’s love interest in violation of a temporary restraining order, with the requisite intent, by sending two letters that the victim received after the protection order was granted, and the state established that defendant’s conduct was for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the defendant’s love interest; a rational jury could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that such acts were intended to harass and intimidate and reasonably placed the victim in fear for the victim’s safety. Maskivish v. State, 276 Ga. App. 701, 624 S.E.2d 160 (2005).

Venue properly established. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant’s motion for a directed verdict after a jury found the defendant guilty of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) because the evidence authorized the jury to find that venue in Lowndes County was properly established; the victim and the victim’s family resided in Lowndes County, and the victim’s mother testified that the defendant had sent the letter to their residence and that the letter was retrieved from the mailbox at their residence. Bowen v. State, 304 Ga. App. 819, 697 S.E.2d 898 (2010).

No requirement to prove actual notice of no contact order. — State’s proof that a no contact order had been issued against the defendant regarding the victim was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91, as proof of actual notice of the no contact order was not required. Revere v. State, 277 Ga. App. 393, 626 S.E.2d 585 (2006).

Single incident of stalking insufficient. — Defendant’s single violation of a permanent protective order was insufficient to prove aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), which required a showing of a pattern of harassing and intimidating conduct as defined in the simple stalking statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1). State v. Burke, 287 Ga. 377, 695 S.E.2d 649 (2010).

Single contact sufficient for conviction. — Evidence was sufficient to prove that the defendant engaged in a pattern of harassing and intimidating behavior, which culminated in a violation of a protective order, because the jury was entitled to find from the evidence that the defendant arranged for a family friend to contact the victim, who was the defendant’s wife, since the defendant knew the defendant was prohibited from doing so, that the men planned for the friend to lure the victim to Georgia with a false offer of assistance, and that they agreed the friend would retrieve the victim from a domestic violence shelter for the purpose of driving her to a hotel; by its plain terms, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91 prohibits even a single violation of a protective order, if that violation is part of a pattern of harassing and intimidating behavior. Louisyr v. State, 307 Ga. App. 724, 706 S.E.2d 114 (2011).

Amendments. — When O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-90 and 16-5-91, regarding aggravated stalking, were amended without including a savings clause, before a final judgment was entered on defendant’s convictions under the statutes, this did not invalidate those convictions because defendant was convicted of twice contacting the victim at home in violation of a condition of pretrial release, to harass and intimidate the victim, which was a crime both under the statutes' old version and under their amended version; under the amended statutes, aggravated stalking was committed when a person, "in violation of a condition of pretrial release contacts another person at or about a place or places without the consent of the other person for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the other person." Daker v. Williams, 279 Ga. 782, 621 S.E.2d 449 (2005).

Phone contact. may be sufficient prohibited contact to establish aggravated stalking. Murden v. State, 258 Ga. App. 585, 574 S.E.2d 657 (2002).

Bond condition. — Condition of a pretrial bond issued in a criminal matter providing that defendant stay away from his ex-wife and her residence was appropriate and reasonable under the facts and did not constitute an abuse of the court's discretion. Camphor v. State, 272 Ga. 408, 529 S.E.2d 121 (2000).

Impact of which judge issues restraining order. — Defendant's stalking convictions, based on violations of a permanent restraining order (PRO), were not invalid on grounds the PRO was issued by a magistrate judge, as the chief judge of the superior court, as authorized by O.C.G.A. § 15-1-9.1(b)(2), had requested magistrates to assist the superior court by hearing petitions under the Georgia Stalking Statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-94. Seibert v. State, 294 Ga. App. 202, 670 S.E.2d 109 (2008).

Liability of neighbors for malicious prosecution on stalking offense. — Neighbors of a homeowner were properly held liable for malicious prosecution because the neighbors instigated a homeowner's arrest on charges of aggravated stalking despite the homeowner's not having any deliberate contact with the neighbors and the neighbors' admission that the homeowner did not cause the neighbors fear by walking past the neighbors to the homeowner's children's bus stop. Turnage v. Kasper, 307 Ga. App. 172, 704 S.E.2d 842 (2010).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — See Hooper v. State, 223 Ga. App. 515, 478 S.E.2d 606 (1996); Littleton v. State, 225 Ga. App. 900, 485 S.E.2d 230 (1997); Fly v. State, 229 Ga. App. 374, 494 S.E.2d 95 (1997), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 850, 119 S. Ct. 125, 142 L. Ed. 2d 101 (1998); Jones v. State, 239 Ga. App. 733, 521 S.E.2d 883 (1999); Jagat v. State, 240 Ga. App. 822, 525 S.E.2d 388 (1999); Daker v. State, 243 Ga. App. 848, 533 S.E.2d 393 (2000), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 1093, 122 S. Ct. 838, 151 L. Ed. 2d 717 (2002); Davis v. State, 244 Ga. App. 715, 536 S.E.2d 603 (2000).

Evidence showing that defendant entered his ex-girlfriend's home without permission, threatened her, cut her with a knife, fled, returned later, opened her front door, threatened her, left again, and then called the victim and made more threats, all while being subject to a probation condition which required him to stay away from the victim, was sufficient to support his convictions on two counts of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a). Withers v. State, 254 Ga. App. 833, 563 S.E.2d 912 (2002).

Evidence that the defendant caused his ex-wife great distress by repeatedly contacting and threatening her, including calling her at work and home and coming to her home and workplace carrying weapons, in violation of the defendant's probation, was sufficient to establish aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a). Murden v. State, 258 Ga. App. 585, 574 S.E.2d 657 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated stalking and aggravated battery as the victim, the defendant's spouse, had just parked at a supermarket when defendant ran a vehicle into the victim's vehicle, defendant then approached the victim, threatened to kill the victim, opened the door, grabbed and twisted the victim's wrist, and punched the victim's nose, breaking it; on the date of the incident, a permanent protective order was in effect prohibiting defendant from contacting the victim or the victim's family, or touching or damaging their property. Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 413, 579 S.E.2d 809 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated stalking, as the evidence showed that defendant, without consent, engaged in conduct which was intended to harass and intimidate defendant's former love interest, including the violation of a court order, continuously telephoning the former love interest, and showing up at the former love interest's apartment uninvited. Stevens v. State, 261 Ga. App. 73, 581 S.E.2d 685 (2003).

Because defendant contacted and threatened defendant's spouse and attacked a person who was protecting the spouse from defendant, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a). Miller v. State, 273 Ga. App. 171, 614 S.E.2d 796 (2005), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 90 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant's convictions of aggravated stalking, burglary, aggravated assault, and false imprisonment, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-91, 16-7-1, 16-5-21, and 16-5-41, were supported by sufficient evidence because, despite the victim's recantation at trial, the victim stated to police earlier that defendant broke into the victim's apartment, scratched and damaged furniture and other property, tied the victim up, locked the victim in the bedroom for several hours, harmed the victim, threatened that defendant and defendant's friends were going to lock the victim in a basement for a few months, and defendant had been waiting for the victim to arrive home. Andrews v. State, 275 Ga. App. 426, 620 S.E.2d 629 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to find the defendant guilty of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) where the defendant had assaulted the defendant's love interest on numerous occasions and continued to show up at the victim's work place, which caused the victim to lose several jobs. Lloyd v. State, 280 Ga. 187, 625 S.E.2d 771 (2006).

Evidence sufficiently supported a conviction for aggravated stalking, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), based on consistent calls to the victim, who was the defendant's spouse, that were intended to "harass and intimidate" the spouse as those terms were defined in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1), prior conduct of threats and abusiveness during their marriage; the spouse had filed for divorce and obtained a restraining order against the defendant, but the defendant continued to contact the spouse by leaving messages on the spouse's telephone at work which contained both loving messages as well as threats. Phillips v. State, 278 Ga. App. 198, 628 S.E.2d 631 (2006).

Defendant's aggravated stalking conviction was upheld on appeal, and a new trial was properly denied, as sufficient evidence of the defendant's contact with the victim, in violation of a protective order, and acts of harassment and intimidation supported the same; moreover, the failure to object to the state's of similar transaction evidence waived any consideration of the same on appeal. Kennedy v. State, 279 Ga. App. 415, 631 S.E.2d 462 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal as to two aggravated stalking charges, despite claims that: (1) the state failed to prove the defendant acted for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the victim; and (2) the defendant lacked the requisite intent to commit the crimes, as the former argument attacked the credibility of the witnesses, which the appeals court did not weigh, and, regarding the latter argument, the intention with which an act was committed was a jury question. Chatham v. State, 280 Ga. App. 695, 634 S.E.2d 856 (2006).

Aggravated stalking conviction was upheld on appeal, supported by sufficient evidence that the defendant continued to harass the victim and the victim's family, specifically, the victim's two daughters, despite a no contact order made part of the defendant's bond conditions, and that when coupled with a history of doing such, the defendant's actions harassed and intimidated the victims and placed them in fear for their safety. Hennessey v. State, 282 Ga. App. 857, 640 S.E.2d 362 (2006).

Because sufficient evidence existed that the defendant suddenly appeared in a public place and pointed a gun at a companion who was in the company of the defendant's wife, towards whom the defendant had expressed hostility in the past, the jury was authorized to find beyond a reasonable doubt that this purpose was to harass and intimidate the wife; hence, an aggravated stalking charge was supported by sufficient evidence. Ford v.

Defendant's two aggravated stalking convictions were affirmed on appeal, given the sufficiency of the evidence demonstrating that the defendant made two harassing and threatening telephone calls to the victim that caused the victim to panic and feel afraid that the defendant was going to kidnap the defendant's son and hurt or kill the victim in the process; moreover, the admission of testimony from a state's witness on an ultimate issue was harmless, and the defendant waived any error to the introduction of an alleged autobiographical letter on authentication grounds. Shafer v. State, 285 Ga. App. 748, 647 S.E.2d 274 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 642 (Ga. 2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support an aggravated stalking conviction when, despite protective orders and a no-contact order, defendant continued to communicate with defendant's spouse, causing the spouse to fear for the spouse's safety, and although defendant claimed that defendant's intent was to rekindle the parties' marriage, not to intimidate and harass, intent was a question of fact for the jury. Holmes v. State, 291 Ga. App. 196, 661 S.E.2d 603 (2008).

Evidence that the defendant entered uninvited into his ex-wife's home, kicked open the bedroom door where his ex-wife was asleep with her boyfriend, laid across the victims, grabbed their throats, and threatened them, in violation of the terms of a condition of bond issued in a previous case, was sufficient to support convictions of aggravated stalking, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) and burglary, O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1(a). Bray v. State, 294 Ga. App. 562, 669 S.E.2d 509 (2008).

In a federal habeas corpus proceeding in which a state inmate had been convicted of stalking and aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), the inmate did not meet the burden of showing that there was insufficient evidence to support the conviction. There was sufficient evidence to support the conviction; the testimony presented would have permitted a reasonable trier of fact to conclude that the inmate was aware that a third party was under a court order to refrain from contacting the victim, and the fact that the inmate might not have known the exact type of court order was not relevant. Carlisle v. Conway, No. 07-12885, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 22229 (11th Cir. Jan. 29, 2008) (Unpublished).

To convict a defendant of aggravated stalking, the state was only required to prove that the defendant's actions were done for the purpose of harassing or intimidating the victim, not that the victim actually felt either harassed or intimidated by that conduct. As the evidence allowed the jury to find that the defendant acted with the requisite intent, the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction. Hollis v. State, 295 Ga. App. 529, 672 S.E.2d 487 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) as the defendant was on probation for making a terroristic threat against the victim when the defendant, acting through a friend, called the victim via a three-way phone call, and the victim testified that the victim had not wanted to talk to the defendant, that during the conversation, the defendant had threatened the victim, and that when the victim realized that the defendant was no longer in jail, the victim's heart dropped and the victim was fearful of going outside. Davidson v. State, 295 Ga. App. 702, 673 S.E.2d 91 (2009).

Evidence supported the defendant's conviction of stalking the defendant's ex-spouse by putting a bizarre note, which the ex-spouse regarded as threatening, in the ex-spouse's mailbox and going onto the ex-spouse's property without permission, in violation of a restraining order. The fact that the ex-spouse had previously allowed the defendant on the property to visit their children did not alter the fact that on the occasions for which the defendant was prosecuted, the ex-spouse did not consent. Crane v. State, 297 Ga. App. 880, 678 S.E.2d 542 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict after a jury found the defendant guilty of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) because evidence of the defendant's continuing unauthorized contacts with the victim and repeated violations of restraining orders established a pattern of harassing behavior; a permanent restraining order had been entered that prohibited the defendant from having any contact with the victim, but the defendant violated that order by sending a letter to the victim that caused the victim to fear for the victim's own safety and that of the victim's family. Bowen v. State, 304 Ga. App. 819, 697 S.E.2d 898 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for aggravated stalking because, after the entry of a family violence protective order, the defendant purchased a knife with a large blade, followed the victim, who was the defendant's estranged spouse, and attempted to talk with the victim, appeared at a grocery store where the victim was, yelled at the victim, and stabbed and slashed the victim multiple times, resulting in the victim's death. The defendant then waited for the police, and stated that the defendant would not hurt anyone else, that the defendant came to do what the defendant needed to do, that no one got away with hurting the defendant, and that the victim, whom the defendant called by a derogatory term, deserved it because of what the victim did to the defendant in court. Weaver v. State, 288 Ga. 540, 705 S.E.2d 627 (2011).

Evidence insufficient for conviction. — Since the state's evidence failed to show that defendant made any contact with the victim or performed any act of an harassing or intimidating nature between the dates set forth in the indictment, the defendant's conviction for aggravated stalking was reversed. Durant v. State, 222 Ga. App. 872, 476 S.E.2d 641 (1996).

Because the evidence showed that the contact charged as the basis for an aggravated stalking offense against the defendant was initiated by the victim, and thus was with that victim's consent, the defendant's conviction of the offense had to be reversed as an element of the offense was that the charged contact had to be without the victim's consent. Bragg v. State, 285 Ga. App. 408, 646 S.E.2d 508 (2007).

Evidence did not support a conviction of aggravated stalking because the evidence did not establish that the defendant was engaged in a pattern of intimidating and harassing behavior that placed the defendant's ex-spouse in reasonable fear for the ex-spouse's safety. Although the ex-spouse revoked the ex-spouse's consent for the defendant to enter the ex-spouse's home, the ex-spouse testified to feeling fear only for a moment when the defendant wrestled a hammer from the ex-spouse; the ex-spouse never called for help from the other adults in the home; and even after the other adults separated the pair and the defendant left the residence with the hammer, the ex-spouse broke free of the ex-spouse's friend and went after the defendant. Wright v. State, 292 Ga. App. 673, 665 S.E.2d 374 (2008).

Evidence sufficient despite victim's later denial of incident. — Evidence was sufficient to allow the jury to convict defendant of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a); although the victim testified at trial that the victim's struggle with defendant started because the victim attacked defendant with a knife, the jury was free to disbelieve this trial testimony and to believe instead the victim's prior inconsistent statement to a police officer who testified that, when the officer responded to a domestic violence call at the victim's residence, the victim, who was crying and upset and had facial bruises and a large ankle laceration, told the officer that defendant became angry and dragged the victim from a car, kicked the victim, and punched the victim in the face. Peek v. State, 259 Ga. App. 13, 576 S.E.2d 31 (2002).

Evidence sufficient despite victim's consent to earlier contacts. — Conviction of aggravated stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91 was supported by sufficient evidence despite the fact that the victim had previously permitted the defendant on the premises after the issuance of the no contact order; the victim's previous consent was immaterial where the defendant refused the victim's order to leave on the occasion at issue. Revere v. State, 277 Ga. App. 393, 626 S.E.2d 585 (2006).

Evidence of knowledge of order was sufficient. — In order to convict a defendant of aggravated stalking, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), based on assisting a defendant stalk the victim, it was necessary to show that the defendant knew of a court order prohibiting the codefendant's contact with the victim, but not necessary to show that the defendant knew of the specific type of order which prohibited the contact; a conviction for aggravated stalking was authorized since sufficient evidence showed that the defendant knew of a bond condition prohibiting the defendant's contact with the victim and among other things, based on a witness's testimony that a discussion with the defendant about the restraining order occurred between the date the defendant's bond conditions were imposed and the date of the alleged stalking, it could have been inferred that the defendant had knowledge of the restraining order before the incident at issue. State v. Carlisle, 280 Ga. 770, 631 S.E.2d 347 (2006).

Aggravated stalking did not merge with burglary. — Trial court did not err by not merging a defendant's aggravated stalking count into a burglary count based upon the defendant's contention that under the actual evidence test, the same factual evidence was used to prove both crimes; as to prove the burglary count, the state had to prove that the defendant entered the victim's residence without authority and with the intent to commit aggravated stalking, and to prove the aggravated stalking count, the state had to prove that the defendant surveilled and contacted the victim in violation of a condition of probation for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the victim. As such, the burglary statute required that the state show entry into the residence, which was not required by the aggravated stalking statute, and, on the other hand, the aggravated stalking statute required that the state prove that the defendant actually contacted the victim, which was not required by the burglary statute that only required that the defendant contact the victim when the defendant entered the residence. Williams v. State, 293 Ga. App. 193, 666 S.E.2d 703 (2008).

Jury instruction omitting "intimidating." — Jury instruction on the offense of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a), which omitted the word "intimidating" from the charge, was not error because the trial court defined the term "harassing" in accordance with the statutory definition of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1), and accordingly, the jury was informed of that element by way of definition; the omission was inconsequential and the charge, viewed as a whole, was not likely to mislead or confuse the jury. Phillips v. State, 278 Ga. App. 198, 628 S.E.2d 631 (2006).

Jury instruction on harassing and intimidating not required. — Words "harassing and intimidating," as used in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91, are not words of art but rather are words of common understanding and meaning which require no definition themselves for understanding by the jury. Therefore, in an aggravated stalking prosecution, the defendant was not entitled to a jury charge that defined these terms. Hollis v. State, 295 Ga. App. 529, 672 S.E.2d 487 (2009).

Jury instruction on lesser included offense of harrassing telephone calls unwarranted. — In a prosecution on three counts of aggravated stalking, the defendant was not entitled to a jury charge on the lesser included offense of harassing telephone calls based on the fact that under the evidence presented the defendant was either guilty of the indicted offenses or was guilty of no offense whatsoever. Patterson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 780, 645 S.E.2d 38 (2007).

Evidence of probation status properly admitted. — Trial court did not admit improper character evidence at trial for aggravated stalking by allowing the state to introduce evidence that, at the time defendant threatened the victim at the victim's home and over the telephone, defendant was subject to a probation condition which required defendant to stay away from the victim, as such evidence was required to prove an element of the charge of aggravated stalking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a). Withers v. State, 254 Ga. App. 833, 563 S.E.2d 912 (2002).

Counsel not ineffective. — Defendant's stalking convictions were upheld on appeal, given that trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to present the testimony from a second psychiatrist regarding the defendant's mental condition, as the defendant failed to show how testimony from a second psychiatrist would have aided the defense, and a request for recharge alone did not prove that the jury was confused on the issue of the defendant's mental condition or that counsel had not provided them with sufficient evidence concerning it. Albert v. State, 283 Ga. App. 79, 640 S.E.2d 670 (2006).

In a prosecution on three counts of aggravated stalking, because the defendant failed to show that trial counsel's strategic decisions in declining to subpoena certain witnesses amounted to ineffectiveness, and the evidence did not support a lesser-included offense instruction, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims failed. Patterson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 780, 645 S.E.2d 38 (2007).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim did not warrant a new trial in a prosecution for rape, kidnapping, aggravated stalking, and two counts of stalking; because of the limited nature of a challenged witnesses' trial testimony, defense counsel made a strategic decision not to seek recusal of the trial judge, who was the brother of the challenged witness, and counsel discussed with the defendant the reasons for not seeking recusal. Pirkle v. State, 289 Ga. App. 450, 657 S.E.2d 560 (2008).

No fatal variance between indictment and evidence. — Discrepancy in dates between indictment for aggravated stalking and evidence was not a fatal variance since the indictment clearly put defendant on notice that the alleged act was a violation of a protective order with which defendant had been served; moreover, the date in the indictment was not alleged to be material, and actions proven by the state were within the statute of limitations. Holmes v. State, 291 Ga. App. 196, 661 S.E.2d 603 (2008).

Evidence insufficient to prove aggravated stalking. — Defendant's contact with the victim was with the victim's consent since the victim testified that victim agreed to meet defendant and had a friend follow her to the location of the meeting. Bragg v. State, 285 Ga. App. 408, 646 S.E.2d 508 (2007).

Sentence imposed held proper. — Because the sentence orally announced as to each of the three counts of aggravated stalking charged against the defendant was ten years, to be served concurrently, although originally to be served with six years and six months on probation, the sentence nevertheless remained ten years; hence, because the sentence as finally entered did not vary from that which was orally announced by the trial court and there was no increase in the defendant's sentence, no error in the sentence imposed resulted. Patterson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 780, 645 S.E.2d 38 (2007).

Violation was grounds for revocation of supervised release. — District court did not err in revoking under Fed. R. Crim. P. 32.1 the supervised release that was imposed upon defendant following defendant's conviction for being a felon in possession of firearms in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g) and 924(a); admission of alleged hearsay at the revocation hearing was harmless error under Fed. R. Crim. P. 52(a) because other uncontested evidence established that defendant committed aggravated stalking of defendant's ex-spouse in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-91(a) and that the defendant left the jurisdiction without the permission of the court or the defendant's probation officer. United States v. Spence, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 20940 (11th Cir. Sept. 26, 2005) (Unpublished).

16-5-92. Applicability.

The provisions of Code Sections 16-5-90 and 16-5-91 shall not apply to persons engaged in activities protected by the Constitution of the United States or of this state or to persons or employees of such persons lawfully engaged in bona fide business activity or lawfully engaged in the practice of a profession. (Code 1981, § 16-5-92, enacted by Ga. L. 1993, p. 1534, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Jury charge properly denied. — Defendant charged with stalking could not have returned to a romantic partner's house lawfully because a court had barred the defendant from doing so without a police escort; thus, it was proper to deny the defendant's request to charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-92. Hayles v. State, 287 Ga. App. 601, 651 S.E.2d 860 (2007).

16-5-93. Right of victim to notification of release or escape of stalker.

(a) The victim of stalking or aggravated stalking shall be entitled to notice of the release from custody of the person arrested for and charged with the offense of stalking or aggravated stalking and to notice of any hearing on the issue of bail for such person. No such notice shall be required unless the victim provides a landline telephone number other than a pocket pager or electronic communication device number to which such notice can be directed.

(b) The law enforcement agency, prosecutor, or court directly involved with the victim at the outset of a criminal prosecution for the offense of stalking or aggravated stalking shall advise the victim of his or her right to notice and of the requirement of the victim's providing a landline telephone number other than a pocket pager or electronic communication device number to which the notice of custodial release or bail hearing can be directed. Such victim shall transmit the telephone number described in this subsection to the court and custodian of the person charged with stalking or aggravated stalking.

(c) Upon receipt of the telephone number, the custodian of the person charged with stalking or aggravated stalking shall take reasonable and necessary steps under the circumstances to notify the victim of the person's release from custody. Such notice shall, at a minimum, include:

(1) Prior to the person's release, placing a telephone call to the number provided by the victim and giving notice to the victim or any person answering the telephone who appears to be sui juris or by leaving an appropriate message on a telephone answering machine; and

(2) Following the person's release, if the custodian is unable to notify the victim by the method provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection, telephoning the number provided by the victim no less than two times in no less than 15 minute intervals within one hour of custodial release and giving notice to the victim or to any person answering the telephone who appears to be sui juris or by leaving an appropriate message on a telephone answering machine.

(d) Upon receipt of the telephone number, the court conducting a hearing on the issue of bail shall take reasonable and necessary steps under the circumstances to notify the victim of any scheduled hearing on the issue of bail. Such notice shall, at a minimum, include placing a telephone call to the number provided by the victim prior to any scheduled hearing on the issue of bail.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Code section, a scheduled bail hearing or the release of the person charged with stalking or aggravated stalking shall not be delayed solely for the purpose of effectuating notice pursuant to this Code section for a period of more than 30 minutes.

(f) Upon the person's release or escape from custody after conviction and service of all or a portion of a sentence, notification to the victim shall be provided by the State Board of Pardons and Paroles as set forth in Code Sections 42-9-46 and 42-9-47.

(g) This Code section shall not apply to a custodian who is transferring a person charged with stalking or aggravated stalking to another custodian in this state.

(h) As used in this Code section, the term "custodian" means a warden, sheriff, jailer, deputy sheriff, police officer, officer or employee of the Department of Juvenile Justice, or any other law enforcement officer having actual custody of an inmate.

(i) A custodian or his or her employing agency shall not be liable in damages for a failure to provide the notice required by this Code section, but the custodian shall be subject to appropriate disciplinary action including termination for such failure. (Code 1981, § 16-5-93, enacted by Ga. L. 1993, p. 1534, § 1; Ga. L. 1997, p. 1453, § 1.)

16-5-94. Restraining orders; protective orders.

(a) A person who is not a minor who alleges stalking by another person may seek a restraining order by filing a petition alleging conduct constituting stalking as defined in Code Section 16-5-90. A person who is not a minor may also seek relief on behalf of a minor by filing such a petition.

(b) Jurisdiction for such a petition shall be the same as for family violence petitions as set out in Code Section 19-13-2.

(c) Upon the filing of a verified petition in which the petitioner alleges with specific facts that probable cause exists to establish that stalking by the respondent has occurred in the past and may occur in the future, the court may order such temporary relief ex parte as it deems necessary to protect the petitioner or a minor of the household from stalking. If the court issues an ex parte order, a copy of the order shall be immediately furnished to the petitioner.

(d) The court may grant a protective order or approve a consent agreement to bring about a cessation of conduct constituting stalking. Orders or agreements may:

- (1) Direct a party to refrain from such conduct;
- (2) Order a party to refrain from harassing or interfering with the other;
- (3) Award costs and attorney's fees to either party; and
- (4) Order either or all parties to receive appropriate psychiatric or psychological services as a further measure to prevent the recurrence of stalking.

(e) The provisions of subsections (c) and (d) of Code Section 19-13-3, subsections (b), (c), and (d) of Code Section 19-13-4, and Code Section 19-13-5, relating to family violence petitions, shall apply to petitions filed pursuant to this Code section, except that the clerk of court may provide forms for petitions and pleadings to persons alleging conduct constituting stalking and to any other person designated by the superior court pursuant to this Code section as authorized to advise persons alleging conduct constituting stalking on filling out and filing such petitions and pleadings. (Code 1981, § 16-5-94, enacted by Ga. L. 1998, p. 885, § 3; Ga. L. 1999, p. 81, § 16.)

Cross references. — Confidentiality of address of registered electors; term of request; procedure, § 21-2-225.1.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1998, p. 885, § 4, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that this Code section is applicable to conduct occurring or allegedly occurring on or after July 1, 1998.

Law reviews. — For review of 1998 legislation relating to crimes and offenses, see 15 Georgia St. U.L. Rev. 62 (1998).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Verification. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-94(c) requires only that a stalking petition be verified before a temporary protective order may be issued, not that the petition itself be signed; where a verification signed by plaintiff accompanied a stalking petition, verifying that the contents of the petition were true and correct, defendant's argument that the petition was somehow defective was without merit. McKlin v. Ivory, 266 Ga. App. 298, 596 S.E.2d 673 (2004).

Stalking. — Publishing or discussing the former love interest's medical condition with others was not stalking since it did not threaten the love interest or the love interest's family's safety; therefore, the prohibition in the protective order exceeded the statutory scope of authority. Collins v. Bazan, 256 Ga. App. 164, 568 S.E.2d 72 (2002).

Even though the appellee admitted to committing certain acts which satisfied some of the elements under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90, based on a denial of the intent required under the statute, no abuse resulted in denying the appellant injunctive relief and setting the case for a bench trial. Anderson v. Mergenhagen, 283 Ga. App. 546, 642 S.E.2d 105 (2007).

Protective order upheld. — Issuance of the protective order underlying the appellant prisoner's conviction for aggravated stalking under the family violence act when the prisoner and the victim had never been married, were not living in the same house, and did not have children together, did not affect the court's jurisdiction since the order expressly provided that its violation would subject the prisoner to prosecution for aggravated stalking; the superior court judge had the authority to issue a protective order under the stalking statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-94, or the Georgia Family Violence Act, specifically O.C.G.A. § 19-13-2. Giles v. State, 257 Ga. App. 65, 570 S.E.2d 375 (2002).

Evidence that defendant, over the high school student's objections, repeatedly placed the student under surveillance, took pictures of the student, and shouted at the student was sufficient to show defendant was stalking the student and justified the entry of a protective order against defendant. Johnson v. Smith, 260 Ga. App. 722, 580 S.E.2d 674 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90 to support the entry of a stalking twelve-month protective order pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-94(d) against the defendant because the defendant contacted the victim via abusive emails numerous times and placed the victim under surveillance on several occasions without the victim's consent, and the frequency and nature of the defendant's contact and surveillance was such that the trial court could conclude that it was done for the purpose of harassing and intimidating the victim; there was also sufficient evidence that the contact and surveillance put the victim in reasonable fear for the victim's safety. Thornton v. Hemphill, 300 Ga. App. 647, 686 S.E.2d 263 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0413, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 342 (Ga. 2010).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in finding that the evidence supported the grant of a stalking protective order under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-94(d) against a neighbor who, among other conduct, discharged a weapon near the victims' house, attempted to run the victim off the road, and repeatedly drove by or stopped in front of the victims' house and stared at them. Garnsey v. Buice, 306 Ga. App. 565, 703 S.E.2d 28 (2010).

Evidence insufficient for protective order. — Because a fire chief's actions taken against certain fire department employees did not constitute stalking under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90(a)(1), but were committed for the legitimate purpose of physical training, and arose during legitimate training activities, the issuance of a permanent restraining order against the fire chief for those activities amounted to an abuse of discretion. Pilcher v. Stribling, 282 Ga. 166, 647 S.E.2d 8 (2007).

Evidence insufficient for protective order protecting priest against parishioner. — Trial court abused the court's discretion by granting a priest a stalking protective order against a former church organist as the priest never indicated fear for the priest's safety as a result of the former organist's disruptive and interfering behavior. Rather, the priest indicated weariness with regard to the former organist's behavior and that the behavior was interfering with the life of the parish, which was insufficient to justify the issuance of the protective order. Sinclair v. Daly, 295 Ga. App. 613, 672 S.E.2d 672 (2009).

Stalker who sent emails into Georgia from South Carolina not subject to jurisdiction. — Trial court erred in denying a South Carolina resident's motion to set aside a stalking permanent protective order issued against the resident. The Georgia court did not have personal jurisdiction over the nonresident under O.C.G.A. § 9-10-91 for stalking because the resident did not, in sending harassing emails from South Carolina, engage in conduct in Georgia. Huggins v.

Boyd, 304 Ga. App. 563, 697 S.E.2d 253 (2010).

Attorney's fees and mental health evaluation. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding a resident $4,000.00 in attorney fees and requiring the neighbor to undergo a mental health evaluation as part of a protective order entered in favor of the resident against the neighbor. De Louis v. Sheppard, 277 Ga. App. 768, 627 S.E.2d 846 (2006).

Judge who issues restraining or- der. — Defendant's stalking convictions, based on violations of a permanent restraining order (PRO), were not invalid on grounds the PRO was issued by a magistrate judge, as the chief judge of superior court, as authorized by O.C.G.A. § 15-1-9.1(b)(2), had requested magistrates to assist the superior court by hearing petitions under the Georgia Stalking Statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-94. Seibert v. State, 294 Ga. App. 202, 670 S.E.2d 109 (2008).

16-5-95. Offense of violating family violence order; penalty.

(a) A person commits the offense of violating a family violence order when the person knowingly and in a nonviolent manner violates the terms of a family violence temporary restraining order, temporary protective order, permanent restraining order, or permanent protective order issued against that person pursuant to Article 1 of Chapter 13 of Title 19, which:

- (1) Excludes, evicts, or excludes and evicts the person from a residence or household;
- (2) Directs the person to stay away from a residence, workplace, or school;
- (3) Restrains the person from approaching within a specified distance of another person; or
- (4) Restricts the person from having any contact, direct or indirect, by telephone, pager, facsimile, e-mail, or any other means of communication with another person, except as specified in the order.

(b) Any person convicted of a violation of subsection (a) of this Code section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

(c) Nothing contained in this Code section shall prohibit a prosecution for the offense of stalking or aggravated stalking that arose out of the same course of conduct; provided, however, that, for purposes of sentencing, a violation of this Code section shall be merged with a violation of any provision of Code Section 16-5-90 or 16-5-91 that arose out of the same course of conduct. (Code 1981, § 16-5-95, enacted by Ga. L. 2003, p. 652, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Charging instrument defective. — Trial court's denial of a defendant's general demurrer to a charge against the defendant of violation of a family violence order, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-95(a), was error as the accusation failed to state any specific acts that violated any specific terms of a family violence order, such that the accusation failed to set out the essential elements of the crime or to apprise the defendant properly of the charge pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(c). Newsome v. State, 296 Ga. App. 490, 675 S.E.2d 229 (2009).

16-5-96. Publication of second or subsequent conviction of stalking or aggravated stalking; cost of publication; good faith publications immune from liability.

(a) The clerk of the court in which a person is convicted of a second or subsequent violation of Code Section 16-5-90 or 16-5-91 shall cause to be published a notice of conviction for such person. Such notice of conviction shall be published in the manner of legal notices in the legal organ of the county in which such person resides or, in the case of nonresidents, in the legal organ of the county in which the person was convicted. Such notice of conviction shall be one column wide by two inches long and shall contain the photograph taken by the arresting law enforcement agency at the time of arrest; the name and address of the convicted person; the date, time, and place of arrest; and the disposition of the case and shall be published once in the legal organ of the appropriate county in the second week following such conviction or as soon thereafter as publication may be made.

(b) The convicted person for which a notice of conviction is published pursuant to this Code section shall be assessed $25.00 for the cost of publication of such notice and such assessment shall be imposed at the time of conviction in addition to any other fine imposed.

(c) The clerk of the court, the publisher of any legal organ which publishes a notice of conviction, and any other person involved in the publication of an erroneous notice of conviction shall be immune from civil or criminal liability for such erroneous publication, provided that such publication was made in good faith. (Code 1981, § 16-5-96, enacted by Ga. L. 2004, p. 621, § 3B; Ga. L. 2005, p. 60, § 16/HB 95.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2004, p. 621, § 9(b), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that this Code section shall apply to offenses committed on or after July 1, 2004.

ARTICLE 8
PROTECTION OF ELDER PERSONS

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2000, p. 1085, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Georgia Protection of Elder Persons Act of 2000'."

16-5-100. Cruelty to a person 65 years of age or older.

(a) A guardian or other person supervising the welfare of or having immediate charge or custody of a person who is 65 years of age or older commits the offense of cruelty to a person who is 65 years of age or older when the person willfully deprives a person who is 65 years of age or older of health care, shelter, or necessary sustenance to the extent that the health or well-being of a person who is 65 years of age or older is jeopardized.

(b) The provisions of this Code section shall not apply to a physician nor any person acting under a physician's direction nor to a hospital, skilled nursing facility, hospice, nor any agent or employee thereof who is in good faith following a course of treatment developed in accordance with accepted medical standards or who is acting in good faith in accordance with a living will, a durable power of attorney for health care, an advance directive for health care, an order not to resuscitate, or the instructions of the patient or the patient's lawful surrogate decision maker, nor shall the provisions of this Code section require any physician, any institution licensed in accordance with Chapter 7 of Title 31 or any employee or agent thereof to provide health care services or shelter to any person in the absence of another legal obligation to do so.

(b.1) The provisions of this Code section shall not apply to a guardian or other person supervising the welfare of or having immediate charge or control of a person who is 65 years of age or older who in good faith provides treatment by spiritual means alone through prayer for the person's physical or mental condition, in lieu of medical treatment, in accordance with the practices of and written notarized consent of the person.

(c) A person convicted of the offense of cruelty to a person who is 65 years of age or older as provided in this Code section shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than 20 years. (Code 1981, § 16-5-100, enacted by Ga. L. 2000, p. 1085, § 2; Ga. L. 2002, p. 648, § 1; Ga. L. 2007, p. 133, § 6/HB 24.)

Code Commission notes. — Pursuant to Code Section 28-9-5, in 2002, subsection (c), as added by Ga. L. 2002, p. 648, § 1, was redesignated as subsection (b.1).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2007, p. 133, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "(a) The General Assembly has long recognized the right of the individual to control all aspects of his or her personal care and medical treatment, including the right to insist upon medical treatment, decline medical treatment, or direct that medical treatment be withdrawn. In order to secure these rights, the General Assembly has adopted and amended statutes recognizing the living will and health care agency and provided statutory forms for both documents.

"(b) The General Assembly has determined that the statutory forms for the living will and durable power of attorney for health care are confusing and inconsistent and that the statutes providing for the living will and health care agency contain conflicting concepts, inconsistent and out-of-date terminology, and confusing and inconsistent requirements for execution. In addition, there is a commendable trend among the states to combine the concepts of the living will and health care agency into a single legal document.

(c) The General Assembly recognizes that a significant number of individuals representing the academic, medical, legislative, and legal communities, state officials, ethics scholars, and advocacy groups worked together to develop the advance directive for health care contained in this Act, and the collective intent was to create a form that uses understandable and everyday language in order to encourage more citizens of this state to execute advance directives for health care.

(d) The General Assembly finds that the clear expression of an individual's decisions regarding health care, whether made by the individual or an agent appointed by the individual, is of critical importance not only to citizens but also to the health care and legal communities, third parties, and families. In furtherance of these purposes, the General Assembly enacts a new Chapter 32 of Title 31, setting forth general principles governing the expression of decisions regarding health care and the appointment of a health care agent, as well as a form of advance directive for health care."

Law reviews. — For note on 2000 enactment of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-100, see 17 Georgia St. U.L. Rev. 93 (2000).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Relevant evidence. — In a prosecution under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-100(a) for cruelty to a person 65 years of age or older, evidence of the condition of defendant's home, in which the cruelty occurred, and its residents, as well as defendant's reaction to the love interest's requests for help in caring for the victim, were relevant to defendant's culpability, so the children's physical appearance and the violence toward the girlfriend were relevant and did not impermissibly place defendant's character in evidence. Wood v. State, 279 Ga. 667, 620 S.E.2d 348 (2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1217, 126 S. Ct. 1434, 164 L. Ed. 2d 137 (2006).

In a prosecution under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-100(a) for cruelty to a person 65 years of age or older, when the victim, for whom defendant was obligated to provide care, died from neglect, pre-autopsy photographs of the victim's injuries from not being moved from the bed were admissible. Wood v. State, 279 Ga. 667, 620 S.E.2d 348 (2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1217, 126 S. Ct. 1434, 164 L. Ed. 2d 137 (2006).

Purpose. — O.C.G.A. § 16-5-100(a) was enacted to protect susceptible elderly persons from abusive physical and financial exploitation, and in furthering this goal, the statute imposes criminal liability upon a person having supervision or "immediate charge or custody" of an elderly person who willfully fails to provide health care and sustenance to the elderly person; in doing so, the statute does not simply encourage care of a dependent elderly person, it mandates adequate care for the dependent elderly. Wood v. State, 279 Ga. 667, 620 S.E.2d 348 (2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1217, 126 S. Ct. 1434, 164 L. Ed. 2d 137 (2006).

Sufficient evidence. — When defendant (1) actively participated in the decision to bring the defendant's love interest's parent into the home from a nursing home, knowing the care the parent required, (2) was an adult member of the household, (3) received a financial benefit from moving the defendant's love interest's mother into the defendant's home, in the form of the parent's Social Security check, (4) participated in the procedure of discharging the parent from the nursing home, and (5) was instructed on how to move the parent in and out of a wheelchair, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-100(a) imposed a duty on the defendant to care for the parent, and defendant could be held criminally liable for failing to perform that duty. Wood v. State, 279 Ga. 667, 620 S.E.2d 348 (2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1217, 126 S. Ct. 1434, 164 L. Ed. 2d 137 (2006).

Because the evidence presented against the defendant sufficiently showed that the defendant's mother was in such a debilitated state of being, having been denied food and water for a significant amount of time, having to urinate in a bowl in the living room, was disallowed access to a phone, was not allowed medical care, and found to have had a severe leg infection, that evidence supported the defendant's conviction for cruelty to an elderly person. Bone v. State, 283 Ga. App. 323, 641 S.E.2d 545 (2006), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 311 (Ga. 2007); cert. denied, 128 S. Ct. 1711, 170 L. Ed. 2d 520 (2008).

ARTICLE 9

NOTICE OF CONVICTION AND RELEASE FROM CONFINEMENT OF SEX OFFENDERS

16-5-110. Publication of notice; information required; assessment for cost; immunity.

(a) When a person who has been convicted of a crime for which that person is required to register under Code Section 42-1-12 makes his or her first report to a sheriff after such person's release from confinement, placement on probation, or upon establishing residency in the county, the sheriff shall cause to be published a notice of conviction and release from confinement of such person. Such notice shall be one column wide by two inches long and shall contain the photograph taken by the arresting law enforcement agency at the time of arrest; the name and address of the convicted person; if available, the date, time, and place of arrest; and the disposition of the case. The notice shall be published at or near the time the person registers with the sheriff at least once, and, at the sheriff's option, may be published more than once, in the legal organ of the appropriate county. The notice shall include the address of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation website for additional information regarding the sexual offender registry.

(b) The convicted person for which a notice of conviction and release from confinement is published pursuant to subsection (a) of this Code section shall be assessed $25.00 for the cost of publication of such notice, and such assessment shall be imposed at the time of reporting to the sheriff's office.

(c) The sheriff, the publisher of any legal organ which publishes a notice of conviction and release from confinement, and any other person involved in the publication of an erroneous notice of conviction and release from confinement shall be immune from civil or criminal liability for such erroneous publication, provided that such publication was made in good faith. (Code 1981, § 16-5-110, enacted by Ga. L. 2005, p. 467, § 1/HB 188; Ga. L. 2006, p. 72, § 16/SB 465; Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 7/HB 1059; Ga. L. 2007, p. 47, § 16/SB 103.)

with and was treated as superseded by Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 7. See County of Butts v. Strahan, 151 Ga. 417 (1921).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

Admissible evidence. — In crimes involving sexual offenses, evidence of similar previous transactions is admissible to show the lustful disposition of the defendant and to corroborate the testimony of the victim as to the act charged. Felts v. State, 154 Ga. App. 571, 269 S.E.2d 73

16-6-1. Rape.

(a) A person commits the offense of rape when he has carnal knowledge of:

- (1) A female forcibly and against her will; or
- (2) A female who is less than ten years of age.

Carnal knowledge in rape occurs when there is any penetration of the female sex organ by the male sex organ. The fact that the person allegedly raped is the wife of the defendant shall not be a defense to a charge of rape.

(b) A person convicted of the offense of rape shall be punished by death, by imprisonment for life without parole, by imprisonment for life, or by a split sentence that is a term of imprisonment for not less than 25 years and not exceeding life imprisonment, followed by probation for life. Any person convicted under this Code section shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Sections 17-10-6.1 and 17-10-7.

(c) When evidence relating to an allegation of rape is collected in the course of a medical examination of the person who is the victim of the alleged crime, the Georgia Crime Victims Emergency Fund, as provided for in Chapter 15 of Title 17, shall be responsible for the cost of the medical examination to the extent that expense is incurred for the limited purpose of collecting evidence. (Laws 1833, Cobb's 1851 Digest, p. 787; Code 1863, §§ 4248, 4249; Ga. L. 1866, p. 151, § 1; Code 1868, §§ 4283, 4284; Code 1873, §§ 4349, 4350; Code 1882, §§ 4349, 4350; Penal Code 1895, §§ 93, 94; Penal Code 1910, §§ 93, 94; Code 1933, §§ 26-1301, 26-1302; Ga. L. 1960, p. 266, § 1; Code 1933, § 26-2001, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 1978, p. 3, § 1; Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 5; Ga. L. 1996, p. 1115, § 1; Ga. L. 1997, p. 6, § 2; Ga. The 2011 amendment, effective July 1, 2011, substituted "Georgia Crime Victims Emergency Fund, as provided for in Chapter 15 of Title 17," for "law enforcement agency investigating the alleged crime" in the middle of subsection (c).

Editor's notes. — Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 97 S. Ct. 2861, 53 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1977), held that imposition of the death penalty for rape where the victim is not killed is in violation of the Eighth Amendment. Eberhardt v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 917, 97 S. Ct. 2994, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1104 (1977), citing Coker, held the death penalty for kidnapping where the victim is not killed to be in violation of the Eighth Amendment. The Supreme Court of Georgia, in Collins v. State, 239 Ga. 400, 236 S.E.2d 759 (1977) held that the rationale of Coker must be applied also to kidnapping.

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994'."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 2, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly declares and finds:

"(1) That persons who are convicted of certain serious violent felonies shall serve minimum terms of imprisonment which shall not be suspended, probated, stayed, deferred, or otherwise withheld by the sentencing judge; and

"(2) That sentences ordered by courts in cases of certain serious violent felonies shall be served in their entirety and shall not be reduced by parole or by any earned time, early release, work release, or other such sentence-reducing measures administered by the Department of Corrections."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 16, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall apply only to those offenses committed on or after the effective date of this Act; provided, however, that any conviction occurring prior to, on, or after the effective date of this Act shall be deemed a 'conviction' for the purposes of this Act and shall be counted in determining the appropriate sentence to be imposed for any offense committed on or after the effective date of this Act."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 17, not codified by the General Assembly, provides for severability.

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 18, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall become effective on January 1, 1995, upon ratification by the voters of this state at the 1994 November general election of that proposed amendment to Article IV, Section II, Paragraph II of the Constitution authorizing the General Assembly to provide for mandatory minimum sentences and sentences of life without possibility of parole in certain cases and providing restrictions on the authority of the State Board of Pardons and Paroles to grant paroles...." That amendment was ratified by the voters on November 8, 1994, so the amendment to this Code section by this Act became effective on January 1, 1995.

Ga. L. 1998, p. 180, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly declares and finds: (1) That the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' approved April 20, 1994 (Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959), provided that persons convicted of one of seven serious violent felonies shall serve minimum mandatory terms of imprisonment which shall not otherwise be suspended, stayed, probated, deferred, or withheld by the sentencing court; (2) That in State v. Allmond, 225 Ga. App. 509 (1997), the Georgia Court of Appeals held, notwithstanding the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' that the provisions of the First Offender Act would still be available to the sentencing court, which would mean that a person who committed a serious violent felony could be sentenced to less than the minimum mandatory ten-year sentence; and (3) That, contrary to the decision in State v. Allmond, it is the expressed intent of the General Assembly that persons who commit a serious violent felony specified in the ‘Sentence Reform Act of 1994’ shall be sentenced to a mandatory term of imprisonment of not less than ten years and shall not be eligible for first offender treatment.”

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: “The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

“(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

“(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

“(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

“(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

“(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

“(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: “The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment.”

ANALYSIS

GENERAL CONSIDERATION
MERGER AND OTHER OFFENSES
JURY INSTRUCTIONS
SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE
SENTENCE
DEATH PENALTY

General Consideration

Editor's notes. — Many of the cases noted below were decided prior to the amendments to the length of sentence specified in subsection (b).

Constitutionality. — See Coker v. State, 234 Ga. 555, 216 S.E.2d 782 (1975), sentenced vacated, 433 U.S. 584, 97 S. Ct. 2861, 53 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1977).

Statutory scheme governing punishment for a first-time rape conviction, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-1(b) and 17-10-6.1, gave the defendant fair notice that the defendant could be sentenced either to life imprisonment, eligible for parole after 30 years, or a minimum of 25 years without parole, with any additional years likewise not subject to any possibility of parole. Therefore, the statutes were not unconstitutionally vague. Merritt v. State, 286 Ga. 650, 690 S.E.2d 835 (2010).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2001 was not violative of the equal protection clause of U.S. Const., amend. 14. Lamar v. State, 243 Ga. 401, 254 S.E.2d 353, appeal dismissed, 444 U.S. 803, 100 S. Ct. 23, 62 L. Ed. 2d 16 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1).

Distinction made between male and female in former Code 1933, § 26-2001 was reasonable. Lamar v. State, 243 Ga. 401, 254 S.E.2d 353, appeal dismissed, 444 U.S. 803, 100 S. Ct. 23, 62 L. Ed. 2d 16 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1).

Difference between male and female recognized by former Code 1933, § 26-2001 was a physiological reality, and the objective serves a public purpose in preventing sexual attacks upon women, with the resulting physical injury, psychological trauma, and possible pregnancy. Lamar v. State, 243 Ga. 401, 254 S.E.2d 353, appeal dismissed, 444 U.S. 803, 100

S. Ct. 23, 62 L. Ed. 2d 16 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1).

Intent was not an element of the crime of rape in Georgia under former Code 1933, § 26-2001. Collins v. Francis, 728 F.2d 1322 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 361, 83 L. Ed. 2d 297 (1984) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1).

Force and penetration are essential elements of rape. Henning v. State, 153 Ga. App. 465, 265 S.E.2d 372 (1980).

If the state desires to convict a defendant of forcible rape, even though the victim is under 14 years of age, it must prove the element of force by acts of force. Henning v. State, 153 Ga. App. 465, 265 S.E.2d 372 (1980).

Intimidation may substitute for force. — Lack of resistance, induced by fear, is not legally cognizable consent, but constitutes force. Walker v. State, 157 Ga. App. 728, 278 S.E.2d 487 (1981).

Amount of evidence to prove force against a child is minimal, since physical force is not required, and intimidation may substitute for force. House v. State, 236 Ga. App. 405, 512 S.E.2d 287 (1999).

When the victim of numerous episodes of severe sexual abuse was a seven-year-old girl, whose prolonged exposure to sexual abuse resulted in observable physical injuries, whose outcries to her mother were ignored and who was warned not to tell anyone about her father's abuse, the jury was authorized to determine that, from the victim's perspective, further resistance was futile and that the defendant possessed the element of force beyond a reasonable doubt. House v. State, 236 Ga. App. 405, 512 S.E.2d 287 (1999).

State must prove the element of force as a factual matter in forcible rape cases rather than presuming force as a matter of law based on the victim's age, but the quantum of evidence to prove force against a child is minimal, since physical force is not required and intimidation may substitute for force. Furthermore, force for purposes of forcible rape may be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence. Pollard v. State, 260 Ga. App. 540, 580 S.E.2d 337 (2003).

"Forcibly" and "against her will" are not synonymous. Hill v. State, 246 Ga. 402, 271 S.E.2d 802 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 923, 101 S. Ct. 2001, 68 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1981).

Fact that a victim is under the age of consent may supply the "against her will" element in a forcible rape prosecution under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, but the same fact cannot supply the element of force as a matter of law. State v. Collins, 270 Ga. 42, 508 S.E.2d 390 (1998) superseded by statute as stated in, State v. Lyons, 256 Ga. App. 377, 568 S.E.2d 533 (2002).

Terms "forcibly" and "against her will" are two separate elements of proving rape. House v. State, 236 Ga. App. 405, 512 S.E.2d 287 (1999).

Terms "forcibly" and "against her will," as used in O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a), are two separate elements of proving rape; the term "against her will" means without consent while the term "forcibly" means acts of physical force, threats of death or physical bodily harm, or mental coercion, such as intimidation. Pollard v. State, 260 Ga. App. 540, 580 S.E.2d 337 (2003).

"Against her will" is synonymous with "without her consent." Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

"Carnal knowledge." — Evidence sufficiently supported the defendant's rape conviction because it showed that the defendant penetrated the defendant's former girlfriend's sex organ with the defendant's male sex organ despite the fact that the victim told the defendant not to do so; that is, the defendant had "carnal knowledge" of the defendant's former girlfriend forcibly and against the victim's will, which was sufficient to sustain the defendant's rape conviction. Walker v. State, 270 Ga. App. 733, 607 S.E.2d 912 (2004).

Phrase "any penetration" requires no definition. — Language of statute that "any penetration of the female sex organ by the male sex organ" constitutes carnal knowledge is a sufficient and proper standard for submission to jury, because "any penetration" is a phrase in common usage and therefore required no further definition. Jackson v. State, 157 Ga. App. 604, 278 S.E.2d 5 (1981).

Element of force negates any possible mistake as to consent. — Consent to sexual intercourse obtained through a present and immediate fear of bodily injury to the female involved is the equivalent of no consent at all, and an act of intercourse consummated under such circumstances cannot be said to have been committed with the consent of the female. Jackson v. State, 225 Ga. 553, 170 S.E.2d 281 (1969); Lamar v. State, 243 Ga. 401, 254 S.E.2d 353, appeal dismissed, 444 U.S. 803, 100 S. Ct. 23, 62 L. Ed. 2d 16 (1979).

Force is an element of the crime of rape, but it may be exerted not only by physical violence but also by threats of serious bodily harm which overpower the female and cause her to yield against her will. McNeal v. State, 228 Ga. 633, 187 S.E.2d 271 (1972).

Consent induced by force or fear and intimidation does not amount to consent in law and does not prevent intercourse from constituting rape. Thomas v. State, 159 Ga. App. 249, 283 S.E.2d 37 (1981).

Reasonableness of victim's fear is not an issue. — Defendant is not required to "read the victim's mind" or understand her internal thought processes; he is only required not to impose sex upon her without her free consent. Whether he did so is a question of intent, which the jury determines according to the reasonableness of her testimony as to lack of consent, not the reasonableness of her fear. Clark v. State, 197 Ga. App. 318, 398 S.E.2d 377 (1990), aff'd, 261 Ga. 311, 404 S.E.2d 787 (1991).

Lack of consent negates any "consent" and renders the act rape. To suggest the state must prove the victim's fear was "reasonable" amounts to no more than saying a person must, and is deemed to, consent to any sex act so long as she "reasonably" ought not to be afraid. Clark

v. State, 197 Ga. App. 318, 398 S.E.2d 377 (1990), aff'd, 261 Ga. 311, 404 S.E.2d 787 (1991).

Slight penetration sufficient. — Penetration of the female sexual organ by the sexual organ of the male which is necessary to constitute rape need be only slight. It is not necessary that the vagina shall be entered or the hymen ruptured; the entering of the anterior of the organ, known as the vulva or labia, is sufficient. Hall v. State, 29 Ga. App. 383, 115 S.E. 278 (1923); Lee v. State, 197 Ga. 123, 28 S.E.2d 465 (1943); Addison v. State, 198 Ga. 249, 31 S.E.2d 393 (1944); Long v. State, 84 Ga. App. 638, 66 S.E.2d 837 (1951); Payne v. State, 231 Ga. 755, 204 S.E.2d 128 (1974); Jackson v. State, 157 Ga. App. 604, 278 S.E.2d 5 (1981).

Vaginal trauma and physical injury are not necessarily constituent elements of criminal offense of rape. Searcy v. State, 158 Ga. App. 328, 280 S.E.2d 161 (1981).

Penetration may be proved by indirect or circumstantial evidence. Payne v. State, 231 Ga. 755, 204 S.E.2d 128 (1974).

Lack of consent is a necessary element of the offense of rape. Evans v. State, 191 Ga. App. 364, 381 S.E.2d 760 (1989).

Rape is not proved if female consents. — Crime of rape is not proved if the evidence shows that the female at any time consented to the act of sexual intercourse. Jackson v. State, 225 Ga. 553, 170 S.E.2d 281 (1969).

Evidence of lack of consent. — After defendant kidnapped his wife, drove her to an isolated area, and with a gun close at hand, he, in his words, "made love" to her, the jury was authorized to conclude that she did not "consent" to this act of sexual intercourse. Childs v. State, 257 Ga. 243, 357 S.E.2d 48, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1987).

Jury could conclude that a victim was unable to give consent to defendant to sexual intercourse because the 31-year-old victim was mentally retarded and deaf, could not communicate other than with about five signs, functioned like a two-year-old or less, and was non-responsive when called to the witness stand. Page v. State, 271 Ga. App. 541, 610 S.E.2d 171 (2005).

Evidence rebutting consent. — Rule is well settled that, in a prosecution for rape, the fact of the woman's having made a complaint soon after the assault took place is admissible in evidence for the purpose of rebutting the idea that the female consented to the criminal act. Watson v. State, 235 Ga. 461, 219 S.E.2d 763 (1975).

Intercourse nonconsensual as matter of law. — Victim's age, 12 years old, indicated that, as a matter of law, the intercourse was nonconsensual and "against her will." Hill v. State, 246 Ga. 402, 271 S.E.2d 802 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 923, 101 S. Ct. 2001, 68 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1981) (now age 10).

Relevancy of victim's age in forcible rape case. — Considerations of "consent" and "force" and "against her will" are irrelevant in a statutory rape case, and the age of the victim is irrelevant in a forcible rape case except insofar as it may show her incapable of giving consent and thereby supply the "against her will" element. Hill v. State, 246 Ga. 402, 271 S.E.2d 802 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 923, 101 S. Ct. 2001, 68 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1981).

Intimidation may substitute for physical force to satisfy the "force" element in a forcible rape case in which the victim is under the age of consent. State v. Collins, 270 Ga. 42, 508 S.E.2d 390 (1998) superseded by statute as stated in, State v. Lyons, 256 Ga. App. 377, 568 S.E.2d 533 (2002).

Element of force is shown in a case involving a victim under the age of consent if the defendant's words or acts were sufficient to instill in the victim a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm, violence, or other dangerous consequences to herself or others. State v. Collins, 270 Ga. 42, 508 S.E.2d 390 (1998) superseded by statute as stated in, State v. Lyons, 256 Ga. App. 377, 568 S.E.2d 533 (2002).

General demurrer properly sustained when state alleged carnal knowledge with a female whose "overall cognitive age equivalence" was less than ten years of age. O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(2)'s reference to "ten years of age" is determined based on date of birth to date of crime. State v. Lyons, 256 Ga. App. 377, 568 S.E.2d 533 (2002).

Sexual intercourse with woman whose will is temporarily lost is rape.

— Sexual intercourse with a woman whose will is temporarily lost from intoxication, or unconsciousness arising from use of drugs or other cause, or sleep, is rape. Paul v. State, 144 Ga. App. 106, 240 S.E.2d 600 (1977); Johnson v. State, 186 Ga. App. 891, 369 S.E.2d 48, cert. denied, 186 Ga. App. 918, 369 S.E.2d 48 (1988).

Rape of comatose victim. — When the defendant had sexual relations with the victim as she lay comatose in her hospital bed, his actions constituted rape even though the defendant and the victim had enjoyed a sexual relationship prior to her injury, and it is reasonable to assume she would have consented had she been capable of doing so. Brown v. State, 174 Ga. App. 913, 331 S.E.2d 891 (1985).

Victim must be living human being.

— For a defendant to be guilty of rape, the victim must have been a person, a living human being; if dead before the act, the act is not rape. Gibson v. Jackson, 443 F. Supp. 239 (M.D. Ga. 1977), vacated on other grounds, 578 F.2d 1045 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1119, 99 S. Ct. 1028, 59 L. Ed. 2d 79 (1979).

Rape of dead victim. — When the defendant has used an offensive weapon first to kill his victim and then to rape her, so that the victim is dead when the rape actually is consummated, the rape occurred nonetheless forcibly and against her will. Lipham v. State, 257 Ga. 808, 364 S.E.2d 840, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 873, 109 S. Ct. 191, 102 L. Ed. 2d 160 (1988), but see Gibson v. Jackson, 443 F. Supp. 239 (M.D. Ga. 1977), vacated on other grounds, 578 F.2d 1045 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1119, 99 S. Ct. 1028, 59 L. Ed. 2d 79 (1979).

Battered person syndrome defense.

— During a defendant's trial for being a party to rape and other offenses arising out of the repeated rapes of the defendant's 11-year-old child, the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel was properly denied because the defendant did not show that but for the failure of trial counsel to present a battered person defense, the outcome of the trial might have been different; the defendant failed to provide trial counsel with information indicating a possibility that the defendant suffered from that syndrome, and even if such information had been provided, the trial court might not have allowed the defense because it was a defense of justification and the defendant denied knowing about the rapes. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

No implicit marital exclusion exists within O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1 that makes it legally impossible for a husband to be guilty of raping his wife. Warren v. State, 255 Ga. 151, 336 S.E.2d 221 (1985) (decided prior to 1996 amendment).

Proof of emission is not an essential element of the crime of rape. Spraggins v. State, 255 Ga. 195, 336 S.E.2d 227 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1120, 106 S. Ct. 1982, 90 L. Ed. 2d 664 (1986).

Crime of rape is completed when, forcibly and against the will of the victim, the defendant penetrates the female sex organ with his male sex organ. Ejaculation is not an element of rape, and it is not necessary that the examining physician find semen in the victim's body. Skipper v. State, 257 Ga. 802, 364 S.E.2d 835 (1988).

It is not necessary that examining physician find semen in victim's body. Perry v. State, 154 Ga. App. 385, 268 S.E.2d 747 (1980).

General Assembly has removed corroboration requirement which was specifically a part of the previous rape statute. Baker v. State, 245 Ga. 657, 266 S.E.2d 477 (1980).

Corroboration no longer necessary.

— Former Code 1933, § 26-2001 as amended by Ga. L. 1978, p. 3, § 1 eliminated the requirement of corroboration of the victim's testimony in a rape case. Stallworth v. State, 150 Ga. App. 766, 258 S.E.2d 611 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2001 did not require "emission" of sperm as a constituent element of rape; nor is it the law that the victim's testimony must be corroborated or supported by additional evidence to support a finding of rape. Neal v. State, 152 Ga. App. 395, 263 S.E.2d 185 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1).

There is no longer any requirement of corroboration of the victim's testimony in a rape case. Hanvey v. State, 186 Ga. App. 690, 368 S.E.2d 357, cert. denied, 186 Ga. App. 918, 369 S.E.2d 48 (1988).

Testimony of the victim alone is sufficient to affirm the conviction of rape. Greulich v. State, 263 Ga. App. 552, 588 S.E.2d 450 (2003).

Defendant's conviction for rape did not have to be reversed because the state did not introduce scientific evidence to corroborate the victim's testimony that defendant raped the victim. Warren v. State, 265 Ga. App. 109, 592 S.E.2d 879 (2004).

Term "rape" does not also include the offense of statutory rape. Grayer v. State, 176 Ga. App. 248, 335 S.E.2d 483 (1985).

Indictment sufficient for statutory rape charge. — Even though an indictment listed only the statute for forcible rape, because it alleged facts relevant to statutory rape, defendant was put on notice that he was being charged with the latter offense and was not prejudiced. Brown v. State, 228 Ga. App. 748, 492 S.E.2d 555 (1997).

Indictment charging the defendant with child molestation, sexual exploitation of children, aggravated child molestation, and statutory rape was not defective for alleging a broad range of dates extending past the victim's sixteenth birthday because the indictment alleged that the defendant committed the crimes when the victim was under the age of 16 even though the exact dates were not known, and the victim testified that the victim had sexual intercourse with the defendant in 2003 and 2004; therefore, the indictment was not subject to a general demurrer. Wilder v. State, 304 Ga. App. 891, 698 S.E.2d 374 (2010).

Indictment filed within statute of limitations; thus, no ex post facto violation. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for forcible rape of the defendant's child during the time the child was 13 through 15 years of age, the trial court correctly concluded that the state had 15 years from the victim's 16th birthday on January 12, 1995, or until January 12, 2010, to prosecute the case; therefore, no ex post facto violation occurred since the indictment was filed on January 8, 2008. Duke v. State, 298 Ga. App. 719, 681 S.E.2d 174 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1866, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 31 (Ga. 2010).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for rape of a minor relative, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that the applicable statute of limitations ran on the rape offenses before the defendant was charged because in applying the 1996 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1 and the tolling provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1, the limitation period for the defendant's crime ran 15 years from December 13, 1995, when the crimes were first reported to authorities. Thus, because the state had until December 13, 2010 to indict the defendant, the January 7, 2008, indictment was timely and no ex post facto violation arose because the original seven-year limitation period had not expired at the time. Flournoy v. State, 299 Ga. App. 377, 682 S.E.2d 632 (2009).

Indictment sufficiently alleged element of force. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for rape of a minor relative, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that the indictments were factually flawed because the indictments did not specifically allege the required element of force in charging rape because by alleging "unlawful" carnal knowledge during 1992 to 1995, the indictment asserted a charge of forcible rape under the law in effect prior to the 1996 amendment, therefore, the indictment did establish cognizable charges. Additionally, the defendant filed no special demurrers as to the form of the indictment and, thus, waived any argument in that regard. Flournoy v. State, 299 Ga. App. 377, 682 S.E.2d 632 (2009).

Sodomy was not an included offense of rape. — Defendant's convictions for anal and oral sodomy were not merged into his rape conviction, since each of the three offenses contains at least one element not contained in the others. Even though it was anatomically impossible for the three offenses to merge as a matter of fact, the matter was properly submitted for resolution to the jury, which resolved the matter against the defendant. Johnson v. State, 195 Ga. App. 723, 394 S.E.2d 586 (1990).

Similar transaction. — Defendants nonviolent sexual encounter with a minor is not similar to an alleged rape of an adult and admission of the evidence was reversible error. Perry v. State, 263 Ga. App. 670, 588 S.E.2d 838 (2003).

Trial court properly allowed the admission of similar transaction evidence from another rape victim who identified the defendant as the man who raped her under similar circumstances four years earlier since the prior victim's testimony was reliable under the totality of the circumstances. Jennings v. State, 277 Ga. App. 159, 626 S.E.2d 155 (2006).

Similar transaction evidence was properly admitted against defendant charged with rape and false imprisonment as the state showed sufficient evidence of a proper purpose for the admission, specifically, that both sex offenses involved attacks by force against other persons for the purpose of forcing sexual intercourse upon them, and that both incidents occurred behind a shopping center where defendant drove after promising to take the victims home. Ingram v. State, 280 Ga. App. 467, 634 S.E.2d 430 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 868 (Ga. 2007).

Difference in required activity between rape and incest. — Defendant's argument that the evidence introduced was not sufficient to support defendant's conviction for incest had to be rejected, as defendant's reliance on rape cases to argue defendant's point was in error; the rape statute required proof that penetration had occurred, whereas the incest statute, by contrast, only required proof that sexual intercourse had taken place and the state introduced such proof. Little v. State, 262 Ga. App. 377, 585 S.E.2d 677 (2003).

Offense of burglary is separate and distinct from the sexual offenses committed subsequent to the unlawful entry upon the premises; therefore, the offenses do not merge, even though the evidence utilized to establish the sexual offenses may also be relied upon to establish the felonious intent necessary to prove the burglary. Palmer v. State, 174 Ga. App. 720, 331 S.E.2d 77 (1985).

Admissibility of proof of similar offenses committed by accused. — Proof of similar offenses committed by the accused in the same locality, about the same time, and where similar methods were employed by the accused in the commission of such offenses, is admissible on his trial for the purpose of identifying him as the guilty party and for the purpose of showing motive, plan, scheme, bent of mind, and course of conduct. Burnett v. State, 236 Ga. 597, 225 S.E.2d 28 (1976).

Eleven-year lapse of time between defendant's similar prior sex offense and the one on trial did not itself render evidence of the prior offense inadmissible. It was one of the more important factors in considering admissibility; once it crossed that threshold, it thereafter affects the weight and credibility of the testimony. Hill v. State, 183 Ga. App. 404, 359 S.E.2d 190 (1987).

In a rape prosecution, similar transaction testimony from the defendant's prior rape victims was properly admitted as the testimony was probative of the defendant's course of conduct, intent, modus operandi, and lustful disposition, and corroborated the victim's testimony that the defendant claimed to have previously raped persons that "nobody would believe." Sanders v. State, 297 Ga. App. 897, 678 S.E.2d 579 (2009).

Victim's prior sexual intercourse with other men. — Victim of an alleged rape may not be cross-examined as to specific acts of prior sexual intercourse with men other than the accused. Thomas v. State, 234 Ga. 635, 217 S.E.2d 152 (1975).

Proof of present consent in rape trial differs from proof of consent to other crimes. In other crimes the proffered evidence and inference it supports must logically relate within a particular factual context. For example, it is well established that evidence of victim's general character for violence, or testimony concerning specific acts against another, is impermissible. In rape cases, however, proof of prior consent without regard to identity of persons or similarity of circumstances may be admitted to allow jury to weigh, or calculate as it were, the probability of consent with respect to an entire class of "unchaste" women when the court finds that evidence "supports an inference that accused could have reasonably believed that complaining witness consented to conduct complained of." Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

Victim's testimony that when she was 13, defendant forced his penis inside her vagina against her will was sufficient to support rape conviction. Edmonson v. State, 219 Ga. App. 323, 464 S.E.2d 839 (1995), overruled on other grounds, Collins v. State, 229 Ga. App. 658, 495 S.E.2d 59 (1997).

Force is a necessary element of the offense of common-law or forcible rape against an under-age victim. Collins v. State, 229 Ga. App. 658, 495 S.E.2d 59 (1998), aff'd, 270 Ga. 42, 508 S.E.2d 390 (1998).

Pertinence and admissibility of evidence of complainant's lack of chastity. See Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

Admissibility of evidence of defendant's abusive treatment of former girlfriend. — Defendant's testimony elicited in prosecution for rape in regard to an incident with a former girlfriend in which he had "pushed her across the face" was relevant, even though it incidentally referred to criminal conduct, and was admissible as it showed defendant's identity, bent of mind, and course of conduct. Jackson v. State, 157 Ga. App. 604, 278 S.E.2d 5 (1981).

Defendant's incriminating statement to victim is admissible. — Victim was properly allowed to testify, at defendant's trial for rape and aggravated sodomy, that, during the course of her ordeal, defendant had made the incriminating admission to her that "there's been ten others, ten other women, and you're not the only one." Copeland v. State, 177 Ga. App. 773, 341 S.E.2d 302 (1986).

When defendant's identity as perpetrator of two separate rape offenses was in dispute, the jury's acquittal of defendant on the earlier charge resolved the "identity" factor in his favor and the state could not relitigate the issue; admission of evidence of the prior offense at his later trial on the subsequent offense was reversible error. Lucas v. State, 178 Ga. App. 150, 342 S.E.2d 377 (1986).

Reversible error to admit physician's opinion as to "rape." — Allowing any question and answer of a physician who examined the victim of an alleged rape which would involve the physician's opinion stated in his report that "this is rape" constituted reversible error. Nichols v. State, 177 Ga. App. 689, 340 S.E.2d 654 (1986).

Victim's testimony based on nonvisual senses. — Victim need not actually see her assailant penetrate her in order to allege the element of carnal knowledge of the victim; the victim may also give testimony predicated upon information gathered by other senses. Hanvey v. State, 186 Ga. App. 690, 368 S.E.2d 357, cert. denied, 186 Ga. App. 918, 368 S.E.2d 357 (1988).

Testimony of prior incidents. — In a trial for rape and incest the trial court did not err in permitting the victim to testify as to two prior incidents in which defendant, her father, made sexual advances toward her. Hall v. State, 186 Ga. App. 830, 368 S.E.2d 787 (1988).

Victim's reluctance to actually name aggressor's sex organ did not disallow a finding that that is what she meant by use of the word "something," and the jury could reasonably infer that the "something" defendant assaulted the victim with was his sexual organ. Richie v. State, 183 Ga. App. 248, 358 S.E.2d 648 (1987).

Proof when victim murdered by assailant. — Rape can be proven although victim is unable to testify because subsequently murdered by assailant. Durham v. State, 243 Ga. 408, 254 S.E.2d 359 (1979).

Jury consideration of delay in reporting alleged rape. — Delay in reporting an alleged rape is one circumstance that the jury must consider in determining the credibility of the prosecutrix. That delay may be explained, however, with the decision on credibility left to the jury. Watson v. State, 235 Ga. 461, 219 S.E.2d 763 (1975).

If there is substantial step toward rape, crime would become attempted rape. Bissell v. State, 153 Ga. App. 564, 266 S.E.2d 238 (1980).

Assault, or assault and battery, is necessarily involved in every case of rape. Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

Construed with O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23. — Offense of rape necessarily includes contact of insulting or provoking nature under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23. Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

Construction with O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12. — O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12(a)(7) clearly provides that convictions for rape and crimes relating to rape require registration as a sex offender, and the statute is not unconstitutionally vague. Jenkins v. State, 284 Ga. 642, 670 S.E.2d 425 (2008).

Adultery is not included in offense of rape. Hill v. State, 183 Ga. App. 404, 359 S.E.2d 190 (1987).

Rape and incestuous adultery are different in nature of wrong done and in facts constituting them. Neither includes the other, and the defendant may be convicted of either, with or without allegation of proof of some fact essential to the other. Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941).

Carnal knowledge of the female is a fact common to both rape and incestuous adultery. If it is with force and against her will the crime is rape, whether the female be under or over the age of consent and whether she be the defendant's daughter or not. The fact that she is his daughter is immaterial. If she is his daughter and under the age of consent, and the force, if any, used by the defendant was mere authority or influence, the crime is incestuous adultery, and the fact that the force used cannot be said to be that violence which constitutes rape is immaterial. Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941).

Included offenses. — Neither rape nor incest is included in the other as a matter of law. Kirby v. State, 187 Ga. App. 88, 369 S.E.2d 274 (1988).

Denial of defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal was proper where defendant's argument that the DNA also matched 500 to 1000 others and where the sufficiency of the corroboration of an accomplice's testimony were jury questions. Robinson v. State, 259 Ga. App. 555, 578 S.E.2d 214 (2003).

Denial of severance upheld where similar modus operandi between crimes. — When a rape and a rape and kidnapping charge were tried jointly, the evidence showed a similar modus operandi, and there was no abuse of the trial court's discretion in denying defendant's motion for severance of the offenses. Davis v. State, 180 Ga. App. 190, 348 S.E.2d 730 (1986).

Evidentiary effect of defendant's statement admitting intercourse. — When in a rape case the accused makes a statement which admits the intercourse but falls short of admitting that the intercourse was accomplished by means of force and against the will of the victim or prosecutrix, the statement is insufficient to amount to a confession of rape since force is an essential element of the crime of rape. Jackson v. State, 225 Ga. 553, 170 S.E.2d 281 (1969).

Conspiracy. — When the defendant admits intercourse, and the statement in question clearly makes out a case of conspiracy between the defendant and other individuals charged with the same crime; and when, from all reasonable inferences and deductions which may be drawn from the statement it is apparent that all the participants in the crime were exercising and using force or threats of force upon the victim, the defendant, being a participant in the conspiracy, is equally chargeable under the facts related in the statement with the force exerted upon the victim by means of threats of violence and bodily harm visited upon her by his coconspirators even though he himself may not have admitted in his statement to have personally exerted any such force and violence upon the victim. Jackson v. State, 225 Ga. 553, 170 S.E.2d 281 (1969).

Conviction for multiple offenses. — Evidence authorized the jury to find that more than one instance of sexual intercourse with the victim occurred, permitting conviction for each offense (rape and incest) based on separate occasions. Kirby v. State, 187 Ga. App. 88, 369 S.E.2d 274 (1988).

Merger and Other Offenses

Burglary and rape not included offenses.—Jury's verdicts of acquittal for a burglary charge and conviction for a rape charge were not inconsistent or repugnant, since a verdict of acquittal upon a burglary charge does not necessarily include a finding against a fact essential for a rape conviction. Smith v. State, 173 Ga. App. 625, 327 S.E.2d 584 (1985).

Conviction for cruelty to children did not merge with the rape conviction since the evidence supporting the rape conviction was not the same evidence that supported the cruelty to children conviction. Brown v. State, 190 Ga. App. 678, 379 S.E.2d 598, cert. denied, 190 Ga. App. 897, 379 S.E.2d 598 (1989).

Lesser offense of cruelty to children did not merge into the greater offenses of rape and aggravated child molestation, where the facts that the victim was threatened and terrorized, that she screamed in pain, and that she continued to experience pain and discomfort and would suffer from the venereal diseases she contracted from defendant forever were not needed to prove the elements of rape and aggravated child molestation. Ranalli v. State, 197 Ga. App. 360, 398 S.E.2d 420 (1990).

Crimes of rape and cruelty to children did not merge as a matter of fact, as they constituted separate offenses and proof of separate elements; therefore, because the offenses did not merge, defendant was not punished twice for the same conduct. Currlington v. State, 270 Ga. App. 381, 606 S.E.2d 619 (2004).

Defendant's convictions for rape and cruelty to a child did not merge for sentencing purposes, as additional evidence, beyond that necessary to prove rape, existed, specifically, that the rapes caused the victim cruel and excessive physical and mental pain; moreover, after the rapes, the victim was upset, fearful, did not feel safe at home, and cried repeatedly when recounting the episodes to a conse-

lor. Barber v. State, 283 Ga. App. 129, 640 S.E.2d 696 (2006).

Trial court did not err in declining to merge the defendant's convictions of cruelty to a child and rape for purposes of sentencing because each required proof of a fact that the other did not; specifically, the offense of cruelty to a child required, among other things, a showing that the defendant maliciously caused cruel or excessive mental pain to a child while the offense of rape required, among other things, a showing that the defendant had carnal knowledge of the victim forcibly and against her will. Pendley v. State, No. A10A2301, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 283 (Mar. 25, 2011).

False imprisonment convictions and rape convictions did not merge, where a rational trier of fact could reasonably have concluded from the evidence that the confinement and detention of the victim far exceeded that which was immediately associated with the acts of sexual intercourse. Moua v. State, 200 Ga. App. 49, 406 S.E.2d 557 (1991).

Proof of rape and kidnapping with bodily injury. — Separate offenses of rape and kidnapping with bodily injury were shown where the evidence used to prove the kidnapping was the asportation of the victim from one room to another and bruises she suffered in her struggle with defendant before the subsequent intercourse which supported the rape charge. Roberson v. State, 219 Ga. App. 160, 464 S.E.2d 262 (1995).

When lesser offenses should be included in charge in rape case. — In all cases where defendant is charged with rape, and where evidence under any view thereof would authorize conviction for lesser offense necessarily involved in graver charge, the jury should be instructed that he may be convicted of the lesser offense. Where all evidence shows either completed offense as charged, or no offense, such evidence will not support verdict for one of the lesser grades of the offense, and court should not charge on lesser grades. Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 in failing to argue at trial and on appeal that the inmate's statutory rape and incest convictions should have merged into the inmate's rape conviction as a matter of fact since all of the crimes arose out of the same incident, as the crimes of statutory rape and incest were not established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to establish the crime of rape; the inmate's convictions of statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3 and incest under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 were not included pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(1) in the rape conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, as statutory rape, which required evidence as to the victim's age and that the victim was not the inmate's spouse, and incest, which required proof of the victim's relation to the inmate, had elements not required for rape. Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

Guilty verdict on rape charge is inconsistent with not guilty verdict on aggravated assault charge. Martin v. State, 157 Ga. App. 304, 277 S.E.2d 300, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 833, 102 S. Ct. 133, 70 L. Ed. 2d 112 (1981).

Statutory rape not lesser included offense of forcible rape. — Since statutory rape requires proof of an element — age — that forcible rape does not, it cannot be a lesser included offense of forcible rape. Hill v. State, 246 Ga. 402, 271 S.E.2d 802 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 923, 101 S. Ct. 2001, 68 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1981).

Sexual battery as lesser included offense. — As the defendant agreed at the charge conference, under the facts of the case, no evidence supported a charge on sexual battery as a lesser included offense of rape; the evidence concerning the rape was obviously conflicting as the first victim testified that the defendant raped the victim but the defendant testified that the defendant did nothing wrong, thus a lesser included offense charge was not warranted. Quenga v. State, 270 Ga. App. 141, 605 S.E.2d 860 (2004).

Statutory rape count merged into rape count. — Where evidence showed that offense of statutory rape as alleged was included in the offense of rape as alleged, the statutory rape count merged into the rape count. Wofford v. State, 226 Ga. App. 487, 486 S.E.2d 697 (1997).

Merger and Other Offenses (Cont'd)

Rape, aggravated sodomy, and child molestation. — Jury's verdict of not guilty of rape was not repugnant to and inconsistent with the verdicts of guilty for aggravated sodomy and child molestation. The elements of each of the three crimes charged are different, and the conduct related to each, as evidenced in this case, was also different, distinct, and separate. Hill v. State, 183 Ga. App. 654, 360 S.E.2d 4 (1987).

Double jeopardy not involved in rape and child molestation verdicts.

— Double jeopardy was not involved by a jury verdict finding the defendant guilty of rape and child molestation based on the same conduct where the trial court merged the two counts and entered a judgment of conviction and a sentence only on the rape count. Mackey v. State, 235 Ga. App. 209, 509 S.E.2d 68 (1998).

Conviction of aggravated assault.

— When, after completing the act of forcible intercourse (rape), defendant drew his gun again, pulled back the hammer, and threatened to shoot both victims if they did not obey his further commands, this second drawing of the deadly weapon was subsequent to, and separate from, the completed offense of rape against the first victim; thus, the evidence regarding the use of force during the incident was not "used up" in the offense of rape, and defendant could properly be convicted of aggravated assault. Ellis v. State, 181 Ga. App. 826, 354 S.E.2d 15 (1987).

When defendant was guilty of rape and armed robbery. — When the evidence in a rape, robbery, and murder case showed that the defendant took some $480.00 from the victim at gunpoint; a gynecologist testified that he found motile sperm in the victim's vagina and cervix, and lacerations indicating forced sexual intercourse; and when the defendant admitted having intercourse with the victim but claimed she consented, the defendant was properly found guilty of rape and armed robbery by the jury as the jury was authorized to do so beyond a reasonable doubt. Gates v. State, 244 Ga. 587, 261 S.E.2d 349 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 938, 100 S. Ct. 1332, 63 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1980).

Statutory rape established as factually included offense. — Defendant was properly convicted of statutory rape, even though the indictment only charged the defendant with forcible rape. While statutory rape was not included, as a matter of law, within the offense of forcible rape, the facts alleged in the indictment—that the defendant had sexual intercourse with a victim under 16—and the evidence presented at trial to establish the charged offense were sufficient to establish the lesser offense. Hill v. State, 295 Ga. App. 360, 671 S.E.2d 853 (2008).

Child molestation and incest do not merge. — Defendant's child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, and incest in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 charges did not merge as a matter of law or fact because they were separate legal offenses and because the victim's testimony and other evidence showed that the victim suffered well over two separate acts of sexual intercourse and additional instances involving oral and anal sex with the defendant. Allen v. State, 281 Ga. App. 294, 635 S.E.2d 884 (2006).

Kidnapping, aggravated assault and rape did not merge. — Kidnapping, aggravated assault, and rape were separate offenses, completed individually, and did not merge as a matter of fact; thus, the trial court did not err in refusing to merge the kidnapping counts into the aggravated assault and rape counts for purposes of sentencing. Dasher v. State, 281 Ga. App. 326, 636 S.E.2d 83 (2006).

No merger of aggravated assault with rape. — Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault with intent to rape did not merge into the defendant's rape conviction as the defendant's fondling the victim while threatening to kill the victim were separate and distinct acts of force and intimidation beyond that necessary to accomplish the rape. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

Aggravated assault merged with rape. — Because the requirement under the rape statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, that defendant have forcible carnal knowledge of the victim against the victim's will was not a fact required under the aggravated assault statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, the aggravated assault with intent to rape charge merged with the rape charge; therefore, the trial court erred in sentencing defendant separately for aggravated assault. Johnson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 639, 680 S.E.2d 675 (2009).

Trial court did not err in refusing to merge a kidnapping charge into a rape charge when the evidence authorized the jury to find that defendant, armed with a pistol, forced his way into the victim's car and drove off with the victim to a secluded area where he raped and beat her and moved to another location and again raped and abused the victim and then drove away with her car and the property in the car, leaving the naked victim behind. Clark v. State, 166 Ga. App. 366, 304 S.E.2d 494 (1983).

No merger with sexual battery. — Since the evidence established that both sexual battery and rape occurred, and evidence of neither offense was necessary to prove the other, there was no merger, and the trial court did not err in sentencing defendant for both convictions. Trotter v. State, 248 Ga. App. 156, 546 S.E.2d 286 (2001).

Merger of rape and aggravated child molestation. — Trial court erred in failing to merge the defendant's rape and aggravated child molestation counts at sentencing; accordingly, although the state properly prosecuted the defendant for both offenses, the trial court should have only convicted and sentenced the defendant for the rape. Defendant's separate conviction and sentence for aggravated child molestation was to be vacated. Lay v. State, 264 Ga. App. 483, 591 S.E.2d 427 (2003).

Merger of child molestation and statutory rape. — Trial court did not err in refusing to merge a child molestation count with a statutory rape count because the evidence showed that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim on multiple occasions, and since the victim reported at least two separate acts of sexual intercourse, it could not be said that the convictions were based on the same conduct; therefore, a conviction and sentence could be authorized on both the child molestation charge and the statutory rape charge. Wilder v. State, 304 Ga.

App. 891, 698 S.E.2d 374 (2010).

Merger of rape and incest. — Contrary to the defendant's argument, the trial court did not err in failing to merge a conviction for incest, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22, in one count into a conviction for rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, in another count, despite the fact that both counts were based on the same act of sexual intercourse because the defendant's conduct established the commission of more than one crime; to establish the crime of rape, the state proved that the defendant had carnal knowledge of the victim, forcibly and against the victim's will, but to establish incest, it was also necessary to prove that the victim had a certain relation to the defendant. Thus, incest was not established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to establish proof of rape. Dew v. State, 292 Ga. App. 631, 665 S.E.2d 715 (2008).

Jury Instructions

Court is authorized to charge that female under 14 cannot consent when the indictment contains no allegation as to age. McFall v. State, 235 Ga. 105, 218 S.E.2d 839 (1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 969, 96 S. Ct. 1468, 47 L. Ed. 2d 737 (1976).

Charge to jury on rape and child molestation. — When the defendant was on trial for the rape of a 13-year-old female, it was correct for the trial court to have charged the jury to first consider whether the defendant was guilty of rape and to consider his guilt or innocence of child molestation only if the jury found him not guilty of rape. Lamar v. State, 243 Ga. 401, 254 S.E.2d 353, appeal dismissed, 444 U.S. 803, 100 S. Ct. 23, 62 L. Ed. 2d 16 (1979).

Continuing circumstances involving force. — When the trial court charged the jury: "If the actual sexual intercourse took place or occurred in a continuing state of circumstances involving force or threats of bodily harm sufficient to create force and the male actually had intercourse with the female in that set of circumstances and he as a reasonable person knew of this ongoing situation and as an or as a reasonable person should have known of the ongoing sitution and the force or threats of force involved he would be chargeable with the use of force," and defendant contended the state was thereby relieved of the state's absolute burden of persuasion as to the essential element of force, it was held that the portion of the charge at issue did not create a conclusive and mandatory presumption which would relieve the state of the burden of persuasion on the element of force as contended by the defendant, since when considering this excerpt, the charge as a whole had to be considered. Williamson v. State, 186 Ga. App. 589, 367 S.E.2d 863 (1988).

Refusal of lesser charge of child molestation held reversible error. — Trial court committed reversible error by refusing to give defendant's request to charge the lesser offense of child molestation, where although the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for rape, a rational trier of fact could have found that defendant was not guilty of rape but guilty of the lesser offense. Parker v. State, 256 Ga. 543, 350 S.E.2d 570 (1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 940, 107 S. Ct. 1592, 94 L. Ed. 2d 781 (1987).

Charge as to state's burden of proof. — Trial court correctly charged the jury as to the rape count of the indictment and its lesser included offenses of statutory rape and sexual battery and properly instructed the jury as to the state's burden to prove the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, substantially in accordance with the pattern charge because there was no objectionable summary of the reasonable doubt standard as an honest belief, and while the best practice would not have been to employ the word "believe" in the court's charge, the trial court did not improperly summarize the burden of proof or otherwise confuse the jury in doing so; the trial court made no attempt to summarize the court's reasonable doubt charge as an honestly held belief or to otherwise explain it, and twice after giving the charge, the trial court made reference to the court's reasonable doubt charge as initially given by instructing the jury that the jury could convict the defendant of rape and child molestation if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty thereof. Alexander v. State, 308 Ga. App. 245, 707 S.E.2d 156 (2011).

Erroneous charge. — Charge which permitted the jury to find the defendant guilty of forcible rape pursuant to former Code 1933, § 26-2001 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1), under a definition of statutory rape pursuant to former Code 1933, § 26-2018 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3) and to impose a sentence of life imprisonment which could not be imposed for statutory rape was error. Robinson v. State, 232 Ga. 123, 205 S.E.2d 210 (1974).

It was erroneous to charge on child molestation as lesser included offense when indictment does not allege that the victim is under the age of sixteen. Heggs v. State, 246 Ga. App. 354, 540 S.E.2d 643 (2000).

Charge which failed to define the elements of rape, and which was compounded by gratuitous references to irrelevant matters such as whether "an actual theft occurred" and "criminal negligence," was substantially in error, was harmful as a matter of law, and deprived defendant of his right to a fair trial. Phelps v. State, 192 Ga. App. 193, 384 S.E.2d 260 (1989).

Refusal to give a requested charge that "in all cases there exists the presumption that no crime has been committed," is not error when the victim's testimony, if believed by the jury, was sufficient direct evidence to establish a corpus for the offenses of rape, burglary, and aggravated sodomy alleged, and the trial court charged the jury the general charge on the presumption of innocence. Smith v. State, 180 Ga. App. 422, 349 S.E.2d 279 (1986).

No objection when defendant requested instruction. — Trial court did not err by convicting defendant of statutory rape though the indictment cited only rape as defendant requested the statutory rape charge and, therefore, could not complain of a purported error that defendant created. Freeman v. State, 291 Ga. App. 651, 662 S.E.2d 750 (2008).

Right to limiting instructions as to testimony on psychological effect on victim waived. — Trial court did not err by failing to give curative or limiting instrictions to the jury concerning testimony by the victim of the psychological effect of the offense between the time of the offense and trial since there was no objection during this testimony, and defendant's counsel proceeded through cross-examination of the victim, an out-of-court evidentiary hearing, and a recess at the conclusion of the victim's testimony before raising an objection to the testimony of the victim as to the psychological effect this incident had upon her. By failing to object contemporaneously with the testimony, and by proceeding to cross-examine the witness, trial counsel waived the error. Smith v. State, 180 Ga. App. 422, 349 S.E.2d 279 (1986).

Withdrawn charge request properly not honored. — Trial court did not err by failing to charge the jury that child molestation was a lesser included offense of rape since defendant subsequently withdrew his written request for such a charge. Brady v. State, 206 Ga. App. 497, 426 S.E.2d 15 (1992).

"Against the will" element was proper. — Even though defendant's indictment on rape charges under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1 failed to allege the victim's age, because the evidence clearly showed that the victim was under 16, the evidence removed the state's requirement to prove that the rape was against the victim's will. Taylor v. State, 264 Ga. App. 665, 592 S.E.2d 148 (2003).

Victim's capacity to consent. — Trial court's order limiting the defendant's recross-examination and the trial court's charge to the jury on the victim's capacity to consent did not warrant reversal of the defendant's rape conviction, as: (1) the information elicited by the defendant's counsel on recross would have been cumulative of evidence already received; and (2) the Court of Appeals of Georgia had previously upheld a similar charge with identical language to the charge given herein. Hopson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 520, 636 S.E.2d 702 (2006).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for rape, two counts of kidnapping, three counts of child molestation, and aggravated assault, because the evidence of the defendant's guilt in the rape of one minor victim was overwhelming, and because the defendant's defense of mistaken identity did not place the element of force at issue, the trial court's erroneous jury instruction that provided that sexual acts directed towards children were presumed under the law to be forcible and against the will of the child was harmless. Stover v. State, 293 Ga. App. 210, 666 S.E.2d 602 (2008).

Good character charge erroneous.

— In a prosecution for rape, a good character charge was erroneous as: 1) the charge failed to inform the jury that the defendant's good character was a substantive fact, and that evidence of good character had to be considered in connection with all other evidence; and 2) the charge failed to instruct the jury that good character in and of itself could be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to guilt. Hobbs v. State, 299 Ga. App. 521, 682 S.E.2d 697 (2009).

Sufficiency of Evidence

Proof of force. — Defendant's threat to the nine year old victim that she "would get a spanking" if she told anybody was sufficient to prove force in a prosecution for rape. Johnson v. State, 216 Ga. App. 858, 456 S.E.2d 251 (1995).

Victim's testimony that when she was 13, defendant forced his penis inside her vagina against her will was sufficient to support rape conviction. Edmonson v. State, 219 Ga. App. 323, 464 S.E.2d 839 (1995), overruled on other grounds, Collins v. State, 229 Ga. App. 658, 495 S.E.2d 59 (1997).

Victim's testimony that defendant started exploiting her sexually when she was under five years old, and that she did not tell her mother because she was afraid of what defendant might do, and that defendant told her that if she told anyone, she and her mother would be out on the street was sufficient to show force required to support forcible rape conviction. Gibbins v. State, 229 Ga. App. 896, 495 S.E.2d 46 (1998).

Rational trier of fact could reasonably have found that the defendant had forcible sexual intercourse with the victim where the ten-year-old victim testified that she did not want the defendant to put his penis in her vagina and that she did not ask him to do it and, further, that she had to ask him to stop more than once before he stopped. Casey v. State, 237 Ga. App. 461, 515 S.E.2d 429 (1999).

Victim's statement that she was aware that defendant had previously "stuck a dude in the neck with a screwdriver" was relevant and material to one of the required elements of rape and the fact that it may have incidentally placed defendant's character in issue did not make it inadmissible. Johnson v. State, 238 Ga. App. 677, 520 S.E.2d 221 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient to support the charge that defendant had carnal knowledge of the victim forcibly under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1) since the victim testified that defendant threatened to whip the victim if the victim told anyone; thus, the victim's lack of resistance was induced by fear amounting to force. Jenkins v. State, 259 Ga. App. 87, 576 S.E.2d 68 (2003).

Contrary to defendant's argument, the state adequately proved the element of force required to convict defendant of rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a), where the victim, defendant's foster child, who was five years old at the time of the crime, testified that defendant penetrated the child, which hurt the child, and that the child did not tell the child's secret because defendant told the child that if the child did, the child would not see the child's family again. Pollard v. State, 260 Ga. App. 540, 580 S.E.2d 337 (2003).

Sufficient evidence of force supported the rape conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1); there was evidence that defendant told the child that the child would be spanked or punished if the child told anyone about the sexual offenses, the child was physically punished when the child's sibling reported the sexual abuse, and the child testified that the child was made to have sex with the parent and that defendant ordered the child to take the child's clothes off. Zepp v. State, 276 Ga. App. 466, 623 S.E.2d 569 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, and the defendant's rape conviction was upheld on appeal, given the victim's testimony at trial that the defendant's sexual organ penetrated the victim's after telling the defendant to stop was sufficient in and of itself, and no evidence was presented that directly contradicted this statement; hence, the jury had the right to accept the victim's testimony depicting non-consensual, forcible intercourse, as satisfying the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. App. 106, 635 S.E.2d 582 (2006).

There was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1); the victim was age 12 at the time and was unable to give legal consent, and the victim's testimony about the victim's fear of the defendant and the pain the victim felt during the rape constituted force sufficient to convict the defendant of rape. Hutchens v. State, 281 Ga. App. 610, 636 S.E.2d 773 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

At trial, when the victim testified that the defendant held a gun to the victim's head and forced the victim to have sex with the defendant against the victim's will, such testimony was sufficient, in and of itself, to sustain the defendant's conviction of rape. Harris v. State, 283 Ga. App. 374, 641 S.E.2d 619 (2007).

Sufficient evidence existed to establish that an act was committed forcibly against defendant's step-daughter by him based on the child's testimony that defendant would take off the child's clothes, that it felt nasty when defendant was touching her, and that the child did not immediately tell the mother about defendant's acts because the child did not want to be hurt; additional testimony included the child stating that she ran away from home once to avoid defendant's actions and, during an interview with a social worker, the child pointed to scars and marks on the child's body caused by defendant. Stroud v. State, 284 Ga. App. 604, 644 S.E.2d 467 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 506 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not err by denying a defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on a rape charge as the victim testified that the first time the victim had intercourse with the defendant, the defendant grabbed the victim's hands and threw the victim on the couch; that the victim was scared and crying; and that the defendant warned the victim that the victim would be run out of the apartment if the victim told a parent. Such evidence was sufficient to prove the element of force necessary to support the rape conviction. Mora v. State, 295 Ga. App. 641, 673 S.E.2d 23 (2009).

Conviction of rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), was supported by sufficient evidence because the victim, the defendant's daughter, specifically testified that the defendant forced the daughter to have sex with the defendant against the daughter's will, which testimony, although conclusory, sufficed to show the element of force; the state also proved force by circumstantial evidence by establishing that, for four years, the defendant had forced the daughter to suffer multiple acts of child molestation, despite the daughter's demands that the defendant stop and despite the daughter's repeated efforts to pull or get away from the defendant. When the daughter finally told the daughter's mother of the abuse, the mother disbelieved the daughter and accused the daughter of lying, and, since the victim's outcry regarding the prior molestation was ignored, the jury was authorized to find that, from the victim's perspective, resistance in a subsequent incident would have been futile. Bradberry v. State, 297 Ga. App. 679, 678 S.E.2d 131 (2009).

Evidence was more than sufficient to authorize a jury's verdict that the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of rape because the victim's testimony that "it hurt" when the defendant pushed his penis in her vagina and that he threatened to put her family out of his house if she told her parents or if she refused sexual contact was more than sufficient evidence of force; the jury was authorized to consider that the victim failed to initially disclose the incidents because she was fearful of the defendant and that the defendant yelled at the victim when she moved during intercourse as additional evidence of his forcible acts, and the victim's testimony, together with her immediate and consistent outcry to her father, law enforcement, and an emergency room pediatrician, provided the jury with ample evidence of penetration. Matlock v. State, 302 Ga. App. 173, 690 S.E.2d 489 (2010).

State was not required to prove that a rape victim was physically injured in order to establish that sex with a defendant was forcible and nonconsensual in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1). The victim's testimony about the forcible nature of the defendant's conduct was sufficient, and the victim made an immediate outcry. Watson v. State, 304 Ga. App. 128, 695 S.E.2d 416 (2010).

State properly showed the elements of force and lack of consent in prosecuting a defendant for the repeated rape of the defendant's daughter under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a) by demonstrating that the victim had initially resisted, that the defendant had threatened the victim and made the victim financially dependent, and that an earlier outcry had resulted in dismissed charges. Williams v. State, 304 Ga. App. 592, 696 S.E.2d 512 (2010).

Substantial degree of violence and vigorous resistance not required. — Even though the act was not accompanied by an overwhelming show of force, nor by a substantial degree of violence or resisted by the victim vigorously with great outcry, the juvenile court was warranted in finding defendant guilty of rape beyond a reasonable doubt. J.B. v. State, 171 Ga. App. 373, 319 S.E.2d 465 (1984).

Circumstantial evidence of intent. — When a defendant was charged with assault with intent to commit rape but did not actually have carnal knowledge of the victim as defined by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1 there was evidence, although circumstantial insofar as intent is concerned, sufficient to establish that the defendant assaulted the victim with intent to commit rape. Butler v. State, 194 Ga. App. 895, 392 S.E.2d 324 (1990).

Acquittal for aggravated assault not inconsistent. — When the jury found that defendant raped the victim, but was unable to find that he committed aggravated assault, there was no inconsistency in the verdict. Cowart v. State, 177 Ga. App. 107, 338 S.E.2d 534 (1985).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper, even though defendant was acquitted of kidnapping with bodily injury, false imprisonment, and aggravated assault, as Georgia did not recognize the inconsistent verdict rule; further, the convictions were not necessarily inconsistent as the jury could have found that defendant raped the victim, but did not commit the other crimes. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Victim's prior treatment for drug and alcohol abuse held irrelevant. — Although defendant asserted that a logical connection exists between prior treatment for alcohol and drug abuse and present ability to remember whether one consented to have sex, the trial court correctly ruled that the victim's previous treatment for alcohol and drug abuse was absolutely irrelevant to the issue of consent. Kennard v. State, 180 Ga. App. 522, 349 S.E.2d 470 (1986).

Evidence of similar prior offense held admissible. — Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of a prior rape which the defendant had committed some nine years earlier since there were striking similarities between the prior offense and the offense for which the defendant was on trial. In both instances, the defendant had beaten and sexually assaulted an elderly black woman in her home at night, after gaining access to the home through a window and then finding his way to the bedroom by lighting matches. Hall v. State, 180 Ga. App. 366, 349 S.E.2d 255 (1986).

Defendant was charged with raping a mentally retarded 27-year-old. Evidence that two years earlier the defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with an eight- and an 11-year-old child was properly admitted as the evidence was probative to show the defendant's lustful disposition toward persons of limited mental capacity, and the evidence's relevance outweighed any prejudice. Kent v. State, 294 Ga. App. 134, 668 S.E.2d 442 (2008).

Evidence of similar offense admissible to show bent of mind. — When there was no question as to whether the defendant was the perpetrator of the similar offense and the modus operandi of the defendant was the same, evidence of the similar offense was admissible to show the defendant's bent of mind to commit rape if his victims resisted his advances. Davis v. State, 180 Ga. App. 190, 348 S.E.2d 730 (1986).

Evidence of independent crimes inadmissible when no relation to offense charged. — In a trial for rape in 1985, when there was no similarity between the rapes in 1973 and the offense charged, and no logical connection between the prior offenses and the offense charged, the evidence of prior offenses was not admissible as an exception to the general rule that evidence of independent crimes is inadmissible at the trial of the crime charged. Wimberly v. State, 180 Ga. App. 148, 348 S.E.2d 692 (1986).

Evidence of two prior rapes held erroneous when consent was the only issue. — When the only issue was whether the act of sexual intercourse was with or without the consent of the prosecutrix, and malice, intent, motive, etc., were not relevant, considering the sharp conflict in the testimony, the admission of the evidence of the two prior rapes was harmful error. Wimberly v. State, 180 Ga. App. 148, 348 S.E.2d 692 (1986).

DNA evidence properly admitted. — In a prosecution for rape and other crimes, DNA evidence was properly admitted as detectives testified that buccal swabs were obtained from the defendant only after the defendant consented to give a DNA sample and waived in writing the defendant's Miranda rights. Sanders v. State, 297 Ga. App. 897, 678 S.E.2d 579 (2009).

Test of victim's reaction to knife held irrelevant. — When, while interviewing the victim, the sheriff, suddenly and without any warning, intentionally removed a knife from the sheriff's pocket and opened it in front of her and the sheriff described the victim's reaction for the jury as "almost hysterics ... she screamed, she cried, she threw up her hands; she tried to get away from me. There was a tremendous reaction," it was held that the "state of mind" of the victim was that externally induced by the actions of the testifying witness at some remote point following the incident in question, it was not a part of the continuation of the main transaction and was not relevant to elucidate it, and it was, therefore, error to admit the sheriff's testimony. Kennard v. State, 180 Ga. App. 522, 349 S.E.2d 470 (1986).

Slight penetration sufficient. — Penetration of the female sexual organ by the sexual organ of the male which is necessary to constitute rape need be only slight. It is not necessary that the vagina shall be entered or the hymen ruptured; the entering of the anterior of the organ, known as the vulva or labia, is sufficient. Hall v. State, 29 Ga. App. 383, 115 S.E. 278 (1923); Lee v. State, 197 Ga. 123, 28 S.E.2d 465 (1943); Addison v. State, 198 Ga. 249, 31 S.E.2d 393 (1944); Long v. State, 84 Ga. App. 638, 66 S.E.2d 837 (1951); Payne v. State, 231 Ga. 755, 204 S.E.2d 128 (1974); Jackson v. State, 157 Ga. App. 604, 278 S.E.2d 5 (1981).

Insufficient evidence of penetration. — Defendant's conviction for rape was reversed where, although there was evidence that injuries to the victim's vagina were consistent with insertion of a wedge-shaped object, the evidence did not show that the victim's vagina was penetrated by a male sex organ. Newton v. State, 259 Ga. 853, 388 S.E.2d 698 (1990).

Insufficient evidence of force. — Defendant was entitled to a directed verdict of acquittal on the rape charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1 as the state presented no evidence of force; the victim did not testify as to any use of force, physical or mental, and talking the victim into having sex was not sufficient. Howard v. State, 281 Ga. App. 797, 637 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Evidence sufficient that rapes occurred during time set out in indictment. — In a defendant's prosecution for being a party to rape under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-2-20 and 16-6-1(a)(1), there was sufficient evidence that rapes of the 11-year-old victim, who was the defendant's child, took place during the time period specified in the indictment; the jury could have concluded that at least one rape took place during this time period because the defendant, the defendant's children, including the victim, and the rapist moved to a new house after the rapist's release from jail at the beginning of the time period and lived there until the end of the time period when the victim was removed from the home, a neighbor testified that the victim said during that time period that the rapist was having sex with the victim at the new house, and the victim told a psychotherapist that the rapist began abusing the victim at a previous residence and continued to do so at the new house. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Sufficient evidence of penetration. — See Trusty v. State, 237 Ga. App. 839, 517 S.E.2d 91 (1999); Alford v. State, 243 Ga. App. 212, 534 S.E.2d 81 (2000).

DNA evidence taken from deep in a paralyzed rape victim's vagina was sufficient to support the jury's finding that penetration had occurred even though the victim, because of her condition, was unable to testify to the fact of penetration. Knight v. State, 251 Ga. App. 145, 553 S.E.2d 670 (2001).

Defendant's conviction for rape was affirmed because, based on the testimony of the nine-year-old victim and the emergency room nurse who examined the victim, the jury was authorized to conclude that defendant's sex organ penetrated the victim's sexual aperture in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1. Lay v. State, 264 Ga. App. 483, 591 S.E.2d 427 (2003).

In defendant's prosecution for rape, the evidence was sufficient to show the penetration necessary to sustain a rape charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a) because the victim was found with blood on the victim's private parts, and the victim also sustained internal tears, which were consistent with forcible intercourse. Winkfield v. State, 275 Ga. App. 456, 620 S.E.2d 670 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty of aggravated sodomy of one victim and rape and aggravated sodomy of a second victim because the jury was authorized to conclude, based on a nurse's testimony and the medical evidence, that penetration occurred since the nurse was properly qualified as an expert in sexual assault examination and testified that the first victim's external injuries established the potential for penetration; clumps of hair were found in the second victim's trailer, and the defendant's DNA matched the DNA found on the hair. Blash v. State, 304 Ga. App. 542, 697 S.E.2d 265 (2010).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of rape, aggravated sodomy, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime. — See Williams v. State, 247 Ga. App. 99, 543 S.E.2d 408 (2000).

Evidence supported defendant's rape conviction, including the penetration element, as the 31-year-old mentally retarded victim was left in defendant's care, defendant was found naked standing over the victim with the victim's underwear pulled aside to reveal the victim's genitals, an examination revealed recent sexual trauma and sperm, and defendant had committed a similar offense. Page v. State, 271 Ga. App. 541, 610 S.E.2d 171 (2005).

Sufficient evidence to authorize conviction. — Victim's testimony that the accused raped the victim, coupled with medical evidence and testimony concerning the victim's actions and demeanor following the rape, is sufficient evidence to authorize a conviction. Gray v. State, 153 Ga. App. 183, 265 S.E.2d 81 (1980).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for rape because there was medical evidence of penetration, the victim selected the defendant from a photographic lineup, the rape kit was submitted for comparison with a cheek swab taken from the defendant, and the substances found on the victim revealed semen and DNA from the defendant. Neal v. State, 308 Ga. App. 551, 707 S.E.2d 503 (2011).

Evidence was sufficient to enable any rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of two counts of rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1) because the teenage victim testified that the defendant threatened to harm the victim's family if the victim did not have sex with the defendant. Moreover, the victim believed the defendant, as the defendant beat the victim with a shovel, beat the victim's little brother repeatedly, and induced the victim with false promises to travel from Mexico to the United States, where the defendant kept the victim a virtual prisoner in the defendant's apartment. Arellano-Campos v. State, 307 Ga. App. 561, 705 S.E.2d 323 (2011).

Evidence presented at trial was sufficient to authorize a rational jury to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault with intent to rape, and simple battery because the victim's testimony, standing alone, could sustain the convictions; the jury was entitled to take into account similar transaction evidence for the purpose of showing the defendant's intent, bent of mind, and course of conduct, and while the defendant testified to a different version of what transpired, it was the exclusive role of the jury to determine witness credibility and to choose what evidence to believe and what to reject. Alvarez v. State, No. A11A0101, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 340 (Apr. 19, 2011).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), and assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1), because the victim's testimony that the defendant raped, sodomized, punched, burned, and threatened to kill the victim was sufficient to authorize the defendant's convictions. Harris v. State, 308 Ga. App. 523, 707 S.E.2d 908 (2011).

Victim's testimony alone sufficient. — See Smith v. State, 168 Ga. App. 92, 308 S.E.2d 226 (1983); Davis v. State, 168 Ga. App. 272, 308 S.E.2d 602 (1983); Seals v. State, 176 Ga. App. 676, 448 S.E.2d 723 (1994); Littleton v. State, 225 Ga. App. 900, 485 S.E.2d 230 (1997); Howard v. State, 228 Ga. App. 784, 492 S.E.2d 759 (1997); Sweeney v. State, 233 Ga. App. 862, 506 S.E.2d 150 (1998); Skillern v. State, 240 Ga. App. 34, 521 S.E.2d 844 (1999); Garcia v. State, 240 Ga. App. 53, 522 S.E.2d 530 (1999); Roberts v. State, 242 Ga. App. 621, 530 S.E.2d 535 (2000); Burks v. State, 246 Ga. App. 22, 538 S.E.2d 769 (2000); Johnson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 690, 538 S.E.2d 766 (2000).

Testimony of the victim is sufficient of itself if believed and if legally adequate to sustain the conviction of rape. Perry v. State, 154 Ga. App. 385, 268 S.E.2d 747 (1980).

Evidence authorized trial court to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had carnal knowledge of the victim forcibly and against the victim's will. Sims v. State, 167 Ga. App. 479, 306 S.E.2d 732 (1983).

When the state produced evidence that the victim had been forcibly assaulted around the vaginal area, and although the medical examiner testified that he found no sperm and only trace elements of seminal fluid, the position of the victim's body — sweater open, slip pulled up, pantyhose and panties pulled down — was entirely consistent with the jury's conclusion that a rape occurred, and although defendant argued that the injury could have been accomplished with a foreign object such as a stick, a reasonable juror could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that the victim was raped. Davis v. Kemp, 829 F.2d 1522 (11th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 929, 108 S. Ct. 1099, 99 L. Ed. 2d 262 (1988).

When the defendant argued that there was no evidence of the use of force by the defendant or any evidence that he had knowledge of any use of force, but contrary to the defendant's assertion, the victim testified as to pleading with the defendant to release her, that the defendant refused to do so and continued having vaginal intercourse with her, a rational trier of fact could reasonably have found from the evidence adduced at trial proof of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt of the offense of rape. Williamson v. State, 186 Ga. App. 589, 367 S.E.2d 863 (1988); Ward v. State, 205 Ga. App. 584, 423 S.E.2d 288 (1992).

Rational trier of fact could have found defendant guilty beyond reasonable doubt of murder and rape. Robinson v. State, 258 Ga. 279, 368 S.E.2d 513 (1988).

Jury was authorized to conclude from the evidence that defendant accosted the victim in the mall parking lot, forced her to accompany him to a secluded area where he raped and murdered her, then took her jewelry, her pocket book and her automobile, and used her credit cards the next day. Williams v. State, 258 Ga. 281, 368 S.E.2d 742 (1988), cert. denied, 492 U.S. 925, 109 S. Ct. 3261, 106 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1989).

Even excluding the DNA tests, the evidence was overwhelming as to the defendant's guilt. Morris v. State, 212 Ga. App. 42, 441 S.E.2d 273 (1994).

Rational trier of fact could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty of the offense of rape as convicted. Daniels v. State, 212 Ga. App. 617, 442 S.E.2d 483 (1994).

Medical evidence showing the presence of spermatozoa inside the victim's sex organ, and the victim's testimony that defendant "forced me to have sex with him," were sufficient to support the jury's finding of penetration in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1. Fields v. State, 216 Ga. App. 184, 453 S.E.2d 794 (1995).

Victim's statements, corroborated by scientific evidence and the testimony of the security guard that he saw defendant on top of the victim, with his pants around his knees moving in "up and down intercourse type motions" constitutes sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude there was vaginal penetration. Gido v. State, 216 Ga. App. 330, 454 S.E.2d 201 (1995).

Testimony of a nurse that the vaginal injury suffered by the victim was consistent with trauma associated with nonconsensual sex was not objectionable. McDougal v. State, 239 Ga. App. 808, 521 S.E.2d 458 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of rape of the victim as it showed defendant had carnal knowledge of the victim and even though the victim had difficulty in initially identifying the attacker, the victim was later able to recall more specific details linking defendant to the crime. Hawkins v. State, 254 Ga. App. 868, 563 S.E.2d 926 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1 to support a rape conviction where it was shown that the defendant put his knee in the victim's back, pulled her hands behind her, and then tied her hands behind her back with a black cord or piece of rope. Byrd v. State, 259 Ga. App. 15, 576 S.E.2d 35 (2002).

Evidence consisting mostly of testimony from the victim, that the victim was awakened by defendant when the defendant broke into the victim's home, placed the defendant's hand around the victim's neck, and forced the victim to shut up or die, as the defendant threw the victim onto a couch and engaged in sexual intercourse with the victim without the victim's consent, was sufficient to uphold defendant's rape conviction, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, aggravated assault conviction, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and burglary conviction, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1. Lowe v. State, 259 Ga. App. 674, 578 S.E.2d 284 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient as to the essential element of penetration to support the conviction for rape because defendant stated to officers that the incident was a rape, explained that defendant choked the victim, and stated that defendant had "intercourse" with the victim behind the store and described the victim putting the condom on defendant's penis. Manning v. State, 259 Ga. App. 794, 578 S.E.2d 494 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions of rape, kidnapping, burglary, and aggravated assault since: (1) the victim testified that the victim discovered a strange person in the victim's den who grabbed the victim as the victim tried to run away, that the person held a knife to the side of the victim's face and said that the person would kill the victim if the victim screamed, that the person then forced the victim to go from room to room in the victim's home to turn out the lights, and that the person then raped the victim; (2) the victim identified defendant as the victim's attacker after hearing the defendant's voice; and (3) a DNA analyst testified that, with a probability of error of one in a trillion, DNA from defendant's blood matched the DNA found in vaginal swabs that were taken from the victim. McKinney v. State, 261 Ga. App. 218, 582 S.E.2d 463 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support a rape conviction where defendant's eight year old stepchild testified that defendant "put his private in my private," that the defendant moved the defendant's body while inside the victim, that the defendant hurt the victim's "private," where the victim circled the appropriate places on anatomically correct drawings which were admitted into evidence, testified that defendant put the defendant's "private" in the victim's mouth on more than one occasion, where eventually the victim told the victim's parent, the victim's babysitter, and the victim's doctor about these events, and where a physical examination revealed redness and swelling around the victim's vagina, which, the physician testified, could have been caused by trauma. Torres v. State, 262 Ga. App. 309, 585 S.E.2d 228 (2003).

When a 12-year-old child told the child's parent that defendant had just raped the child; hours after the alleged rape, a detective found defendant's checkbook in the abandoned house where the victim said the rape occurred, and a check had been written from it earlier that day; and a doctor who examined the victim within hours of the incident found abrasions and tenderness consistent with the child's description of what had occurred, the appellate court found the evidence sufficient to support defendant's convictions of rape, statutory rape, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation. Weathersby v. State, 263 Ga. App. 341, 587 S.E.2d 836 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of rape and aggravated robbery given the victim's identification of defendant as the assailant, defendant's incriminating statements to police about the attack, and the victim's injuries, which included anal bruising. McMorris v. State, 263 Ga. App. 630, 588 S.E.2d 817 (2003).

When the victim alleged that the defendant robbed and raped the victim at knifepoint, identified the defendant from a photo lineup and at trial, DNA on the victim's clothes matched that of the defendant, the defendant testified the defendant had consensual sex with the victim for money, and the detective who first interviewed the defendant testified that the defendant never told the detective that the defendant had consensual sex, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of rape. Munn v. State, 263 Ga. App. 821, 589 S.E.2d 596 (2003).

Victim's testimony, which was supported by statements the victim made to family, friends, and investigators regarding sexual acts the defendant committed upon the victim, together with the medical findings of the pediatrician who examined the victim were completely consistent with the victim's allegation of abuse by sexual intercourse; therefore, the evidence was more than sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of rape. Wilkins v. State, 264 Ga. App. 524, 591 S.E.2d 445 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's rape conviction where a victim testified that defendant forced the victim to have sex with the defendant, that the victim did not want to engage in such conduct, and that the defendant's penis penetrated the victim's vagina during sex. Evans v. State, 266 Ga. App. 405, 597 S.E.2d 505 (2004).

Evidence of the victim alone was sufficient to authorize a guilty verdict in a child molestation case; there was no requirement that the victim's testimony be corroborated, and defendant's convictions of child molestation, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sexual battery, and cruelty to children were affirmed. McKinney v. State, 269 Ga. App. 12, 602 S.E.2d 904 (2004).

When the victim's and a police officer's testimonies about the crime location established venue, and the defendant induced a jury question as to whether a toy gun was a firearm but did not object to the trial court's instruction, the defendant was properly convicted of rape, false imprisonment, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-41(a), 16-6-1(a), and 16-11-106(b). Bravo v. State, 269 Ga. App. 242, 603 S.E.2d 669 (2004).

When the victim, the defendant's 11-year-old stepchild, testified that the defendant penetrated the child forcibly and against the child's will, the child's testimony satisfied the elements in O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1; in addition, DNA evidence confirmed that the defendant's semen was in the victim's vagina and cervix, medical evidence showed bruising consistent with intercourse, and the evidence was sufficient to support the rape conviction. Reynolds v. State, 269 Ga. App. 268, 603 S.E.2d 779 (2004).

Because defendant took the 16-year old female victim to the hotel where defendant was staying, and after playing video games, forced her to have sexual intercourse against her will, the victim's testimony, by itself, was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1). Johnson v. State, 305 Ga. App. 853, 700 S.E.2d 735 (2010).

Evidence sufficient to support conviction. — Sufficient evidence, including testimony from the child victim identifying defendant's vehicle, evidence of defendant's DNA matching that of the victim and expert testimony that the frequency of such occurrence was approximately one in two billion in the Caucasian population, and similar transaction evidence, supported defendant's kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, and first-degree cruelty to children convictions. Morita v. State, 270 Ga. App. 372, 606 S.E.2d 595 (2004).

As the victim testified that defendant

entered the victim's bedroom and without the victim's consent inserted the defendant's finger and genitals into the victim, this testimony established forcible penetration; moreover, the examining sexual assault specialist concluded that the victim's wounds were consistent with the victim's story of sexual assault and indicated forced penetration by the finger and the penis; the evidence was sufficient for the jury to find the defendant guilty of rape and aggravated sexual battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-1(a)(1) and 16-6-22.2(b). Duran v. State, 274 Ga. App. 876, 619 S.E.2d 388 (2005).

Trial court's denial of defendant's motion for acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, was proper, as there was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions for kidnapping, rape, and robbery by intimidation, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-40, 16-6-1, and 16-8-41, respectively, because the victim positively identified defendant upon the defendant's arrest and at trial, there was similar transaction evidence from another victim who was approached and threatened in the same manner, and there was also corroborative physical evidence; defendant threatened the victim, who was at a bus stop, with a gun, robbed the victim, forced the victim to a storage area in a garage, and raped the victim. Sims v. State, 275 Ga. App. 836, 621 S.E.2d 869 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support a rape conviction after the victim, who had been with the defendant for several hours and showed signs of a sexual assault, immediately picked the photograph of the defendant from a six photo lineup and identified the defendant in court, and where the defendant had hidden from the police. Jennings v. State, 277 Ga. App. 159, 626 S.E.2d 155 (2006).

Despite the victim's recantation of the events that occurred leading up to the rape, kidnapping, and aggravated assault committed by defendant, the evidence presented of the victim's statements and the testimony of the other state witnesses and medical personnel as to the extent of the victim's injuries was sufficient to support the convictions. Hambrick v. State, 278 Ga. App. 768, 629 S.E.2d 442 (2006).

Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish a fact under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, and defendant's convictions for kidnapping, burglary, aggravated sodomy, rape, and false imprisonment were supported by sufficient evidence where the victim testified that defendant forced the victim into a train boxcar, threatened to kill the victim, and had vaginal and oral sex with the victim against the victim's will and without the victim's consent; there was also circumstantial evidence showing the victim's lack of consent, including the victim's fleeing from the boxcar while naked, the victim's outcry to a train engineer that the victim had been raped, and the victim's injuries. Davis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 628, 629 S.E.2d 537 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported a rape conviction despite defendant's claim that the sex was consensual, where the victim, who was working on defendant's shrimp boat, testified that the defendant forced the victim to have sex with the defendant by threatening the victim with a knife. Nguyen v. State, 279 Ga. App. 129, 630 S.E.2d 636 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's rape conviction, under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a), because the jury was authorized to find, based on the victim's testimony alone, that defendant had carnal knowledge of the victim against the victim's will, and additional evidence of the victim's immediate outcry to police and medical personnel, the victim's emotional state, and medical findings made evidence of defendant's guilt overwhelming. Machuca v. State, 279 Ga. App. 231, 630 S.E.2d 828 (2006).

Defendant's convictions of rape, aggravated sodomy, false imprisonment, and two counts of aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence in the form of the victim's injuries, and the victim's testimony that, among other things, after the victim refused the defendant's request for sex, the defendant threw the victim on the bed, hit her in the back and on the arms with hedge clippers, ordered the victim to remove the victim's clothes, dragged the victim by the hair back into the house after the victim had escaped through a window, grabbed the victim, twisted the victim's arm, and said, "I'm trying — bitch, I'm going to kill you," hit the victim in the arm and leg with the hedge clippers, punched the victim on the lips and on the forehead, threw the victim on the bed and raped the victim and made the victim perform oral sex on the defendant. Tarver v. State, 280 Ga. App. 89, 633 S.E.2d 415 (2006).

Convictions for kidnapping, aggravated sexual battery, sexual battery, and attempted rape were all upheld on appeal, as a photo lineup was not impermissibly suggestive, similar transaction evidence was properly admitted, the defendant had notice of the evidence, and the jury was authorized to find the victim credible and to accept the victim's testimony; hence, a rational trier of fact could have found from the evidence presented that the defendant committed the charged crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. Watley v. State, 281 Ga. App. 244, 635 S.E.2d 857 (2006).

There was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1; the victim testified that the defendant forcibly placed defendant's penis in the victim's vagina and made two or three painful thrusts as the victim was fighting the defendant off, and a victim's testimony, without more, was sufficient to sustain a conviction. Allen v. State, 281 Ga. App. 294, 635 S.E.2d 884 (2006).

Because sufficient evidence showed that the defendant, by posing as a police officer and driving the victims to remote locations, used fear and intimidation to ensure that the victims would cooperate and agree to have sex, the defendant was not entitled to an acquittal as to the charges of impersonating an officer, aggravated sodomy, attempted aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault and rape; furthermore, though both victims willingly got into the defendant's car, after the victims pleaded to be let go and the defendant refused to grant those pleas, the act amounted to a kidnapping. Dasher v. State, 281 Ga. App. 326, 636 S.E.2d 83 (2006).

Testimony that the victim physically resisted the defendant's sexual advances to no avail was sufficient to support the defendant's rape and aggravated sodomy convictions; moreover, because sufficient evidence was presented that the defendant was the victim's biological and/or legal father, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's incest conviction as well. Williams v. State, 284 Ga. App. 255, 643 S.E.2d 749 (2007).

Rape, incest, child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sodomy convictions were all upheld on appeal, given that: (1) the elements of child molestation and aggravated child molestation, including venue, were supported by the female victim's testimony; and (2) the trial court's charge on the mandatory presumption of consent was proper. Forbes v. State, 284 Ga. App. 520, 644 S.E.2d 345 (2007).

It was not necessary for the state's circumstantial evidence against a defendant to exclude every conceivable hypothesis, and contrary to the defendant's assertions, the state of undress the victim was found in, coupled with DNA evidence that linked the defendant to the victim, was sufficient to support a jury's conclusion that the defendant raped and murdered the victim as opposed to having committed necrophilia or having engaged in consensual sex with the victim before the victim died. Walker v. State, 282 Ga. 406, 651 S.E.2d 12 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a rape conviction; the victim's testimony that defendant threatened her life when she voiced reluctance to disrobe helped to establish her lack of consent and constituted evidence of force, and there was also medical evidence of forced intercourse. Smith v. State, 287 Ga. App. 222, 651 S.E.2d 133 (2007).

Victim's testimony and the fact that she had bruises consistent with the rape and battery she described were sufficient to support defendant's conviction for violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-1(a)(1) and 16-6-22.2(b); that no semen was found on the victim did not undercut the conviction, and any discrepancies between the victim's testimony and the testimony of two occupants of defendant's house, who stated that the victim was bruised before the assault, were properly resolved by the jury as the trier of fact. Duran v. Walker, No. 06-15758, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 7489 (11th Cir. Mar. 29, 2007) (Unpublished).

Because the testimony of both rape victims sufficiently demonstrated that the defendant had carnal knowledge of both victims on numerous occasions, and on some of those occasions, the victims were forced and threatened to engage in sex with the defendant against their will, both rape convictions were upheld on appeal. Wightman v. State, 289 Ga. App. 225, 656 S.E.2d 563 (2008).

Victim's testimony as to the non-consensual and forcible nature of the victim's sexual contact with the defendant, standing alone, was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction of rape. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 633, 667 S.E.2d 899 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of rape because the child victim stated in a forensic interview that it hurt when the defendant pushed his penis partly into her vagina, that she did not want him to do that, that she told him to stop and tried to push him away, and that she was afraid to tell her mother about it because the defendant had threatened that this information would hurt her mother. This evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of forcible rape. Pendley v. State, No. A10A2301, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 283 (Mar. 25, 2011).

Rape of an elderly victim. — Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of burglary, kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, and theft by taking when a treating physician stated that the 86-year-old victim's injuries, including blood inside her vagina and bruises and contusions on her vagina, were consistent with forcible penetration; when the defendant admitted entering the victim's home, removing her clothing, restraining her with electrical cords, hitting her, putting a plastic bag over her head, forcing her from one room to another, and taking her money and her car; and when DNA from the defendant matched the DNA of two hair roots found on the victim's living room floor. Smith v. State, 291 Ga. App. 545, 662 S.E.2d 323 (2008).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(2), aggravated sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2, and two counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) with regard to his daughter, who was seven at the time. The victim testified that the defendant touched her vagina with his hand and insisted that she touch his penis with her hand; a detective testified that the victim told him that the defendant touched her on her vagina with his hands, fingers, and penis and that he asked her to touch his penis; another detective, who conducted a videotaped interview with the victim, testified that the victim told her that she had sex with the defendant on multiple occasions; in the interview, the victim stated that the defendant pulled her pants down and put his penis inside her vagina and that he put his hand inside her vagina; and the victim's mother and grandmother testified to similar statements by the victim. Osborne v. State, 291 Ga. App. 711, 662 S.E.2d 792 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 783 (Ga. 2008).

Testimony by a victim that the defendant and an accomplice, armed with handguns, forcibly entered the victim's apartment, raped and sodomized the victim, struck the victim with a gun, stole jewelry, bound the victim, and escaped in a car owned by the victim's prospective spouse, and evidence that 24 fingerprints lifted from the apartment and car matched the defendant's, was sufficient to convict the defendant of rape. Crawford v. State, 292 Ga. App. 463, 664 S.E.2d 820 (2008).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for malice murder and rape. The victim had seminal fluid on her leg and buttocks and in her vagina, a massive wound in the back of the head caused by at least five individual blows that had driven pieces of her skull into her brain, and ligature marks on her neck; the defendant told a co-worker that he had hit a woman on the back of the head; DNA obtained from the defendant matched that found on the victim; and the defendant told a detective that he had killed the victim. Holmes v. State, 284 Ga. 330, 667 S.E.2d 71 (2008).

Mentally retarded victims. — A 27-year-old mentally retarded person testified of being raped by the defendant after he entered the victim's apartment; this testimony was corroborated by eyewitnesses who saw the defendant with the victim, blood at the scene, and wounds to the victim's genitals. Coupled with the defendant's prior offenses for taking indecent liberties with minors, and the defendant's eventual admissions after initially claiming to barely know the victim, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of rape. Kent v. State, 294 Ga. App. 134, 668 S.E.2d 442 (2008).

There was no merit to the defendant's argument that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the defendant's rape conviction because there was no physical evidence, such as lacerations, scratching, bruising, or other injuries, to show that the sex the defendant had with the victim was nonconsensual. The victim testified as to the nonconsensual and forcible nature of the victim's contact with the defendant, and that testimony, standing alone, was sufficient to sustain the conviction. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 564, 667 S.E.2d 410 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for rape, incest, statutory rape, and child molestation against one of the defendant's children and a stepchild based on the defendant's repeated engagement in sexual intercourse with the children at various times while one was 12 to 16 years old and the other was 16 to 19 years old, and evidence of a letter threatening suicide on the defendant's part and apologizing for the actions against the children was also introduced against the defendant. However, the conviction on the charge of aggravated sexual battery against the stepchild was in error and required reversal since the state failed to introduce direct or circumstantial evidence sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant violated O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2 by penetrating that child's sexual organ with a replica penis. Connelly v. State, 295 Ga. App. 765, 673 S.E.2d 274 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0892, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 260 (Ga. 2009).

Following evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated sodomy, rape, and robbery by intimidation: 1) the victim's testimony of being repeatedly raped by the defendant at knife point, forced to perform oral sex, beaten, robbed, and threatened with death; 2) a nurse's testimony that the victim was crying, rocking back and forth, and had bruised cheeks; and 3) evidence that the defendant's DNA matched sperm cell DNA found on the victim's body. Sanders v. State, 297 Ga. App. 897, 678 S.E.2d 579 (2009).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), and aggravated sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(2) involving four different victims on three separate dates; both the husband and the wife, the victims in the first criminal incident, identified the defendant in court as the perpetrator of the crimes. Two separate DNA analyses testified to by two forensic biologists showed that the defendant's sperm was present in the vaginas of the other two female victims. Robins v. State, 298 Ga. App. 70, 679 S.E.2d 92 (2009).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for rape, aggravated sodomy, kidnapping, burglary, and misdemeanor sexual battery based on the similar transaction evidence produced by the state, the fact that the defendant's DNA was found in the victims' beds, and that the defendant's identity was established, all of which sufficiently linked the defendant to the crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. Goolsby v. State, 299 Ga. App. 330, 682 S.E.2d 671 (2009).

Identification evidence sufficient. — Evidence supported defendant's rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault, criminal trespass, misdemeanor obstruction of a law enforcement officer, felony obstruction of a law enforcement officer, and possession of marijuana conviction because: (1) a victim testified that defendant choked the victim, slammed the victim around a room, and raped and sodomized the victim, then drank a beer, took the victim's BC powder packets, and a cell phone, and left; (2) defendant fled from the police, kicked two officers, and had marijuana, BC packets, and a cell phone on the defendant's person; (3) defendant's DNA matched the DNA on the beer can; (4) a nurse testified that the victim's bruise was consistent with strangulation; and (5) a doctor testified that the victim's injuries were consistent with rape and sodomy. Lewis v. State, 271 Ga. App. 744, 611 S.E.2d 80 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's rape conviction because it showed that defendant carried the defendant's child from the child's bed to the bed defendant shared with the defendant's spouse and watched the defendant's spouse lay on top of the child, squeezing the child's stomach and rendering the child unable to cry out even when the spouse hurt the child by placing the spouse's genitals in the child's genitals. Spivey v. State, 272 Ga. App. 224, 612 S.E.2d 65 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for rape because the victim testified that defendant held the victim down on a bed, with the defendant's elbow across the victim's throat, and forced the victim to have intercourse with the defendant while the victim pleaded with the defendant to stop; further, a witness saw defendant on top of the protesting victim. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for rape and sexual battery as the victim testified that the victim was raped by a person who entered the victim's home while a friend was visiting and the friend identified defendant as the person who entered the home when the friend was visiting. Powell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 628, 612 S.E.2d 916 (2005).

Because the victim's statement of sexual abuse was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to convict defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, the victim's testimony did not have to be corroborated by physical evidence. Gartrell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 726, 613 S.E.2d 226 (2005).

In defendant's prosecution for rape, kidnapping with bodily injury, and burglary, the evidence was sufficient to show that defendant was the perpetrator of the offenses because the evidence showed the assailant to be a young, African-American person driving a white automobile with certain plates, and defendant admitted that the defendant had been driving a stolen white automobile prior to the date that the crimes occurred; this evidence coupled with DNA evidence showing DNA of both defendant and the victim in stains left on the bedding in the victim's apartment where the rape occurred was sufficient to enable any rational trier of fact to determine beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was the perpetrator of the crimes of which he was found guilty. Winkfield v. State, 275 Ga. App. 456, 620 S.E.2d 670 (2005).

Despite a juvenile's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, an adjudication entered by the juvenile court on a charge of attempted rape was proper because the adjudication was supported not only by the testimony of the victim, but also by the corroborating testimony offered by both the victim's neighbor, who witnessed the attack, and the victim's sister, who chased the juvenile away from the scene. In the Interest of J.L.H., 289 Ga. App. 30, 656 S.E.2d 160 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of rape as the testimony of the defendant's accomplice that the defendant raped the victim was corroborated by the victim's out-of-court and in-court identification of the defendant as the rapist and the fact that the defendant's DNA was found on the victim's clothing. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

Recanting of child victim's testimony. — Witnesses testified pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 that the defendant's stepchild, then 12, told them about being repeatedly raped and molested by the defendant. That the stepchild recanted these statements at trial did not render the hearsay inadmissible under § 24-3-16, and as the stepchild's credibility was for the jury to decide, the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for rape, incest, and child molestation. Harvey v. State, 295 Ga. App. 458, 671 S.E.2d 924 (2009).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of rape, aggravated sodomy, and burglary. — See Clark v. State, 186 Ga. App. 882, 369 S.E.2d 282 (1988).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of rape and possession of firearm during commission of felony. Clemmons v. State, 210 Ga. App. 632, 437 S.E.2d 350 (1993).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of rape and incest. — See Woodford v. State, 240 Ga. App. 875, 525 S.E.2d 408 (1999).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of rape and burglary with intent to rape. — See Clark v. State, 249 Ga. App. 97, 547 S.E.2d 734 (2001).

Evidence sufficient for conviction for rape, murder, and robbery. — See Davis v. State, 292 Ga. App. 782, 666 S.E.2d 56 (2008).

Sufficient evidence of aiding and abetting to convict defendant of rape. — There was sufficient evidence to support the finding that defendant aided and abetted, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(b), the father's rape of the daughter in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1); defendant told the daughter to take the daughter's clothes off and was present when the father had sex with the daughter. Zepp v. State, 276 Ga. App. 466, 623 S.E.2d 569 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Evidence sufficient that defendant was a party to rape. — Defendant was properly convicted of being a party to rape under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-2-20 and 16-6-1(a)(1), because evidence that the defendant knew that the defendant's 11-year-old child was being raped, told the child to lie to investigators, failed to prevent the rapist from having contact with the child, helped the rapist get out of jail, and allowed the rapist to move in with the defendant and the child showed that the defendant affirmatively encouraged and was a party to the rapes. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Failure to preserve lab sample evidence did not warrant dismissal. — Trial court's order dismissing an indictment charging the defendant with rape, incest, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation on grounds that the state improperly failed to preserve lab samples taken from the victim was reversed because the defendant failed to show that the failure was the result of bad faith on the part of the state or the police, and the value of the sample to the defendant was only potentially exculpatory. State v. Brady, 287 Ga. App. 626, 653 S.E.2d 72 (2007).

No abandonment of criminal enterprise shown. — Since the evidence showed that, upon discovering the victim was menstruating, the defendant apparently found the accomplishment of the crime of rape to be more difficult, the defendant was not found to have abandoned the criminal enterprise, choosing instead to force the victim to perform fellatio; therefore, sufficient evidence existed to support the defendant's conviction for attempted rape, since under the circumstances it cannot be said that the defendant made a complete renunciation of the criminal purpose. Allen v. State, 286 Ga. App. 82, 648 S.E.2d 677 (2007).

Counsel not ineffective in rape trial. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for false imprisonment, rape, and aggravated child molestation arising from allegations that the defendant sexually molested a 9-year-old relative, the defendant failed to meet the burden of establishing that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel as to trial counsel's alleged failure to proffer the defendant's anticipated testimony regarding the victim's alleged sexual behavior as the term "hot" as used by the defendant regarding the victim was explained by the officer who interviewed the defendant as meaning that the defendant believed that the victim was sexually active with another, thus, the jury was made aware of what the defendant meant by the term, as opposed to being left with the mistaken impression that the defendant found the victim sexually attractive. Furlow v.

State, 297 Ga. App. 375, 677 S.E.2d 412 (2009).

Failure to present expert testimony on capacity to consent. — In a rape and aggravated sodomy case, the trial court properly rejected the defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for not introducing evidence on the adult victim's mental capacity to consent. Because the defendant failed to proffer the testimony of an uncalled witness, the defendant could not prove that there was a reasonable probability that the trial would have ended differently; furthermore, counsel gave a reasonable explanation for not introducing expert testimony in that counsel believed that the victim might have the capacity to consent and that counsel believed that expert testimony on the issue would not sway the jury. Ravon v. State, 297 Ga. App. 643, 678 S.E.2d 107 (2009).

Sentence

One sentence imposable for three charges and three convictions of rape. — When three charges of rape against a defendant differed from one another only with respect to the averment of date, in none of the three was the date made an essential element, and all the dates alleged fell within the period of the statute of limitation, only one sentence for the three charges and convictions could be imposed. LaPan v. State, 167 Ga. App. 250, 305 S.E.2d 858 (1983).

Sentences for both aggravated assault and rape did not violate double jeopardy, since even if defendant had departed from the victim's apartment prior to the forcible sexual penetration of her, he still would have been guilty of the aggravated assault of the victim because he had pointed a pistol at her through the window and held the pistol while he led her from room to room before the rape. Taylor v. State, 177 Ga. App. 624, 340 S.E.2d 263 (1986).

Sentencing as a party to rape. — Fairness of a defendant's sentence of life imprisonment for being a party to rape was not examined because, contrary to the defendant's claims, the plain terms of

O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1(a)(5) did not prohibit the defendant from applying for scrutiny of the sentence by the Georgia Sentence Review Panel; as the defendant conceded, the sentence fell within the statutory limits under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-2-21 and 16-6-1, and as a rule, sentences that fell within such limits were not reviewed for legal error. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Life without parole. — O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1(a) defined both rape and aggravated sodomy as "serious violent felonies;" thus, in light of a prior aggravated sodomy conviction, a trial court would have been required to sentence the defendant to life without parole for subsequent violent rape felonies under the sentencing statutes either as they existed at the time of the rapes, 1996, or at the time of the defendant's trial, 1998. Thompson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 657, 632 S.E.2d 407 (2006).

Sentencing the defendant to life without parole and to undergo chemical castration were not permissible punishments for defendant's rape conviction so that portion of defendant's sentence was vacated and remanded. Johnson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 341, 634 S.E.2d 134 (2006).

When a defendant pled guilty to rape, and the state did not seek the death penalty, it was error to impose a sentence of life without parole under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(b); under case law and O.C.G.A. § 17-10-16(a), a life sentence without parole was authorized only in cases when the state first sought the death penalty. Velazquez v. State, 283 Ga. App. 863, 643 S.E.2d 291 (2007), aff'd, 238 Ga. 206, 657 S.E.2d 838 (2008).

Trial court correctly sentenced a defendant to serve life without the possibility of parole because the defendant was a four-time recidivist and the maximum sentence for rape was life in prison. Further, the state provided the defendant with notice prior to trial that the state would seek to have the defendant sentenced as a recidivist, pursuant O.C.G.A. § 17-10-7. Hall v. State, 292 Ga. App. 544, 664 S.E.2d 882 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1841, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 926 (Ga. 2008).

Rule of lenity did not apply to multiple convictions. — In a criminal trial on charges that the defendant allowed the repeated rapes of the defendant's 11-year-old child, the rule of lenity did not require that the defendant's felony convictions for being a party to rape and cruelty to children should be subsumed by the misdemeanor conviction for contributing to the deprivation of children because different facts were necessary to prove the offenses; the rape conviction required proof under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-2-20 and 16-6-1(a)(1) that the defendant took affirmative steps to aid the rapist, the cruelty to children conviction required proof under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b) that the defendant caused excessive mental pain to the child, and the conviction for contributing to the deprivation of a minor required proof under O.C.G.A. §§ 15-11-2(8)(A) and 16-12-1(b)(3) that the defendant failed to provide the child with proper care necessary for the child's health, which the state proved by showing that the defendant failed to seek prenatal care for the child even though the defendant knew that the child was pregnant. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Rape sentence vacated. — Defendant's sentence on a rape count for which the defendant was acquitted was vacated and the case was remanded for the defendant to be sentenced on a rape count for which the defendant was convicted as it was error to sentence the defendant for the rape for which the defendant was acquitted. Smith v. State, 282 Ga. App. 339, 638 S.E.2d 791 (2006).

Upon certiorari review before the Supreme Court of Georgia, the Court of Appeals of Georgia properly vacated a rape sentence entered by the trial court, holding that the defendant was incorrectly sentenced to a term of life in prison without the possibility of parole, as the state failed to give notice that the state intended to seek the death penalty, and the trial court failed to find that any aggravating circumstance under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30 existed, pursuant to former O.C.G.A. § 17-10-32.1; thus, the trial court was not authorized to sentence the defendant to life in prison without the possibility of parole. State v. Velazquez, 283 Ga. 206, 657 S.E.2d 838 (2008).

New trial and mistrial properly denied. — Rape conviction was upheld on appeal as the defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on defense counsel's failure to object to certain testimony from the victim about the defendant's history of selling drugs and failure to subpoena certain medical records; moreover, the defendant was properly denied a mistrial as the trial court issued a curative instruction regarding the alleged improper character evidence admitted, and thereafter polled the jury to ensure that jurors would in fact disregard that evidence. Mitchell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 517, 651 S.E.2d 821 (2007).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim did not warrant a new trial in a prosecution for rape, kidnapping, aggravated stalking, and two counts of stalking; because of the limited nature of a challenged witnesses' trial testimony, defense counsel made a strategic decision not to seek recusal of the trial judge, who was the brother of the challenged witness, and counsel discussed with the defendant the reasons for not seeking recusal. Pirkle v. State, 289 Ga. App. 450, 657 S.E.2d 560 (2008).

Appellate court is without authority to review sentences within statutory range. Covington v. State, 157 Ga. App. 371, 277 S.E.2d 744 (1981).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(b) a specific statute that prevailed over general sentencing statute. — O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(b) was a specific statute authorizing sentences for rape and therefore prevailed over the general sentencing statute, O.C.G.A. § 17-10-1. Burke v. State, 274 Ga. App. 402, 618 S.E.2d 36 (2005).

Sentence of life without parole improper. — Sentence of life without parole was tied to the imposition of the death penalty, and, consequently the possibility of the trial court imposing such a sentence on the defendant was excluded. Johnson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 341, 634 S.E.2d 134 (2006).

Death Penalty

Punishment of death does not invariably violate the Constitution. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S. Ct.

Death Penalty (Cont'd)

2909, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1976).

Necessity of finding aggravating circumstance as prerequisite to sentencing defendant to death. — Before a convicted defendant may be sentenced to death, the jury, or the trial judge in cases tried without a jury, must find beyond a reasonable doubt one of the 10 aggravating circumstances specified in former Code 1933, § 27-2534.1. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1976) (see O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30).

Sentence of death is grossly disproportionate and excessive punishment for rape and is therefore forbidden by U.S. Const., amend. 8 as cruel and unusual punishment. Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 97 S. Ct. 2861, 53 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1977).

Death penalty for rape is not unconstitutional where victim is killed. Moore v. State, 240 Ga. 807, 243 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 903, 99 S. Ct. 268, 58 L. Ed. 2d 249 (1978).

When death to victim does not result, death penalty for rape must be set aside. Boyer v. State, 240 Ga. 170, 240 S.E.2d 68 (1977).

Speedy trial for capital offense of rape without death. — While the death penalty could not be constitutionally imposed for a rape conviction when the victim did not die, rape was still a capital offense, for purposes of the speedy trial statutes, O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-170 and 17-7-171, because a determination that the death penalty could not be imposed did not affect the legislature's decision that rape was a crime for which the state should be allowed additional time to prepare its case, so, under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-171(b), the state had until the end of the third term of court following the term in which a speedy trial demand was made to try such a case. Merrow v. State, 268 Ga. App. 47, 601 S.E.2d 428 (2004).

Speedy trial requirements. — Trial court properly denied defendant's motion autrefois convict in a rape case under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1; defendant did not substantially comply with the O.C.G.A. § 17-7-170 requirements for filing a speedy trial demand on sexual battery charges that were pending before the instant rape charge was filed, because defendant failed to file the demand on the trial judge, no speedy trial demand was made. Baker v. State, 270 Ga. App. 762, 608 S.E.2d 38 (2004).

16-6-2. Sodomy; aggravated sodomy; medical expenses.

(a)(1) A person commits the offense of sodomy when he or she performs or submits to any sexual act involving the sex organs of one person and the mouth or anus of another.

(2) A person commits the offense of aggravated sodomy when he or she commits sodomy with force and against the will of the other person or when he or she commits sodomy with a person who is less than ten years of age. The fact that the person allegedly sodomized is the spouse of a defendant shall not be a defense to a charge of aggravated sodomy.

(b)(1) Except as provided in subsection (d) of this Code section, a person convicted of the offense of sodomy shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than 20 years and shall be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2.

(2) A person convicted of the offense of aggravated sodomy shall be punished by imprisonment for life or by a split sentence that is a term of imprisonment for not less than 25 years and not exceeding life imprisonment, followed by probation for life. Any person convicted under this Code section of the offense of aggravated sodomy shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Sections 17-10-6.1 and 17-10-7.

(c) When evidence relating to an allegation of aggravated sodomy is collected in the course of a medical examination of the person who is the victim of the alleged crime, the Georgia Crime Victims Emergency Fund, as provided for in Chapter 15 of Title 17, shall be financially responsible for the cost of the medical examination to the extent that expense is incurred for the limited purpose of collecting evidence.

(d) If the victim is at least 13 but less than 16 years of age and the person convicted of sodomy is 18 years of age or younger and is no more than four years older than the victim, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall not be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2. (Laws 1833, Cobb's 1851 Digest, p. 787; Code 1863, §§ 4251, 4252; Code 1868, §§ 4286, 4287; Code 1873, §§ 4352, 4353; Code 1882, §§ 4352, 4353; Penal Code 1895, §§ 382, 383; Penal Code 1910, §§ 373, 374; Code 1933, §§ 26-5901, 26-5902; Ga. Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994'."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 2, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly declares and finds:

"(1) That persons who are convicted of certain serious violent felonies shall serve minimum terms of imprisonment which shall not be suspended, probated, stayed, deferred, or otherwise withheld by the sentencing judge; and

"(2) That sentences ordered by courts in cases of certain serious violent felonies shall be served in their entirety and shall not be reduced by parole or by any earned time, early release, work release, or other such sentence-reducing measures administered by the Department of Corrections."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 16, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall apply only to those offenses committed on or after the effective date of this Act; provided, however, that any conviction occurring prior to, on, or after the effective date of this Act shall be deemed a 'conviction' for the purposes of this Act and shall be counted in determining the appropriate sentence to be imposed for any offense committed on or after the effective date of this Act."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 17, not codified by the General Assembly, provides for severability.

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 18, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall become effective on January 1, 1995, upon ratification by the voters of this state at the 1994 November general election of that proposed amendment to Article IV, Section II, Paragraph II of the Constitution authorizing the General Assembly to provide for mandatory minimum sentences and sentences of life without possibility of parole in certain cases and providing restrictions on the authority of the State Board of Pardons and Paroles to grant paroles...." That amendment was ratified by the voters on November 8, 1994, so the amendment to this Code section by this Act became effective on January 1, 1995.

Ga. L. 1998, p. 180, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly declares and finds: (1) That the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' approved April 20, 1994 (Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959), provided that persons convicted of one of seven serious violent felonies shall serve minimum mandatory terms of imprisonment which shall not otherwise be suspended, stayed, probated, deferred, or withheld by the sentencing court; (2) That in State v. Allmond, 225 Ga. App. 509 (1997), the Georgia Court of Appeals held, notwithstanding the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' that the provisions of the First Offender Act would still be available to the sentencing court, which would mean that a person who committed a serious violent felony could be sentenced to less than the minimum mandatory ten-year sentence; and (3) That, contrary to the decision in State v. Allmond, it is the expressed intent of the General Assembly that persons who commit a serious violent felony specified in the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994' shall be sentenced to a mandatory term of imprisonment of not less than ten years and shall not be eligible for first offender treatment."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that:

"The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

GENERAL CONSIDERATION AGGRAVATED SODOMY

General Consideration

Editor's notes. — Many of the cases noted below were decided prior to the amendments to the length of sentence specified in subsection (b).

Constitutionality. — Former Code 1933, § 26-2002 was not so vague, indefinite, and overbroad as to violate the due process and equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Wanzer v. State, 232 Ga. 523, 207 S.E.2d 466 (1974) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 did not violate an individual's fundamental right to privacy though it does not differentiate between the sex or marital status of the possible offenders and, therefore, applies equally to homosexual and heterosexual intimate relationships, where the issue of the validity of that section if used to prohibit the intimate affairs of a married heterosexual couple in the privacy of their marital bedroom was not reached because defendant, a homosexual, had failed to show that defendant's own conduct could not be regulated by a statute drawn with the requisite narrow specificity. Gordon v. State, 257 Ga. 439, 360 S.E.2d 253 (1987).

Claim of defendant that O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 violates due process and equal protection because it is selectively enforced against unmarried persons, and because "victims" are not prosecuted for engaging in the consensual conduct, failed where defendant did not establish the actual manner of enforcement. King v. State, 265 Ga. 440, 458 S.E.2d 98 (1995).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 does not violate the right to privacy under the Georgia Constitution. Christensen v. State, 266 Ga. 474, 468 S.E.2d 188 (1996).

Insofar as it criminalizes the performance of private, unforced non-commercial acts of sexual intimacy between persons legally able to consent, the statute manifestly infringes upon a constitutional provision which guarantees to the citizens of Georgia the right of privacy. Powell v. State, 270 Ga. 327, 510 S.E.2d 18 (1998).

Conviction of the defendant of sodomy for a sex act in a public, commercial place was not prohibited by Powell v. State, 270 Ga. 327, 510 S.E.2d 18 (1998). Gagnon v. State, 240 Ga. App. 754, 525 S.E.2d 127 (1999).

Conduct for which defendant was convicted, even if the conduct was consensual, took place outdoors in a wooded area adjacent to a public road which was not a private place within the contemplation of the Fourth Amendment and, therefore, was not protected conduct. Mauk v. State, 242 Ga. App. 191, 529 S.E.2d 197 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 924, 121 S. Ct. 1364, 149 L. Ed. 2d 293 (2001).

Nothing in the decision in Powell v. State, 270 Ga. 327, 510 S.E.2d 18 (1998), holding O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 unconstitutional to the extent it broadly criminalized private, unforced, noncommercial acts of sodomy between consenting persons legally able to give such consent, could be construed to create an exception for acts of sodomy committed by a school teacher with a student. State v. Eastwood, 243 Ga. App. 822, 535 S.E.2d 246 (2000).

Standing to contest constitutionality. — Defendant who was sentenced to less than the maximum penalty provided by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 lacked standing to contest whether such maximum penalty constitutes cruel and unusual punishment. King v. State, 265 Ga. 440, 458 S.E.2d 98 (1995).

Venue. — Incident on which a sodomy charge was based occurred about one mile from the home in Gordon County where the defendant and the victim lived, when the defendant and the victim were driving home; thus, under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e), the crime was considered to have occurred in Gordon County, through which the car traveled, and the state proved venue. Prudhomme v. State, 285 Ga. App. 662, 647 S.E.2d 343 (2007).

Juvenile court properly dismissed delinquency petition since transfer hearing provisions did not apply. — Juvenile court properly dismissed a delinquency petition without a hearing, which petition alleged that the juvenile committed aggravated sodomy, as O.C.G.A. § 15-11-30.2(f) expressly provided that the transfer hearing provisions did not apply to any proceeding within the exclusive jurisdiction of a superior court, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 15-11-28(b)(2)(A), which included aggravated sodomy. In the Interest of N.C., 293 Ga. App. 374, 667 S.E.2d 181 (2008).

Right of privacy. — An adult who pays a fourteen-year-old child to engage in sodomy has no right of privacy in that conduct. Ray v. State, 259 Ga. 868, 389 S.E.2d 326 (1990), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. State, 277 Ga. 195, 586 S.E.2d 669 (2003).

Cruel and unusual punishment. — Habeas court properly ruled that an inmate's sentence of 10 years in prison for having consensual oral sex with a 15-year-old when the inmate was only 17 years old constituted cruel and unusual punishment in light of the 2006 amendments to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4 and 42-1-12. Humphrey v. Wilson, 282 Ga. 520, 652 S.E.2d 501 (2007).

Solicitation of sodomy. — Powell v. State, 270 Ga. 327, 510 S.E.2d 18 (1998), which struck down O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 insofar as it applies to private, non-commercial acts between consenting adults, did not impliedly strike down O.C.G.A. § 16-6-15, the solicitation of sodomy statute. Howard v. State, 272 Ga.

242, 527 S.E.2d 194 (2000).

Proving discriminatory enforcement. — When the defendant contended to having been denied equal protection of the law because officials actually enforce the sodomy law only against offending homosexuals and not against others who violate the sodomy law, the defendant did not prove the contention as the manner of enforcement of the sodomy law was not established in the record. Gordon v. State, 257 Ga. 439, 360 S.E.2d 253 (1987).

No evidence to support contention that O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a) is selectively enforced only against homosexuals. — See Ray v. State, 259 Ga. 868, 389 S.E.2d 326 (1990), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. State, 277 Ga. 195, 586 S.E.2d 669 (2003).

No right to privacy for commission of sodomy in public places. — Whatever the constitutional privacy rights may be of one who engages in sodomy in private places, they do not attach to another doing the same in public places. Stover v. State, 256 Ga. 515, 350 S.E.2d 577 (1986); Smashum v. State, 261 Ga. 248, 403 S.E.2d 797 (1991).

Sodomy statute not changed. — By the enactment of the Official Code of Georgia, the General Assembly did not intend to change the sodomy statute, now O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2, to exclude as a crime the placing of one's mouth on the sexual organ of another. Porter v. State, 168 Ga. App. 703, 309 S.E.2d 919 (1983).

Statute does not provide for two maximum sentences. — Although O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 vests broad discretion in the sentencing judge, contrary to the defendant's contentions, the statute does not provide two maximum sentences. Nihart v. State, 227 Ga. App. 272, 488 S.E.2d 740 (1997).

One who voluntarily participates in unnatural act of sexual intercourse with another is also guilty of sodomy. One who does not so participate is not guilty. Perryman v. State, 63 Ga. App. 819, 12 S.E.2d 388 (1940).

Evidence of force against eight year old not necessary. — Child of eight years is incapable under the law of consenting to any sexual act, rendering any sexual acts directed to such a child forcible under the law. Hamm v. State, 214 Ga. App. 705, 448 S.E.2d 773 (1994).

Because children do not have the capacity to give consent to or resist a sexual act directed at them, acts such as incest, sodomy, and aggravated sodomy are, in law, forcible and against the will of the child. House v. State, 236 Ga. App. 405, 512 S.E.2d 287 (1999).

Penetration is not a requirement as to sodomy; all that is required is some contact. Carter v. State, 122 Ga. App. 21, 176 S.E.2d 238 (1970); Wimpey v. State, 180 Ga. App. 529, 349 S.E.2d 773 (1986); Scott v. State, 223 Ga. App. 479, 477 S.E.2d 901 (1996); Wright v. State, 259 Ga. App. 74, 576 S.E.2d 64 (2003).

As to sodomy, proof of penetration is not required. Proof that the sexual act involved the sexual organs of one and the anus of another is sufficient. Ruff v. State, 132 Ga. App. 568, 208 S.E.2d 581 (1974).

Connection between man and woman per linguam in vagina is sodomy under former Code 1983, § 26-2002. Carter v. State, 122 Ga. App. 21, 176 S.E.2d 238 (1970), overruled on other grounds, 271 Ga. 605 (1999). (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2).

Jury instruction on the definition of sodomy was necessary, even though sodomy was not one of the offenses charged in the indictment, since sodomy was an element of the offenses of aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a), for which defendant was on trial. Ramirez v. State, 265 Ga. App. 808, 595 S.E.2d 630 (2004).

Sodomy is a lesser included offense of aggravated sodomy. Stover v. State, 256 Ga. 515, 350 S.E.2d 577 (1986).

Sodomy was not an included offense of rape. — Trial court's failure to rule that defendant's convictions for anal and oral sodomy merged into defendant's rape conviction was not error, since each of the three offenses contained at least one element not contained in the others and cannot merge as a matter of law. Even though it is anatomically impossible for the three offenses to merge as a matter of fact, the matter was properly submitted for resolution to the jury, which resolved the matter against defendant. Johnson v. State, 195 Ga. App. 723, 394 S.E.2d 586 (1990).

Female under 14 years of age is legally incapable of giving consent; therefore, it is not necessary to prove the "against the will element." Hines v. State, 173 Ga. App. 657, 327 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

Indictment sufficient. — Sodomy indictment stating that defendant "did place his penis in the mouth of" the minor victim did not fatally vary from the evidence showing that he allowed the victim to kiss his sex organ. Turner v. State, 231 Ga. App. 747, 500 S.E.2d 628 (1998).

Evidence rebutting consent. — In a prosecution for sodomy, the fact of the woman's having made complaint soon after the assault took place is admissible in evidence for the purpose of rebutting the idea that the female consented to the criminal act. Riddlehoover v. State, 153 Ga. App. 194, 264 S.E.2d 666 (1980).

No corroboration requirement. — However beneficent it might be to require that the testimony of children of tender years be corroborated, there is no statute or decision in the state which makes such a requirement in criminal prosecutions for offenses of sodomy or taking indecent liberties with a child. Clardy v. State, 87 Ga. App. 633, 75 S.E.2d 208 (1953).

Corroboration is not required to warrant a conviction for the offenses of incest, sodomy, and child molestation, and trial court's failure to charge the jury that corroboration was required was not error. Scales v. State, 171 Ga. App. 924, 321 S.E.2d 764 (1984).

Statements of victim to mother and nurse held admissible. — As to the victim's mother and the nurse who examined the victim, their testimony regarding statements the victim made to them, was admissible as substantive evidence of the matter asserted because the victim was under oath and subject to cross-examination about her testimony and about her out-of-court statements. Runion v. State, 180 Ga. App. 440, 349 S.E.2d 288 (1986).

Admission of evidence of sexual intercourse in sodomy prosecution. — In sodomy prosecution, evidence of an act of sexual intercourse which took place at the same time and was a part of the same transaction with which the defendant was charged was properly admitted, where the separate acts were so connected in time and so similar in their relations that motive, intent, and state of mind could reasonably be imputed to both. McMichen v. State, 62 Ga. App. 50, 7 S.E.2d 749 (1940).

Whether the act of sodomy is "anatomically impossible" is a question of fact for determination by the jury. Wimpey v. State, 180 Ga. App. 529, 349 S.E.2d 773 (1986).

Pattern of sexual exploitation shown. — When the evidence showed that the defendant first began having sexual relations with his stepdaughter when she was about 12 years of age and continued having sexual relations with her until she was in her seventeenth year, the pattern of sexual exploitation presented was, as a matter of law, forcible and against the will, because of the stepdaughter's age at onset, and because of her familial relationship with the defendant; the assertion that consensual sexual activity is protected by a right of privacy was inapplicable as no consent was possible. Richardson v. State, 256 Ga. 746, 353 S.E.2d 342 (1987).

Inquiry into victim's past sexual experiences was properly refused, even when a physician testified that in examining the victim it was obvious the victim had been sexually active. Worth v. State, 183 Ga. App. 68, 358 S.E.2d 251 (1987).

Failure to present expert testimony on capacity to consent. — In a rape and aggravated sodomy case, the trial court properly rejected the defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for not introducing evidence on the adult victim's mental capacity to consent. Because the defendant failed to proffer the testimony of an uncalled witness, the defendant could not prove that there was a reasonable probability that the trial would have ended differently; furthermore, counsel gave a reasonable explanation for not introducing expert testimony in that counsel believed that the victim might have the capacity to consent and that counsel believed that expert testimony on the issue would not sway the jury. Ravon v. State, 297 Ga. App. 643, 678 S.E.2d 107 (2009).

Ten-year sentence upheld. — Since the legislature has provided for a maximum sentence of confinement of 20 years, where the trial court sentenced defendant to ten years confinement followed by probation for repeated acts of sodomy committed against a minor, the sentence did not shock the conscience. Gordon v. State, 257 Ga. 439, 360 S.E.2d 253 (1987); Ray v. State, 259 Ga. 868, 389 S.E.2d 326 (1990), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. State, 277 Ga. 195, 586 S.E.2d 669 (2003).

Defendant was properly sentenced for both sodomy and child molestation, where the indictment as drawn charged defendant specifically with two separate and different sexual acts, and the child molestation was proved without any reference to the act of sodomy and was factually and legally distinct from it. Garrett v. State, 188 Ga. App. 176, 372 S.E.2d 506 (1988).

Child molestation in connection with the fondling of the victim's vagina did not merge with aggravated sodomy charges based on two acts of oral sex, where the acts of sodomy were not used to establish the child molestation charge. Pressley v. State, 197 Ga. App. 270, 398 S.E.2d 268 (1990).

Defendant convicted on child molestation despite sodomy acquittal. — Defendant's acquittal on a separate charge of aggravated sodomy did not require that defendant should also have been acquitted on an aggravated child molestation charge. Because there was evidence of physical injury to support the aggravated molestation charge, it was not necessary to prove sodomy to maintain the molestation conviction. Baker v. State, 228 Ga. App. 32, 491 S.E.2d 78 (1997).

Evidence sufficient for child molestation conviction. — Evidence was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy and aggravated child molestation where the child testified that the defendant made the child perform oral sex and penetrated the child anally, and the record showed opportunity, consistent allegations by the victim to multiple parties, and deception by the defendant when asked about the charged offenses during a polygraph examination. Guzman v. State, 273 Ga. App. 819, 616 S.E.2d 142 (2005).

Thirteen-year-old victim's testimony that when victim was sleeping, defendant pulled down victim's pants and underwear and performed oral sex on the victim, and that testimony was corroborated by defendant's love interest who observed the incident, was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), as there was sufficient evidence to establish that defendant committed "sodomy," as that term was defined under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a); accordingly, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a judgment of acquittal pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1. Steverson v. State, 276 Ga. App. 876, 625 S.E.2d 476 (2005).

Rape, incest, child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sodomy convictions were all upheld on appeal, given that the elements of child molestation and aggravated child molestation, including venue, were supported by the female victim's testimony. Forbes v. State, 284 Ga. App. 520, 644 S.E.2d 345 (2007).

Minor victim's description of oral sex with defendant, a 30 year old male, established sodomy under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(1), which was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated child molestation. Flewelling v. State, 300 Ga. App. 505, 685 S.E.2d 758 (2009).

Prisoner's sufficiency of the evidence claim under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 was properly denied because although the jury rejected testimony of forcible rape by a 13-year-old victim, the jury was free to accept testimony stating that the victim had sexual intercourse and performed oral sex on the prisoner and proof of consent was not required under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-2, 16-6-3, and 16-6-4 for offenses of statutory rape and aggravated child molestation. Dorsey v. Burnette, No. 08-13700, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 5771 (11th Cir. Mar. 18, 2009) (Unpublished).

Child molestation and aggravated sodomy are legally distinct, and when the indictment for each offense is based on separate and distinct acts, the offenses do not merge. Howard v. State, 200 Ga. App. 188, 407 S.E.2d 769, cert. denied, 200 Ga. App. 896, 407 S.E.2d 769 (1991).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 has never provided for the death penalty. Waters v. State, 248 Ga. 355, 283 S.E.2d 238 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3551, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398 (1983).

Registration as sex offender. — Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of failure to register as a sex offender, as required by O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12, because when the defendant was charged with failure to register the defendant was required to register as a sex offender since the defendant had been convicted of criminal sexual conduct toward a minor in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2, and the Supreme Court's ruling that § 16-6-2 infringed upon the right of privacy had to be applied retroactively on collateral review, but the Court of Appeals could not apply it in the defendant's case since it was not on collateral review; the appeal was from a conviction for failure to register as a sex offender, which was a proceeding separate from defendant's original offense, and at the time of defendant's sodomy conviction, the conduct in which the defendant engaged was against the law in Georgia. Green v. State, 303 Ga. App. 210, 692 S.E.2d 784 (2010).

Aggravated Sodomy

Indictment insufficient. — Count of the indictment charged that appellant committed the offense of aggravated sodomy by unlawfully performing "a sexual act involving his anus and the mouth of the victim" did not meet the statutory definition of sodomy. Moore v. State, 212 Ga. App. 497, 442 S.E.2d 311 (1994).

Penetration not an element of sodomy or aggravated sodomy. — Penetration is not an element of sodomy or aggravated sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a); regardless of whether anal penetration was sufficiently established by the evidence, the state was not required to prove penetration. Adams v. State, 299 Ga. App. 39, 681 S.E.2d 725 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 513, 696 S.E.2d 676 (2010).

Aggravated Sodomy (Cont'd)

Misreading of one word in indictment was harmless error. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy and kidnapping, the misreading of the word "in" instead of "and" when the indictment was read to the jury regarding the aggravated sodomy count did not constitute an improper comment on the evidence. Considering the charge as a whole, the appellate court was satisfied that the jury could not have been misled or confused by the trial court's minor slip of the tongue since the singular use of "in" instead of "and" constituted harmless error. Smith v. State, 294 Ga. App. 692, 670 S.E.2d 191 (2008).

No fatal variance between indictment and trial evidence. — Even though the indictment charged the defendant with committing aggravated sodomy by performing "anal intercourse," and the defendant claimed that there was no evidence of penetration, no fatal variance existed between the indictment and the evidence at trial because the indictment satisfactorily informed defendant of the charge and protected the defendant from subsequent prosecutions for the same offense and the defendant was not misled or prejudiced. Adams v. State, 299 Ga. App. 39, 681 S.E.2d 725 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 513, 696 S.E.2d 676 (2010).

Insufficient evidence of venue. — Absent sufficient proof establishing venue, the defendant's aggravated sexual battery and aggravated sodomy convictions were reversed; but, given that sufficient evidence otherwise existed to support the former charge, retrial on the charge would not violate the defendant's double jeopardy rights. Melton v. State, 282 Ga. App. 685, 639 S.E.2d 411 (2006).

Prior similar transactions evidence admissible. — In a defendant's trial for aggravated sodomy in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(2), a trial court did not err in admitting three similar transactions in which the defendant attempted to or did force sex on a victim because these acts, although two were only attempts that were interrupted by law enforcement, showed a bent of mind to initiate a sexual encounter without a person's consent. Blanch v. State, 306 Ga. App. 631, 703 S.E.2d 48 (2010).

Evidence sufficient for conviction.

Evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to have found defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of aggravated sodomy where, inter alia, he told his victims, his underage step-daughters, that if they told anyone, he would hurt them. Chancey v. State, 258 Ga. App. 716, 574 S.E.2d 904 (2002).

Term "force" includes not only physical force, but also mental coercion. Brewster v. State, 261 Ga. App. 795, 584 S.E.2d 66 (2003).

Defendant was properly convicted of attempted aggravated sodomy where the defendant attacked a jogger, attempted to force the jogger to perform oral sex on the defendant, and where the jogger only escaped after struggling to break free and running to the jogger's home. Mann v. State, 263 Ga. App. 131, 587 S.E.2d 288 (2003).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for sodomy in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 where the record revealed that the defendant and the codefendant walked up to the victim, a crack cocaine addict, grabbed the victim and hit the victim in the face, pulled the victim into the woods, and forced a penis into the victim's mouth and then tried to enter the victim from behind. Pitts v. State, 263 Ga. App. 322, 587 S.E.2d 811 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's aggravated sodomy convictions as a victim testified that the defendant forced the victim to perform oral sex on defendant against the victim's will, using threats and intimidation. Evans v. State, 266 Ga. App. 405, 597 S.E.2d 505 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant and codefendant of aggravated sodomy because: (1) defendant and codefendant grabbed the victim, hit the victim, ripped the victim's dress, pushed the victim to the ground, and took turns putting their sexual organs in the victim's mouth; and (2) a short time after the crime, an officer took defendant back to the scene, where the victim and an eyewitness identified the defendant as one of the perpetrators. Sims v. State, 267 Ga. App. 572, 600 S.E.2d 613 (2004).

Aggravated child molestation, child molestation, enticing a child for indecent purposes, and aggravated sodomy convictions were all supported by sufficient evidence provided by the victims detailing the inappropriate touching and anal penetration committed by defendant, and confirmed by the examining experts. Wilkerson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 585, 600 S.E.2d 677 (2004).

Sufficient evidence, including testimony from the child victim identifying the defendant's vehicle, evidence of the defendant's DNA matching that of the victim, and expert testimony that the frequency of such occurrence was approximately one in two billion in the Caucasian population, and similar transaction evidence, supported defendant's kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, and first-degree cruelty to children convictions. Morita v. State, 270 Ga. App. 372, 606 S.E.2d 595 (2004).

Term "force" included mental coercion such as intimidation and evidence at an initial trial that the victim was a mildly mentally retarded adult functioning as a 12-year-old, and that the victim feared being punished by the defendant if the victim did not cooperate with the defendant's sexual advances, was sufficient evidence of mental coercion in the form of intimidation to satisfy the element of force for the crime of aggravated sodomy; since the evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction, double jeopardy did not prevent a retrial granted on the ground that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel. Weldon v. State, 270 Ga. App. 574, 607 S.E.2d 175 (2004).

Evidence supported defendant's rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault, criminal trespass, misdemeanor obstruction of a law enforcement officer, felony obstruction of a law enforcement officer, and possession of marijuana conviction because: (1) a victim testified that defendant choked the victim, slammed the victim around a room, and raped and sodomized the victim, then drank a beer, took the victim's BC powder packets, and a cell phone, and left; (2) defendant fled from the police, kicked two officers, and had marijuana, BC packets, and a cell phone on his person; (3) defendant's DNA matched the DNA on the beer can; (4) a nurse testified that the victim's bruise was consistent with strangulation; and (5) a doctor testified that the victim's injuries were consistent with rape and sodomy. Lewis v. State, 271 Ga. App. 744, 611 S.E.2d 80 (2005).

Because the victim's statement of sexual abuse was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to convict defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, the victim's testimony did not have to be corroborated by physical evidence. Gartrell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 726, 613 S.E.2d 226 (2005).

Aggravated Sodomy (Cont'd)

Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish a fact under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, and defendant's convictions for kidnapping, burglary, aggravated sodomy, rape, and false imprisonment were supported by sufficient evidence where the victim testified that defendant forced the victim into a train boxcar, threatened to kill the victim, and had vaginal and oral sex with the victim against the victim's will and without the victim's consent; there was also circumstantial evidence showing the victim's lack of consent, including the victim's fleeing from the boxcar while naked, the victim's outcry to a train engineer that the victim had been raped, and the victim's injuries. Davis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 628, 629 S.E.2d 537 (2006).

Evidence that the defendant had and received oral sex with the defendant's love interest's minor children, sometimes by force, on numerous occasions, was sufficient to sustain a conviction for aggravated sodomy in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2. Moore v. State, 279 Ga. App. 105, 630 S.E.2d 557 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated child molestation since the alleged child victim testified that when the child was five-years-old, defendant "put his private in my mouth and peed in it, and made me swallow it," since, among other witnesses, the child's parent and step-parent testified about what the child told them about the incident, since a detective testified about an interview with the child about the incident, and since the state introduced a videotape of the interview into evidence and played it to the jury. Tyler v. State, 279 Ga. App. 809, 632 S.E.2d 716 (2006), cert. denied, 2006 Ga. LEXIS 810 (Ga. 2006); overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Defendant's convictions of rape, aggravated sodomy, false imprisonment, and two counts of aggravated assault were supported by sufficient evidence in the form of the victim's injuries, and the victim's testimony that, among other things, after the victim refused the defendant's request for sex, the defendant threw the victim on the bed, hit her in the back and on the arms with hedge clippers, ordered the victim to remove the victim's clothes, dragged the victim by the hair back into the house after the victim had escaped through a window, grabbed the victim, twisted the victim's arm, and said, "I'm trying — bitch, I'm going to kill you," hit the victim in the arm and leg with the hedge clippers, punched the victim on the lips and on the forehead, threw the victim on the bed and raped the victim and made the victim perform oral sex on the defendant. Tarver v. State, 280 Ga. App. 89, 633 S.E.2d 415 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 and aggravated sodomy in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a) although the defendant pointed to the defendant's previous sexual relationship with the victim and to alleged inconsistencies in the testimony of the victim and the victim's friend; the appellate court refused to weigh the evidence or determine witness credibility, and it found that the evidence, which included testimony that the defendant forcibly placed the victim in the defendant's truck, drove the victim across the state line to an apartment, forced the victim to have sex with the defendant, and cut the victim with a knife, was sufficient to convict. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 64, 635 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Because sufficient evidence showed that the defendant, by posing as a police officer and driving the victims to remote locations, used fear and intimidation to ensure that said victims would cooperate and agree to have sex, the defendant was not entitled to an acquittal as to the charges of impersonating an officer, aggravated sodomy, attempted aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault and rape; furthermore, though both victims willingly got into the defendant's car, after the victims pleaded to be let go and the defendant refused to grant those pleas, said act amounted to a kidnapping. Dasher v. State, 281 Ga. App. 326, 636 S.E.2d 83 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), attempted aggravated sodomy under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 and 16-6-2(a), and statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(a); the victim testified that the defendant put the defendant's privates inside the victim's privates and attempted to put the defendant's privates in the victim's behind, and the nurse practitioner testified that the physical examination of the victim indicated injuries consistent with the victim's testimony. Anderson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 58, 637 S.E.2d 790 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for aggravated sodomy as a showing of penetration was not required to establish sodomy and: (1) an eight-year-old child (child one) told child one's parent that the defendant touched child one "on the front down below"; (2) a 10-year-old child (child two) told child two's parent that the defendant "tried to put (the defendant's) thing in my butt"; (3) child one described acts of oral and anal sodomy to an investigator and nodded affirmatively at trial when asked if the defendant had touched child one's penis with the defendant's mouth; (4) child one indicated that the defendant had touched child one's "behind" with the defendant's "private part"; and (5) child two testified that the defendant touched child two's "behind" with the defendant's private part, and that the defendant touched child two's private part with the defendant's mouth. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Despite the defendant's correct assertion that the trial court erred in charging the jury that one of the factors to be considered in assessing the reliability of identification testimony was the level of certainty shown by the witness about the identification, because there was evidence other than the victim's identification of the defendant which connected the defendant to the offenses of burglary, aggravated sodomy, and aggravated sexual battery, said error was harmless and the convictions for the same were upheld. Bharadia v. State, 282 Ga. App. 556, 639 S.E.2d 545 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0522, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant's aggravated child molestation and aggravated sodomy convictions were upheld on appeal as supported by sufficient evidence including: (1) the testimony from both victims, which was corroborated by an investigator and a treating doctor; and (2) similar transaction evidence of the defendant's oral and anal molestation of other minor siblings, which was introduced for the purpose of showing a course of conduct, intent, and bent of mind toward sexual behavior with young relatives, and not to impugn the defendant's character. Chauncey v. State, 283 Ga. App. 217, 641 S.E.2d 229 (2007).

Testimony that the victim physically resisted the defendant's sexual advances to no avail was sufficient to support the defendant's rape and aggravated sodomy convictions; moreover, because sufficient evidence was presented that the defendant was the victim's biological and/or legal father, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's incest conviction as well. Williams v. State, 284 Ga. App. 255, 643 S.E.2d 749 (2007).

Because sufficient direct evidence was presented via the victim's testimony that the defendant improperly touched and digitally penetrated the victim's vagina, convictions upon charges of aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, and other crimes arising from that contact were upheld on appeal; further, any error related to the admission of the victim's videotaped statement was harmless, as such statement would have been admissible as res gestae or to prove the defendant's lustful disposition. Morrow v. State, 284 Ga. App. 297, 643 S.E.2d 808 (2007).

On appeal from convictions for two counts of child molestation and two counts of aggravated sodomy, no reason for reversal was found because: (1) sufficient evidence was presented in support of the same, making the trial court's denial of an acquittal proper; (2) the time that counsel had to prepare for trial was adequate, thus diminishing the need for a continuance; (3) the defendant's statement to police was not made upon a promise of reward or hope of benefit; and (4) the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for counsel's alleged deficiencies. Robbins

v. State, 290 Ga. App. 323, 659 S.E.2d 628 (2008).

Testimony by a victim that the defendant and an accomplice, armed with handguns, forcibly entered the victim's apartment, raped and sodomized the victim, struck the victim with a gun, stole jewelry, bound the victim, and escaped in a car owned by the victim's prospective spouse, and evidence that 24 fingerprints lifted from the apartment and car matched the defendant's was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated sodomy. Crawford v. State, 292 Ga. App. 463, 664 S.E.2d 820 (2008).

Testimony of an 11-year-old child that the defendant had sodomized the child on several occasions was sufficient by itself to convict the defendant of sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(1), as it was the jury's role to resolve any inconsistencies in the child's testimony or conflicts between the child's testimony and that of others. Terry v. State, 293 Ga. App. 455, 667 S.E.2d 109 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support a verdict of aggravated sodomy. The victim testified that the defendant threatened to kill her and that she had oral sex with him as a result; furthermore, defense witnesses testified that the victim screamed "rape" and "stop" several times, which caused the witnesses to twice respond to see what was happening, and that on one of those occasions, the victim jumped into the back of a truck in order to get away from the defendant. Eller v. State, 294 Ga. App. 77, 668 S.E.2d 755 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to uphold a defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy and kidnapping based on the testimony of the victim; who identified the defendant as the attacker who forced the victim into a vehicle by threat of a knife; there was evidence of various injuries on the victim consistent with the victim's description of the attack; the defendant admitted to having sexual intercourse with the victim but asserted that the intercourse was consensual; and forensic biologists testified as state expert witnesses that the swab of the victim's rectal cavity contained sperm and that DNA found on that swab matched DNA from the defendant's blood sample. Smith v. State, 294 Ga. App. 692, 670 S.E.2d 191 (2008).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for new trial on the ground that there was insufficient evidence to prove aggravated sodomy since the only evidence of the victim performing oral sodomy upon the defendant came from the uncorroborated testimony of the victim's parent, who was an accomplice to the sexual abuse and because there was insufficient evidence of force. To the contrary, the victim's testimony as to the sexual abuse committed by the defendant sufficiently corroborated the testimony of the victim's parent, and the testimony of the victim that the defendant kept multiple guns around the outbuilding where the trio lived and that the defendant had repeatedly threatened to shoot the victim if the victim did not engage in the sexual acts was sufficient to prove the element of force. Driggers v. State, 295 Ga. App. 711, 673 S.E.2d 95 (2009).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated sodomy of an eight-year-old child, the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction based on the testimony of the victim alone. The victim had positively identified the defendant as the person who forced the victim to perform oral sex while the victim was playing alone in a vacant lot, and it was wholly within the province of the jury to believe the victim's testimony over the defendant's alibi testimony that the defendant was out-of-state at the time the alleged incident occurred. Kelley v. State, 295 Ga. App. 663, 673 S.E.2d 63 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0879, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 256 (Ga. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), and sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2, because, in addition to the victim's testimony that the defendant had engaged in sexual intercourse and sodomy with the victim, there was physical evidence that supported the victim's testimony that the victim had been abused; the jury was authorized to believe the testimony of the victim as well as the expert witness who testified on behalf of the state. Roberts v. State, 297 Ga. App. 672, 678 S.E.2d 137 (2009).

Following evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated sodomy, rape, and robbery by intimidation: 1) the victim's testimony of being repeatedly raped by the defendant at knife point, forced to perform oral sex, beaten, robbed, and threatened with death; 2) a nurse's testimony that the victim was crying, rocking back and forth, and had bruised cheeks; and 3) evidence that the defendant's DNA matched sperm cell DNA found on the victim's body. Sanders v. State, 297 Ga. App. 897, 678 S.E.2d 579 (2009).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), and aggravated sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(2) involving four different victims on three separate dates; both the husband and the wife, the victims in the first criminal incident, identified the defendant in court as the perpetrator of the crimes. Two separate DNA analyses testified to by two forensic biologists showed that the defendant's sperm was present in the vaginas of the other two female victims. Robins v. State, 298 Ga. App. 70, 679 S.E.2d 92 (2009).

There was sufficient evidence presented for the jury to find the defendant guilty of criminal attempt to commit aggravated sodomy because the state presented sufficient evidence via the victim's testimony that the defendant attempted to force the victim to perform oral sodomy; the victim testified that the defendant moved her to the bedroom of her home while holding a knife and told her to perform oral sex on him and that when she explained that she could not engage in the act the defendant, while still standing over her, moistened and fondled himself and then forced her to fondle him. Williams v. State, 300 Ga. App. 839, 686 S.E.2d 446 (2009).

Sufficient evidence was presented to the jury to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, criminal attempt to commit aggravated sodomy, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime because the victim's testimony alone was sufficient to support the convictions; regardless of any inconsistencies in the victim's testimony, it was for the jury to assess witness credibility, and the jury chose to believe the victim's identification of the defendant as the individual who committed the crimes. Williams v. State, 300 Ga. App. 839, 686 S.E.2d 446 (2009).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of criminal attempt to commit aggravated sodomy in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 and 16-6-2 because a reasonable trier of fact could have found that the defendant had the necessary criminal intent to commit aggravated sodomy when the evidence presented at trial showed that the defendant forced the victim's mouth into close proximity with the defendant's sex organs while the victim screamed for help, kicked, and fought the defendant; a reasonable trier of fact could have found that had the victim not been able to escape, the defendant would have forced the victim to engage in sodomy, thereby demonstrating that the defendant had taken a substantial step toward committing aggravated sodomy even though the defendant had not spoken, touched either the defendant's or the victim's sex organs, or exposed the defendant's genitals when the violent acts occurred. English v. State, 301 Ga. App. 842, 689 S.E.2d 130 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty of aggravated sodomy of one victim and rape and aggravated sodomy of a second victim because the jury was authorized to conclude, based on a nurse's testimony and the medical evidence, that penetration occurred since the nurse was properly qualified as an expert in sexual assault examination and testified that the first victim's external injuries established the potential for penetration; clumps of hair was found in the second victim's trailer, and the defendant's DNA matched the DNA found on the hair. Blash v. State, 304 Ga. App. 542, 697 S.E.2d 265 (2010).

Evidence presented at trial was sufficient to authorize a rational jury to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault with intent to rape, and simple battery because the victim's testimony, standing alone, could sustain the convictions; the jury was entitled to take into account similar transaction evidence for the purpose of showing the defendant's intent, bent of mind, and course of conduct, and while the defendant testified to a different version of what transpired, it was the exclusive role of the jury to determine witness credibility and to choose what evidence to believe and what to reject. Alvarez v. State, No. A11A0101, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 340 (Apr. 19, 2011).

Evidence insufficient for conviction. — Sufficient evidence did not exist to convict a defendant of aggravated sodomy under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(1) because no evidence was submitted that the defendant was present and intentionally aided and abetted the minor victim's father in making the victim put the victim's mouth on the father's penis. Mote v. State, 297 Ga. App. 13, 676 S.E.2d 379 (2009).

Sufficient evidence did not support the conclusion that the prisoner committed aggravated sodomy against the first victim as there was no express testimony that the prisoner's penis touched the victim's anus; moreover, no rational juror could have drawn an inference from the testimony actually presented that the necessary contact occurred because the factual elements necessary for proof of aggravated sodomy in the form of penile-anal contact, as required by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a), could not be inferred from either the penile-oral contact, or the penile-vaginal penetration, or the oral-anal contact that did occur. Green v. Nelson, 595 F.3d 1245 (11th Cir. ), cert. denied, U.S. , 131 S. Ct. 827, 178 L. Ed. 2d 564 (2010).

Evidence of force against minor victim necessary for conviction. — Although it was not necessary for the state to prove that the nine-year-old victim did not consent to the acts complained of, it was necessary for the state to prove that the defendant used force to commit the acts of sodomy, and where the state failed to introduce such evidence of force, the evidence was not sufficient to support the aggravated sodomy conviction. Hines v. State, 173 Ga. App. 657, 327 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

Force is a separate essential element that the state is required to prove to obtain a conviction for aggravated sodomy against a victim under the age of consent. Brewer v. State, 271 Ga. 605, 523 S.E.2d 18 (1999), reversing Brewer v. State, 236 Ga. App. 546, 512 S.E.2d 30 (1999) and overruling Cooper v. State, 256 Ga. 631, 352 S.E.2d 382 (1987).

Evidence of physical force against five year old not necessary. — A five year old child cannot consent to any sexual act and sexual acts directed to such a child are, in law, forcible and against the will. Cooper v. State, 256 Ga. 631, 352 S.E.2d 382 (1987).

Although a court cannot presume force merely because victim of aggravated sodomy is underage, the amount of evidence necessary to prove force against a child is minimal; even if the acts occurred after the victim reached age ten; the evidence supported defendant's aggravated sodomy convictions because, among other things, the victim testified that the victim did not want to engage in oral sex, that defendant made the victim do it by pushing the victim's head onto the defendant's private part, that the victim resisted when the defendant pushed the victim's head down, and when the victim did not do what defendant asked, the defendant slapped the victim. Henry v. State, 274 Ga. App. 139, 616 S.E.2d 883 (2005).

Force was proven in a case involving victims five and ten years of age by evidence that defendant used physical force upon the children, used violence against and threatened their mother in their presence, and intimidated, coerced and threatened them in a manner sufficient to instill in them a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm, violence or other dangerous consequences if they did not comply with his demands. Patterson v. State, 242 Ga. App. 885, 531 S.E.2d 759 (2000).

Prisoner was not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus based on the argument of actual innocence because there was no evidence to support the element of force required to convict the prisoner for aggravated sodomy and that it would be a miscarriage of justice to apply procedural bar; the victim testified that the victim submitted to the prisoner's desires because the victim believed that the prisoner would physically hurt the victim which, in the context of the prisoner's words and actions, constituted a reasonable fear. Thompson v. Stinson, 279 Ga. 196, 611 S.E.2d 29 (2005).

There was sufficient evidence of force for an aggravated sodomy conviction; the ten-year-old victim's testimony that she was scared and that she wanted the defendant to stop established that her lack of resistance was induced by fear, and the defendant's pulling down the victim's pants and underwear while she slept was some evidence of force. Boileau v. State, 285 Ga. App. 221, 645 S.E.2d 577 (2007).

Lack of resistance, induced by fear, is not legally cognizable consent but is force; thus, evidence that defendant's daughter did not resist due to reasonable fear was sufficient to satisfy the force element of aggravated sodomy. Ingram v. State, 211 Ga. App. 252, 438 S.E.2d 708 (1993).

Severance of offenses. — Defendant's motion to sever the failure to register as a sex offender counts under former O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12 from the remaining aggravated sodomy and child molestation counts was properly denied as: (1) the defendant was not entitled to severance as a matter of right since the charges involved a series of acts which were connected together; (2) the case was not so complex as to impair the jury's ability to distinguish the evidence and to apply the law intelligently to the counts as joined; and (3) the failure to sever the failure to register as a sex offender counts was proper, even applying an analogy to cases involving possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, as the failure to report charges were legally material to the crimes against two children because the failure constituted evasive conduct that was circumstantial evidence of guilt and evidence of the conduct underlying the defendant's conviction of a sex offense in North Carolina was admissible as a similar transaction. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

There is no implicit marital exclusion within O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 that makes it legally impossible for a husband to be guilty of an offense of aggravated sodomy performed upon his wife. Warren v. State, 255 Ga. 151, 336 S.E.2d 221 (1985) (decided prior to 1996 amendment).

Defendant's familial relationship to victim. — Force, as an element of aggravated sodomy under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a), may be inferred by evidence of intimidation arising from the familial relationship. Long v. State, 241 Ga. App. 370, 526 S.E.2d 85 (1999).

General character of alleged victim as homosexual is irrelevant as to whether the victim was forced against the victim's will to commit acts of sodomy. Abner v. State, 139 Ga. App. 600, 229 S.E.2d 83 (1976).

Kidnapping and aggravated sodomy crimes did not merge since there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could have found that defendant's action in choking the victim almost to the point of unconsciousness after forcibly taking the victim from the living room to the bedroom constituted the bodily injury necessary to establish all the elements of kidnapping with bodily injury, which was completed before defendant committed the aggravated sodomy. Olsen v. State, 191 Ga. App. 763, 382 S.E.2d 715 (1989).

Kidnapping and aggravated sodomy not included offenses. — Kidnapping and aggravated sodomy are not included offenses as a matter of law and, even though they may be included as a matter of fact, where the same evidence was not used to prove both crimes, the trial court did not err by refusing to find a merger. Hardy v. State, 210 Ga. App. 811, 437 S.E.2d 790 (1993).

False imprisonment and aggravated sodomy not included offenses. — Trial court did not err in failing to merge a false imprisonment offense with attempt to commit aggravated sodomy. Howard v. State, 272 Ga. 242, 527 S.E.2d 194 (2000).

Enticing child for indecent purposes not included in aggravated sodomy. — Enticing a child for indecent purposes, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5, is not included in offense of aggravated sodomy prohibited by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2; each of these offenses involves proof of distinct essential elements. Dennis v. State, 158 Ga. App. 142, 279 S.E.2d 275 (1981).

Enticing a child for indecent purposes, unlike offense of aggravated sodomy, includes element of asportation. Dennis v. State, 158 Ga. App. 142, 279 S.E.2d 275 (1981).

Child molestation not lesser included offense. — O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) (child molestation) was not a lesser included offense of aggravated sodomy, either as a matter of law, under either O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(2) or O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a), or as a matter of fact. Hill v. State, 183 Ga. App. 654, 360 S.E.2d 4 (1987).

Offense of aggravated sodomy did not factually merge into the offense of child molestation since one of the offenses was established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to prove the other. LeGallienne v. State, 180 Ga. App. 108, 348 S.E.2d 471 (1986).

Aggravated sodomy differs from rape and child molestation. — Jury's verdict of not guilty of rape was not repugnant to and inconsistent with the verdicts of guilty for aggravated sodomy and child molestation. The elements of each of the three crimes charged are different, and the conduct related to each, as evidenced in this case, was also different, distinct, and separate. Hill v. State, 183 Ga. App. 654, 360 S.E.2d 4 (1987).

Because the record contained sufficient evidence of multiple acts committed against the victim by the defendant for the trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of both aggravated child molestation and aggravated sodomy, the offenses did not merge as a matter of law or fact; thus, the evidence supporting one count was not "used up" in proving the other count. Forbes v. State, 284 Ga. App. 520, 644 S.E.2d 345 (2007).

Criminal intent. — Trial judge was authorized to find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant acted with the criminal intent to commit the prohibited act of aggravated sodomy by placing defendant's sexual organ in the victim's mouth with force and against the victim's will. Since there was no evidence that the trial court did not make the requisite finding regarding criminal intent, the appellate court found no error. Sims v. State, 267 Ga. App. 572, 600 S.E.2d 613 (2004).

Intent to rape and attempted aggravated sodomy are not lesser included offenses of each other. — Statutory definitions of intent to rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and attempted aggravated sodomy under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2, make it clear that the Georgia General Assembly intended to prohibit two designated kinds of general conduct, and that the two crimes, which were codified in separate chapters, are not established by same proof of all facts; neither crime is a lesser, or included, offense of the other as a matter of law or fact, for facts must differ to convict under the statutes. Bissell v. State, 157 Ga. App. 711, 278 S.E.2d 415 (1981).

Merger of sodomy and aggravated sodomy convictions. — When, following conviction, the trial court merged aggravated sodomy and sodomy counts and entered judgment against defendant on rape and aggravated sodomy counts, the ruling in Powell v. State, 270 Ga. 327, 510 S.E.2d 18 (1998) did not render defendant's conviction for aggravated sodomy void. McBee v. State, 239 Ga. App. 314, 521 S.E.2d 209 (1999).

Jury instruction on aggravated sodomy. — No reversible error resulted from the trial court's jury instruction that aggravated sodomy may be committed by acts involving the sex organ of one and the mouth or anus of another, notwithstanding the fact the indictment and evidence only involved acts of oral sodomy. Garland v. State, 213 Ga. App. 583, 445 S.E.2d 567 (1994).

Charge as to consent appropriate. — Trial court did not err in charging the jury on consent, since consent is at issue in a prosecution for aggravated sodomy. Evans v. State, 191 Ga. App. 364, 381 S.E.2d 760 (1989).

Trial judge correctly charged the jury that the element of "against the will," or consent, was automatically shown by the victim's age, in a prosecution of a defendant charged with aggravated sodomy and child molestation of defendant's 11-year-old niece. Miles v. State, 201 Ga. App. 568, 411 S.E.2d 566 (1991).

Instruction on simple sodomy as lesser included offense of the aggravated sodomy charged was not required where the victim's age obviated any element of consent and the victim testified she feared bodily harm if she did not accede to defendant's wishes. LaPan v. State, 167 Ga. App. 250, 305 S.E.2d 858 (1983).

Charge on presumption that no crime has been committed. — Refusal of the trial court to give a requested charge that "in all cases there exists the presumption that no crime has been committed," is not error when the victim's testimony, if believed by the jury, was sufficient direct evidence to establish a corpus for the offenses of rape, burglary, and aggravated sodomy alleged, and the trial court charged the jury the general charge on the presumption of innocence. Smith v. State, 180 Ga. App. 422, 349 S.E.2d 279 (1986).

Charge on child molestation held inappropriate. — In a trial for aggravated sodomy, where the victim was a five year old child, the trial court's refusal to charge on request, as a lesser-included offense, the elements of child molestation as defined by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, was not error; since under the evidence, such a charge would have been inappropriate, as the victim testified that defendant did the act, and defendant denied it. Cooper v. State, 256 Ga. 631, 352 S.E.2d 382 (1987).

Charge of both sodomy and child molestation. — When the evidence showed that, at least as to two of the three victims, the defendant committed the illegal act charged in each pair of counts aggravated sodomy and aggravated child molestation on more than one occasion, but the indictment did not charge the defendant with separate and distinct acts but merely charged the defendant with two different crimes for the same described act, the defendant should have been sentenced for only one of the two offenses for which the defendant was convicted as to each of the three victims. This case is distinguishable from those cases in which the court has upheld the conviction and sentencing for separate crimes and rejected the defendant's claim of merger because the indictment charged the defendant with multiple, distinct offenses. Lewis v. State, 205 Ga. App. 29, 421 S.E.2d 339 (1992).

Defendant's aggravated child molestation charge merged with the aggravated sodomy charge, as both were based on the same act of sodomy; while defendant committed multiple acts of anal sodomy against one of the victims, the indictment did not charge the defendant with separate and distinct acts but merely charged the defendant with two different crimes for the same described act. Wilkerston v. State, 267 Ga. App. 585, 600 S.E.2d 677 (2004).

Defendant's incriminating admission to victim admissible. — Victim was properly allowed to testify, at defendant's trial for rape and aggravated sodomy, that, during the course of the victim's ordeal, defendant had made the incriminating admission to the victim that "there's been ten others, ten other women, and you're not the only one." Copeland v. State, 177 Ga. App. 773, 341 S.E.2d 302 (1986).

Testimony of child-victim's mother, regarding talk uttered by a child in sleep, was admissible as original evidence at the defendant's trial for aggravated sodomy. Godfrey v. State, 187 Ga. App. 319, 370 S.E.2d 183 (1988).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of rape, aggravated sodomy, and burglary. — See Clark v. State, 186 Ga. App. 882, 369 S.E.2d 282 (1988).

Evidence sufficient to authorize guilty verdict for aggravated sodomy and armed robbery. — See Jackson v. State, 165 Ga. App. 737, 302 S.E.2d 611 (1983).

Evidence insufficient for conviction. — Evidence of genital to genital contact whereby defendant contacted victim's penis and "butt" without contacting victim's anus was insufficient to support a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2. Elrod v. State, 208 Ga. App. 787, 432 S.E.2d 808 (1993).

Aggravated Sodomy (Cont'd)

Twenty-year maximum sentence imposed for aggravated sodomy did not shock the conscience, and therefore did not impose cruel and unusual punishment. Rodgers v. State, 261 Ga. 33, 401 S.E.2d 735 (1991).

Circumstantial evidence of force through intimidation was sufficient to support an aggravated sodomy conviction after a child victim, age 17 at the time in question, testified that the victim "freaked out" when defendant performed oral sex on the victim, that the victim did not want the oral sex to happen, that the victim did tell the defendant to stop since the victim trusted defendant like a father figure, and that the victim could not have stopped defendant because of defendant's size. Schneider v. State, 267 Ga. App. 508, 603 S.E.2d 663 (2004).

Evidence sufficient for aggravated child molestation. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation, which involved an act of sodomy, by placing the defendant's genitals in the child's anus because the child testified that defendant "put his private in [the child's] butt." Neal v. State, 271 Ga. App. 283, 609 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Aggravated child molestation based on sodomy. — Evidence supported defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation and aggravated sexual battery because: (1) the 11-year-old victim testified that defendant put the defendant's hand on the child's private part, put the defendant's finger in the child's private part, put the defendant's mouth on the child's private part, and put the child's mouth on the defendant's private part, and that when the child put the child's mouth on the defendant's private part, "he came, whatever you call it"; (2) when the prosecutor asked the victim whether by that the child meant that "stuff came out of his private part," the child responded yes; and (3) in a videotaped pretrial interview, the victim explained that the child was using the term "private part" to mean penis or vagina. Maddox v. State, 275 Ga. App. 869, 622 S.E.2d 80 (2005).

Aggravated sodomy in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 count of the indictment should have merged into the aggravated child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 count, as both alleged that the defendant had the victim perform oral sex on the defendant. Howard v. State, 281 Ga. App. 797, 637 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Aggravated sodomy based on common criminal intent of codefendant. — Denial of motion for directed verdict on charge of aggravated sodomy was proper because defendant and the codefendant sexually assaulted three victims during armed robbery, including one instance in which defendant and the codefendant took turns raping one victim, and the aggravated sodomy was committed during the sexual assaults; the jury could reasonably find that defendant and the codefendant had a common criminal intent to commit the sexual assaults and defendant could be found guilty of the act performed by the codefendant. Coley v. State, 272 Ga. App. 446, 612 S.E.2d 608 (2005).

Court must impose maximum sentence. — Because the defendant was a three-time recidivist and because the maximum sentence for aggravated sodomy was life in prison, the trial court correctly imposed sentence against the defendant to serve life in prison without the possibility of parole. Bharadia v. State, 282 Ga. App. 556, 639 S.E.2d 545 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0522, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2007).

16-6-3. Statutory rape.

(a) A person commits the offense of statutory rape when he or she engages in sexual intercourse with any person under the age of 16 years and not his or her spouse, provided that no conviction shall be had for this offense on the unsupported testimony of the victim.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (c) of this Code section, a person convicted of the offense of statutory rape shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than 20 years; provided, however, that if the person so convicted is 21 years of age or older, such person shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 20 years. Any person convicted under this subsection of the offense of statutory rape shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2.

(c) If the victim is at least 14 but less than 16 years of age and the person convicted of statutory rape is 18 years of age or younger and is no more than four years older than the victim, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. (Ga. L. 1918, p. 259, §§ 1, 2; Code 1933, §§ 26-1303, 26-1304; Code 1933, § 26-2018, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 715, § 1; Ga. L. 1995, p. 957, § 3; Ga. L. 1996, p. 871, § 1; Ga. Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1995, p. 957, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Child Protection Act of 1995'."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

The General Assembly further finds that the state has a compelling interest in protecting the public from sexual offenders and in protecting children from predatory sexual activity, and there is sufficient justification for requiring sexual offenders to register and for requiring community and public notification of the presence of sexual offenders. The General Assembly declares that in order to protect the public, it is necessary that the sexual offenders be registered and that members of the community and the public be notified of a sexual offender's presence. The designation of a person as a sexual offender is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from the conviction of certain crimes. Likewise, the designation of a person as a sexual predator is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from findings by the Sexual Offender Registration Review Board and a court if requested by a sexual offender."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

ANALYSIS

GENERAL CONSIDERATION

EVIDENCE

MERGER WITH OTHER OFFENSES

JURY ISSUES AND INSTRUCTIONS

General Consideration

Constitutionality. — Provision of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(b) for a harsher punishment for older persons found guilty of statutory rape is not unconstitutionally discriminatory. Phagan v. State, 268 Ga. 272, 486 S.E.2d 876 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1128, 118 S. Ct. 1079, 140 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1998).

Statutory intent. — Former Code 1933, § 26-1303 was intended to apply only to cases where the act of intercourse was accomplished with the actual consent or acquiescence of the female, and was to be treated as rape merely because the female was under the age of consent as therein specified. Strickland v. State, 207 Ga. 284, 61 S.E.2d 118 (1950) (See O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3).

Under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(b), the sentence for a person convicted of statutory rape who was 21 years of age or older was between 10 and 20 years, so because defendant was more than 21 years old when the offense was committed, the original sentence of five years probation was void, and the trial court properly granted the state's motion to vacate; once the illegal sentence was vacated, the trial court was not required to sentence defendant to 10 years probation. Thomas v. State, 272 Ga. App. 279, 612 S.E.2d 99 (2005).

Legislative objectives. — Former Code 1933, § 26-2018 was substantially related to the legislative objectives of protecting young girls from the unique physical and psychological damage resulting from sexual intercourse with males. Barnes v. State, 244 Ga. 302, 260 S.E.2d 40 (1979) (See O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3).

Statute raised age of consent from that of common law. — Former Code 1933, § 26-1303 did not have the effect of creating a new and separate crime of rape, but sought only to raise the age of consent from that of the common law, which was under ten years of age to 14 years of age. Harrison v. State, 71 Ga. App. 369, 31 S.E.2d 119 (1944) (See O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3).

Indictment listing only forcible rape sufficient for statutory rape. — Even though an indictment listed only the statute for forcible rape, because it alleged facts relevant to statutory rape, defendant was put on notice that defendant was being charged with the latter offense and was not prejudiced. Brown v. State, 228 Ga. App. 748, 492 S.E.2d 555 (1997).

Defendant was properly convicted of statutory rape, even though the indictment only charged him with forcible rape. As the indictment alleged the victim was under 16, it put the defendant on notice that statutory rape could be considered a factually lesser included offense of forcible rape. Hill v. State, 295 Ga. App. 360, 671 S.E.2d 853 (2008).

Indictment failing to allege commission of crime. — Indictment alleging that defendant attempted to commit the crime of statutory rape by taking the substantial step of discussing engaging in sexual intercourse via computer and driving to an arranged meeting place for the purpose of engaging in sexual intercourse was not fatally defective for failure to allege the commission of a crime. Dennard v. State, 243 Ga. App. 868, 534 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

Defendant cannot admit charges and be innocent as a matter of law. — Defendant's general demurrer was properly denied, where the indictment alleged that defendant violated O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3 and 16-6-4(c) over a period of time, some of which was after the victim turned 16, as defendant could not admit the charges and still be innocent as a matter of law. Grizzard v. State, 258 Ga. App. 124, 572 S.E.2d 760 (2002).

Only slight penetration necessary. — Penetration of the female sexual organ by the sexual organ of the male, which is necessary to constitute rape, need be only slight. It is not necessary that the vagina shall be entered or the hymen ruptured, but an entering of the anterior of the organ, known as the vulva or labia, is sufficient. Lee v. State, 197 Ga. 123, 28 S.E.2d 465 (1943).

In rape there must be a penetration of the female organ of generation by the male organ of generation; that penetration may be slight or great, but there must be some penetration of the female organ by the male organ in order to consummate a rape. Addison v. State, 198 Ga. 249, 31 S.E.2d 393 (1944).

Proof that vulva was entered is sufficient. — Proof that the vagina was entered is not essential to a conviction of rape, but proof that the vulva was entered is sufficient to show penetration, although the vagina be intact and not penetrated in the least. Addison v. State, 198 Ga. 249, 31 S.E.2d 393 (1944).

Proof of force is unnecessary. — When one has carnal intercourse with a female under the age of 14, proof of force is unnecessary to show rape. Smith v. State, 192 Ga. 713, 16 S.E.2d 543 (1941).

Acts of force are irrelevant in a statutory rape case; it is the act of sexual intercourse and the age of the female that constitute the crime of statutory rape. Claitt v. State, 154 Ga. App. 727, 270 S.E.2d 34 (1980).

Questions of consent and chastity immaterial. — When defendant was on trial for alleged offense of rape of a girl nine years of age, the court did not err in refusing to permit his attorney to interrogate the female as to a claimed particular instance of unchastity with another man, as the offense would have been rape, regardless of the girl's consent, and furthermore on a trial for rape, the female cannot be impeached by evidence of specific acts of unchastity. Latimer v. State, 188 Ga. 775, 4 S.E.2d 631 (1939).

When the illegal sexual or carnal intercourse is with a female child under the age of 14 years, the questions of consent and chastity are not material, and it would serve no useful purpose to allow a thorough and sifting examination as to her credibility in regard to such questions. Deen v. State, 216 Ga. 387, 116 S.E.2d 595 (1960).

Considerations of "consent" and "force" and "against her will" are irrelevant in statutory rape case, and the age of the victim is irrelevant in a forcible rape case except insofar as it may show her incapable of giving consent and thereby supply the "against her will" element. Hill v. State, 246 Ga. 402, 271 S.E.2d 802 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 923, 101 S. Ct. 2001, 68 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1981).

"Force and arms" was not an element of the offenses of statutory rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3, child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, or furnishing alcohol to a minor, O.C.G.A. § 3-3-23, and since an indictment was couched in the words of the statutes and correctly informed defendant of offenses charged, the indictment's allegation of use of force was mere surplusage and was properly disregarded. Colon v. State, 275 Ga. App. 73, 619 S.E.2d 773 (2005).

Statutory scheme to protect children under 14 (now 16). — Carnal knowledge of a child under ten, even though she consented to the act, is rape. Swink v. State, 225 Ga. 717, 171 S.E.2d 304 (1969).

Together, former Code 1933, §§ 26-2018 through 26-2020 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3 through 16-6-5) provided a general statutory scheme giving protection to both male and female children under the age of 14 (now 16), regardless of the offender's gender, and thus were not invalid as depriving this defendant of equal protection of the law. Barnes v. State, 244 Ga. 302, 260 S.E.2d 40 (1979).

Juvenile male defendant convicted of statutory rape was not deprived of equal protection, even though the statutory rape law applies only to a male engaging in sexual intercourse with an underage female, since, under the statute on child molestation, a female who engages in sexual intercourse with a male under the age of 14 is subject to the same penalties. In re B.L.S., 264 Ga. 643, 449 S.E.2d 823 (1994).

Right of privacy under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I prohibited the state from prosecuting defendant for fornication under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-18, since defendant and defendant's love interest, both age 16 and of legal age to consent to sex under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(a), engaged in private, unforced, non-commercial sex. In re J.M., 276 Ga. 88, 575 S.E.2d 441 (2003).

Reasonable belief that prosecutrix was of age of consent is no defense. — Defendant's knowledge of age of female is not essential element of crime of statutory rape and therefore it is no defense that accused reasonably believed that prosecutrix was of age of consent. Tant v. State, 158 Ga. App. 624, 281 S.E.2d 357 (1981).

Effect of change in age of consent. — When defendant had lawfully engaged in consensual sexual activity with a minor prior to the amendment raising the age of consent, the amendment did not interfere with defendant's constitutional right of privacy so as to exempt the defendant from its coverage of subsequent sexual activity with the minor. Phagan v. State, 268 Ga. 272, 486 S.E.2d 876 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1128, 118 S. Ct. 1079, 140 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1998); McMillian v. State, 263 Ga. App. 782, 589 S.E.2d 335 (2003).

Knowledge of victim's age not an element. — When a defendant was charged with statutory rape and child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3 and 16-6-4, the trial court properly excluded any evidence showing that defendant believed that the victim was over the age of consent; knowledge of the victim's age was not an element of either statute. Haywood v. State, 283 Ga. App. 568, 642 S.E.2d 203 (2007).

Gender based classifications require less than strict scrutiny but more than minimum scrutiny and must serve important governmental objectives and must be substantially related to achievement of those objectives. Barnes v. State, 244 Ga. 302, 260 S.E.2d 40 (1979).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3 does not create a private cause of action in tort in favor of an alleged victim. McNamee v. A.J.W., 238 Ga. App. 534, 519 S.E.2d 298 (1999).

Retrial did not violate due process. — Retrial on child molestation charge did not violate due process given the legislature's clear intention to prosecute sexual intercourse only as statutory rape. Maynard v. State, 290 Ga. App. 403, 659 S.E.2d 831 (2008).

Directed verdict of acquittal was moot when guilty of attempt. — Because the defendant was not convicted on the statutory-rape charge but was, instead, found guilty of attempted statutory rape as a lesser-included offense, the issue of whether the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal as to the statutory-rape charge was moot. Judice v. State, 308 Ga. App. 229, 707 S.E.2d 114 (2011).

Sex offender registration required for violation. — Trial court properly held that the defendant, who was convicted of a statutory rape that occurred when the defendant was 18 and the victim was 13, had to register as a sex offender. Because the victim was under 14, the case did not fall within the exception of O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12(a)(9)(C) for misdemeanor statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(c); moreover, the defendant was prosecuted in superior court, not juvenile court. Planas v. State, 296 Ga. App. 51, 673 S.E.2d 566 (2009).

App. 685, 639 S.E.2d 411 (2006).

Evidence

Evidence of victim's past sexual encounters is irrelevant. — In statutory rape proceedings, testimony as to victim's past sexual encounters, even though entered into evidence without objection, is irrelevant, i.e., having no tendency to prove or disprove any matter in issue in the case. Hill v. State, 159 Ga. App. 489, 283 S.E.2d 703 (1981).

Inquiry into the victim's past sexual experiences was properly refused, even where a physician testified that in examining the victim it was obvious she had been sexually active. Worth v. State, 183 Ga. App. 68, 358 S.E.2d 251 (1987).

Corroborating evidence. — Law prescribes no standard for the strength of corroborating evidence, but it must be something more than a mere colorable support. Wright v. State, 184 Ga. 62, 190 S.E. 663 (1937).

Corroborative evidence, whether consisting of acts or admissions, must at least be of such a character and quality as tends to prove the guilt of the accused by connecting the accused with the crime. It need not, however, include testimony of an eyewitness of the act itself, or extend to everything said or done, and need not be positive or direct. Wright v. State, 184 Ga. 62, 190 S.E. 663 (1937).

Under former Code 1933, § 26-1304 (see now O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3), the evidence supporting that of the female or corroborative thereof must be testimony other than that of her own, as to the commission of the offense by the accused; and while it need not be sufficient of itself to establish guilt of the accused, it must tend to establish his guilt, although it is not necessary that the female be corroborated as to every essential element of the crime. In other words, there must be corroborating evidence fairly tending to prove that the crime was committed and that it was committed by the defendant. Wright v. State, 184 Ga. 62, 190 S.E. 663 (1937).

Only corroboration necessary in a case of rape where the woman is an imbecile or a child under 14 years of age incapable of consenting is proof of facts or circumstances tending to sustain the testimony of the woman as to acts of sexual intercourse with the defendant. Sewell v. State, 60 Ga. App. 606, 4 S.E.2d 475 (1939).

Quantum of corroboration needed in a rape case is not that which is in itself sufficient to convict the accused, but only that amount of independent evidence which tends to prove that the incident occurred as alleged. Slight circumstances may be sufficient corroboration, but ultimately the question of corroboration is one for the jury. Davis v. State, 204 Ga. App. 657, 420 S.E.2d 349 (1992).

Testimony of the victim's mother as to statements made to her by the victim and her own knowledge of defendant's actions was sufficient corroborating evidence. Lee v. State, 232 Ga. App. 300, 501 S.E.2d 844 (1998).

Victim's testimony in a prosecution for statutory rape was sufficiently corroborated by her prior consistent statements, both verbal and written, and by a psychologist's testimony that she showed signs of sexual abuse syndrome. Patterson v. State, 233 Ga. App. 776, 505 S.E.2d 518 (1998).

Victim's prior consistent statements, as recounted by their recipients, can satisfy the O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3 corroboration requirement. Simpson v. State, 234 Ga. App. 729, 507 S.E.2d 860 (1998), aff'd, 271 Ga. 772, 523 S.E.2d 320 (1999).

Act of intercourse as testified to by the victim was corroborated by her outcry to her mother three weeks after the attack. Reece v. State, 241 Ga. App. 809, 527 S.E.2d 642 (2000).

Corroborated by defendant's confession, the victim's testimony that defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim when the victim was 14 sufficed to sustain the conviction. Bankston v. State, 249 Ga. App. 118, 548 S.E.2d 25 (2001).

Evidence was sufficient to corroborate the victim's testimony that the victim first had sexual intercourse with defendant at age 14 after the victim's mother testified that after a divorce from defendant and while the victim was living with the victim's parent, defendant began to come by her house when the mother was not there in order to see the victim, and that the mother found a letter from the victim to defendant in which the victim referred to the night they had sexual intercourse; thus, a reasonable trier of fact could rationally find from all the evidence proof beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt of statutory rape. Byrd v. State, 258 Ga. App. 572, 574 S.E.2d 655 (2002).

Defendant's conviction for statutory rape was affirmed on appeal because the victim's testimony was corroborated by the victim's parent, the police, and the medical and scientific findings. Weldon v. State, 270 Ga. App. 262, 606 S.E.2d 329 (2004).

Two 14-year-old victims' prior consistent statements that the defendant had sexual intercourse with them, recounted by third parties, were sufficient corroboration under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(a) to convict the defendant of two counts of statutory rape. Hill v. State, 295 Ga. App. 360, 671 S.E.2d 853 (2008).

Defendant's confession as corroboration. — Defendant's confession to deputy sheriff, referring to the transaction charged in the indictment (rape upon his stepdaughter, a girl less than 13) would be sufficient corroboration, whether the verdict be for rape, the crime charged in the indictment, or a lesser offense included in the crime charged. Sewell v. State, 60 Ga. App. 606, 4 S.E.2d 475 (1939).

Corroborating identification evidence is not necessary in statutory rape prosecutions. Chambers v. State, 141 Ga. App. 438, 233 S.E.2d 818, rev'd on other grounds, 240 Ga. 76, 239 S.E.2d 324 (1977), later appeal, 146 Ga. App. 126, 245 S.E.2d 467 (1978); Hill v. State, 159 Ga. App. 489, 283 S.E.2d 703 (1981); Davis v. State, 204 Ga. App. 657, 420 S.E.2d 349 (1992).

Only fact of commission of crime of rape must be corroborated by other evidence and corroborating identification evidence is not necessary. Chambers v. State, 141 Ga. App. 438, 233 S.E.2d 818, rev'd on other grounds, 240 Ga. 76, 239 S.E.2d 324 (1977), later appeal, 146 Ga. App. 126, 245 S.E.2d 467 (1978).

Corroborative evidence tending to prove guilt of accused. — Corroborative evidence, whether consisting of acts or admissions, must at least be of such a character and quality as tends to prove the guilt of the accused by connecting the accused with the crime. Chambers v. State, 141 Ga. App. 438, 233 S.E.2d 818, rev'd on other grounds, 240 Ga. 76, 239 S.E.2d 324 (1977), later appeal, 146 Ga. App. 126, 245 S.E.2d 467 (1978).

Evidence supporting that of the female or corroborative thereof must be testimony other than that of her own, as to the commission of the offense by the accused; and while it need not be sufficient of itself to establish the guilt of the accused, it must tend to establish his guilt although it is not necessary that the female be corroborated as to every essential element of the crime. Chambers v. State, 141 Ga. App. 438, 233 S.E.2d 818, rev'd on other grounds, 240 Ga. 76, 239 S.E.2d 324 (1977), later appeal, 146 Ga. App. 126, 245 S.E.2d 467 (1978).

Corroborating evidence in the form of: (1) testimony from a nurse practitioner about the victim's genital injuries; and (2) an outcry by the victim to a refugee health counselor that defendant had been sexually abusing the victim since the victim was seven years old was sufficient to support defendant's statutory rape conviction pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(a). Falak v. State, 261 Ga. App. 404, 583 S.E.2d 146 (2003).

Quantum of corroboration needed in rape case is not that which is in itself sufficient to convict accused, but only that amount of independent evidence which tends to prove that incident occurred as alleged. Slight circumstances may be sufficient corroboration. Hill v. State, 159 Ga. App. 489, 283 S.E.2d 703 (1981); Dye v. State, 205 Ga. App. 781, 423 S.E.2d 713 (1992); Collins v. State, 229 Ga. App. 658, 495 S.E.2d 59 (1998), aff'd, 270 Ga. 42, 508 S.E.2d 390 (1998).

When the victim's testimony showed that an act of sexual intercourse occurred, it was not necessary that her testimony be corroborated in every particular. In re B.L.S., 264 Ga. 643, 449 S.E.2d 823 (1994).

Corroboration and sufficiency of evidence. — Child-victim's prior consistent statements, as recounted by third parties to whom such statements were made, along with the child-victim's subsequent behavior, constituted sufficient substantive evidence of corroboration to convict for statutory rape. Turner v. State, 223 Ga. App. 448, 477 S.E.2d 847 (1996); Wilson v. State, 241 Ga. App. 426, 526 S.E.2d 381 (1999), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 907, 121 S. Ct. 252, 148 L. Ed. 2d 182 (2000).

Testimony of the victim's mother, sister, and aunt as to the victim's outcry, stating that the victim told them the defendant raped the victim, was sufficient corroboration of the victim's testimony. Salazar v. State, 245 Ga. App. 878, 539 S.E.2d 231 (2000).

Trial court did not err in denying a motion for a directed verdict on a charge of statutory rape, as the victim's recantation did not render the evidence against the defendant insufficient, because the victim's prior inconsistent statements concerning the sexual activity was substantive evidence of guilt; further, the prior inconsistent statements, corroborated by statements to others, as well as the defendant's own testimony that there was a sexual relationship, satisfied the sufficiency of the evidence standard of Jackson v. Virginia. Lewis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 160, 628 S.E.2d 239 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), attempted aggravated sodomy under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 and 16-6-2(a), and statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(a); the victim testified that the defendant put the defendant's privates inside the victim's privates and attempted to put the defendant's privates in the victim's behind, and the nurse practitioner testified that the physical examination of the victim indicated injuries consistent with the victim's testimony. Anderson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 58, 637 S.E.2d 790 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Trial court upheld the defendant's statutory rape and child molestation convictions despite a challenge to the date-range period relating to the child molestation charge as sufficient evidence from the victim, which was supported by both the victim's mother and an examining nurse, supported the conviction; further, the defendant admitted to the victim's mother that sexual intercourse with the victim had occurred before. Northern v. State, 285 Ga. App. 303, 645 S.E.2d 701 (2007).

Polygraph results are adequate to provide corroboration of victim's testi- mony required by former Code 1933, § 26-2018 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3). State v. Chambers, 240 Ga. 76, 239 S.E.2d 324 (1977); Chambers v. State, 146 Ga. App. 126, 245 S.E.2d 467 (1978).

Victim's statements corroborated by testimony of nurse and confession of defendant. — When the testimony of the victim was supported by that of the nurse who had examined her and testified to the victim's previous statements inculpatory of defendant and the victim's testimony was also supported by defendant's confession of other acts which would constitute child molestation of the victim, the victim's testimony was sufficiently corroborated, and the evidence did not demand a verdict of acquittal. Runion v. State, 180 Ga. App. 440, 349 S.E.2d 288 (1986).

Victim's statements as corroborating evidence. — Child-victim's prior consistent statements, as recounted by third parties to whom such statements were made, can constitute "sufficient substantive evidence of corroboration" in a statutory rape case. Ogles v. State, 218 Ga. App. 92, 460 S.E.2d 866 (1995).

Victim's testimony regarding defendant's sexual conduct was corroborated by defendant's own testimony that he told the girl to hide when he heard his wife approaching and by his wife's testimony that he looked "scared" when she discovered the child with him. Timmons v. State, 182 Ga. App. 556, 356 S.E.2d 523 (1987).

Testimony of two witnesses about defendant's molestation of them when they were children, such incidents having occurred 11 and six years before trial, were properly admitted, where the prior incidents were extremely similar to the offenses for which defendant was tried and convicted. Childs v. State, 177 Ga. App. 257, 339 S.E.2d 311 (1985).

Admission of prior offenses. — When defendant appealed defendant's conviction on multiple counts of violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3, 16-6-4, 16-6-5, and 16-6-5.1, defendant unsuccessfully argued that the trial court erred in admitting two similar transactions. As to the first similar transaction, defendant induced any alleged error in that defendant's own counsel was the first to elicit the testimony of that transaction, and as to the second transaction, the trial court did not clearly err in finding that, because the transaction involved a sexual act by defendant in defendant's counseling office with a female whom defendant was counseling, the transaction was sufficiently similar to one of the crimes at issue which alleged a sexual act by defendant in defendant's counseling office with a female. Evans v. State, 300 Ga. App. 180, 684 S.E.2d 311 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0215, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 304 (Ga. 2010).

Statement made based upon mistake as to rape victim's age admissible. — When neither defendant nor the officer knew at the time of the pretrial interview that the female with whom defendant admitted having had sex was age 13 and so under the age of consent, defendant's confession was nonetheless voluntary and was not induced by trickery on the officer's part. Gaines v. State, 179 Ga. App. 623, 347 S.E.2d 673 (1986).

Statements of victim to mother and nurse held admissible. — As to the victim's mother and the nurse who examined the victim, the admission of their testimony regarding statements the victim made to them, was admissible as substantive evidence of the matter asserted because the victim was under oath and subject to cross-examination about her testimony and about her out-of-court statements. Runion v. State, 180 Ga. App. 440, 349 S.E.2d 288 (1986).

Less than totally explicit testimony of victim admissible. — When the victim testified that the defendant touched her "private parts" with his "private parts" and that "it hurt," and a nurse who examined and questioned the victim testified that the victim told her that the defendant had put his penis "in the front part of her bottom," although less than totally explicit, the testimony of the victim and of the nurse could be interpreted by a reasonable and rational trier of fact as statements that the defendant's male sex organ penetrated the victim's female sex organ. Runion v. State, 180 Ga. App. 440, 349 S.E.2d 288 (1986).

Confession and consent to DNA testing admissible. — In a statutory rape case, as the record showed that police had not misrepresented the 12-year-old victim's status to the defendant or promised that the defendant would be charged with rape only if the investigation established that the defendant had committed forcible rape, the defendant's confession and DNA test results were not inadmissible as having been obtained through trickery and deceit. Henry v. State, 295 Ga. App. 758, 673 S.E.2d 120 (2009).

Sufficient evidence. — Nine-year-old victim's testimony, corroborated by medical evidence and prior child molestation conviction, is sufficient to support a guilty verdict rendered by trier of fact. Whited v. State, 173 Ga. App. 435, 326 S.E.2d 803 (1985).

There was sufficient evidence to corroborate the victim's testimony, where it was shown that defendant had access to the victim and there was physical evidence that her hymen was ruptured and that her vagina was bleeding due to a recent injury. McClendon v. State, 187 Ga. App. 666, 371 S.E.2d 139 (1988).

Victim's prior consistent statements, as recounted by the victim's mother and a social services worker, were sufficient substantive evidence of corroboration to sustain defendant's conviction. Long v. State, 189 Ga. App. 181, 375 S.E.2d 274 (1988).

Victim's prior consistent statements to her cousin that defendant had gotten her pregnant, combined with other evidence showing that a pregnancy had in fact occurred and that defendant had the opportunity to cause it, constituted sufficient corroboration of the victim's testimony at trial to support a statutory rape conviction. Byars v. State, 198 Ga. App. 793, 403 S.E.2d 82 (1991).

See Phagan v. State, 268 Ga. 272, 486 S.E.2d 876 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1128, 118 S. Ct. 1079, 140 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1998).

Victim's prior consistent statements to witnesses, as well as a physician's testimony that the victim's hymen was not intact, sufficiently corroborated the victim's testimony and supported the defendant's statutory rape conviction. Simpson v. State, 234 Ga. App. 729, 507 S.E.2d 860 (1998), aff'd, 271 Ga. 772, 523 S.E.2d 320 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of statutory rape where the victim was not defendant's wife, but rather, defendant's relationship to the victim was not more than that of a friend and occasional babysitter. Joiner v. State, 257 Ga. App. 375, 571 S.E.2d 430 (2002).

When defendant's stepchild and the stepchild's friend had not reported defendant's sexual acts involving them during an earlier welfare investigation and the stepchild only told of the sexual acts after the stepchild's parent refused to let the child move in with the other biological parent, such went to the victims' credibility, which was for the jury to determine, and the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for child molestation and statutory rape. Williams v. State, 263 Ga. App. 22, 587 S.E.2d 187 (2003).

When a 12-year-old child told the child's parent that defendant had just raped the child; hours after the alleged rape, a detective found defendant's checkbook in the abandoned house where the victim said the rape occurred, and a check had been written from the checkbook earlier that day; and a doctor who examined the victim within hours of the incident found abrasions and tenderness consistent with the child's description of what had occurred, the appellate court found the evidence sufficient to support defendant's convictions of rape, statutory rape, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation. Weathersby v. State, 263 Ga. App. 341, 587 S.E.2d 836 (2003).

Victim's testimony alone was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for incest and child molestation, and the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's statutory rape conviction as it was corroborated, since the victim testified that the defendant, the victim's stepparent, began to ask the victim to masturbate and to use sex toys, including vibrators, dildos, and other objects, and would use them on the defendant and on the victim when the victim was eight or nine years old; defendant began having sexual intercourse with the victim when the victim was about 12, even though the victim told the defendant that it was not right and that the victim did not like it; after one of the final acts of intercourse with defendant, the victim wiped the victim with a sock and kept the sock until the day the victim ran away to a friend's home and told the victim's friend about defendant's conduct, the semen stains on the sock were consistent with defendant's semen, and the state's expert's opinion was that epithelial cells present on the sock came from the victim's genital area; and when the victim was in the ninth grade, the victim told a friend about defendant's behavior but made the friend promise not to tell anyone. Eley v. State, 266 Ga. App. 45, 596 S.E.2d 660 (2004).

Defendant's convictions for child molestation, attempted statutory rape, and burglary were supported because: (1) defendant entered the 14-year-old victim's room through a window, uninvited, (2) the defendant told the victim to push the victim's bed against the door, (3) the defendant removed the victim's underwear and the defendant's own pants and laid on top of the victim, but the victim prevented the defendant from penetrating the victim, (4) defendant fondled the victim's breasts and touched the victim's nipples, and (5) on a prior occasion, defendant made the victim touch the defendant's genitals with the victim's hand. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Evidence supported a conviction for statutory rape where the victim was 14 years old at the time of the trial and the incident occurred approximately two years earlier; the victim's testimony was corroborated by the victim's sibling's testimony that the victim told the sibling that the defendant had "felt on her breasts and her butt and her vagina and that he put her on the bed and tried to put his penis inside her" and by a doctor's testimony that the doctor found no bruising, bleeding, secretions, or infections, but that the victim's hymen was not intact. Jackson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 26, 619 S.E.2d 294 (2005).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, statutory rape, and incest, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4, 16-6-4(c), 16-6-3, and 16-6-22, respectively, because defendant's step-child gave detailed testimony as to the continuing sexual conduct that defendant inflicted on the step-child over a period of years, as the testimony from just that witness was sufficient to support the convictions, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8; further, there was corroborative testimony from a friend of the step-child who witnessed at least one incident, and from an aunt who testified that the older step-child had sat in defendant's lap and that the defendant rubbed the step-child's legs, which was properly admitted for purposes of corroboration, bent of mind, lustful disposition toward children, and motive. Lewis v. State, 275 Ga. App. 41, 619 S.E.2d 699 (2005).

In addition to the substantive evidence of defendant's guilt, provided by the victim's prior inconsistent statements, evidence of women's sexy clothing found in defendant's hotel room, which the victim said that defendant had purchased, and information downloaded from an Internet site detailing the pimping lifestyle, was sufficient evidence to authorize a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation, statutory rape, and pimping. Lewis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 160, 628 S.E.2d 239 (2006).

Convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and statutory rape were upheld, as: (1) sufficient evidence was presented, via the three victims' testimony, to support the convictions; (2) testimony from one of the defendant's other children concerning similar transactions committed against the child was properly admitted in order to show the defendant's bent of mind and lustful disposition towards the defendant's own children; and (3) the defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective. McCoy v. State, 278 Ga. App. 492, 629 S.E.2d 493 (2006).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for rape, incest, statutory rape, and child molestation against one of the defendant's children and a stepchild based on the defendant's repeated engagement in sexual intercourse with the children at various times while one was 12 to 16 years old and the other was 16 to 19 years old, and evidence of a letter threatening suicide on the defendant's part and apologizing for the actions against the children was also introduced against the defendant. However, the conviction on the charge of aggravated sexual battery against the stepchild was in error and required reversal since the state failed to introduce direct or circumstantial evidence sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant violated O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2 by penetrating that child's sexual organ with a replica penis. Connelly v. State, 295 Ga. App. 765, 673 S.E.2d 274 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0892, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 260 (Ga. 2009).

Prisoner's sufficiency of the evidence claim under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 was properly denied because although the jury rejected testimony of forcible rape by a 13-year-old victim, the jury was free to accept testimony stating that the victim had sexual intercourse and performed oral sex on the prisoner and proof of consent was not required under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-2, 16-6-3, and 16-6-4 for offenses of statutory rape and aggravated child molestation. Dorsey v. Burnette, No. 08-13700, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 5771 (11th Cir. Mar. 18, 2009) (Unpublished).

Merger with Other Offenses

Merger into general rape count. — When the evidence showed that an offense of statutory rape as alleged was included in the offense of rape as alleged, the statutory rape count merged into the rape count. Wofford v. State, 226 Ga. App. 487, 486 S.E.2d 697 (1997).

Statutory rape not lesser included offense of forcible rape. — Since statutory rape requires proof of an element — age — that forcible rape does not, it cannot be a lesser included offense of forcible rape. Hill v. State, 246 Ga. 402, 271 S.E.2d 802 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 923, 101 S. Ct. 2001, 68 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1981).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 in failing to argue at trial and on appeal that the inmate's statutory rape and incest convictions should have merged into the inmate's rape conviction as a matter of fact since all of the crimes arose out of the same incident, as the crimes of statutory rape and incest were not established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to establish the crime of rape; the inmate's convictions of statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3 and incest under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 were not included pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(1) in the rape conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, as statutory rape, which required evidence as to the victim's age and that the victim was not the inmate's spouse, and incest, which required proof of the victim's relation to the inmate, had elements not required for rape. Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

On facts, incest is included offense of statutory rape. McCrane v. State, 157 Ga. App. 110, 276 S.E.2d 263 (1981), overruled on other grounds by Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

Child molestation. — Conviction for child molestation merges into the crime of statutory rape and when there is a conviction for both the conviction and sentence for the former crime must be reversed. Coker v. State, 164 Ga. App. 493, 297 S.E.2d 68 (1982).

Trial court did not err in instructing the jury that it could return a verdict on child molestation, where defendant had been indicted for statutory rape and the evidence showed that child molestation was a lesser included offense of statutory rape as a matter of fact. Burgess v. State, 189 Ga. App. 790, 377 S.E.2d 543 (1989), aff'd, 194 Ga. App. 179, 390 S.E.2d 92 (1990).

Child molestation and statutory rape offenses did not merge where they were separate legal offenses, and because the victim reported at least two separate acts of sexual intercourse with the victim's step-parent. McMillian v. State, 263 Ga. App. 782, 589 S.E.2d 335 (2003).

Trial court erred when it convicted defendant of child molestation because facts which were used to prove child molestation were the same facts which proved statutory rape, and the court should have merged the child molestation conviction with the statutory rape conviction. Dorsey v. State, 265 Ga. App. 404, 593 S.E.2d 945 (2004).

Defendant's conviction of aggravated child molestation was not based on the same conduct that would have supported a conviction for statutory rape, so the rule of lenity was inapplicable. Wilson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 459, 631 S.E.2d 391 (2006), cert. denied, 2006 Ga. LEXIS 1036 (Ga. 2006).

Trial court properly denied defendant's request to have defendant's convictions for statutory rape and aggravated child molestation merged for sentencing purposes as the crimes were distinct offenses with different elements; testimony of the victim also authorized the jury to find that the crimes occurred on different occasions over a period of months, and therefore the crimes did not merge as a matter of either law or fact. Williams v. State, 291 Ga. App. 173, 661 S.E.2d 601 (2008).

As a defendant's fondling of a 14-year-old victim and then having sexual intercourse with the victim were separate acts, involving different conduct, merger of the defendant's child molestation and statutory rape convictions during sentencing was not required. Hill v. State, 295 Ga. App. 360, 671 S.E.2d 853 (2008).

Charges as to statutory rape and child molestation were not mutually exclusive. — Trial court did not err in merging an attempted statutory rape charge into a child molestation charge, instead of merging the child molestation counts into the attempted statutory rape count; the evidence establishing that defendant fondled the victim's breasts was not used up in proving that the defendant removed their clothing and attempted penetration; accordingly, three child molestation charges were not subject to merger with the attempted statutory rape count. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Trial court did not err in merging an attempted statutory rape charge into a child molestation charge as the state was required to prove the commission of an immoral or indecent act (here removing the victim's and defendant's clothing), the victim's age was less than 16, and defendant's intent to arouse or satisfy the defendant's own or the child's sexual desires; thus, the state used up the evidence that defendant committed attempted statutory rape in establishing that the defendant committed child molestation. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Guilty verdict entered against a defendant on a charge of statutory rape, and a not guilty verdict against that same defendant on a charge of child molestation, stemming from the same act of intercourse with the victim, were not mutually exclusive or inconsistent, as the fact that the jury acquitted defendant of the child molestation charge did not make the evidence of statutory rape any less sufficient; further, even if the acquittal was inconsistent with the conviction, the inconsistency could not be used as an avenue to challenge the conviction, since the inconsistent-verdict rule was abolished in Georgia. Perez-Hurtado v. State, 275 Ga. App. 162, 620 S.E.2d 435 (2005).

Motion to dismiss statutory rape and child molestation charges on jeopardy grounds properly denied. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to dismiss charges alleging statutory rape and child molestation on jeopardy grounds as double jeopardy did not preclude the state from prosecuting defendant for both offenses, although the same conduct formed the basis for both charges. Moreover, because no corroboration was required for child molestation, the jury logically could have found, and in fact did find, the defendant guilty of molesting the victim by having sex with that victim, despite the jury's not guilty verdict on statutory rape. Maynard v. State, 290 Ga. App. 403, 659 S.E.2d 831 (2008).

Enticing a child for indecent purposes is not included in the crime of statutory rape. Coker v. State, 164 Ga. App. 493, 297 S.E.2d 68 (1982).

Jury Issues and Instructions

Quantum of corroboration is jury question. — Quantum of corroboration required by former Code 1933, § 26-2018 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3) and its persuasive character is usually for jury. Miller v. State, 130 Ga. App. 275, 202 S.E.2d 682 (1973).

Ultimately, question of corroboration is one for jury. Hill v. State, 159 Ga. App. 489, 283 S.E.2d 703 (1981).

Lesser included offense of child molestation. — While an indictment did not charge the defendant with statutory rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3, the allegations of the indictment notified the defendant that statutory rape could have been considered a lesser included offense of the indicted crime of child molestation; since the defendant admitted that the defendant tried to place the defendant's penis in the victim's vagina, and since the victim testified that "it hurt," a jury instruction on statutory rape as a lesser included offense of child molestation was proper. Stulb v. State, 279 Ga. App. 547, 631 S.E.2d 765 (2006).

Erroneous charge. — Charge which permitted the jury to find the defendant guilty of forcible rape pursuant to former Code 1933, § 26-2001 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1), under a definition of statutory rape pursuant to former Code 1933, § 26-2018 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3), and to impose a sentence of life imprisonment which could not be imposed for statutory rape was error. Robinson v. State, 232 Ga. 123, 205 S.E.2d 210 (1974).

Circumstantial evidence instruction not required. — In a prosecution for statutory rape, pretermitted the issue of whether a notebook and love letters exchanged between the defendant and the victim constituted only circumstantial evidence because the defendant made an oral request that the jury be charged on the law under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, but did not make a written request for the charge, the trial court did not err in failing to charge the jury as the defendant requested. Attaway v. State, 284 Ga. App. 855, 644 S.E.2d 919 (2007).

No objection when defendant requested instruction. — Trial court did not err by convicting defendant of statutory rape though the indictment cited only rape as defendant requested the statutory rape charge and, therefore, could not complain of a purported error that defendant created. Freeman v. State, 291 Ga. App. 651, 662 S.E.2d 750 (2008).

Instruction on attempted statutory rape proper. — Trial court did not err in charging the jury on attempted statutory rape, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 and 16-6-3(a), because the court's instruction to the jury was properly tailored to fit the allegations in the indictment and the evidence admitted at trial; the victim testified that the defendant positioned himself between her legs with his pants unbuttoned and that the two of them were about to engage in sexual intercourse before the victim's grandfather came into her bedroom, and based on that evidence, a rational trier of fact could conclude that the defendant attempted to have sexual intercourse with a person under the age of 16. Judice v. State, 308 Ga. App. 229, 707 S.E.2d 114 (2011).

No error in denying misdemeanor charge and in resulting felony sentence. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's request to charge the jury on misdemeanor statutory rape and in imposing a felony sentence as: (1) a charge of misdemeanor statutory rape was not supported by the evidence, due to the difference in the defendant's and the victim's age at the time of the offense; (2) the defendant's requested charge set forth an incorrect principle of law within the context of the case; and (3) the sentence of five years probation under the First Offender Act, O.C.G.A. § 42-8-60 et seq., fell within the statutory range. Orr v. State, 283 Ga. App. 372, 641 S.E.2d 613 (2007).

No error in failing to instruct jury on purported lesser included offense of statutory rape. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for felony murder, with the underlying felony being rape, among other crimes, and although the defendant filed a written request for a jury charge on involuntary manslaughter, the defendant was not entitled to a jury charge on statutory rape as the defendant failed to specify statutory rape as the underlying misdemeanor. Further, the defendant was not entitled to such a jury charge as statutory rape was not a lesser included offense to forcible rape. Mangrum v. State, 285 Ga. 676, 681 S.E.2d 130 (2009).

Jury determination of credibility. — Testimony of the girl alleged to have been raped was not impossible or so inherently improbable as to be unworthy of belief as a matter of law, but her credibility on all questions was an issue to be determined by the jury in the light of her tender years and other circumstances. Sewell v. State, 60 Ga. App. 606, 4 S.E.2d 475 (1939).

First offender consideration appropriate. — Based on the plain language of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-10-6.2(a)(4) and 42-8-60(d)(2), a defendant who commits statutory rape is excluded from first offender consideration only if the defendant was 21 years of age or older. Thus, a defendant who was 18 at the time of the offense and 19 at the time of the conviction was eligible for first offender consideration. Planas v. State, 296 Ga. App. 51, 673 S.E.2d 566 (2009).

Sentencing. — In defendant's trial on charges of child molestation and statutory rape, the trial court did not err by imposing separate sentences for each crime because the evidence showed that defendant committed both crimes on multiple occasions. Little v. State, 260 Ga. App. 87, 579 S.E.2d 84 (2003).

Because the indictment adequately set forth a charge of felony statutory rape, and because the evidence at trial showed the defendant to be over 21 years old and more than three years older than the victim, the trial court was not required to sentence the defendant for misdemeanor statutory rape, and in fact was precluded from doing so. Attaway v. State, 284 Ga. App. 855, 644 S.E.2d 919 (2007).

Trial court properly dismissed the defendant's motion to correct an allegedly void felony sentence as the sentence was authorized by the law in existence at the time of the defendant's statutory rape convictions, and the defendant failed to seek withdrawal of the guilty pleas which led to the same as a prerequisite to challenge the sentence imposed; thus, any further relief had to be sought through a petition for habeas corpus. McClendon v. State, 287 Ga. App. 515, 651 S.E.2d 820 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 174 (Ga. 2008).

There was no showing that the defendant's sentences for enticing a minor for indecent purposes, statutory rape, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor were vindictively enhanced in violation of Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 33.6(B) after the defendant was allowed to revoke a guilty plea because, inter alia, the trial judge found that an enhanced sentence was warranted based on material differences between the facts presented regarding the nature of the crimes during the plea hearing and the trial; the concurrent sentences of 15 years to serve for enticing a minor for indecent purposes and statutory rape plus 12 concurrent months for contributing to the delinquency of a minor were within statutory limits and valid. There was no absolute constitutional bar to imposing a more severe sentence upon re-sentencing. Hawes v. State, 298 Ga. App. 461, 680 S.E.2d 513 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1769, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 15 (Ga. 2010).

Sentence within statutory limits. — Trial court did not err in imposing or in refusing to reconsider the defendant's sentence of 20 years imprisonment for child molestation, with 15 to serve in confinement for statutory rape, because the defendant's sentence was within the statutory limits set by O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3(b) and 16-6-4(b)(1); the defendant did not demonstrate that the defendant's sentence shocked the conscience. Gresham v. State, 303 Ga. App. 682, 695 S.E.2d 73 (2010).

First offender treatment. — After a defendant's sentence for statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3 was rescinded in its entirety pursuant to the defendant's motion under O.C.G.A. § 42-8-34(g), the trial court lacked jurisdiction to resentence the defendant as a first offender because first offender treatment was only permitted before a defendant had been adjudicated guilty and sentenced under O.C.G.A. § 42-8-60(a). State v. Stulb, 296 Ga. App. 510, 675 S.E.2d 253 (2009).

16-6-4. Child molestation; aggravated child molestation.

(a) A person commits the offense of child molestation when such person:

(1) Does any immoral or indecent act to or in the presence of or with any child under the age of 16 years with the intent to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of either the child or the person; or

(2) By means of an electronic device, transmits images of a person engaging in, inducing, or otherwise participating in any immoral or indecent act to a child under the age of 16 years with the intent to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of either the child or the person.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a person convicted of a first offense of child molestation shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years and shall be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Sections 17-10-6.2 and 17-10-7. Upon a defendant being incarcerated on a conviction for a first offense, the Department of Corrections shall provide counseling to such defendant. Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, upon a second or subsequent conviction of an offense of child molestation, the defendant shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten years nor more than 30 years or by imprisonment for life and shall be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Sections 17-10-6.2 and 17-10-7; provided, however, that prior to trial, a defendant shall be given notice, in writing, that the state intends to seek a punishment of life imprisonment.

(2) If the victim is at least 14 but less than 16 years of age and the person convicted of child molestation is 18 years of age or younger and is no more than four years older than the victim, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall not be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2.

(c) A person commits the offense of aggravated child molestation when such person commits an offense of child molestation which act physically injures the child or involves an act of sodomy.

(d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a person convicted of the offense of aggravated child molestation shall be punished by imprisonment for life or by a split sentence that is a term of imprisonment for not less than 25 years and not exceeding life imprisonment, followed by probation for life, and shall be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Sections 17-10-6.1 and 17-10-7.

(2) A person convicted of the offense of aggravated child molestation when:

(A) The victim is at least 13 but less than 16 years of age;

(B) The person convicted of aggravated child molestation is 18 years of age or younger and is no more than four years older than the victim; and

(C) The basis of the charge of aggravated child molestation involves an act of sodomy shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall not be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.1.

(e) A person shall be subject to prosecution in this state pursuant to Code Section 17-2-1 for any conduct made unlawful by paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this Code section which the person engages in while:

(1) Either within or outside of this state if, by such conduct, the person commits a violation of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this Code section which involves a child who resides in this state; or

(2) Within this state if, by such conduct, the person commits a violation of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this Code section which involves a child who resides within or outside this state. (Ga. L. 1950, p. 387, § 1; Ga. L. 1953, Nov.-Dec. Sess., p. 408, § 1; Code 1933, § 26-2019, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 1984, p. 685, § 1; Ga. L. 1984, p. 1495, § 1; Ga. The 2009 amendment, effective May 5, 2009, in subsection (a), substituted “such person:” for “he or she does” at the end of the introductory paragraph, in paragraph (a)(1), added the paragraph designation, added “Does” at the beginning, and added “; or” at the end, and added paragraph (a)(2); and added subsection (e).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: “This Act shall be known and may be cited as the ‘Sentence Reform Act of 1994’.”

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 2, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: “The General Assembly declares and finds:

“(1) That persons who are convicted of certain serious violent felonies shall serve minimum terms of imprisonment which shall not be suspended, probated, stayed, deferred, or otherwise withheld by the sentencing judge; and

"(2) That sentences ordered by courts in cases of certain serious violent felonies shall be served in their entirety and shall not be reduced by parole or by any earned time, early release, work release, or other such sentence-reducing measures administered by the Department of Corrections."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 16, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall apply only to those offenses committed on or after the effective date of this Act; provided, however, that any conviction occurring prior to, on, or after the effective date of this Act shall be deemed a 'conviction' for the purposes of this Act and shall be counted in determining the appropriate sentence to be imposed for any offense committed on or after the effective date of this Act."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 17, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "In the event any section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase of this Act shall be declared or adjudged invalid or unconstitutional, such adjudication shall in no manner affect the other sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, or phrases of this Act, which shall remain of full force and effect as if the section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase so declared or adjudged invalid or unconstitutional were not originally a part hereof. The General Assembly declares that it would have passed the remaining parts of this Act if it had known that such part or parts hereof would be declared or adjudged invalid or unconstitutional."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 18, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall become effective on January 1, 1995, upon ratification by the voters of this state at the 1994 November general election of that proposed amendment to Article IV, Section II, Paragraph II of the Constitution authorizing the General Assembly to provide for mandatory minimum sentences and sentences of life without possibility of parole in certain cases and providing restrictions on the authority of the State Board of Pardons and Paroles to grant paroles...." That amendment was ratified by the voters on November 8, 1994, so the amendment to this Code section by this Act became effective on January 1, 1995.

Ga. L. 1995, p. 957, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Child Protection Act of 1995'."

Ga. L. 1998, p. 180, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly declares and finds: (1) That the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' approved April 20, 1994 (Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959), provided that persons convicted of one of seven serious violent felonies shall serve minimum mandatory terms of imprisonment which shall not otherwise be suspended, stayed, probated, deferred, or withheld by the sentencing court; (2) That in State v. Allmond, 225 Ga. App. 509 (1997), the Georgia Court of Appeals held, notwithstanding the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' that the provisions of the First Offender Act would still be available to the sentencing court, which would mean that a person who committed a serious violent felony could be sentenced to less than the minimum mandatory ten-year sentence; and (3) That, contrary to the decision in State v. Allmond, it is the expressed intent of the General Assembly that persons who commit a serious violent felony specified in the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994' shall be sentenced to a mandatory term of imprisonment of not less than ten years and shall not be eligible for first offender treatment."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

“(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

“(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

“(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

“(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

“(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

“(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

“The General Assembly further finds that the state has a compelling interest in protecting the public from sexual offenders and in protecting children from predatory sexual activity, and there is sufficient justification for requiring sexual offenders to register and for requiring community and public notification of the presence of sexual offenders. The General Assembly declares that in order to protect the public, it is necessary that the sexual offenders be registered and that members of the community and the public be notified of a sexual offender’s presence. The designation of a person as a sexual offender is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from the conviction of certain crimes. Likewise, the designation of a person as a sexual predator is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from findings by the Sexual Offender Registration Review Board and a court if requested by a sexual offender.”

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides: “The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment.”

JURY ISSUES AND INSTRUCTIONS

Editor's notes. — Many of the cases noted below were decided prior to the 1994 amendment of subsection (d).

Constitutionality. — Defendant was indicted for various acts that clearly were prohibited by statute as being immoral or indecent; therefore, defendant had statutory notice that the acts were prohibited. Davidson v. State, 231 Ga. App. 605, 499 S.E.2d 697 (1998).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 is neither impermissibly vague nor violative of due process. Veasey v. State, 234 Ga. App. 795, 507 S.E.2d 799 (1998).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 does not violate due process for its failure to include a requirement that the state be required to prove that the defendant knew the victim was under age. Veasey v. State, 234 Ga. App. 795, 507 S.E.2d 799 (1998).

Court rejected the contention that there is no rational basis for treating child molestation based on an act of sodomy differently from child molestation based on other acts and that the different treatment violates the equal protection and due process rights under the United States and Georgia Constitutions. The General Assembly could reasonably conclude that the psychological well-being of minors is more damaged by acts of sodomy than by acts of intercourse and that such acts warrant a greater punishment. Odett v. State, 273 Ga. 353, 541 S.E.2d 29 (2001).

Statutory scheme to protect children under 14 (now 16). — Together, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3, 16-6-4, and 16-6-5 provide a general statutory scheme giving protection to both male and female children under the age of 14 (now 16), regardless of the offender's gender, and thus are not invalid as depriving this defendant of equal protection of the law. Barnes v. State, 244 Ga. 302, 260 S.E.2d 40 (1979).

Juvenile male defendant convicted of statutory rape was not deprived of equal protection, even though the statutory rape law applies only to a male engaging in sexual intercourse with an underage female, since, under the statute on child molestation, a female who engages in sexual intercourse with a male under the age of 14 is subject to the same penalties. In re B.L.S., 264 Ga. 643, 449 S.E.2d 823 (1994).

Effect of amendment changing age of consent. — Where defendant had lawfully engaged in consensual sexual activity with a minor prior to the amendment raising the age of consent, the amendment did not interfere with defendant's constitutional right of privacy so as to exempt defendant from its coverage of subsequent sexual activity with the minor. Phagan v. State, 268 Ga. 272, 486 S.E.2d 876 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1128, 118 S. Ct. 1079, 140 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1998).

Law existing at time of crime applies. — Contrary to a defendant's claims, the defendant was properly convicted of aggravated child molestation pursuant to the law in effect at the time of the defendant's crimes as it has long been the law in Georgia that, in general, a crime is to be construed and punished according to the provisions of the law existing at the time of the crime's commission. Mangrum v. State, 285 Ga. 676, 681 S.E.2d 130 (2009).

Knowledge of victim's age not an element. — When a defendant was charged with statutory rape and child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3 and 16-6-4, the trial court properly excluded any evidence showing that defendant believed that the victim was over the age of consent; knowledge of the victim's age was not an element of either statute. Haywood v. State, 283 Ga. App. 568, 642 S.E.2d 203 (2007).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 does not set forth alternate methods. — O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 does not set forth alternate methods of committing child molestation. Day v. State, 193 Ga. App. 179, 387 S.E.2d 409 (1989).

Although the defendant alleged that the state failed to prove that the defendant exposed the defendant's genitals to a child with the intent to arouse or satisfy both the defendant's and the child's sexual desires, there was no fatal variance between the indictment and the trial evidence in the defendant's trial for child molestation because the conjunctive form of the indictment, which charged that the defendant acted in order to arouse or satisfy both the defendant's and the child's sexual desires, did not mean that the state was not required to prove that the defendant intended to arouse both the defendant's and the child's sexual desires; rather, the state only had to prove that the offense was committed in one of the separate ways alleged, and the state's evidence was sufficient to do that where the evidence showed that the defendant touched the child's breast, and took the child to the defendant's "hideout" in the woods where the defendant touched the child's genitals and then exposed the defendant's genitals to the child. Hostetler v. State, 261 Ga. App. 237, 582 S.E.2d 197 (2003).

Constitutes forcible felony. — Child molestation constitutes a forcible felony for the purpose of establishing the defense of justification pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a). Brown v. State, 268 Ga. 154, 486 S.E.2d 178 (1997).

Proving statutory intent under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 does not require a showing of a "general plan." Branam v. State, 204 Ga. App. 205, 419 S.E.2d 86 (1992).

Unnecessary to find adult intent. — In order to find juvenile defendant guilty of the delinquent act of attempted aggravated child molestation, the court must find defendant attempted aggravated child molestation with intent to satisfy defendant's own desires. Whether the juvenile defendant had the sexual intent or knowledge of an adult would be irrelevant. In re W.S.S., 266 Ga. 685, 470 S.E.2d 429 (1996).

Inference of intent. — Although the defendant contended an absence of the requisite criminal intent, it could be inferred from defendant's act of openly engaging in sexual intercourse in the presence of children that defendant acted with the intent to arouse or satisfy defendant's sexual desires. Grimsley v. State, 233 Ga. App. 781, 505 S.E.2d 522 (1998).

Motion for a judgment of acquittal on charges of aggravated sexual battery, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation was properly denied as the defendant's testimony that the defendant blacked out during the incident did not demand a finding that the defendant lacked the requisite criminal intent; the victim testified that the defendant began rubbing the victim's legs, touched the victim's "private part" through the victim's clothing, pulled down the defendant's pants as well as the victim's pants, picked the victim up, and began rubbing the victim up and down against the defendant's "private part." Ward v. State, 274 Ga. App. 511, 618 S.E.2d 154 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support a defendant's conviction for child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) and the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict because the jury was entitled to infer from the defendant's act of masturbating in a child's presence that the defendant acted with the intent to arouse or satisfy the defendant's own sexual desires. Klausen v. State, 294 Ga. App. 463, 669 S.E.2d 460 (2008).

Indictment failing to allege specific intent sufficient. — Indictment which charged that defendant solicited a child to engage in certain sexual conduct but failed to allege specific intent was sufficient to charge child molestation. Bowman v. State, 227 Ga. App. 598, 490 S.E.2d 163 (1997).

Indictment that attempted to charge aggravated child molestation, but failed to do so, was sufficient because it described the offense of child molestation, the crime for which defendant was convicted and sentenced. Jones v. State, 240 Ga. App. 484, 523 S.E.2d 73 (1999).

Indictment alleging year range sufficient. — Indictment for child molestation was not insufficient because the indictment did not specify the dates on which the charged offenses occurred and instead alleged that the molestation occurred between August 1, 1991, and June 25, 2002. The victim could recall only that the abuse began when the victim was about nine and ended when the victim was thirteen; given the defendant's concessions that the defendant lived with the victim for much of the time between 1995 and 1999 and that the victim visited the defendant's house regularly thereafter, the defendant could not show that the defendant was prejudiced in the preparation of the defendant's defense by the indictment's range of dates concerning the indictment's three counts. Mullis v. State, 292 Ga. App. 218, 664 S.E.2d 271 (2008).

Indictment charging the defendant with child molestation, sexual exploitation of children, aggravated child molestation, and statutory rape was not defective for alleging a broad range of dates extending past the victim's 16th birthday because the indictment alleged that the defendant committed the crimes when the victim was under the age of 16 even though the exact dates were not known, and the victim testified that the victim had sexual intercourse with the defendant in 2003 and 2004; therefore, the indictment was not subject to a general demurrer. Wilder v. State, 304 Ga. App. 891, 698 S.E.2d 374 (2010).

Defendant cannot admit charges and be innocent as a matter of law. — Defendant's general demurrer was properly denied, where the indictment alleged that defendant violated O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) and O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3 over a period of time, some of which was after the victim turned 16, as defendant could not admit the charges and still be innocent as a matter of law. Grizzard v. State, 258 Ga. App. 124, 572 S.E.2d 760 (2002).

Motion to withdraw Alford plea properly denied. — Although defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's Alford plea to two counts of child molestation was timely because it was filed during the term in which the trial court imposed its sentence, the trial court's judgment denying the motion was upheld because the record did not support defendant's claims that the defendant did not understand the nature of an Alford plea, that the defendant's plea was not entered voluntarily and intelligently, and that the defendant did not receive effective assistance of counsel. Whitesides v. State, 266 Ga. App. 181, 596 S.E.2d 706 (2004).

Motion to withdraw guilty plea properly denied. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in the denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea to child molestation; rather than indicating that the defendant was impaired by medication, the defendant indicated that the medicine did not affect the defendant's ability to understand the proceedings. Brown v. State, 259 Ga. App. 576, 578 S.E.2d 188 (2003).

Trial court properly denied withdrawal of the defendant's guilty plea because the record sufficiently showed that: (1) the defendant entered a guilty plea to two counts of child molestation both knowingly and voluntarily, and in recognition of the rights being waived, absent any coercion or hope; and (2) the sentence was properly imposed, absent any proof that defense counsel was ineffective. Geyer v. State, 289 Ga. App. 492, 657 S.E.2d 878 (2008).

"Any immoral or indecent act." — In O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, the phrase "any immoral or indecent act" in conjunction with the requisite element of offense that the act be committed "with the intent to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of either the child or the person" is sufficiently definite. Therefore, since the statute is definite and certain in its meaning, men of common intelligence would not differ as to application of the statute's provisions. McCord v. State, 248 Ga. 765, 285 S.E.2d 724 (1982).

When the defendant husband and wife openly engaged in sexual intercourse in front of their children, they converted their residence from a constitutionally protected zone of privacy into a public place where their consenting sexual activity was transformed from acceptable and protected marital conduct into an "immoral and indecent act" within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. Grimsley v. State, 233 Ga. App. 781, 505 S.E.2d 522 (1998).

Defendant was properly convicted of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a); testimony indicated that defendant approached two young girls swimming in a lake and touched the girls and asked them personal questions while defendant was nude and had an erection, and the fact that the murky lake water obscured defendant's state of sexual arousal was irrelevant, as immoral or indecent acts for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) referred to acts generally viewed as morally indelicate or improper or offensive, and the testimony supported the conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant's actions were immoral or indecent. Further, the evidence was more than sufficient for the trier of fact to conclude that defendant touched the children with the intent to arouse his sexual desires. Wormley v. State, 255 Ga. App. 347, 565 S.E.2d 530 (2002).

"Act" may be merely verbal. — Although it was never proved that the defendant looked up the child's shorts, the "act" required by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) may be merely verbal. Hicks v. State, 254 Ga. App. 814, 563 S.E.2d 897 (2002).

Alternate act allegedly committed by defendant that was not found by jury did not change sufficiency of conviction. — As the indictment against the defendant placed the defendant on notice that the state was going to attempt to prove that the defendant committed child molestation in more than one manner, the jury's finding that the defendant committed molestation by showing the victim the defendant's penis was sufficient to support the conviction; the fact that there was an alternate act allegedly committed by the defendant that was not found by the jury did not change the sufficiency of the conviction. Hammontree v. State, 283 Ga. App. 736, 642 S.E.2d 412 (2007).

No penetration is required for child molestation to occur. Raymond v. State, 232 Ga. App. 228, 501 S.E.2d 568 (1998).

Penetration is not a required element of either child molestation or aggravated child molestation. Adams v. State, 299 Ga. App. 39, 681 S.E.2d 725 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 513, 696 S.E.2d 676 (2010).

Plan to use child to gratify sexual desires is element in crime. — General plan to use the child to gratify the defendant's lust or passions or sexual desires is an element in this crime. Staggers v. State, 120 Ga. App. 875, 172 S.E.2d 462 (1969).

Digital penetration sufficient. — Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), where the victim's testimony, the victim's mother's testimony, and the doctor's testimony all established that defendant digitally penetrated the victim, causing physical injury. Gearin v. State, 255 Ga. App. 329, 565 S.E.2d 540 (2002).

When the defendant was acquitted of aggravated sexual assault based on penetrating the victim's vagina and was convicted of child molestation based on touching the victim's vagina, testimony from the victim and a detective that the victim claimed the defendant touched the victim's vagina with the defendant's finger was sufficient to support the conviction for child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), despite the acquittal on the other charge. Mitchell v. State, 262 Ga. App. 806, 586 S.E.2d 709 (2003).

Defendant's own admission that the defendant digitally penetrated a 15-year-old victim's vagina while masturbating was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), and child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Driggers v. State, 291 Ga. App. 841, 662 S.E.2d 872 (2008).

Skin to skin contact not required for conviction. — Evidence of skin-to-skin contact was not required to prove that a defendant touched a victim's vagina or made physical contact with the victim's genital area, as alleged in the indictment charging child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b). Evidence of contact with the victim's genital area through her panties was sufficient. Gunn v. State, 300 Ga. App. 229, 684 S.E.2d 380 (2009).

Extent of injury irrelevant. — When the defendant was accused of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, the trial court did not err under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-75 in admonishing the defense counsel not to suggest that the defendant's penetration of the victim and the resulting injury had been insignificant; the evidence was irrelevant, as O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 did not distinguish between degrees of vaginal injury. Pickett v. State, 277 Ga. App. 316, 626 S.E.2d 508 (2006).

Presence of child as witness. — Defendant need not have intended to actually use the child's body in some physical capacity in order to commit an act of molestation; it is sufficient if a person utilizes or capitalizes on a child's mere presence as a witness to the person's intentional immoral or indecent act, provided that the act is accomplished with the intent to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of either the child or the person. Grimsley v. State, 233 Ga. App. 781, 505 S.E.2d 522 (1998).

Whether victim was clothed or unclothed is not a factor in determining whether an act is "immoral or indecent" so as to prove the crime of child molestation. Davidson v. State, 183 Ga. App. 557, 359 S.E.2d 372 (1987).

Touching beneath clothing not required. — Conviction for child molestation does not require a showing that a victim was touched beneath the victim's clothing. Walsh v. State, 236 Ga. App. 558, 512 S.E.2d 408 (1999).

Victim's statement that the victim felt defendant's privates against her own privates, even through clothing, was sufficient proof that he rubbed his penis against the child's vaginal area with the intent to arouse his sexual desires, as alleged in the indictment. Knight v. State, 239 Ga. App. 710, 521 S.E.2d 851 (1999).

Child molestation conviction was supported by sufficient evidence which showed that the defendant touched the victim's underwear but not her genitalia because there was no requirement that the state present testimony that precisely tracked the language found in the indictment, and a conviction for child molestation did not require a showing that the victim was touched beneath her clothing. Dew v. State, 292 Ga. App. 631, 665 S.E.2d 715 (2008).

Victim too young to consent to sexual acts. — Defendant's claim that the 15-year-old victim had consented to the defendant's sexual contact with the victim failed because a child of that age could not consent to acts that constituted child molestation. Driggers v. State, 291 Ga. App. 841, 662 S.E.2d 872 (2008).

Consent irrelevant. — Considerations of "consent" and "force" and "against her will" are irrelevant in a child molestation case. Coker v. State, 164 Ga. App. 493, 297 S.E.2d 68 (1982); Hines v.

State, 173 Ga. App. 657, 327 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

When the 14-year-old victim allegedly consented to having sex with defendant, the sexual molestation conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) was supported by sufficient evidence; under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-1, consent by the victim was irrelevant due to the inability of the victim to legally consent to intercourse, and it was for the jury to determine, in accordance with the testimony of at least a single witness pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, whether defendant's conduct was immoral or indecent under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Slack v. State, 265 Ga. App. 306, 593 S.E.2d 664 (2004).

No proof of force required. — Conviction for aggravated child molestation does not require proof of force, since such a conviction requires only proof of child molestation that either physically injures a child or involves an act of sodomy, and neither child molestation nor sodomy require proof of force. House v. State, 236 Ga. App. 405, 512 S.E.2d 287 (1999).

"Force and arms" was not an element of the offenses of statutory rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3, child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, or furnishing alcohol to a minor, O.C.G.A. § 3-3-23, and since an indictment was couched in the words of the statutes and correctly informed defendant of offenses charged, the indictment's allegation of use of force was mere surplusage and was properly disregarded. Colon v. State, 275 Ga. App. 73, 619 S.E.2d 773 (2005).

Crime of child molestation requires victim and accused to be in presence of each other. — Victim and accused must be together in order for the crime of child molestation to be committed. Selfe v. State, 290 Ga. App. 857, 660 S.E.2d 727 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 493 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence of victim's sexual activity admissible. — Given that the defendant was not charged with rape, evidence of the victim's sexual activity, and the fact that the victim had a love interest, with whom the victim allegedly had sexual intercourse during the time of the alleged sexual abuse, should not have been excluded under either the 2004 or 2005 version of the rape shield statute, as: (1) said evidence acted as a possible explanation for the victim's physical trauma, placing the victim's credibility and the defendant's guilt into question; (2) the jury's split verdict supported the defendant's argument that even without the excluded testimony, the state's case was far less than overwhelming; and (3) the appeals court could not determine what role the excluded evidence would have played in the jury's deliberations; hence, a new trial as to the charges of child molestation and incest was ordered. Gresham v. State, 281 Ga. App. 116, 635 S.E.2d 316 (2006).

Trial court abused the court's discretion in excluding evidence that a child molestation victim had been having sex with her boyfriend because the evidence would provide an alternate explanation as to why the victim's hymen had been penetrated, and absent the evidence of the sexual relationship with the boyfriend, the obvious inference was that the defendant had caused the penetration injuries; the state decided to present evidence of the penetration damage to the victim's hymen, and it was the state's affirmative act of "opening the door" to the area that required the trial court to allow the defendant to present evidence that someone other than the defendant caused the injury. Tidwell v. State, 306 Ga. App. 307, 701 S.E.2d 920 (2010).

Defendant's convictions for child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) and sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b) were vacated because the trial court erred by applying O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(a) to the case and striking the testimony regarding the victim's previous alleged sexual conduct with the victim's brother based on the court's conclusion that the rape shield statute prohibited the defendant from presenting evidence regarding the victim's prior sexual history, and the error in excluding the evidence of the victim's prior sexual history could have contributed to the jury's verdict since the only direct evidence of the defendant's guilt was the victim's testimony that the defendant sexually abused the victim; O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, as the statute is currently written, does not apply to prosecutions for child molestation or sexual battery. Robinson v. State, 308 Ga. App. 562, 708 S.E.2d 303 (2011).

County child abuse records should be provided. — Trial court erred by failing to provide defendant with the county child abuse documents the defendant requested during the defendant's trial for child molestation, but the defendant was not denied due process since defendant failed to show that the trial court withheld any material, exculpatory information. Dodd v. State, 293 Ga. App. 816, 668 S.E.2d 311 (2008).

No reversible error in admitting character evidence via defendant's drug use. — Defendant's convictions for various sexual offenses against a child were upheld on appeal because no reversible error occurred by the trial court allowing evidence of defendant's character as relevant via a police detective testifying that when the detective arrested defendant, the detective pulled from the defendant's pocket a suspected methamphetamine glass pipe containing methamphetamine residue; the reviewing court found that the challenged evidence was cumulative since the victim, the victim's mother, and another witness all testified to the defendant's drug usage. Quarles v. State, 285 Ga. App. 758, 647 S.E.2d 415 (2007).

Indictment defective. — Trial court erred in not granting special demurrer where indictment only identified the victim with the victim's initials. Sellers v. State, 263 Ga. App. 144, 587 S.E.2d 276 (2003).

Venue. — Evidence that an investigator went to the locale described to her by defendant's daughters and concluded it was in Gwinnett County was sufficient to prove venue, where no challenge to venue was raised at trial. Alexander v. State, 199 Ga. App. 228, 404 S.E.2d 616 (1991).

After the defendant was convicted of felony child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and misdemeanor sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1 and defendant appealed, contending that venue was not sufficiently established, the Court of Appeals erred in relying on statements by defendant's counsel that were contained in defendant's motion for reconsideration of bond in order to find that venue was sufficiently established. In reviewing a claim that venue was not sufficiently proved, the appellate court was required to rely only on evidence in the record that had been presented to the jury as venue was an element to be proved by the state, and where there was no evidence before the jury as to where defendant's business was actually located, the crime of felony child molestation, which occurred in defendant's business, was not sufficiently proved. Thompson v. State, 277 Ga. 102, 586 S.E.2d 231 (2003).

Testimony of two child molestation victims indicating that the defendant lived with the victims in Gwinnett County at the time the sexual abuse occurred was sufficient to establish that Gwinnett County was the proper venue. Although the victims were quite young when the abuse occurred, the credibility of the victims was for the jury to determine. Ortiz v. State, 295 Ga. App. 546, 672 S.E.2d 507 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0803, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 269 (Ga. 2009).

Liability insurance coverage denied. — When a child who had been sexually molested brought an action against the convicted molester for past and future physical and mental pain and suffering, the defendant's homeowner's insurance carrier had no obligation to defend or provide coverage because the policy excluded coverage for bodily injury which may reasonably be expected to result from the intentional or criminal acts of an insured person or which are in fact intended by the insured person. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Jarvis, 195 Ga. App. 335, 393 S.E.2d 489 (1990).

Juror not required to be excused for cause. — Because a juror, who was both the daughter of a crime victim and a victim, stated that the juror could ultimately be fair and impartial, and would try to do so, the juror did not hold a fixed and definite opinion of the defendant's guilt or innocence requiring excusal. Walker v. State, 277 Ga. App. 485, 627 S.E.2d 54 (2006).

In response to a question from the trial court, a juror stated that the juror could decide the case based on the evidence presented. Given this response, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in refusing to strike the juror for cause. Huskins v. State, 294 Ga. App. 653, 669 S.E.2d 680 (2008).

Seven year limitations period. — Trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, on two counts of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, was proper because the evidence of defendant's inappropriate sexual abuse of the victim sufficiently placed the dates of the charged offenses within the seven-year limitations period of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-1(c) and 17-3-2.1(a)(5). Allen v. State, 275 Ga. App. 826, 622 S.E.2d 54 (2005).

Defendant indicted within statute of limitations period. — Trial court erred in dismissing the counts of the indictment charging the defendant with aggravated child molestation, child molestation, and statutory rape with a child under the age of 16 because the indictment sufficiently invoked the tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1; pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c), the state had seven years to indict the defendant, and the defendant was indicted within seven years. State v. Godfrey, No. A10A1979, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 197 (Mar. 15, 2011).

Untimely motion to suppress. — In a prosecution on four counts of child molestation, the defendant's failure to file a timely motion to suppress waived the right to claim that the seized items were inadmissible as fruits of the poisonous tree. Walker v. State, 277 Ga. App. 485, 627 S.E.2d 54 (2006).

Motions to suppress. — Trial court erroneously suppressed the statements given by the defendant to law enforcement, because, given the totality of the circumstances apparent from the record, the defendant: (1) spoke clearly; (2) did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol or drugs; (3) appeared to understand what was read; (4) was not threatened or coerced in any way; (5) appeared very calm; (6) was not promised anything by police in exchange for defendant's cooperation; (7) did not appear to have any mental issues; (8) had only been detained for approximately 20 minutes before defendant was Mirandized; and (9) asked the investigator to come back to speak with defendant after a brief interruption in the interview; the mere fact that there was no written Miranda waiver or electronic recording of the same did not render said waiver involuntary. State v. Hardy, 281 Ga. App. 365, 636 S.E.2d 36 (2006).

In a prosecution for two counts of child molestation, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress a written statement given to police during the course of a pretrial interview, despite an argument that at the time the statement was given, the defendant invoked a right to counsel, as a defense objection to the admission of the same on this ground came after the statement was already admitted, and was thus untimely. Copeland v. State, 281 Ga. App. 656, 637 S.E.2d 90 (2006).

Motion to dismiss statutory rape and child molestation charges on jeopardy grounds properly denied. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to dismiss charges alleging statutory rape and child molestation on jeopardy grounds as double jeopardy did not preclude the state from prosecuting defendant for both offenses, although the same conduct formed the basis for both charges. Moreover, because no corroboration was required for child molestation, the jury logically could have found, and in fact did find, the defendant guilty of molesting the victim by having sex with that victim, despite the jury's not guilty verdict on statutory rape. Maynard v. State, 290 Ga. App. 403, 659 S.E.2d 831 (2008).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim did not warrant new trial. — In a prosecution against the defendant under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, because the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to present an alibi witness, and because the defendant failed to offer evidence that a medical examiner or witnesses from the Department of Family and Child Services would have been favorable to a defense, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit. Herrington v. State, 285 Ga. App. 4, 645 S.E.2d 29 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 548 (Ga. 2007).

On appeal from convictions on two counts of child molestation and one count of aggravated sexual battery, the trial court properly found that the defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on allegations of the ineffective assistance of defense counsel because: (1) the manner in which counsel handled alleged exculpatory evidence pertaining to a similar transaction witness and the cross-examination of that witness was part of counsel's reasonable trial strategy; (2) the defendant's reciprocal discovery or due process rights were not violated; and (3) the existence of the information sought was known to the defendant, which could have been obtained with due diligence. Ellis v. State, 289 Ga. App. 452, 657 S.E.2d 562 (2008).

Ineffective assistance of counsel warrants new trial. — Defense counsel's failure to present testimony of concern in the victim's many false allegations of child molestation and failure to present expert medical or psychological testimony regarding alleged molestation victim was ineffective assistance of counsel. Goldstein v. State, 283 Ga. App. 1, 640 S.E.2d 599 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 338 (April 24, 2007).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in granting the defendant a new trial based on the ineffective assistance of trial counsel, as: (1) counsel's pretrial investigation was deficient; (2) counsel made no effort to investigate or to obtain the criminal records of the state's similar transaction witness before trial, and did not ask for more time or a continuance upon learning that the defendant did not have the records; (3) the defendant pointed out that the jury had doubts about the victim's testimony based on their verdict of guilt to sexual battery, as a lesser-included offense of child molestation, the crime the defendant was charged with committing; (4) there was evidence that the victim had reason to lie; (5) the charged incident was not reported until after the defendant's wife hired a divorce lawyer, who then arranged the first interview between the victim and investigators; and (6) given that the evidence against the defendant was not overwhelming, this impeachment evidence was particularly crucial. State v. Lamb, 287 Ga. App. 389, 651 S.E.2d 504 (2007), overruled on other grounds, O'Neal v. State, 285 Ga. 361, 677 S.E.2d 90 (2009).

Defense counsel not ineffective. — In a child molestation prosecution, defense counsel's questioning of a victim about the entire circumstances of the victim's outcry, including an allegation that the defendant had used drugs, was part of a valid trial strategy. That the strategy was unsuccessful in securing an acquittal on all charges did not show that counsel's actions were objectively unreasonable. Farris v. State, 293 Ga. App. 674, 667 S.E.2d 676 (2008).

During the defendant's trial for child molestation, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to request charges on sexual battery and the defense of accident or on mistake of fact because under the evidence, charges on those subjects were not authorized; counsel testified that counsel did not seek a charge on sexual battery because the defendant denied touching the victim, and as all of the charges the defendant contended should have been requested would require that the defendant admit that the defendant touched the victim as alleged, the charges would have been inconsistent with the defense's theory that there was no touching at all and were inconsistent with the defendant's adamant denial that the defendant touched the victim as the victim contended. Kay v. State, 306 Ga. App. 666, 703 S.E.2d 108 (2010).

Retalial did not violate due process. — Retrial on child molestation charge did not violate due process given the legislature's clear intention to prosecute sexual intercourse only as statutory rape. Maynard v. State, 290 Ga. App. 403, 659 S.E.2d 831 (2008).

Severance of offenses. — Defendant's motion to sever the failure to register as a sex offender counts under former O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12 from the remaining aggravated sodomy and child molestation counts was properly denied as: (1) the defendant was not entitled to severance as a matter of right since the charges involved a series of acts which were connected together; (2) the case was not so complex as to impair the jury's ability to distinguish the evidence and to apply the law intelligently to the counts as joined; and (3) the failure to sever the failure to register as a sex offender counts was proper, even applying an analogy to cases involving possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, as the failure to report charges were legally material to the crimes against two children because the failure constituted evasive conduct that was circumstantial evidence of guilt and evidence of the conduct underlying the defendant's conviction of a sex offense in North Carolina was admissible as a similar transaction. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to sever the offenses of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1), aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), tattooing the body of a minor, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-71(a), and the defendant's motion for new trial on that basis because all of the sex offenses were similar and showed the defendant's common motive, plan, scheme, or bent of mind to satisfy the defendant's sexual desires, and the circumstances surrounding the tattooing offenses would have been admissible at the trial of the sex offenses to show the defendant's lustful disposition and bent of mind; the case was not so complex as to impair the jury's ability to distinguish the evidence and apply the law intelligently as to each offense. Boatright v. State, 308 Ga. App. 266, 707 S.E.2d 158 (2011).

Sentence of 220 years to serve upheld but order of chemical castration unsustainable. — Trial court properly sentenced defendant to 220 years to serve, followed by 20 years of probation, on 24 counts of sexual exploitation of a child, as such a sentence was within the statutory parameters and did not shock the appellate court's conscious in light of the crimes committed and, in fact, defendant was actually spared serving the maximum amount of prison time authorized by O.C.G.A. § 16-12-100(g)(1). However, the trial court erred by ordering defendant to undergo chemical castration under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(d)(2) since such punishment was only for defendants convicted of child molestation. Bennett v. State, 292 Ga. App. 382, 665 S.E.2d 365 (2008).

No Apprendi violation in sentencing. — There was no Apprendi violation in sentencing a defendant on a child molestation conviction because the factors set forth in O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b)(2) described an exception to the baseline felony punishment and mitigated or decreased that punishment to the lower level of a misdemeanor if these facts were found during the sentencing hearing; the cases did not suggest that the jury must find mitigating facts which decreased the punishment for a crime. Kolar v. State, 292 Ga. App. 623, 665 S.E.2d 719 (2008).

Sex offender registration required. — Requiring a defendant who had been convicted of aggravated child molestation to submit to lifetime registration as a sex offender under O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12 did not exceed the maximum sentence allowed under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 as such registration was not a sentence or a punishment. Hollie v. State, 298 Ga. App. 1, 679 S.E.2d 47 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 389, 696 S.E.2d 642 (2010).

Ga. App. 214, 684 S.E.2d 348 (2009).

Application

Cruel and unusual punishment. — Habeas court properly ruled that an inmate's sentence of 10 years in prison for having consensual oral sex with a 15-year-old when the inmate was only 17 years old constituted cruel and unusual punishment in light of the 2006 amendments to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4 and 42-1-12. Humphrey v. Wilson, 282 Ga. 520, 652 S.E.2d 501 (2007).

Because the defendant was a teenager convicted only of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, based solely on an act of sodomy, with no injury to the victim, involving a teenage partner two years younger, the teenager's sentence of 10 years without parole was cruel and unusual and was required to be set aside under Humphrey v. Wilson, 282 Ga. 520, 652 S.E.2d 501 (2007), without resentencing. Morris v. State, 300 Ga. App. 355, 685 S.E.2d 348 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0292, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 347 (Ga. 2010).

Trial court did not err in imposing or in refusing to reconsider the defendant's sentence of 20 years imprisonment for child molestation, with 15 to serve in confinement for statutory rape, because the defendant's sentence was within the statutory limits set by O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3(b) and 16-6-4(b)(1); the defendant did not demonstrate that the defendant's sentence shocked the conscience. Gresham v. State, 303 Ga. App. 682, 695 S.E.2d 73 (2010).

Sentence did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment. — Defendant failed to establish the threshold gross disproportionality inference needed to support a claim that the 10 year confinement sentence imposed on the defendant violated U.S. Const., amend. VIII and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XVII; the sentence was within the sentencing range in O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b)(1), the 2006 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b)(2) did not apply to the defendant, so it did not provide a basis for any proportionality argument, and the evidence showed that the defendant engaged in sexual intercourse with a 12-year-old child without the child's consent, and Georgia's child molestation law punished acts that were far less severe. Bragg v. State, 296 Ga. App. 422, 674 S.E.2d 650 (2009).

Although the defendant contended that the sentence provided in the amendment to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(d)(1), which as a result of O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1 (b) was 25 years, followed by life on probation, with no possibility of probation or parole for the minimum prison time of 25 years, constituted cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment, the sentence was not grossly disproportionate to the defendant's crime since aggravated child molestation committed by the defendant was not a passive felony. Moreover, the juveniles had been tried as adults and sentenced to long periods of incarceration in Georgia, and severe punishments for crimes against children had withstood previous attacks on constitutional grounds. Adams v. State, 288 Ga. 695, 707 S.E.2d 359 (2011).

Sentence imposed on revocation of supervised release. — In a case in which a district court imposed a 60-month sentence on defendant following the revocation of defendant's supervised release, given the severe and egregious nature of the supervised release violation, which, under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(d)(1), carried a life sentence, the 60-month sentence was not unreasonable. Defendant pled guilty to aggravated child molestation and enticing a child for indecent purposes, and, under 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), the district court concluded that the sentence was necessary to punish defendant adequately, to protect the public, and to deter future similar conduct. United States v. Williams, No. 08-12549, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 7720 (11th Cir. Apr. 8, 2009) (Unpublished).

No corroboration is required for a conviction of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. Baker v. State, 245 Ga. 657, 266 S.E.2d 477 (1980).

Corroboration is not required to warrant a conviction for the offense of incest, sodomy, and child molestation, and trial court's failure to charge the jury that corroboration was required was not error. Scales v. State, 171 Ga. App. 924, 321 S.E.2d 764 (1984); Padgett v. State, 175 Ga. App. 818, 334 S.E.2d 883 (1985), aff'd, 258 Ga. 662, 374 S.E.2d 532 (1988).

There is no requirement that the testimony of the victim of child molestation be corroborated. Adams v. State, 186 Ga. App. 599, 367 S.E.2d 871 (1988).

Corroboration is not required for a conviction of child molestation. Weeks v. State, 187 Ga. App. 307, 370 S.E.2d 344, aff'd, 258 Ga. 662, 374 S.E.2d 532 (1988).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 does not require corroboration of a child molestation victim's testimony. Burrage v. State, 234 Ga. App. 814, 508 S.E.2d 190 (1998).

Child molestation statute does not require corroborating evidence for a conviction. Chastain v. State, 236 Ga. App. 542, 512 S.E.2d 665 (1999).

Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on a child molestation charge, despite a claim that no physical evidence of other support for the victim's claims was presented, as: (1) Georgia law did not require corroboration of a child molestation victim's testimony; and (2) the victim's testimony was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction. Keith v. State, 279 Ga. App. 819, 632 S.E.2d 669 (2006).

Child molestation and aggravated child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal, as a videotaped statement from the victim of said crimes accusing the defendant of requiring the victim to place the defendant's penis in the victim's mouth was corroborated by another witness; hence, the defendant was not denied due process and the child hearsay statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 did not require corroboration of child hearsay. Simpson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 456, 638 S.E.2d 900 (2006).

Rape, incest, child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sodomy convictions were all upheld on appeal, given that the elements of child molestation and aggravated child molestation, including venue, were supported by the female victim's testimony. Forbes v. State, 284 Ga. App. 520, 644 S.E.2d 345 (2007).

While a doctor's examination of a 13-year-old victim two days after the defendant's alleged molestation of the victim found no evidence of vaginal trauma and no semen was found in the victim's vagina, on the victim's skin or clothes, or in the hotel room, the testimony of the victim did not need to be corroborated to convict the defendant of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) and three counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Moe v. State, 297 Ga. App. 270, 676 S.E.2d 887 (2009).

Victim's testimony alone is sufficient to sustain conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. — See Putnam v. State, 231 Ga. App. 190, 498 S.E.2d 340 (1998); Johnson v. State, 231 Ga. App. 823, 499 S.E.2d 145 (1998); Grooms v. State, 261 Ga. App. 549, 583 S.E.2d 216 (2003).

Evidence amply supported defendant's conviction for child molestation; the 12-year old victim's testimony alone was sufficient to sustain the conviction. Gibbs v. State, 256 Ga. App. 559, 568 S.E.2d 850 (2002).

Victim's testimony alone was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for incest and child molestation, and the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's statutory rape conviction as it was corroborated when the victim testified that the defendant, the victim's step-parent, began to ask the victim to masturbate and use sex toys, including vibrators, dildos, and other objects, and would use them on the defendant and on the victim when the victim was eight or nine years old; defendant began having sexual intercourse with the victim when the victim was about 12, even though the victim told the defendant that it was not right and that the victim did not like it; after one of the final acts of intercourse with defendant, the victim wiped the victim with a sock and kept the sock until the day the victim ran away to a friend's home and told the victim's friend about defendant's conduct, the semen stains on the sock were consistent with defendant's semen, and the state's expert's opinion was that epithelial cells present on the sock came from the victim's vaginal area; and when the victim was in the ninth grade, the victim told a friend about defendant's behavior but made the friend promise not to tell anyone. Eley v. State, 266 Ga. App. 45, 596 S.E.2d 660 (2004).

Application (Cont'd)

Evidence of the victim alone was sufficient to authorize a guilty verdict in a child molestation case; there was no requirement that the victim's testimony be corroborated, and defendant's convictions of child molestation, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sexual battery, and cruelty to children were affirmed. McKinney v. State, 269 Ga. App. 12, 602 S.E.2d 904 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support a defendant juvenile's adjudication of delinquency for child molestation as the victim testified that: (1) the defendant juvenile followed the victim down the steps and then pushed the victim against a railing as the defendant juvenile tried to unbutton the victim's pants; (2) the defendant juvenile unbuckled the defendant juvenile's belt, and tried to rub the defendant's genitals against the victim's genitals and make the victim touch the defendant's genitals; (3) the victim pulled away and began to cry; (4) the defendant juvenile asked the victim to give the defendant juvenile a hug twice and the victim complied because the victim wanted the defendant juvenile to let the victim go; and (5) the defendant juvenile told the victim to go to class and when the victim arrived at class, the victim laid the victim's head down on the desk and cried. In the Interest of Q.F., 280 Ga. App. 812, 635 S.E.2d 209 (2006).

Evidence that a defendant asked the victim to perform sex acts on the defendant supported a conviction for attempted child molestation, the evidence that the defendant put the defendant's tongue into the victim's mouth supported the defendant's child molestation conviction, and the evidence that the defendant asked the victim to scratch the defendant's genitals and to put the defendant's genitals in the victim's mouth, made the victim suck on the defendant's genitals, and made the victim swallow the defendant's semen supported the aggravated child molestation conviction; there was no requirement that the testimony of the victim of child molestation be corroborated. Redman v. State, 281 Ga. App. 605, 636 S.E.2d 680 (2006).

Despite the defendant's contrary claim, the child molestation and aggravated child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal, as supported by sufficient evidence provided by the child victim that the defendant touched the child's genitals and that defendant's "pee" went into the child's mouth. Manders v. State, 281 Ga. App. 786, 637 S.E.2d 460 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and aggravated sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2; the testimony of the victim and the defendant conflicted, but the testimony of the victim, alone, was sufficient to authorize the jury to find the defendant guilty. Goldstein v. State, 283 Ga. App. 1, 640 S.E.2d 599 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 338 (April 24, 2007).

Victim's testimony alone was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to establish the elements of a charge against the defendant of child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), as the victim testified that while she was at the defendant's home visiting his daughter, he requested that she kiss him and have sexual intercourse with him, and that he showed her his erect penis; there was also testimony from a jail nurse who confirmed that the defendant had a tattoo on his penis as described by the victim, and there was an internet instant-message conversation between the defendant and the victim, during which he apologized to her for his actions. Hammonree v. State, 283 Ga. App. 736, 642 S.E.2d 412 (2007).

Because sufficient direct evidence was presented via the victim's testimony that the defendant improperly touched and digitally penetrated the victim's vagina, convictions upon charges of aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, and other crimes arising from that contact were upheld on appeal; further, any error related to the admission of the victim's videotaped statement was harmless, as such statement would have been admissible as res gestae or to prove the defendant's lustful disposition. Morrow v. State, 284 Ga. App. 297, 643 S.E.2d 808 (2007).

Victim testified that the defendant performed oral sex on the victim on two separate occasions; although that testimony represented the only evidence against the defendant, the testimony was sufficient to authorize the jury to find the defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation. Johnson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 147, 643 S.E.2d 556 (2007).

Victim's testimony that the defendant, the victim's cousin, engaged in an act of oral sodomy with the victim was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4; it was not necessary that the victim's testimony be corroborated, and the victim's credibility was a matter for the jury. Flanders v. State, 285 Ga. App. 805, 648 S.E.2d 97 (2007).

Testimony of an 11-year-old child that the defendant had sodomized the child on several occasions was sufficient by itself to convict the defendant of aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), as it was the jury's role to resolve any inconsistencies in the child's testimony or conflicts between the child's testimony and that of others. Terry v. State, 293 Ga. App. 455, 667 S.E.2d 109 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of child molestation and aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) and (c), respectively, because, even assuming the victim recanted the accusations on cross-examination, the victim testified on re-direct that the victim had not fabricated the story and was nervous about being in court and seeing the defendant. The victim's testimony alone, as it was believed by the jury, was sufficient to convict the defendant. Green v. State, 293 Ga. App. 752, 667 S.E.2d 921 (2008).

Defendant's convictions of two counts of child molestation required no corroboration and could be sustained based on the testimony of the victims alone, each of whom testified that the defendant fondled the victim's breasts or private parts. Hill v. State, 295 Ga. App. 360, 671 S.E.2d 853 (2008).

Sufficient evidence was presented to support a defendant's conviction for child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) because the victim's testimony, in and of itself, could support the conviction; the victim testified that the defendant got into the victim's bed, moved the victim's panties, and rubbed the defendant's private part against the victim's private part. Hughes v. State, 297 Ga. App. 581, 677 S.E.2d 674 (2009).

As a 14-year-old victim's testimony of being sexually abused by the defendant was sufficient, standing alone, to support the defendant's convictions of aggravated child molestation, even assuming that testimony about the content of text messages between the defendant and the victim was improperly admitted hearsay, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial. Hollie v. State, 298 Ga. App. 1, 679 S.E.2d 47 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 389, 696 S.E.2d 642 (2010).

Despite the absence of any physical evidence, the victims' testimonies were sufficient to find defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation and child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4; counsel's strategic decisions in failing to call impeachment witnesses did not amount to deficient performance. Barnes v. State, 299 Ga. App. 253, 682 S.E.2d 359 (2009).

Evidence from a 13-year-old victim that defendant, a friend of the victim's step-father, gave the victim bourbon and marijuana, then put fingers inside the victim's privates and also touched the victim's privates with the defendant's privates was sufficient to establish child molestation. Bright v. State, 301 Ga. App. 204, 687 S.E.2d 208 (2009).

Victim's testimony that defendant penetrated her sexual organ with his finger was alone sufficient to prove defendant guilty of child molestation (O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)) and aggravated child molestation (O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b)), pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. The testimony of the victim's cousin, two school friends, and the interviewing detective was admissible as substantive evidence under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Vaughn v. State, 301 Ga. App. 391, 687 S.E.2d 651 (2009).

Evidence from a defendant's nine-year-old daughter that the defendant placed defendant's hand and defendant's privates on her privates and that something like pee came out of the defendant's private was sufficient to convict the defendant of two counts of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1). Hernandez v. State, 304 Ga. App. 435, 696 S.E.2d 155 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for child molestation and aggravated child molestation because the victim testified that the defendant kissed her on the mouth many times, fondled her breasts, licked her vagina and touched her vagina with his fingers, rubbed his penis against her vagina, and placed her mouth on his penis; although the defendant challenged the victim's motives and credibility on appeal, the jury, not the court of appeals, was tasked with determining witness credibility, and the jury was authorized to resolve any credibility issues against the defendant. Fogerty v. State, 304 Ga. App. 546, 696 S.E.2d 496 (2010).

Evidence that a defendant had sexual intercourse with his niece from age 14 to 17, touched her breasts and vagina with his mouth, touched her with sex toys, showed her pornography, and placed her mouth on his penis was sufficient to convict him of child molestation and incest in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4(a) and 16-6-22(a)(6). Stott v. State, 304 Ga. App. 560, 697 S.E.2d 257 (2010).

Testimony of one of the minor victims, standing alone, as to the acts the defendant committed with the victim was sufficient for the jury to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of aggravated child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), and child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1). Cobb v. State, No. A10A1700, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 200 (Mar. 16, 2011).

Recanting of child victim's testimony. — Witnesses testified pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 that the defendant's stepchild, then 12, told them about being repeatedly raped and molested by the defendant. That the stepchild recanted these statements at trial did not render the hearsay inadmissible under § 24-3-16, and as the stepchild's credibility was for the jury to decide, the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for rape, incest, and child molestation. Harvey v. State, 295 Ga. App. 458, 671 S.E.2d 924 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of molesting defendant's daughter, although she recanted her accusation at trial. The daughter made a voluntary outcry to a counselor at her school and repeated the accusations to her mother, her step-sister, and a forensics interviewer. Purvis v. State, 301 Ga. App. 648, 689 S.E.2d 53 (2009), overruled on other grounds, 308 Ga. App. 562, 708 S.E.2d 303 (2011).

Attempted child molestation. — Asportation of the child is not an essential element of attempted child molestation. Wittschne v. State, 189 Ga. App. 828, 377 S.E.2d 681 (1988), aff'd, 259 Ga. 448, 383 S.E.2d 885 (1989).

Defendant's conviction of attempted child molestation was affirmed on evidence showing that defendant drove a van up to two young children who were roller-skating on a street, held up dollar bills and asked them if they would like to have the money, and when one girl responded affirmatively, said "let me stick my hand down your pants." Wittschne v. State, 189 Ga. App. 828, 377 S.E.2d 681 (1988), aff'd, 259 Ga. 448, 383 S.E.2d 885 (1989).

When there was undisputed evidence that defendant entered the 12-year old victim's house with the intent to engage in sexual activity and that defendant sat nude on the victim's bed while the victim was in the bed, a rational trier of fact could have concluded beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of criminal attempt to commit child molestation. Garmon v. State, 192 Ga. App. 250, 384 S.E.2d 278 (1989).

Indictment for attempted child molestation was sufficient without alleging the specific intent of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. Livery v. State, 233 Ga. App. 332, 503 S.E.2d 914 (1998).

Indictment for attempted child molestation alleging that defendant took a substantial step toward commission of the crime of child molestation by: (1) engaging in sexually-explicit conversations over the internet; and (2) driving to an arranged meeting place was not fatally defective in that it failed to allege the commission of a crime. Dennard v. State, 243 Ga. App. 868, 534 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

Evidence that defendant undressed the defendant and a 14-year-old child and then climbed into bed with the child was more than sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction of criminal attempt to commit child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1, 16-6-4(a). Colbert v. State, 255 Ga. App. 182, 564 S.E.2d 787 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to support conviction for attempted child molestation under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 and 16-6-4(a) where defendant: (1) wrapped defendant's body around a child so as to restrain the child's arms; (2) rubbed and kissed the child's back, placing defendant's feet in the child's crotch; and (3) asked where the child had been all of defendant's life. Tanner v. State, 259 Ga. App. 94, 576 S.E.2d 71 (2003).

Evidence supported defendant's attempted child molestation conviction as defendant showered a 13-year-old victim with gifts and marijuana to induce the child to have sexual intercourse with the defendant. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Defendant was properly ordered to register as sex offender because the convictions constituted criminal offenses against a victim who was a minor, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12(a)(9)(B) and because attempt convictions pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-4-1 were covered within the registration requirement; defendant was convicted of criminal attempt to commit child molestation and criminal attempt to entice a child for indecent purposes, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4(a) and 16-6-5(a), respectively, as defendant communicated over the Internet with a police officer who was disguised as a 14-year-old child, and arranged to meet the alleged child, and the fact that an actual child was not involved did not negate the offense or the need for the registration, as there was no impossibility defense. Spivey v. State, 274 Ga. App. 834, 619 S.E.2d 346 (2005).

Because sufficient evidence was presented which showed that the defendant took substantial steps to arouse the defendant's own sexual desires in soliciting both the defendant's child and the child's cousin, showing the cousin indecent photos, discussing masturbation with both, and trying to kiss the child between the legs, the defendant's attempted child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal. Carey v. State, 281 Ga. App. 816, 637 S.E.2d 757 (2006).

Rational trier of fact could have found the defendant guilty of attempted child molestation beyond a reasonable doubt because whether the defendant's actions were immoral or indecent and done with the requisite intent were questions for the jury. Machado v. State, 300 Ga. App. 459, 685 S.E.2d 428 (2009).

Evidence that the defendant, age 35, met a girl online whom the defendant believed was 15, that the defendant made numerous comments about how the defendant could get in trouble or go to jail, that the defendant engaged in sexually explicit conversations and directed the child to pornography sites showing black men having sex with white women, that the defendant drove to an arranged meeting place, and, that, when officers appeared, the defendant fled, was sufficient to convict defendant of violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 (attempt), 16-6-4 (child molestation), 16-6-5 (enticement of a child), and 16-10-24 (obstruction). Smith v. State, 306 Ga. App. 301, 702 S.E.2d 211 (2010).

Law enforcement had probable cause to arrest the defendant for attempted enticement of a minor, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and 18 U.S.C. § 2422(b), when the defendant initiated contact with undercover officers after reading a Craig's list post submitted by two girls, ages fourteen and fifteen, made telephone calls to the alleged girls, and rented a motel room to meet the girls. United States v. Slaughter, No. 4:10-CR-24-HLM-WEJ, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37502 (N.D. Ga. Mar. 1, 2011).

Evidence that the defendant raised the subject of masturbation with the child victim and asked her to perform that act upon him was sufficient to support his conviction of attempted child molestation. Pendley v. State, No. A10A2301, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 283 (Mar. 25, 2011).

Admissibility of evidence of similar or connected offenses against children

dren. — In child molestation cases, evidence of other similar or connected sexual offenses against children is admissible to corroborate testimony of victim as well as to show lustful disposition of defendant. Ballweg v. State, 158 Ga. App. 576, 281 S.E.2d 319 (1981); Walls v. State, 166 Ga. App. 503, 304 S.E.2d 547 (1983); Pittman v. State, 178 Ga. App. 693, 344 S.E.2d 511 (1986).

Sexual molestation of young children, regardless of sex or type of act, is sufficient similarity to make evidence admissible. Phelps v. State, 158 Ga. App. 219, 279 S.E.2d 513 (1981).

Testimony of two witnesses about defendant's molestation of them when they were children, such incidents having occurred 11 and six years before trial, were properly admitted, where the prior incidents were extremely similar to the offenses for which defendant was tried and convicted. Childs v. State, 177 Ga. App. 257, 339 S.E.2d 311 (1985).

Trial court did not err in admitting, as a similar transaction, testimony that the defendant raped the defendant's sister-in-law when the sister-in-law was 15 years old and was not then in the protected age of minority. Ryan v. State, 226 Ga. App. 180, 486 S.E.2d 397 (1997).

Evidence of defendant's prior conviction for lewd and lascivious assault on a minor was admissible to prove the defendant's "intent to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of either the child or the person." Blackwell v. State, 229 Ga. App. 452, 494 S.E.2d 269 (1997).

In a prosecution of defendant for molestation of the defendant's 12-year-old stepnephew, evidence that the defendant molested the defendant's five- or six-year-old stepsister nine or ten years earlier when the defendant was a juvenile was admissible. Gilham v. State, 232 Ga. App. 237, 501 S.E.2d 586 (1998).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's federal conviction for receiving child pornography through the mail as well as evidence of molesting an 11-year-old child as similar transactions in defendant's trial under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 for molesting a 13-year-old child. Hoffman v. State, 259 Ga. App. 131, 576 S.E.2d 102 (2003).

When three prior incidents and the current child molestation charges against the defendant all involved the defendant going to locations frequented by children and exposing the defendant's genitals to them, the prior incidents were sufficiently similar to be admitted as similar transaction evidence in defendant's trial for child molestation; the fact that the prior incidents, unlike the current ones, did not involve touching the child victims did not mean that the prior incidents were not sufficiently similar to the current ones to be admitted as there was no requirement that the prior crime or transaction had to be absolutely identical in every respect. Hostetler v. State, 261 Ga. App. 237, 582 S.E.2d 197 (2003).

Defendant's convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and two counts of cruelty to children in the first degree, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-70(b) and 16-6-4(a), (c), as well as the defendant's conviction for attempt to commit rape, were supported by evidence, including testimony by the defendant's two grandchildren who were the victims of the instant crimes, as well as the introduction of similar transaction evidence, including sex offense convictions and similar acts by defendant against other minor victims; evidence of the similar transaction was properly admitted, as any issue as to its remoteness went to the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility. Shorter v. State, 271 Ga. App. 528, 610 S.E.2d 162 (2005).

Evidence of defendant's prior sexual battery of a juvenile was properly admitted in defendant's trial for child molestation and attempted child molestation of a nine-year-old child to show defendant's lustful disposition toward molesting young children because several years earlier, defendant had pled nolo contendere to charges arising out of the touching the breast of a 16-year-old child and placing a hand on defendant's genitals. Cook v. State, 276 Ga. App. 803, 625 S.E.2d 83 (2005).

Trial court properly admitted evidence of defendant's prior child molestation conviction in a trial on a similar charge, as it was a similar transaction that was admitted for the purpose of showing defendant's course of conduct, lustful disposition, and bent of mind in dealing with children. Copeland v. State, 276 Ga. App. 834, 625 S.E.2d 100 (2005).

Defendant's child molestation conviction was upheld on appeal, as supported by sufficient evidence that defendant grabbed the victim's hand and rubbed it against the defendant's genitals, along with the similar transaction evidence presented by the victim's older sibling that defendant had previously touched the sibling high on the sibling's leg and on the sibling's chest in such a way that the sibling felt uncomfortable, and that on one occasion, defendant placed the sibling's hand on the defendant's genitals; moreover, the trial court properly admitted the latter evidence to establish defendant's state of mind, lustful disposition, and intent to commit the charged act. Cowan v. State, 279 Ga. App. 532, 631 S.E.2d 760 (2006).

During a defendant's trial for aggravated child molestation and related charges, evidence of the defendant's sexual misconduct against two younger children at the age of 12 was improperly admitted because it was more prejudicial than probative; there was no logical connection between the charged offenses and the prior misconduct because no pattern of continuous conduct or periods of incarceration between the incidents were shown, the defendant was a child when the previous events occurred and an adult at the time of the charged events, and no sexual misconduct was alleged to have occurred in the intervening years. Maynard v. State, 282 Ga. App. 598, 639 S.E.2d 389 (2006).

Because the defendant's prior sexual abuse of a young male relative was sufficiently similar to the sexual abuse of a young female relative, which was the subject of the convictions the defendant appealed from, to make evidence of that prior abuse admissible, no abuse of discretion resulted from the admission of that evidence to warrant reversal of convictions for both child molestation and aggravated child molestation. Howard v. State, 287 Ga. App. 214, 651 S.E.2d 164 (2007).

In a prosecution for aggravated sexual battery and aggravated child molestation involving a 12-year-old child, evidence that the defendant had sexual intercourse with a 15-year-old child shortly before committing the charged crimes was properly admitted as the evidence was relevant to show bent of mind, course of conduct, and to corroborate the victim's testimony; the prejudicial effect of the evidence did not outweigh the probative value. Martin v. State, 294 Ga. App. 117, 668 S.E.2d 549 (2008).

When the defendant appealed the defendant's conviction on multiple counts of violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3, 16-6-4, 16-6-5, and 16-6-5.1, the defendant unsuccessfully argued that the trial court erred in admitting two similar transactions. As to the first similar transaction, the defendant induced any alleged error in that defendant's own counsel was the first to elicit the testimony of that transaction, and as to the second transaction, the trial court did not clearly err in finding that, because the transaction involved a sexual act by the defendant in the defendant's counseling office with a female whom the defendant was counseling, the transaction was sufficiently similar to one of the crimes at issue which alleged a sexual act by the defendant in the defendant's counseling office with a female. Evans v. State, 300 Ga. App. 180, 684 S.E.2d 311 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0215, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 304 (Ga. 2010).

Even though it involved boys, a prior child molestation conviction was properly admitted as similar transaction evidence in defendant's child molestation trial involving defendant's granddaughter because the prior conviction involved children, and the fact that the conviction was remote in time only affected the conviction's weight and credibility, and not the conviction's admissibility. Waters v. State, 303 Ga. App. 187, 692 S.E.2d 802 (2010).

Failure to hold Rule 31.3(B) hearing before admitting similar transaction evidence error. — In a child molestation case, the trial court's failure to hold a hearing under Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3(B) before admitting similar transaction evidence concerning the defendant's alleged abuse of other children was not harmless error. As the only direct testimony came from the victim, there was no physical evidence of abuse, and the defendant did not testify, it could not be said that the similar transaction evidence did not contribute to the verdict. Sheppard v. State, 294 Ga. App. 270, 669 S.E.2d 152 (2008).

Admissibility of evidence of similar sex act against adult. — Admission of testimony of similar sex acts with a prior adult victim to indicate a likelihood a defendant performed the same sex acts that the child victim claimed was not error since the state made the three showings necessary for that similar transaction evidence: (1) proper purpose; (2) commission of a separate offense; and (3) similarity of the separate and charged offense. Kingsley v. State, 268 Ga. App. 729, 603 S.E.2d 78 (2004).

Evidence of similar or connected sexual offenses against adults. — In a child molestation and aggravated sexual battery prosecution, evidence that before assaulting adult victims, defendant grabbed the victim by the back of the victim's hair or held the victim's neck, was properly admitted as "other transactions" evidence, since defendant used a similar method to control the child victim before sexually assaulting the victim; this evidence was relevant to show the defendant's course of conduct and rebut the defendant's defense of fabrication. That the prior acts involved adults did not preclude their admission as similar transactions. Helton v. State, 268 Ga. App. 430, 602 S.E.2d 198 (2004).

Defendant was charged with, inter alia, child molestation and cruelty to children for touching a 15-year-old child's genital area and breast, putting defendant's mouth on the child's breast, and calling the child sexually repulsive names. It was proper to admit similar transaction evidence showing that the defendant had inappropriately touched an 18-year-old's bare leg and called that victim similar sexually repulsive names as it showed the defendant's bent of mind to inappropriately touch young people of the opposite sex. Murray v. State, 293 Ga. App. 516, 667 S.E.2d 382 (2008).

In convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and of aggravated sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), evidence of two prior similar transactions was properly admitted because even though both victims were 18, they were substantially younger than defendant, who was 35 years old at that time, and both of the similar transaction incidents involved similar sexual deviancy as the instant case. Woods v. State, 304 Ga. App. 403, 696 S.E.2d 411 (2010).

Questioning defendant's character witnesses as to knowledge of defendant's other crimes allowed. — In a trial for child molestation the trial court did not err by allowing the state to ask witnesses who had testified as to defendant's good reputation if they were aware that defendant had been convicted of child molestation in 1959. It is not error for the state to ask a character witness on cross-examination if the witness has heard, or is "aware," that defendant had been convicted of certain crimes, particularly where evidence of such prior conviction is offered into evidence either at the time of, or subsequent to, cross-examination of the witness. Eubanks v. State, 180 Ga. App. 355, 349 S.E.2d 244 (1986).

Questioning defendant as to later arrest reversible error. — Permitting the prosecutor to ask defendant if defendant had been arrested on a sex charge subsequent to the incident in question at defendant's trial for child molestation and enticing a child for indecent purposes was reversible error, where the sole issue in the case was the credibility of defendant and the alleged victim. Thomas v. State, 178 Ga. App. 674, 344 S.E.2d 496 (1986).

Evidence of victim's age sufficient. — In a child molestation case, there was sufficient evidence that the victim was under 16 at the time of the incidents in question; the victim had testified that the victim was 14 or 15 when the defendant started touching the victim inappropriately and that the incidents happened when the victim was in the eighth grade, a time at which the victim said that the victim was 15. Boynton v. State, 287 Ga. App. 778, 653 S.E.2d 110 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for child molestation, although no one testified as to the child victim's age at the bench trial, as the trier of fact was permitted to deduce that the victim was under the age of 16 by its observation of the victim's childlike demeanor and prepubescent body in the videotaped interview, which took place only two days after the incident in question. Day v. State, 293 Ga. App. 543, 667 S.E.2d 392 (2008).

Evidence of victim's reputation for nonchastity is inadmissible. — To extent that alleged evidence, sought to be introduced by defendant, concerning general reputation and character of victim, dealt with victim's reputation for nonchastity, it was inadmissible at trial prosecution for child molestation. Lively v. State, 157 Ga. App. 419, 278 S.E.2d 67 (1981).

Evidence of a prior molestation or previous sexual activity on the part of the victim is not relevant in a child molestation case to show either the victim's reputation for nonchastity or the victim's preoccupation with sex. Hall v. State, 196 Ga. App. 523, 396 S.E.2d 271 (1990).

Absent a showing of relevance, evidence of a child's past sexual history, including acts committed by persons other than the accused, is inadmissible. This is true whether the evidence is contained in defendant's admission or otherwise. Stancil v. State, 196 Ga. App. 530, 396 S.E.2d 299 (1990).

Past sexual experience of child irrelevant as to defendant's guilt. — Since knowledge of a crime gained through being a victim of that crime at the hands of others can have no relevance to the issue of guilt or innocence of the defendant on trial, the past sexual experience of a child in a molestation case is irrelevant to the issue of whether the molestation was committed by the defendant on trial. Chastain v. State, 180 Ga. App. 312, 349 S.E.2d 6 (1986), aff'd, 257 Ga. 54, 354 S.E.2d 421 (1987).

Inquiry into victim's past sexual experiences was properly refused, even where a physician testified that in examining the victim it was obvious the victim had been sexually active. Worth v. State, 183 Ga.

App. 68, 358 S.E.2d 251 (1987).

Evidence of prior unrelated sexual molestation admissible. — Evidence of a prior unrelated sexual molestation of the victim was admissible to establish other possible causes for the behavioral symptoms exhibited by the child, which were described as typical child sexual abuse accommodation syndrome and to explain the medical testimony regarding the victim's injuries. Hall v. State, 196 Ga. App. 523, 396 S.E.2d 271 (1990).

Evidence of another similar transaction involving defendant consisting of both words and actions, in the child's presence, including touching of the child, was properly admitted, despite any dissimilarity from the act charged; the sexual abuse of young children, regardless of the sex of the victims or the nomenclature or type of acts or other conduct perpetrated upon them, was of sufficient similarity to make the evidence admissible. Joiner v. State, 265 Ga. App. 395, 593 S.E.2d 936 (2004).

Trial court's error in not permitting the defendant to show that the spouse's minor child, whom the defendant was charged with molesting, made an allegation of molestation with respect to another individual that the child later denied, was harmless given the overwhelming evidence against defendant, including the facts that there was photographic evidence that the child was molested in the defendant's bedroom, that the spouse and the child's uncle both identified the child in the photographs, that a Polaroid camera like that used to take the photographs was found in defendant's home, that the spouse had testified that the spouse had not left the child alone in the house with any person other than defendant, and that the photographs were found in a house owned by defendant in a file containing personal items. Holloway v. State, 278 Ga. App. 709, 629 S.E.2d 447 (2006).

Evidence of child victim's past boyfriends may be excluded. — Although the rape shield statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, did not require the exclusion of evidence of a child molestation victim's past boyfriends and difficult past because the charge was not an aggravated charge, the trial court was authorized to evaluate the relevance of any evidence and exclude the evidence on that basis. Cantu v. State, 304 Ga. App. 655, 697 S.E.2d 310 (2010).

Conflicts in victim's statements pre-trial and at trial. — When in a pretrial statement, the victim testified that the defendant fondled the victim, but at trial the victim testified that the story was made up, the jury was authorized to believe the victim's pretrial statements rather than the in-court disavowal; thus, the evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty of child molestation beyond a reasonable doubt. Lee v. State, 250 Ga. App. 110, 550 S.E.2d 696 (2001).

Evidence and victim's statement later recanted. — Evidence in the form of a videotape of the defendant's daughter playing with anatomically correct dolls following defendant's arrest for sexually assaulting his girlfriend and daughter, together with the girlfriend's testimony and statements the daughter made to investigators following defendant's arrest, was sufficient to find defendant guilty of child molestation beyond a reasonable doubt, even though the daughter later recanted her statements. Higgins v. State, 251 Ga. App. 175, 554 S.E.2d 212 (2001).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 does not require the child to corroborate the hearsay testimony, and conflicts between the videotaped statement and the testimony of the child at trial do not necessarily render the former inadmissible but rather present a question of credibility of the witness to be resolved by the trier of fact; despite a child victim's apparent recantation of the child's accusations of molestation at trial, sufficient evidence supported convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation where the victim described the molestation in a pre-trial videotaped interview, where an expert witness testified that children may recant testimony with regard to sexual abuse for reasons unrelated to falsity, including embarrassment and fear, and a doctor also testified that the doctor's examination of the victim revealed "unusual" findings that would have caused the doctor to inquire regarding sexual abuse if they had appeared on a routine exam. Amerson v. State, 268 Ga. App. 855, 602 S.E.2d 857 (2004).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for child molestation of the victim, the defendant's seven year old child, because a rational trier of fact could have concluded beyond a reasonable doubt that the victim's fear of punishment and the other parent's disapproval caused the victim to recant. The jury was authorized to believe the victim's videotaped testimony, corroborated by the victim's statements to the doctor who examined the victim, that the victim's parent had, on numerous occasions, touched the victim's genitals, rather than the victim's in-court disavowal. King v. State, 268 Ga. App. 707, 603 S.E.2d 54 (2004).

In addition to the substantive evidence of defendant's guilt, provided by the victim's prior inconsistent statements, evidence of women's sexy clothing found in defendant's hotel room, which the victim said that defendant had purchased, and information downloaded from an Internet site detailing the pimping lifestyle, was sufficient evidence to authorize a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation, statutory rape, and pimping. Lewis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 160, 628 S.E.2d 239 (2006).

Trial court was within the court's discretion in restricting cross-examination of the victim in a child molestation case regarding the fact that when she was five and nine years old she slept in a bed with an uncle when the conviction rested upon the testimony of the parties and did not involve expert testimony or the child abuse syndrome. Chastain v. State, 257 Ga. 54, 354 S.E.2d 421 (1987).

When the trial court refused evidence of the child's asserted unusual sexual proclivity, apparently offered to show the child initiated the sexual encounters and fabricated the evidence upon being rejected by the child's step-grandfather, there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in its limitation of the defendant's cross-examination on this point. Deyton v. State, 182 Ga. App. 73, 354 S.E.2d 625 (1987).

No abuse of discretion resulted from the admission of testimony from the investigating officer, the child victim's mother, and the child victim's sister, about the alleged child molestation committed by the juvenile as: (1) the child was available to testify; (2) cross-examination of the child victim in the judge's chambers was attempted, but proved unsuccessful; and (3) the judge ruled that no further purpose would be served by having the child examined in the open courtroom. In the Interest of S.S., 281 Ga. App. 781, 637 S.E.2d 151 (2006).

Evidence of victim's disciplinary problems in school is irrelevant. — Trial court did not err in granting state's motion in limine, which sought to prevent defendant from introducing victim's school records in attempt to show that the victim had disciplinary problems, since such evidence was absolutely irrelevant to any issue in prosecution for child molestation. Lively v. State, 157 Ga. App. 419, 278 S.E.2d 67 (1981).

No Crawford violation. — In a delinquency proceeding on a charge of child molestation, even assuming that a police officer's statements were wrongly admitted, said testimony was merely cumulative of other properly admitted testimony presented by both the child's mother and the child's sister, and said admission did not require reversal of the court's adjudicatory findings. In the Interest of S.S., 281 Ga. App. 781, 637 S.E.2d 151 (2006).

No ex post facto violation. — Defendant's contention on appeal that a sentence of life imprisonment as a recidivist child molester under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b) rendered that statute an unconstitutional ex post facto law was rejected as the fact that the defendant's prior conviction yielded an increased punishment did not convert the statute into an unconstitutional ex post facto law; rather, the statute punished offenders only for a future offense, which punishment was rationally enhanced by the prior conviction. Williams v. State, 284 Ga. App. 255, 643 S.E.2d 749 (2007).

It was not error to admit a taped interview of the victim by the police almost one year after the alleged offense, where defendant's counsel attacked the veracity of the victim, defendant had the opportunity to confront the victim and cross-examine the victim under oath about the victim's out-of-court statement, and the out-of-court statement was cumulative to that of the victim on the witness stand. Lynn v. State, 181 Ga. App. 461, 352 S.E.2d 602 (1986).

Victim's testimony alone sufficient to sustain conviction. — Victim's testimony alone was sufficient to sustain convictions for child molestation and aggravated child molestation when, inter alia, the victim testified that defendant had fondled and performed oral sex on the victim and had forced the victim to reciprocate in performing oral sex on the defendant. Spradlin v. State, 262 Ga. App. 897, 587 S.E.2d 155 (2003).

Victim's prior inconsistent statements. — Conviction for child molestation can rest upon prior inconsistent statements of the victim alone. Weeks v. State, 187 Ga. App. 307, 370 S.E.2d 344 (1988), aff'd, 258 Ga. 662, 374 S.E.2d 532 (1988).

Victim's videotaped statement that the molestation "hurt" the victim was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated child molestation involving injury to the child under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), even though at trial the victim could not remember whether the molestation hurt. It was permissible to introduce a forgetful witness's prior consistent statement when the witness testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination. Waters v. State, 288 Ga. App. 260, 653 S.E.2d 849 (2007).

Testimony of mother as to son's complaint held admissible. Walls v. State, 166 Ga. App. 503, 304 S.E.2d 547 (1983).

Testimony by mother of victim concerning allegations made by her child to her against defendant was properly admitted, where the court considered atmosphere, circumstances, spontaneity, and demeanor in judging the reliability of the statement. Ortiz v. State, 188 Ga. App. 532, 374 S.E.2d 92, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 912, 374 S.E.2d 92 (1988).

Testimony of defendant's adult daughters. — Trial court properly allowed two of defendant's adult daughters to testify that defendant had molested them when they were young girls. Ortiz v. State, 188 Ga. App. 532, 374 S.E.2d 92, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 912, 374 S.E.2d 92 (1988).

Application (Cont'd)

Testimony of defendant's spouse. — Defendant failed to make a strong showing that the trial court improperly relied upon defendant spouse's hearsay testimony in finding that defendant was a danger to the community and in sentencing defendant to 20 years to serve for defendant's first child molestation offense under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b); defendant failed to rebut the presumption that a trial judge sitting without a jury separated the legal evidence from facts not properly in evidence in reaching a decision. Ingram v. State, 262 Ga. App. 304, 585 S.E.2d 211 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient for the jury to find a defendant guilty of child molestation beyond a reasonable doubt as it was within the jury's province to reject the defendant's defense denying the crime with regard to the victim as well as with regard to the witnesses who testified as to similar transactions with the defendant. The testimony of the victim was corroborated by an investigator and a forensic interviewer, who testified as to what the victim had told had occurred; the victim's statements were corroborated by the sheriff's investigator; and the jury was entitled to consider the victim's out-of-court statements as substantive evidence under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Lamb v. State, 293 Ga. App. 65, 666 S.E.2d 462 (2008).

Trial court did not err in ruling that the state could compel the defendant's wife to testify even though she was not a witness to the specific act charged, child molestation, because the wife testified that she did not know that the defendant had been applying ointment to the victim, and that evidence was sufficiently relevant to the molestation acts charged against the defendant so that the wife's testimony was compellable under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-23(b). O'Neal v. State, 304 Ga. App. 548, 696 S.E.2d 490 (2010).

Evidence of defendant's sexual arousal. — Defendant's argument that there was no evidence of her sexual arousal was rejected where she had participated in the sex acts themselves, continually and frequently invited the boy to come to her home and business, picked the boy up at his home, permitted the boy to spend the night at her house, had constant and lengthy telephone conversations when apart, bestowed gifts on the boy, and when asked, the boy said that two or three times the defendant "would say it feels good." Branam v. State, 204 Ga. App. 205, 419 S.E.2d 86 (1992).

Although sexual gratification is an element of the crime, it could be inferred from the fact that the defendant exposed himself to a child that he had the intent to arouse or satisfy his sexual desires. Andrew v. State, 216 Ga. App. 427, 454 S.E.2d 542 (1995).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for directed verdict on the charge of aggravated child molestation, because the evidence was sufficient to allow a jury to find that defendant had the requisite intent for aggravated child molestation, as the fact that defendant expected a drug dealer to give defendant and defendant's child crack cocaine in exchange for their sexual favors did not exclude a finding that the defendant also intended the sexual acts to arouse or satisfy defendant or defendant's sexual desires. Odom v. State, 267 Ga. App. 701, 600 S.E.2d 759 (2004).

Admission of photographs depicting defendant and another male lying on bed kissing each other was harmless error since the admission did not contribute to the verdict in the case. Roose v. State, 182 Ga. App. 748, 356 S.E.2d 675 (1987).

Sexually explicit magazines found at defendant's home were admissible into evidence since the victim identified the magazines as the ones defendant showed the victim prior to molesting the victim. Henson v. State, 182 Ga. App. 617, 356 S.E.2d 556 (1987).

Regardless of whether magazines and tapes found at defendant's home corroborated the victim's testimony, they were admissible to show defendant's "state of mind and lustful disposition." Johnson v. State, 231 Ga. App. 823, 499 S.E.2d 145 (1998).

Sexually explicit material found in defendant's possession was not admissible where it was offered for the purpose of showing defendant's lustful disposition in general and was not linked to the crime charged, that is, sexual contact with a child. Frazier v. State, 241 Ga. App. 125, 524 S.E.2d 768 (1999).

In a prosecution for a sexual offense, evidence of sexual paraphernalia found in defendant's possession is inadmissible unless it shows defendant's lustful disposition toward the sexual activity with which defendant is charged or defendant's bent of mind to engage in that activity; a videotape showing defendant offering drugs to persons in exchange for oral sex was admissible in defendant prosecution for child molestation and aggravated child molestation where it was used to show defendant's usual course of conduct in procuring sexual activity and where the victim testified that defendant had offered the victim drugs in exchange for oral sex. Mooney v. State, 266 Ga. App. 587, 597 S.E.2d 589 (2004).

Victim's testimony regarding "hurt" did not require medical corroboration. — In a prosecution for aggravated child molestation, the victim's testimony that it hurt when the defendant molested her with his finger was sufficient to prove physical injury. It was not necessary for her testimony to be corroborated by medical evidence. Baker v. State, 228 Ga. App. 32, 491 S.E.2d 78 (1997).

Defendant's conviction of aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, was appropriate. The victim's testimony indicating the molestation was painful sufficed to prove the element of physical injury; in such case, medical evidence was not required to corroborate the victim's testimony. Mangham v. State, 291 Ga. App. 696, 662 S.E.2d 789 (2008).

Evidence of uncharged crime properly admitted. — In a child molestation prosecution under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), it was not error to admit evidence that the defendant placed the defendant's sexual organ "on" a child's genitals—the act charged in the indictment—simply because that evidence also indicated that some penetration may have occurred or that the defendant also may have touched the child's genitals, which were uncharged crimes as the evidence was relevant to prove the charged crime. Ortiz v. State, 295 Ga. App. 546, 672 S.E.2d 507 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0803, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 269 (Ga. 2009).

Evidence of child molestation. — Evidence that the defendant had gotten on the bed with 13-year-old child, lifted her dress, placed his private parts directly against the skin of the child's thighs and accomplished an orgasm amply supported the verdict that the defendant was guilty of child molestation. Van Pelt v. State, 87 Ga. App. 103, 73 S.E.2d 115 (1952).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize a trier of fact to find proof of appellant's guilt of child molestation beyond a reasonable doubt. Patterson v. State, 212 Ga. App. 257, 441 S.E.2d 414 (1994).

When the seven-year-old victim testified to touching of her vaginal area on several occasions, other witnesses testified to her having told them of this contact, and the state played a video of the victim discussing the facts underlying the charges which corroborated her trial testimony, the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for aggravated child molestation and child molestation. Chastain v. State, 236 Ga. App. 542, 512 S.E.2d 665 (1999).

Eight-year-old girl's testimony that defendant pulled her panties down and tried to put his penis inside her "private part" was sufficient to convict defendant of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), where the police officer who interviewed the girl testified that she specifically referred to her vagina as her "private part." Hayes v. State, 252 Ga. App. 897, 557 S.E.2d 468 (2001).

Child molestation conviction was affirmed upon evidence that defendant twice attempted to penetrate his daughter's anus with his penis; furthermore, her testimony did not require corroboration. Knight v. State, 258 Ga. App. 480, 574 S.E.2d 606 (2002).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of child molestation, even if much of the evidence was hearsay repetition of the child's out-of-court statements, as defendant failed to argue that the evidence did not satisfy the reliability criteria set forth in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Brown v. State, 267 Ga. App. 826, 600 S.E.2d 774 (2004).

Defendant's convictions for child molestation, attempted statutory rape, and burglary were supported because: (1) the defendant entered the 14-year-old victim's room through a window, uninvited; (2) the defendant told the victim to push the victim's bed against the door; (3) the defendant removed the victim's underwear and the defendant's own pants and laid on top of the victim, but the victim prevented the defendant from penetrating the victim; (4) the defendant fondled the victim's breasts and touched the victim's nipples; and (5) on a prior occasion, defendant made the victim touch the defendant's genitals with the victim's hand. Leapfrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Jury could have inferred from defendant's actions in rubbing the genitals of an eight-year-old victim and kissing the victim's face that the defendant acted with intent to arouse or satisfy the defendant's sexual desires; inconsistencies in the victim's testimony did not render the evidence insufficient to support defendant's conviction of child molestation. Duvall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 143, 614 S.E.2d 234 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy and aggravated child molestation where the child testified that the defendant made the child perform oral sex and penetrated the child anally, and the record showed opportunity, consistent allegations by the victim to multiple parties, and deception by the defendant when asked about the charged offenses during a polygraph examination. Guzman v. State, 273 Ga. App. 819, 616 S.E.2d 142 (2005).

Evidence supported the defendant's child molestation conviction when: (1) the defendant's 15-year-old grandchild testified that defendant molested the child in the defendant's home and in the defendant's pickup truck between the time the child was in kindergarten until about the time the child was in the sixth grade by fondling and inserting the defendant's finger into the child; (2) a physician testified that the physician found physical evidence that was consistent with penetration and sexual abuse; (3) an older grandchild testified that the older grandchild was molested by the defendant 25 years ago; and (4) evidence was presented that the defendant molested the defendant's five-year-old great-grandchild. Delk v. State, 274 Ga. App. 261, 619 S.E.2d 310 (2005).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 because the nine-year-old victim testified that defendant touched the victim improperly and inserted the defendant's genitals into the victim, and a physician who examined the victim testified that the victim exhibited signs of subjection to repeated sexual contact. Alvarez v. State, 276 Ga. App. 105, 622 S.E.2d 453 (2005).

Convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and statutory rape were upheld as: (1) sufficient evidence was presented, via the three victims' testimony, to support the convictions; (2) testimony from one of the defendant's other children concerning similar transactions committed against the child was properly admitted in order to show the defendant's bent of mind and lustful disposition towards the defendant's own children; and (3) the defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective. McCoy v. State, 278 Ga. App. 492, 629 S.E.2d 493 (2006).

Convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation were supported by sufficient evidence since the four minor victims testified about various sexual acts that the defendant had committed against them, including touching their genitals with the defendant's fingers, mouth, genitals, and a vibrator; three of the children told a school counselor about the sexual abuse, and all four victims told a Department of Family and Children Services case manager how the defendant had sexually molested them. Clements v. State, 279 Ga. App. 773, 632 S.E.2d 702 (2006).

Child molestation and aggravated child molestation convictions were upheld because: (1) sufficient evidence established the reliability of a child's hearsay statement to the child's aunt, and said statement was supported by other evidence; (2) any claimed Brady violation was waived and did not entitle defendant to a new trial; (3) denial of defendant's motion for a mistrial was harmless error given the strong evidence supporting defendant's guilt; and (4) testimony from an unlicensed psychologist was admissible, as the mere fact that the state's expert witness was not a licensed psychologist did not affect the admissibility of said testimony. Nelson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 859, 632 S.E.2d 749 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation and two counts of child molestation were supported by sufficient evidence, including the child victim's testimony that the defendant licked the victim's genitals, and masturbated in front of the victim twice; additionally, a videotape of the victim's interview by a case coordinator was played for the jury, and a detective testified regarding another interview of the victim, each describing acts of molestation by the defendant. Berman v. State, 279 Ga. App. 867, 632 S.E.2d 757 (2006).

Testimony presented by an 11-year-old child victim as to the defendant's act of oral sodomy, which was corroborated by the outcry witnesses and a doctor who examined the victim, was sufficient to permit the jury to find the defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation. Frankmann v. State, 281 Ga. App. 1, 635 S.E.2d 272 (2006).

Although one conviction against the defendant for aggravated child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), was sustained because it was based on sufficient evidence of his ongoing sexual conduct against one of the minor daughters, another conviction on the same charge had to be reversed because there was no evidence to establish venue; the reversed charge was based on the defendant's having kissed one of the daughters on the lips, but there was no evidence that established when or when the incident occurred and the conduct was not ongoing. Cardenas v. State, 282 Ga. App. 473, 638 S.E.2d 866 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a defendant's convictions on two counts of aggravated child molestation, although the defendant denied the allegations and numerous witnesses testified on the defendant's behalf; viewed in support of the verdict, there was evidence that the defendant and the 15-year-old victim had a relationship that began with romantic feelings on the victim's part toward the defendant, progressed to kissing and petting, and finally led to sexual intercourse and oral sodomy on numerous occasions. Maynard v. State, 282 Ga. App. 598, 639 S.E.2d 389 (2006).

In a child molestation case, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict on two counts; a victim's statement that the defendant had touched her "chest" supported allegations that the defendant had touched her "breast," and allegations that the defendant had touched a victim's vagina were supported by the victim's statement that the defendant had touched "all my private stuff" and her pointing between her legs to indicate where the defendant had touched her. Cherry v. State, 283 Ga. App. 700, 642 S.E.2d 369 (2007).

Trial court's admission of the defendant's actions towards a victim during a night when she was visiting his daughter and sleeping at their home were properly admitted without notice and a hearing under Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3, as all of the actions were part of the res gestae of the defendant's child molestation crime, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, that resulted from his exposure of his penis to the victim; evidence of a prior difficulty between the defendant and the victim that occurred a week prior to the criminal incident was also properly admitted without notice and a hearing, as the evidence was admissible to show the defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind in committing the act against the victim which resulted in the charge. Hammontree v. State, 283 Ga. App. 736, 642 S.E.2d 412 (2007).

Rational trier of fact could have found defendant guilty of child molestation against two victims beyond a reasonable doubt; defendant inserted a smooth, hard, pudding-covered object that one victim said felt like a finger into the victim's mouth seven times, and the other victim testified that the victim "heard a zipper," and defendant then touched the victim's lips with an unknown object. Ayers v.

State, 286 Ga. App. 898, 650 S.E.2d 370 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 117 (Ga. 2008).

In defendant's conviction for child molestation, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for directed verdict of acquittal as sufficient evidence existed based on testimony of the child victim's parent, who testified as to discovery of defendant on top of the victim; further evidence in support of defendant's conviction included the child's videotaped police interviews describing what happened. Lopez v. State, 291 Ga. App. 210, 661 S.E.2d 618 (2008).

Child molestation conviction was supported by sufficient evidence that during the middle of the night the defendant entered the bedroom where the 10-year-old victim was staying, laid down beside and behind the victim, rubbed the victim's back until the defendant's hand went down the victim's pants, pulled up the victim's pajama top, rubbed the victim's stomach area until the defendant's hand went under the victim's waistband and began toward the victim's private area, and only stopped when the victim demanded the defendant do so, at which time the defendant admitted the wrongfulness of the actions; a jury could have found such actions immoral and indecent and done with the intent to sexually arouse the defendant. Kolar v. State, 292 Ga. App. 623, 665 S.E.2d 719 (2008).

Evidence that a defendant forced himself on one young child and had intercourse with the child and that the defendant disciplined that child and the child's two siblings by forcing the children to take their clothes off, whipping the children with a belt, and beating or choking the children was sufficient to convict the defendant of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), and cruelty to children, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70(b). Williams v. State, 293 Ga. App. 617, 668 S.E.2d 21 (2008).

Victim's trial testimony and evidence about the victim's outcry established that the defendant had the victim touch the defendant's sex organ and that the defendant ejaculated on the victim's face. This evidence authorized the jury to find the defendant guilty of two counts of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Stillwell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 805, 670 S.E.2d 452 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0493, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2009).

Evidence supported a conviction of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). The seven-year-old victim's testimony that the defendant showed the victim the defendant's "private part," corroborated by the testimony of witnesses to whom the child reported the incident soon thereafter was competent evidence, even though contradicted, to support the state's case. Brown v. State, 295 Ga. App. 542, 672 S.E.2d 514 (2009).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation, child molestation, and false imprisonment with regard to allegations that the defendant forced a romantic friend's minor child to perform oral sex on the defendant several times over a three year period, based on the testimony of the victim (which alone was sufficient), the videotaped forensic interview of the victim, the testimony of the police investigator and the victim's mother concerning what the victim told them, as well as the testimony of the victim's siblings, who were eyewitnesses to one incident. Further, the testimony of the victim that the defendant locked the victim in the house and would not let the victim leave supported the conviction on the false imprisonment charge. Finally, the trial court was not required to merge the defendant's false imprisonment and aggravated child molestation convictions since the false imprisonment and aggravated child molestation were proven by different acts. Metts v. State, 297 Ga. App. 330, 677 S.E.2d 377 (2009).

Evidence, including that defendant had access and opportunity to infect a victim at least two weeks prior to her exhibiting symptoms, and that the victim's immediate outcry was consistent with her statement to a doctor identifying defendant, and excluding the hypothesis that the victim's father was present prior to the onset of the victim's symptoms, was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A.

§ 16-6-4(c). Zuniga v. State, 300 Ga. App. 45, 684 S.E.2d 77 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0169, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 125 (Ga. 2010).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1), although the four-year-old victim testified at trial that the defendant had not done anything to the victim. The jury could believe the forensic evidence that the victim's DNA was under the defendant's fingernails and the child's videotaped statement. McIntyre v. State, 302 Ga. App. 778, 691 S.E.2d 663 (2010).

Victim, who was age eighteen at the time of trial, testified that between the ages of seven and fourteen, the defendant molested her, putting his hand and his penis into her vagina and touching her all over her body. This evidence supported the defendant's convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sexual battery. Wilson v. State, 304 Ga. App. 623, 697 S.E.2d 275 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support the jury's findings that the defendant committed the offense of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1), because the jury was authorized to infer that the defendant was kissing the victim on the mouth when the victim testified that they were kissing, and the evidence was sufficient to show that the defendant violated the statute prohibiting child molestation in at least two of the ways alleged in the indictment, which charged the defendant with kissing the victim on the mouth, exposing the defendant's privates to and having intercourse with the victim, who was under 16 years of age, with intent to arouse and satisfy their sexual desires; the defendant also arguably violated O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1) by "dirty dancing" with the victim, which the defendant admitted to doing while testifying in the defendant's own defense. Judice v. State, 308 Ga. App. 229, 707 S.E.2d 114 (2011).

Evidence part of res gestae. — Although the indictment alleged that the act of aggravated child molestation occurred when defendant "placed his mouth upon the genitalia of [the victim]," the other acts of sodomy were properly admitted as a part of the res gestae of defendant's continued sexual exploitation of the victim. Burton v. State, 212 Ga. App. 100, 441 S.E.2d 470 (1994).

Exposure to child constitutes child molestation. — When the evidence and all inferences therefrom demonstrated that the defendant exposed his penis on three separate occasions to three different female children under the age of 14 years in order to satisfy his own sexual desires, the evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of child molestation. Bentley v. State, 179 Ga. App. 287, 346 S.E.2d 98 (1986).

Evidence that defendant exposed his penis to the child victim was alone sufficient for conviction. Bowman v. State, 227 Ga. App. 598, 490 S.E.2d 163 (1997).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for child molestation since the victim observed the defendant put the defendant's hand on the defendant's genitals and begin disrobing, and the defendant acknowledged that the defendant touched the defendant's exposed genitals in the child's presence, though the defendant asserted the defendant was merely adjusting the defendant after using the bathroom; although the evidence showed that the defendant was unsuccessful in an attempt to coax the child to look at the defendant's exposed genitals, the defendant's conduct was rendered no less culpable by the victim's good judgment in turning the victim's head away. Arnold v. State, 249 Ga. App. 156, 545 S.E.2d 312 (2001).

Evidence from the four victims that the defendant on three separate occasions followed the victims home from school, talked to the victims about sex, and exposed himself to the victims, along with evidence of prior similar transactions committed by the defendant in two different states for the limited purpose of showing the defendant's intent, bent of mind, and course of conduct, was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of four counts of child molestation. Damare v. State, 257 Ga. App. 508, 571 S.E.2d 507 (2002).

Evidence that the 15-year-old victim was between 100 and 200 feet away from defendant's house when the victim saw defendant stand at the window with the defendant's hand on the defendant's genitals and making a jerking motion was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for child molestation. Rainey v. State, 261 Ga. App. 888, 584 S.E.2d 13 (2003).

Substantial evidence linked the defendant to a child molestation offense which occurred when a person entered a grocery store bathroom and inserted the person's genital's through a hole in a toilet stall partition while the eight-year-old victim was seated inside, including evidence that the victim, the victim's cousin, and the victim's parent saw the perpetrator leaving the store and heading towards a beer van, evidence that the defendant drove such a van with a beer logo, called at the store as part of the defendant's job, and that the defendant knew about the hole in the bathroom partition, the victim's description of the perpetrator as wearing an electronic device, and a detective's testimony that the defendant wore such a device as part of the defendant's job, the parent's identification of the defendant's shirt as that worn by the perpetrator, and the parent's identification of the defendant at trial; additionally, knowledge of the victim's age was not an element of the crime of child molestation, and the conviction was supported by sufficient evidence including the defendant's admission that the defendant was near the restroom, although the defendant denied entering the restroom, the victim's testimony that the perpetrator entered the bathroom after the victim went in, because the victim heard the door squeak as the door opened, heard footsteps, and this was the only time the victim heard the door open, and photographs showing the close proximity of the beer aisle to the restrooms, as well as photographs showing that the interior of the toilet stall was visible through the approximately 4-inch hole in the partition as well as under the partition, which was 16 or 18 inches from the floor. Bennett v. State, 279 Ga. App. 371, 631 S.E.2d 402 (2006).

Engaging in sexually explicit conversation with child. — Crime of child molestation cannot be committed when the only contact between the accused and the alleged victim was by telephone. Vines v. State, 269 Ga. 438, 499 S.E.2d 630 (1998).

Watching sexually explicit videotapes with child. — In a prosecution based on the defendant's forcing a minor to watch sexually explicit videotapes with the defendant, the state was not required to prove that the tapes were "obscene" and "harmful to minors" under definitions pertaining to the distribution of harmful materials to children. Additionally, the defendant's claimed First Amendment right to possess and view the tapes was not a defense. Stroeingen v. State, 226 Ga. App. 410, 486 S.E.2d 670 (1997).

An anatomically correct diagram representing the victim's body was relevant evidence and properly admitted into evidence. Pittman v. State, 178 Ga. App. 693, 344 S.E.2d 511 (1986).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — See Sprayberry v. State, 174 Ga. App. 574, 330 S.E.2d 731 (1985); Busby v. State, 174 Ga. App. 536, 330 S.E.2d 765 (1985); Kilgore v. State, 177 Ga. There was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had intercourse repeatedly with his 11-year-old stepdaughter (Count 1) and had committed an act of sodomy on her (Count 2) thereby authorizing a conviction of two counts of child molestation. Pegg v. State, 183 Ga. App. 668, 359 S.E.2d 678 (1987).

Evidence was sufficient to support the conviction of the defendant for molestation of his 14 year old daughter given the number of incidents, the defendant's act of soon thereafter masturbating, his warning to his daughter to keep the incidents quiet, and his statement to an investigator that he touched his daughter in order to determine if she had been the victim of sexual abuse by another man. McEntyre v. State, 247 Ga. App. 881, 545 S.E.2d 391 (2001).

Evidence was sufficient to support the conviction of defendant for aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) and one count of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c). Baker v. State, 252 Ga. App. 238, 555 S.E.2d 899 (2001).

Evidence that defendant masturbated in front of three victims, all under the age of 16, for defendant's own sexual gratification and that defendant fondled them or forced them to perform sex acts on him was sufficient to support the convictions against defendant for child molestation. Goins v. State, 257 Ga. App. 406, 571 S.E.2d 195 (2002).

Trial court's admission of recall evidence that defendant threatened a witness, a neighbor of the victims, when defendant was leaving the stand was not error; even if the admission of the recall testimony was in error, it was harmless as the evidence was overwhelming to support a conviction for child molestation, burglary, and criminal trespass since: (1) two victims and one mother of a victim, all with a sufficient opportunity to observe defendant, identified defendant in a pre-trial photographic lineup and at trial; (2) the neighbor also identified defendant;

(3) a victim and the neighbor knew defendant by first name preceding the incident; (4) a victim and the neighbor noticed defendant wearing the clothes discovered in a victim's home the night of the incident; and (5) the state presented evidence that defendant had committed similar acts previously. Rubi v. State, 258 Ga. App. 815, 575 S.E.2d 719 (2002).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction on two counts of aggravated child molestation, as it was enough for a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of having had the child victim perform sex acts on defendant's genitals with the victim's mouth and having performed sex acts on the child victim's vagina with defendant's mouth. Smith v. State, 259 Ga. App. 736, 578 S.E.2d 295 (2003).

Evidence supported the jury's decision rejecting defendant's claims of accident or mistake and a lack of criminal intent and supported defendant's child molestation conviction. Black v. State, 261 Ga. App. 263, 582 S.E.2d 213 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions on two counts of child molestation, where defendant engaged in sexual activity with a minor. Dowd v. State, 261 Ga. App. 306, 582 S.E.2d 235 (2003).

Testimony by the detective and the child that the child had recounted occasions on which defendant put the defendant's hands on the victim's genitals and other private parts, and that defendant had woken the victim up once by poking the defendant's private parts in the victim's behind, was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of child molestation by inserting an unknown object in the victim's rectum. Mayo v. State, 261 Ga. App. 314, 582 S.E.2d 482 (2003).

Victim's testimony that the victim had sexual intercourse with defendant, that the defendant placed the defendant's finger in the victim's genitals, placed the defendant's hand on the victim's genitals, placed the defendant's mouth on the victim's breast, and placed the defendant's mouth on the victim's mouth, established the offenses of aggravated sexual battery pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2, incest pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22, and child molestation. Falak v. State, 261 Ga. App. 404, 583 S.E.2d 146 (2003).

Evidence that defendant touched the victim inappropriately showed that the jury could have concluded that defendant was guilty of child molestation. Frazier v. State, 261 Ga. App. 508, 583 S.E.2d 188 (2003).

Conviction for child molestation by making a child touch defendant's genitals was upheld where force was shown through the victim's testimony that defendant was mean to the victim and the victim's siblings, kicked them, hit them in the head, and yelled a lot. Branesky v. State, 262 Ga. App. 33, 584 S.E.2d 669 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support a child molestation conviction where defendant's eight year old stepchild testified that defendant "put his private in my private," that the defendant moved the defendant's body while inside the child, that the defendant hurt the victim's "private," where the victim circled the appropriate places on anatomically correct drawings which were admitted into evidence, testified that defendant put the defendant's "private" in the victim's mouth on more than one occasion, where eventually the victim told the victim's parent, the victim's babysitter, and the victim's doctor about these events, and where a physical examination revealed redness and swelling around the victim's genitals, which, the physician testified, could have been caused by trauma. Torres v. State, 262 Ga. App. 309, 585 S.E.2d 228 (2003).

Although the defendant's stepchild and the child's friend had not reported the defendant's sexual acts involving them during an earlier welfare investigation and the stepchild only told of the sexual acts after the child's parent refused to let the child move in with the child's other biological parent, such went to the childrens' credibility, which was for the jury to determine, and the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for child molestation and statutory rape. Williams v. State, 263 Ga. App. 22, 587 S.E.2d 187 (2003).

After a 12-year-old child told the child's parent that defendant had just raped the child; hours after the alleged rape, a detective found defendant's checkbook in the abandoned house where the victim said the rape occurred, and a check had been written from the checkbook earlier that day; and a doctor who examined the victim within hours of the incident found abrasions and tenderness consistent with the victim's description of what had occurred, the appellate court found the evidence sufficient to support defendant's convictions of rape, statutory rape, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation. Weathersby v. State, 263 Ga. App. 341, 587 S.E.2d 836 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of child molestation even when the evidence consisted primarily of the victim's testimony and the statements of the victim's sibling; the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact, and the jury clearly resolved the conflicts against defendant. McGhee v. State, 263 Ga. App. 762, 589 S.E.2d 333 (2003).

Trial court correctly allowed three adults to testify about out-of-court statements which a four-year-old child made to them even though the child was unresponsive when the child was asked questions in court, and the appellate court found that the child's statements alleging that defendant placed the defendant's finger inside the child's genitals, when considered with evidence that the child had gonorrhea, and similar transaction evidence that defendant molested the defendant's own child, was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for child molestation and aggravated sexual battery. Bell v. State, 263 Ga. App. 894, 589 S.E.2d 653 (2003).

Victim's testimony, which was supported by statements the victim made to family, friends, and investigators regarding sexual acts the defendant committed upon the victim, together with the medical findings of the pediatrician who examined the victim were completely consistent with the victim's allegation of abuse by sexual intercourse; therefore, the evidence was more than sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of child molestation and aggravated child molestation. Wilkins v. State, 264 Ga. App. 524, 591 S.E.2d 445 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to overcome defendant's assertion that the defendant had no sexual contact with the 15 year old victim where: (1) defendant offered the 15-year-old victim a ride to the victim's house, but instead took the victim to the defendant's own home; (2) the victim was able to describe certain peculiarities of defendant's genitals and pubic area; (3) the jury was shown pictures that conformed to the victim's description; and (4) similar transaction evidence was introduced where a previous victim testified that defendant had sexually assaulted the victim in the victim's car after the victim gave the defendant a ride to the defendant's house. Taylor v. State, 264 Ga. App. 665, 592 S.E.2d 148 (2003).

Defendant's child's testimony on retrial that defendant had repeatedly touched child's breasts and genitals with defendant's hands, and that on one occasion defendant had touched child's genitals with defendant's mouth, was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions. Putnam v. State, 264 Ga. App. 810, 592 S.E.2d 462 (2003).

Child molestation and aggravated child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) and (c), respectively, were upheld based upon the evidence presented from the victim that defendant placed the defendant's finger into the victim's genitals and moved it around, causing the victim physical harm, and by touching the defendant's genitals on the victim's genitals; evidence of prior false accusations made by the victim, and a later recantation by the victim, did not render the evidence insufficient. Cheek v. State, 265 Ga. App. 15, 593 S.E.2d 55 (2003).

Child molestation and aggravated child molestation convictions were upheld where the trial court properly denied a defense motion for a continuance, fashioned an alternative remedy allowing defendant access to an alleged similar transaction witness' statement, and limited the state's ability to challenge it, and defendant failed to prove that defendant's trial counsel was ineffective. Joiner v. State, 265 Ga. App. 395, 593 S.E.2d 936 (2004).

Application (Cont'd)

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery and child molestation, even though the defendant was acquitted of rape, where the 13-year old victim testified that the defendant pulled off the victim's shorts and forced the defendant's genitals into the victim's genitals despite the victim's protests. The jury was entitled to believe the victim's testimony in whole or in part, and it could have concluded that the defendant placed the defendant's genitals on the victim's genitals (as alleged in the child molestation indictment), but that no penetration occurred, so there was no rape. Dorsey v. State, 265 Ga. App. 597, 595 S.E.2d 106 (2004).

Evidence supporting the finding that defendant penetrated the victim's genitals, causing physical injury, was sufficient to sustain convictions for child molestation and aggravated child molestation. Sailor v. State, 265 Ga. App. 645, 595 S.E.2d 335 (2004).

Aggravated child molestation, child molestation, enticing a child for indecent purposes, and aggravated sodomy convictions were all supported by sufficient evidence provided by the victims detailing the inappropriate touching and anal penetration committed by defendant, and confirmed by the examining experts. Wilkerson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 585, 600 S.E.2d 677 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of child molestation where: (1) the victim testified that defendant inappropriately touched the victim, and showed the victim rented and "home-made" pornographic movies to teach the victim about sex; (2) a social services worker testified that the child drew the body parts defendant touched on a "gingerbread drawing," and said that defendant and defendant's love interest acted out what was on the pornographic videos in front of the child; (3) a psychologist testified that the evaluation of the child was consistent with possible sexual abuse; and (4) an investigator testified that defendant, in a signed statement, admitted the inappropriate touching and showing of the pornographic movies to the child.

Brown v. State, 267 Ga. App. 826, 600 S.E.2d 774 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a child molestation conviction where the seven-year-old child of defendant's step-sibling testified that defendant came into the victim's room while the victim was sleeping, pulled down the victim's underwear, and rubbed soap on the victim's genitals, where the victim also told police in a prior statement that the victim thought that defendant put the defendant's finger inside the victim's genitals, where the victim described the incident to the victim's parent, the victim's grandparent, and later a social worker in a taped interview, and where, when the parent first confronted defendant, the defendant acted nonchalantly in the face of the accusations, rather than being surprised or defensive. Holloway v. State, 268 Ga. App. 300, 601 S.E.2d 753 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support child molestation convictions where the child's parent found defendant, naked, with the child's head in the defendant's lap, and in testimony and taped interviews played at trial, the 10-year-old child victim said that defendant, inter alia, had the victim place the victim's hand on the defendant's genitals, tried to put the defendant's genitals in the victim's "privates" while they were clothed, held the victim and moved the victim up and down the defendant's body between the defendant's legs, and tried to put the defendant's genitals in the victim's mouth. Duncan v. State, 269 Ga. App. 4, 602 S.E.2d 908 (2004).

Convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation were affirmed where the four-year-old child victim told several people that defendant had touched or inserted defendant's fingers in the child's genitals, and a doctor's examination found indications that someone inserted their fingers into the victim's genitals. Howard v. State, 268 Ga. App. 558, 602 S.E.2d 295 (2004).

Evidence that the defendant bathed a victim without the victim's parent's knowledge, photographed the victim in the nude without the parent's knowledge, masturbated with a victim's underwear, and placed nude photos of the victim between pages of a pornographic magazine was sufficient to support a child molestation conviction. Phillips v. State, 269 Ga. App. 619, 604 S.E.2d 520 (2004).

When a victim testified that defendant locked the victim in the defendant's bedroom, threw the victim onto the defendant's bed, placed the defendant's genitals on the victim's "bottom," and made "moving" motions, and told a police officer, who testified, that defendant grabbed the victim's buttocks immediately before this incident, and a nurse testified that a medical examination of the victim revealed injuries consistent with the victim's allegations, the evidence was sufficient to allow a jury to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of both aggravated child molestation, as to the first incident, and child molestation, as to grabbing the victim's buttocks, and further allowed the jury to find that defendant committed these acts for the defendant's own sexual arousal. Payne v. State, 269 Ga. App. 662, 605 S.E.2d 75 (2004).

Sufficient evidence, including testimony from the child victim identifying defendant's vehicle, evidence of defendant's DNA matching that of the victim and expert testimony that the frequency of such occurrence was approximately one in two billion in the Caucasian population, and similar transaction evidence, supported defendant's kidnapping with bodily injury, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, and first-degree cruelty to children convictions. Morita v. State, 270 Ga. App. 372, 606 S.E.2d 595 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation, which involved an act of sodomy, by placing the defendant's genitals in the victim's anus because the victim testified that the defendant "put the defendant's private in [the victim's] butt." Neal v. State, 271 Ga. App. 283, 609 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for child molestation by touching the victim's genitals with the defendant's hand because the victim testified that defendant pulled down the victim's underwear and touched the victim between the victim's legs in the victim's "private area" with the defendant's mouth, genitals, and finger. Neal v. State, 271 Ga. App. 283, 609 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for child molestation by touching a child's anus with defendant's genitals because the child testified that defendant "put his private in [the child's] butt." Neal v. State, 271 Ga. App. 283, 609 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for child molestation by causing a child to touch the defendant's genitals because the child testified that defendant told the child to touch the defendant's genitals and placed the child's hand on it. Neal v. State, 271 Ga. App. 283, 609 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for child molestation by causing a child to touch defendant's genitals because a child testified that defendant made the child touch [defendant's] "private." Neal v. State, 271 Ga. App. 283, 609 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Victim's testimony that the defendant touched the victim's genitals, alone, supported the defendant's conviction for child molestation; further, the victim's testimony was corroborated by the victim's outcry and by physical evidence of molestation. Howse v. State, 273 Ga. App. 252, 614 S.E.2d 869 (2005).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, statutory rape, and incest, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4, 16-6-4(c), 16-6-3, and 16-6-22, respectively, because defendant's step-child gave detailed testimony as to the continuing sexual conduct that defendant inflicted on the child over a period of years, as the testimony from just that witness was sufficient to support the convictions, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8; further, there was corroborative testimony from a friend of the step-child who witnessed at least one incident, and from an aunt who testified that the older step-child had sat in defendant's lap and that the defendant rubbed the older step-child's legs, which was properly admitted for purposes of corroboration, bent of mind, lustful disposition toward children, and motive. Lewis v. State, 275 Ga. App. 41, 619 S.E.2d 699 (2005).

Defendant's conviction of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), was supported by sufficient evidence, based on testimony by the child, who was under the age of 16 and was the defendant's step-child, that the defendant had fondled the child's breast, and other testimony offered at trial. Lugo v. State, 275 Ga. App. 354, 620 S.E.2d 591 (2005).

Evidence supported the defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation and aggravated sexual battery because: (1) the 11-year-old victim testified that the defendant put the defendant's hand on the victim's private part, put the defendant's finger in the victim's private part, put the defendant's mouth on the victim's private part, and put the victim's mouth on the defendant's private part, "he came, whatever you call it;" (2) when the prosecutor asked the victim whether by that the victim meant that "stuff came out of his private part," the victim responded yes; and (3) in a videotaped pretrial interview, the victim explained that the victim was using the term "private part" to mean penis or vagina. Maddox v. State, 275 Ga. App. 869, 622 S.E.2d 80 (2005).

Child victim's testimony and corroboration testimony by "outcry" witnesses were sufficient to find defendant guilty of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Rosser v. State, 276 Ga. App. 261, 623 S.E.2d 142 (2005).

Evidence supported a conviction for child molestation where: (1) the victim testified that the defendant touched the victim's genitals from the outside of the victim's clothing while the victim sat in front of the defendant on a four-wheeler; (2) another child testified that the defendant touched the child the same day; and (3) the jury did not believe the defendant's explanation that if the touching occurred, it was accidental. Collins v. State, 276 Ga. App. 358, 623 S.E.2d 192 (2005).

Evidence supported the defendant's conviction of child molestation and criminal attempt to commit child molestation because: (1) the nine-year-old victim testified that, on multiple occasions, the defendant fondled the victim's breasts and private parts; (2) the victim further testified that the defendant attempted to have the victim touch the defendant's genitals; and (3) the victim initially informed the victim's parent of the defendant's actions and shortly thereafter repeated the details of the incidents to a therapist and two child services agency case workers. Cook v. State, 276 Ga. App. 803, 625 S.E.2d 83 (2005).

Thirteen-year-old victim's testimony that when the victim was sleeping, defendant pulled down the victim's pants and underwear and performed oral sex on the victim, and that testimony was corroborated by defendant's love interest who observed the incident, was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), as there was sufficient evidence to establish that defendant committed "sodomy," as that term was defined under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a); accordingly, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a judgment of acquittal pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1. Steverson v. State, 276 Ga. App. 876, 625 S.E.2d 476 (2005).

Defendant's kissing of the eight-year-old victim and performance of oral sex on the victim, which was observed by the victim's parent upon the parent's return to the defendant's residence, was sufficient evidence to support a conviction for aggravated child molestation. Hines v. State, 277 Ga. App. 404, 626 S.E.2d 601 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) and (c), which was based on an act of sodomy, as whether the defendant's conduct in touching the victim's genitals with the defendant's mouth was an immoral or indecent act performed with the intent to arouse or satisfy the defendant's or the victim's sexual desires was a question within the jury's province. Lester v. State, 278 Ga. App. 247, 628 S.E.2d 674 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 because the three-year-old victim reported the abuse to numerous adults; testified at trial that the defendant touched the victim's private area with the defendant's finger, that the defendant would not stop when the victim asked the defendant to do so, and that the touching hurt; and the medical evidence showed that the victim had sustained an injury consistent with molestation. Iles v. State, 278 Ga. App. 895, 630 S.E.2d 148 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for child molestation was supported by sufficient evidence, including the testimony of the child victim, the defendant's stepchild, who was in the seventh grade at the time of trial, that the defendant molested the child when the child was in the third, fourth and fifth grades, that in the most recent incident, the defendant called the child into the defendant's bedroom and told the child they were going to have sex, that the child said they were not, and left the room, that the defendant went into the child's bedroom and wrestled with the child until they fell onto the bed, that the defendant pulled the child's clothing off and tried to insert the defendant's genitals into the child's genitals, but was only partially able to do so, and that there were other incidents in which the defendant had sex with the child or inserted the defendant's finger into the child's genitals; additionally, a doctor concluded that the child's injuries were consistent with partial penetration of the genitals, the child reported the most recent incident to a teacher, a social worker, and a police officer, and the child's videotaped statement was admitted into evidence. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. App. 241, 630 S.E.2d 853 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated child molestation since the child victim testified that when the child was five-years-old, defendant "put his private in my mouth and peed in it, and made me swallow it," since, among other witnesses, the child's father and stepmother testified about what the child told them about the incident, since a detective testified about an interview with the child about the incident, and since the state introduced a videotape of the interview into evidence and played it to the jury. Tyler v. State, 279 Ga. App. 809, 632 S.E.2d 716 (2006), cert. denied, 2006 Ga.

LEXIS 810 (Ga. 2006); overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Defendant's child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal as: (1) sufficient evidence presented by the victims and investigating witnesses, despite defendant's contrary testimony, supported the convictions; (2) sufficient similarities in the two charges supported their joinder for trial; and (3) no abuse of discretion resulted from the admission of two videotaped interviews of both victims. Milton v. State, 280 Ga. App. 179, 633 S.E.2d 606 (2006).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for child molestation as: (1) the victim testified that the defendant touched the victim on the victim's "private part"; (2) the victim reported the abuse to the victim's parent and the police; (3) any discrepancies in the victim's statements or contradictions in the evidence presented credibility questions for the jury to resolve; (4) Georgia law did not require corroboration of a child molestation victim's testimony; and (5) given that the allegations did not include penetration, the lack of medical evidence to corroborate the victim's molestation was not exculpatory. Tadic v. State, 281 Ga. App. 58, 635 S.E.2d 356 (2006).

Evidence that the defendant touched the defendant's grandchild in a sexual manner on several occasions, the defendant's admission to police that the defendant had fondled the grandchild, and the defendant's efforts to lure the grandchild into sexual situations with chocolate while attempting to secure the grandchild's silence sufficed to sustain the defendant's convictions of five counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Haynes v. State, 281 Ga. App. 81, 635 S.E.2d 370 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a sexual exploitation of children charge because the victims' testimony, although the testimony varied as to details, was consistent throughout that it was the defendant who touched the children and the defendant who took photographs of the children, and the interviewers stated that the girls did not appear to be coached; although one of the victims refused to testify at trial, the victim told a psychologist that the victim was afraid of the defendant, and the jury viewed the forensic interview of that victim and could make the jury's own determinations as to the victim's credibility. Vaughn v. State, 307 Ga. App. 754, 706 S.E.2d 137 (2011).

Evidence from a defendant's 12-year-old stepdaughter in the form of a statement to police that she felt the defendant pull down her pants and put his penis in her rear end, then felt liquid on her buttocks, while she pretended to remain asleep, was sufficient to convict the defendant of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), although the stepdaughter did not testify to all the details at trial. Hines v. State, 307 Ga. App. 807, 706 S.E.2d 156 (2011).

Because there was sufficient evidence, including the child victims' testimonies, that a defendant had the requisite intent and that he performed oral sex on the child victims, and put his penis in their mouths and on their anuses, the defendant was properly convicted of aggravated child molestation and child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. Sanders v. State, 308 Ga. App. 303, 707 S.E.2d 538 (2011).

There was competent evidence to support the defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), and child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1), because the victim's step-uncle and one of the forensic interviewers proffered evidence that the defendant sexually molested the victim pursuant to the Child Hearsay Act, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16; although the victim testified that the defendant touched the victim in a way that the victim did not like, the victim did not provide any details about those incidents, but both the step-uncle and the forensic interviewer testified that the victim disclosed that the defendant touched the victim's privates with the defendant's hand and the defendant's own privates and forced the victim to place the victim's mouth on the defendant's privates, and the jury resolved any credibility or inconsistency issues against the defendant. Westbrooks v. State, No.

A11A0167, 2011 Ga. App. LEXIS 347 (Apr. 21, 2011).

Evidence sufficient to sustain conviction. — Defendant's child molestation and aggravated child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal as supported by sufficient evidence taken from the victim's testimony; the victim's forensic interview and medical examination by a registered nurse; and similar transaction evidence showing defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind. Rodriguez v. State, 281 Ga. App. 129, 635 S.E.2d 402 (2006).

Despite allegations that: (1) the victim's testimony was contradicted by the victim's parent; and (2) the victim had a motive to lie about the defendant, the appeals court refused to disturb the jury's determination as to the evidence given the jury's province to resolve the conflicts in the evidence; hence, the defendant's cruelty to children and attempted aggravated and child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal. Chalker v. State, 281 Ga. App. 305, 635 S.E.2d 890 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation and sexual exploitation of children were supported by the evidence based on the testimony of two minor victims that they engaged in numerous acts of oral and anal sex with the defendant, their identification of themselves in numerous photographs and several videos taken from the defendant's computer files, which depicted them engaging in sexually explicit conduct, and the sexually explicit photographs and video recordings. Walthall v. State, 281 Ga. App. 434, 636 S.E.2d 126 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the convictions of enticing a child for indecent purposes under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5 and of three counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4; the victim and the victim's younger sister specifically testified that the defendant committed the acts described in the indictment, and other testimony corroborated this testimony. Mikell v. State, 281 Ga. App. 739, 637 S.E.2d 142 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), attempted aggravated sodomy under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 and 16-6-2(a), and statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(a); the victim testified that the defendant put the defendant's privates inside the victim's privates and attempted to put the defendant's privates in the victim's behind, and the nurse practitioner testified that the physical examination of the victim indicated injuries consistent with the victim's testimony. Anderson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 58, 637 S.E.2d 790 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of three separate counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) as there was sufficient identification testimony to convict; the victim testified that the victim knew the defendant, the victim referred to the perpetrator of the offenses by the defendant's first name, and the victim testified that the victim spent the summer with the defendant and others. Clark v. State, 282 Ga. App. 248, 638 S.E.2d 397 (2006).

Sufficient identification evidence supported the defendant's convictions of four counts of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b), three counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), and two counts of enticing a child for indecent purposes under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5; the victim testified that the victim knew the defendant, that the defendant and the victim's mother lived together, and that the perpetrator's name was the defendant's first name. Clark v. State, 282 Ga. App. 248, 638 S.E.2d 397 (2006).

Defendant's child molestation conviction was upheld on appeal as: (1) the defendant waived error as to the admission of the victim's statements at trial, including those made in a videotape; (2) the victim's statements contained in the videotape were evidence of prior difficulties, admissible without notice and without a pretrial hearing; (3) after the trial court agreed to give a curative instruction on the wife-beating evidence, counsel withdrew a request for such an instruction on grounds that it would focus too much attention on a very brief statement; and (4) trial counsel was not ineffective. Campbell v. State, 282 Ga. App. 854, 640 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Verdict convicting a defendant of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) was supported by sufficient evidence; viewed in the light most favorable to the verdict, the record showed that, after watching pornographic movies at the home of the six-year-old victim, the defendant penetrated the victim's vagina with a finger while the victim's parent was asleep on a couch. Pendley v. State, 283 Ga. App. 262, 641 S.E.2d 174 (2006).

Given the testimony provided by the victim about the repeated acts performed by and for the defendant over a period of months, the fact that the defendant was giving money to the victim's cousin as an incentive not to tell anyone about the acts, and evidence that the defendant played a sexually explicit video for the victim and the victim's cousin, the defendant's child molestation and aggravated child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal. Hunter v. State, 282 Ga. App. 355, 638 S.E.2d 804 (2006).

Defendant's aggravated child molestation and aggravated sodomy convictions were upheld on appeal as supported by sufficient evidence including: (1) the testimony from both victims, which was corroborated by an investigator and a treating doctor; and (2) similar transaction evidence of the defendant's oral and anal molestation of other minor siblings, which was introduced for the purpose of showing a course of conduct, intent, and bent of mind toward sexual behavior with young relatives, and not to impugn the defendant's character. Chauncey v. State, 283 Ga. App. 217, 641 S.E.2d 229 (2007).

Because sufficient evidence was supplied via the testimony from the child victim, and the witnesses who corroborated said testimony, to support the defendant's aggravated sexual battery and child molestation convictions, despite any alleged inconsistencies, the convictions were upheld as was the denial of the defendant's motions for an acquittal and a new trial. Lilly v. State, 285 Ga. App. 427, 646 S.E.2d 512 (2007).

Trial court upheld the defendant's statutory rape and child molestation convictions despite a challenge to the date-range period relating to the child molestation charge as sufficient evidence from the victim, which was supported by both the victim's mother and an examining nurse, supported the conviction; further, the defendant admitted to the victim's mother that sexual intercourse with the victim had occurred before. Northern v. State, 285 Ga. App. 303, 645 S.E.2d 701 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions of child molestation, kidnapping with bodily injury, kidnapping, and aggravated assault, when the defendant, who lived with an ex-girlfriend and her teenage daughter, called them into a bedroom and bound the ex-girlfriend's arms, legs, and mouth with duct tape, threatened the women with a hatchet, and led the daughter to another bedroom where the defendant duct-taped her hands and feet and forced her to have intercourse with him. Phillips v. State, 284 Ga. App. 683, 644 S.E.2d 535 (2007).

Given the testimony offered by both victims and their father, and a taped telephone conversation between the father and the defendant, during which the defendant asked the father to apologize to the victims, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's two child molestation convictions. Head v. State, 285 Ga. App. 471, 646 S.E.2d 699 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of three counts of aggravated child molestation when the victim, who was five or six when the incidents occurred, stated that the defendant had put his penis into the victim's "behind" or "bottom"; any inconsistency in the victim's statements was a matter of credibility for the jury to resolve. Prudhomme v. State, 285 Ga. App. 662, 647 S.E.2d 343 (2007).

Given the evidence supporting the defendant's aggravated child molestation conviction including that: (1) the defendant sodomized the victim; (2) witnesses knew that the defendant had an interest in performing oral sex; and (3) the trial court properly limited the defendant's cross-examination to only relevant matters, the conviction was upheld on appeal and the trial court did not err in denying the defendant a new trial. Gaines v. State, 285 Ga. App. 654, 647 S.E.2d 357 (2007).

On appeal from a child molestation and aggravated child molestation conviction, the testimony and statements from the child victim and the witnesses who testified to the acts was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to determine that the defendant committed an indecent and immoral act by touching the victim's vaginal area with the intent to arouse the defendant's sexual desires; in addition, the testimony of an examining doctor was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to determine that the defendant physically injured the victim. Cortez v. State, 286 Ga. App. 170, 648 S.E.2d 488 (2007).

Because the evidence supported the finding that the defendant attempted to penetrate the 13-year-old victim's vagina with his penis, touched her breasts with his hands and his mouth, and told her to perform oral sex on him, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict as to each of his convictions for aggravated child molestation and for child molestation; it was not necessary that the victim's evidence be corroborated, and her credibility was a matter for the jury. Foster v. State, 286 Ga. App. 250, 649 S.E.2d 322 (2007), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 875 (Ga. 2007).

Because sufficient evidence as to venue and of the remaining elements of the crime was presented by the child victim, via both recorded and trial testimony, the child molestation convictions entered against both the defendants under both O.C.G.A. §§ 16-2-20 and 16-6-4 were upheld on appeal. Newman v. State, 286 Ga. App. 353, 649 S.E.2d 349 (2007).

In a child molestation case involving four teenagers, the inconsistencies in the teenagers' statements did not mean that there was insufficient evidence to support the defendant's convictions; contradictions or issues of credibility were for the jury to resolve. Kirat v. State, 286 Ga. App. 650, 649 S.E.2d 786 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 745 (Ga. 2007).

There was sufficient evidence, including testimony by the victim and similar transaction evidence involving incidents that took place years before, to support a defendant's convictions of sexual battery, child molestation, and aggravated child molestation; the victim, who testified to various acts the defendant performed upon the victim, stated when confronted with inconsistencies in the victim's testimony that the victim had been on drugs during that period because the victim was trying to forget everything, and any inconsistencies in the victim's testimony were for the jury to resolve. Boynton v. State, 287 Ga. App. 778, 653 S.E.2d 110 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support a defendant's convictions of child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sexual battery after the five-year-old victim stated that the defendant had made her perform an oral act on his penis, that he had put his mouth on her vagina, and that he had stuck his finger in her vagina and anus; furthermore, the victim's seven-year-old sibling reported that the defendant had been lying on a bed in the same room as the victim, that the defendant had chased the sibling into the sibling's room and told the sibling to stay in bed until that night, and that the sibling saw "something bad" happen to the victim. Herring v. State, 288 Ga. App. 169, 653 S.E.2d 494 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 205 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support a defendant's conviction of two counts of aggravated child molestation with regard to the defendant's daughter and the daughter's friend. The daughter, who was interviewed after a teacher became concerned about a poem she had written, told social services personnel that the defendant had sodomized her several years before by inserting his penis inside of her anus; her disclosures led to questioning of the friend, who had not had contact with the daughter for years, who began to cry immediately after the subject of molestation was broached, and who stated that the defendant had inserted his penis inside her anus while she was attending a slumber party at the daughter's house. French v. State, 288 Ga. App. 775, 655 S.E.2d 224 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of child molestation and aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and of aggravated sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b) because the state provided testimony corroborating the victim's statements that when the defendant was supposed to babysit the victim after school, defendant regularly abused the victim at the victim's home, in the defendant's car, in a park, in a vacant house, and two motels by touching the victim, making the victim perform oral sex on the defendant, by sodomizing the victim, by making the victim wear thong underwear, and by taking cellular telephone photographs of the victim naked. Woods v. State, 304 Ga. App. 403, 696 S.E.2d 411 (2010).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 because the victim's video interview with Department of Family and Children Services case workers, which was played for the jury, and the victim's testimony in court were sufficient to permit a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt; the interview showed the victim saying that the defendant touched the victim where the defendant was not supposed to, and at the trial, the victim was sometimes hesitant to testify but did ultimately testify that the defendant touched the victim between the victim's legs with the defendant's hand. Kay v. State, 306 Ga. App. 666, 703 S.E.2d 108 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to find the defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) because the victim testified that the abuse was long term and ongoing, that the abuse had escalated to include oral sex, and that the defendant had generally done the same thing on each occasion. Arnold v. State, 305 Ga. App. 45, 699 S.E.2d 77 (2010).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, enticing a child for an indecent purpose, kidnapping, false imprisonment, cruelty to children, burglary, theft by taking, and striking an unattended vehicle were authorized because at trial the defendant was positively identified as the perpetrator of the crimes; a nurse and doctor testified that the victim had an injury that was consistent with the molestation allegation, and a videotape depicted the defendant driving a maintenance truck that the defendant did not have authority to take. Bearfield v. State, 305 Ga. App. 37, 699 S.E.2d 363 (2010).

Application (Cont'd)

Evidence from a defendant's own statement that the defendant touched the fourteen-year-old victim's vagina and became aroused was sufficient to convict the defendant of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1). Goss v. State, 305 Ga. App. 497, 699 S.E.2d 819 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for molesting a four-year-old girl because the victim testified that the defendant had touched her on her "front private" under her clothes, and defendant admitted doing the same thing; inconsistencies in their testimony merely presented an issue for the jury, not the court of appeals. Fife v. State, 306 Ga. App. 425, 702 S.E.2d 454 (2010).

Kissing as sufficient evidence of molestation. — Evidence supported a defendant's child molestation conviction as the defendant was a 51-year old man and kissed an unrelated 10-year-old boy on the mouth while the two were swimming together within the context of a relationship involving other acts of molestation; the jury could infer that the defendant kissed the boy with the intent to gratify the defendant's sexual desires. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Victims do not need technical or statutory language to describe acts. — Evidence was sufficient to support convictions of child molestation and cruelty to children under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4 and 16-5-70. From the testimony of the four-year-old victim, the victim's parent, and an interviewer, the jury was authorized to find that the victim used the word "tutu" to refer to the child's vaginal area, where the child said the defendant touched the child; it was completely unreasonable to require witnesses to describe the acts constituting the commission of a crime in statutory or technical language in order to prove the commission of such acts. Brookshire v. State, 288 Ga. App. 766, 655 S.E.2d 332 (2007).

On appeal from convictions for two counts of child molestation and two counts of aggravated sodomy, no reason for reversal was found because: (1) sufficient evidence was presented in support of the convictions, making the trial court's denial of an acquittal proper; (2) the time that counsel had to prepare for trial was adequate, thus diminishing the need for a continuance; (3) the defendant's statement to police was not made upon a promise of reward or hope of benefit; and (4) the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for counsel's alleged deficiencies. Robbins v. State, 290 Ga. App. 323, 659 S.E.2d 628 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions of aggravated child molestation and of child molestation when an eight-year-old child's grandparent discovered the defendant and the child in bed together and when the child told her parent, a physician, and others that the defendant had touched her vagina. Lancaster v. State, 291 Ga. App. 347, 662 S.E.2d 181 (2008).

Defendant's conviction for child molestation was supported by sufficient evidence based on the testimony of the victim, defendant's child, and other witnesses, which confirmed the child's allegations that defendant had assaulted the child, and it was for the jury to determine the child's credibility. Crane v. State, 291 Ga. App. 414, 662 S.E.2d 225 (2008).

In defendant's trial for child molestation, despite no physical evidence to corroborate the allegations, there was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction based on the testimony of the victim, the victim's taped statement, the testimony of the victim's siblings, and defendant's confession. Simmons v. State, 291 Ga. App. 642, 662 S.E.2d 660 (2008).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(2), aggravated sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2, and two counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) with regard to his daughter, who was seven at the time. The victim testified that the defendant touched her vagina with his hand and insisted that she touch his penis with her hand; a detective testified that the victim told him that the defendant touched her on her vagina with his hands, fingers, and penis and that he asked her to touch his penis; another detective, who conducted a videotaped interview with the victim, testified that the victim told her that she had sex with the defendant on multiple occasions; in the interview, the victim stated that the defendant pulled her pants down and put his penis inside her vagina and that he put his hand inside her vagina; and the victim's mother and grandmother testified to similar statements by the victim. Osborne v. State, 291 Ga. App. 711, 662 S.E.2d 792 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 783 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation when the victim stated that beginning when the victim was nine, the defendant repeatedly forced the victim to have anal sex and oral sex and a physician found that the victim lacked virtually all anal tone, which was consistent with multiple episodes of anal intercourse. Mullis v. State, 292 Ga. App. 218, 664 S.E.2d 271 (2008).

Testimony of a 10-year-old child that the defendant had put the defendant's mouth, tongue, and penis on the child's privates, and testimony from the child's parent that the parent saw the defendant, nude, engaged in sexual conduct near the child, was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c). Linto v. State, 292 Ga. App. 482, 664 S.E.2d 856 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to allow the jury to convict defendant of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), based on an allegation in the indictment that defendant touched the victim on the victim's buttocks because the victim testified that the defendant touched the victim "everywhere" on the victim's body. Dew v. State, 292 Ga. App. 631, 665 S.E.2d 715 (2008).

As there was evidence that the defendant repeatedly touched a nine-year old child on the child's genitalia, the jury was authorized to infer that the defendant committed these acts with the requisite criminal intent, and defendant was properly convicted of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Whitaker v. State, 293 Ga. App. 427, 667 S.E.2d 202 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for child molestation based on a witness testifying that as the witness was in a shopping center parking lot, the witness observed the defendant perform an immoral and indecent act upon the child victim by kissing the child and placing the defendant's hands into the child's pants. Milan v. State, 293 Ga. App. 398, 667 S.E.2d 267 (2008).

Evidence that the defendant grabbed a 15-year-old's head and pushed the child's head toward the defendant's genitals, put the defendant's hands on the victim's genital area and breast, and the defendant's mouth on the victim's breast, was sufficient to convict the defendant of child molestation and attempted aggravated child molestation. Murray v. State, 293 Ga. App. 516, 667 S.E.2d 382 (2008).

Victim's trial testimony and evidence about the victim's outcry established that the defendant placed the defendant's sex organ in the victim's mouth. This evidence authorized the jury to find the defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c). Stillwell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 805, 670 S.E.2d 452 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0493, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2009).

Sufficient evidence was presented to convict a defendant of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b) based on the 13-year-old victim's testimony that the defendant forced vaginal intercourse upon the victim, causing her vagina to bleed from lacerations to the hymen; the testimony of the defendant's girlfriend, who walked in on the defendant leaning the defendant's body between the victim's naked thighs while on a couch; and the testimony of the nurse who examined the victim and found the lacerations, which indicated sexual penetration. Bell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 779, 670 S.E.2d 476 (2008).

Sufficient evidence supported an adjudication of delinquency for committing aggravated child molestation even though no corroborative biological evidence was found on the victim's clothing; competent evidence was presented by testimony of the six-year-old victim and a physician, who found redness around the victim's anus that indicated trauma, that appellant juvenile committed an act of anal sodomy. In the Interest of M.B., 295 Ga. App. 51, 670 S.E.2d 881 (2008).

Application (Cont'd)

With regard to a defendant's convictions on one count of enticing a child for indecent purposes, ten counts of child molestation, one count of aggravated child molestation, and three counts of cruelty to children in the first degree, regarding actions the defendant took toward the three children and what the children were forced to do to each other by gunpoint while the defendant was a babysitter for the children, the state proved the charged offenses beyond a reasonable doubt based on the testimony of the three victims and the victims' videotaped forensic interviews. It was within the province of the jury to disbelieve the defendant's testimony that the defendant did not commit the charged crimes. Sullivan v. State, 295 Ga. App. 145, 671 S.E.2d 180 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0624, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 215 (Ga. 2009).

Testimony that the defendant attempted to have intercourse with three children, exposed the defendant's nude body to one child, fondled one child's chest and another's genital area; and the defendant's statement that the defendant needed help to stop doing "things to kids" was sufficient to convict the defendant of three counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Inman v. State, 295 Ga. App. 461, 671 S.E.2d 921 (2009).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for rape, incest, statutory rape, and child molestation against one of the defendant's children and a stepchild based on the defendant's repeated engagement in sexual intercourse with the children at various times while one was 12 to 16 years old and the other was 16 to 19 years old, and evidence of a letter threatening suicide on the defendant's part and apologizing for the actions against the children was also introduced against the defendant. However, the conviction on the charge of aggravated sexual battery against the stepchild was in error and required reversal since the state failed to introduce direct or circumstantial evidence sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant violated O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2 by penetrating that child's sexual organ with a replica penis. Connelly v. State, 295 Ga. App. 765, 673 S.E.2d 274 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0892, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 260 (Ga. 2009).

There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) based on the 11-year-old victim's testimony regarding the defendant's actions while the victim was sleeping over at the victim's aunt's home; the defendant's claim that the defendant did not molest the victim was within the jury's credibility evaluation. Lucas v. State, 295 Ga. App. 831, 673 S.E.2d 309 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient for any rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of child molestation. A child testified at trial that the defendant touched the child "in the private" with the defendant's hand and with a towel after the child told the defendant that the child was itching; the child told the defendant to stop, but the defendant refused. Pareja v. State, 295 Ga. App. 871, 673 S.E.2d 343, aff'd, 286 Ga. 117, 686 S.E.2d 232 (2009).

Sufficient evidence existed to convict a defendant of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) because a jury could infer that the defendant had open and intentional sexual intercourse with the minor victim's father in the presence of the victim based on the testimony of the victim that, while the father, who was nude, was performing oral sex on the victim, the defendant, who was not wearing shorts or underwear, came into the bedroom, got on top of the father, and moved up and down. Mote v. State, 297 Ga. App. 13, 676 S.E.2d 379 (2009).

Sufficient evidence existed to support a defendant's convictions for incest and child molestation with regard to actions the defendant took toward the defendant's own children based on the children's recorded police interviews that were played for the jury; the testimony from a licensed clinical social worker who was admitted as an expert in child sexual abuse and the abuse's effect on children; and the testimony of the pediatric nurse practitioner who examined the victims and stated that, although the victims' physical exams were normal, the results were consistent with their reports of sexual abuse. The victims' testimony, standing alone, would have been sufficient to support the convictions; therefore, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Hubert v. State, 297 Ga. App. 71, 676 S.E.2d 436 (2009).

Sufficient evidence supported a defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) and three counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) because the 13-year-old victim testified that, after repeatedly injecting the victim with methamphetamine, the defendant engaged in various sexual acts with the victim, including fondling the victim's breasts and engaging in intercourse; the defendant's roommate testified that the roommate saw the victim perform oral sex on the defendant. Moe v. State, 297 Ga. App. 270, 676 S.E.2d 887 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), and sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2, because, in addition to the victim's testimony that the defendant had engaged in sexual intercourse and sodomy with the victim, there was physical evidence that supported the victim's testimony that the victim had been abused; the jury was authorized to believe the testimony of the victim as well as the expert witness who testified on behalf of the state. Roberts v. State, 297 Ga. App. 672, 678 S.E.2d 137 (2009).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for a new trial and convicted the defendant on one count of child molestation with regard to the defendant's conduct of allowing an adult to have sexual intercourse with a 15-year-old victim at the defendant's home as the defendant failed to meet the burden of establishing ineffective assistance of counsel. Carrie v. State, 298 Ga. App. 55, 679 S.E.2d 30 (2009).

Convictions of aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), and child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), were supported by sufficient evidence under circumstances in which the nine-year-old victim testified that the defendant inserted the defendant's penis into the victim's vagina and bottom on more than one occasion, that the defendant also touched the victim's vagina, bottom, and breasts with the defendant's hands, the victim's breasts with the defendant's tongue, and, while in the victim's presence, touched the defendant's own penis with the defendant's hands; the victim made similar allegations to the detective who investigated the case, describing sexual acts performed by the defendant and stating that the defendant "would shake" or "choke" the defendant's penis in the victim's presence. A medical examination of the victim's anus revealed trauma consistent with recent penetration and the victim's 13-year old brother testified that the brother caught the defendant unzipping the defendant's pants near the victim, who was on hands and knees on the floor, naked from the waist down. Garduno v. State, 299 Ga. App. 32, 682 S.E.2d 145 (2009).

Whether the defendant's conduct in putting the defendant's private part in a child's face was an immoral or indecent act performed with the intent to arouse or satisfy the defendant's sexual desires was a question for the jury. Therefore, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of child molestation. Hobbs v. State, 299 Ga. App. 521, 682 S.E.2d 697 (2009).

Although a 15-year-old victim did not use technical language, her description of oral sex with defendant, a 30-year-old male, was sufficient to support a conviction of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Flewelling v. State, 300 Ga. App. 505, 685 S.E.2d 758 (2009).

Child testified that, when the child was 11, the defendant forced the child by threats to engage in sex on multiple occasions; the child's parents testified as to the child's outcry statements to the parents. This evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of three counts of aggravated child molestation. Hibbs v. State, 299 Ga. App. 723, 683 S.E.2d 329 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0056, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 159 (Ga. 2010).

Prisoner's sufficiency of the evidence claim under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 was properly denied because, although the jury rejected testimony of forcible rape by a 13-year-old victim, the jury was free to accept testimony stating that the victim had sexual intercourse and performed oral sex on the prisoner and proof of consent was not required under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-2, 16-6-3, and 16-6-4 for the offenses of statutory rape and aggravated child molestation. Dorsey v. Burnette, No. 08-13700, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 5771 (11th Cir. Mar. 18, 2009) (Unpublished).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of child molestation under O.C.G.A. 16-6-4(a) because the 15-year-old victim admitted to having sex with defendant on several occasions and that, on several of those occasions, the defendant had supplied the victim with crack cocaine, which they had smoked together. Watson v. State, 302 Ga. App. 619, 691 S.E.2d 378, cert. denied, U.S. , 131 S. Ct. 328, 178 L. Ed. 2d 213 (2010).

Testimony of the victim's mother and therapist, a videotape of the victim describing the incident, and the fact that defendant fled the country after a police interview provided sufficient evidence for a child molestation conviction. Waters v. State, 303 Ga. App. 187, 692 S.E.2d 802 (2010).

Evidence was insufficient to support a conviction under an indictment which charged that defendant molested the victim when defendant "fondled" the victim's genitals because the victim never testified that defendant fondled or even touched the victim's genitals. Woods v. State, 244 Ga. App. 359, 535 S.E.2d 524 (2000).

Evidence did not support a conviction for aggravated child molestation where there was no evidence that the defendant placed the defendant's mouth on the victim's genitals, as alleged in the indictment. Jackson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 26, 619 S.E.2d 294 (2005).

Corroboration and sufficiency of evidence. — Testimony of the victim, corroborated by evidence of her outcry to her grandmother, and the direct evidence of eyewitnesses was sufficient to authorize the jury's verdict that defendant committed child molestation beyond a reasonable doubt. Turner v. State, 223 Ga. App. 448, 477 S.E.2d 847 (1996).

No fatal variance. — Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for child molestation as there was not a fatal variance between the indictment and the evidence presented at trial since there was evidence that the defendant molested the victim when the defendant's teenaged child baby-sat the victim in June 2004, even though there was also evidence that the defendant's teenaged child only baby-sat for the victim once, in 2002. Tadic v. State, 281 Ga. App. 58, 635 S.E.2d 356 (2006).

Defendant argued that a child molestation indictment charged the defendant with touching a child's genital area with the defendant's sexual organ, but the evidence showed that the touching was with the defendant's hand. The difference between the defendant's touching the child's private area with the defendant's hand as opposed to the defendant's private part was not a fatal variance as it would not have misled the defendant in defending against the molestation charge. Flores v. State, 298 Ga. App. 574, 680 S.E.2d 609 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1796, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 27 (Ga. 2010).

Testimony by the defendant's child that the defendant put the defendant's sex organ "in my face" in a specific month and year authorized the jury to find that the defendant committed child molestation in the required time frame. Therefore, there was no fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof at trial. Hobbs v. State, 299 Ga. App. 521, 682 S.E.2d 697 (2009).

There was no fatal variance between an indictment charging the defendant with child molestation and the proof at trial because although the evidence differed somewhat from the allegation in the indictment, there was no material difference; the law does not require a showing that the victim was touched beneath his or her clothing, and the issue of whether the touching was sexual in nature is for the jury to decide. Kay v. State, 306 Ga. App. 666, 703 S.E.2d 108 (2010).

Failure to preserve lab sample evidence did not warrant dismissal. —

Trial court's order dismissing an indictment charging the defendant with rape, incest, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation on grounds that the state improperly failed to preserve lab samples taken from the victim was reversed because the defendant failed to show that the failure was the result of bad faith on the part of the state or the police, and the value of the sample to the defendant was only potentially exculpatory. State v. Brady, 287 Ga. App. 626, 653 S.E.2d 72 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of aggravated child molestation involving oral sodomy and child molestation. Deyton v. State, 182 Ga. App. 73, 354 S.E.2d 625 (1987).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of aiding and abetting child molestation. — Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion under O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1(a) for an acquittal in the defendant's trial for aiding and abetting a housemate in committing acts of aggravated child molestation against the defendant's children, because there was ample evidence that the defendant acquiesced in and encouraged the acts of child molestation by forcing the children to sleep in the same room with the housemate although the children objected. Valentine v. State, 301 Ga. App. 630, 689 S.E.2d 76 (2009).

Reliability hearing required. — Defendant's child molestation conviction was reversed as given that the child victim was three-years-old, that the victim gave inconsistent statements, that the victim might have been coached by defendant's estranged spouse, that law enforcement was involved in the child's interviews, that 75 out-of-court hearsay statements of the child were introduced by the state, and that the child hearsay statements formed the bulk of the evidence against defendant, a pretrial Gregg hearing on the reliability of the statements was required under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Ferreri v. State, 267 Ga. App. 811, 600 S.E.2d 793 (2004).

Proof of victim's age. — In a prosecution for child molestation, even though the state was not restricted to the dates stated in the indictment, it was nevertheless required to prove that the victim was under the age of 16, because that was an essential element of the crime. Terrell v. State, 245 Ga. App. 291, 536 S.E.2d 528 (2000).

Directed verdict of acquittal unwarranted as: (1) the credibility of the child victim and any conflicts in the trial testimony were matters solely within the province of the jury to decide; (2) physical findings were not required to corroborate the charges of child molestation, aggravated sexual battery, and aggravated child molestation; and (3) the victim's testimony alone was sufficient to authorize the jury to find the defendant guilty of the crimes charged under the standard of Jackson v. Virginia. Hutchinson v. State, 287 Ga. App. 415, 651 S.E.2d 523 (2007).

Defense counsel not ineffective in child molestation case. — In a child molestation prosecution, the defendant contended defendant's trial counsel was deficient in failing to attack the validity of the search warrant used to obtain a DNA sample as the supporting affidavit failed to disclose that the victims' outcry was made to their parent shortly after the parent lost primary custody of the parent's other child. This claim failed because even if this evidence had been included, the victim's statement to the affiant that the defendant fathered the victim's child was sufficient to support the warrant. Farris v. State, 293 Ga. App. 674, 667 S.E.2d 676 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for false imprisonment, rape, and aggravated child molestation arising from allegations that the defendant sexually molested a 9-year-old relative, the defendant failed to meet the burden of establishing that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel as to trial counsel's alleged failure to proffer the defendant's anticipated testimony regarding the victim's alleged sexual behavior as the term "hot" as used by the defendant regarding the victim was explained by the officer who interviewed the defendant as meaning that the defendant believed that the victim was sexually active with another, thus, the jury was made aware of what the defendant meant by the term, as opposed to being left with the mistaken impression that the defendant found the victim sexually attractive. Additionally, the defendant failed to establish any prejudice with regard to the contention that trial counsel provided ineffective assistance by not objecting or moving for a mistrial regarding a fellow inmate's testimony and a letter regarding the defendant's future dangerousness as the court found that the record showed that trial counsel did object and was overruled. Furlow v. State, 297 Ga. App. 375, 677 S.E.2d 412 (2009).

Defendant was properly sentenced for both sodomy and child molestation since the indictment as drawn charged defendant specifically with two separate and different sexual acts, and the child molestation was proved without any reference to the act of sodomy and was factually and legally distinct from sodomy. Garrett v. State, 188 Ga. App. 176, 372 S.E.2d 506 (1988).

Sentencing for child molestation and rape. — In defendant's trial on charges of child molestation and statutory rape, the trial court did not err by imposing separate sentences for each crime because the evidence showed that defendant committed both crimes on multiple occasions. Little v. State, 260 Ga. App. 87, 579 S.E.2d 84 (2003).

Defendant's sentence to 20-year concurrent terms (10 to serve, 10 on probation), each, for aggravated child molestation and child molestation fell within the sentencing ranges under former O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 for crimes committed between October 1992 and December 1994 and was not void. Reynolds v. State, 272 Ga. App. 91, 611 S.E.2d 750 (2005).

Mandatory child molestation sentence. — Mandatory sentence for aggravated child molestation of 10 years without parole pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4(d)(1) and 17-10-6.1 was not cruel and unusual punishment as applied to the defendant, despite the fact that the defendant was 18 years old at the time of the act and the victim was only 4 years younger. Widner v. State, 280 Ga. 675, 631 S.E.2d 675 (2006).

Chemical castration sentence unauthorized. — Sentence of chemical castration was unauthorized for the defendant's convictions of, inter alia, rape and aggravated sodomy. Johnson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 341, 634 S.E.2d 134 (2006).

Sentence violated minimum sentencing requirements. — After defendant was convicted on three counts of aggravated child molestation and nine counts of child molestation, the trial court erred as a matter of law in merging the three aggravated child molestation convictions into the child molestation convictions, thereby violating the minimum sentencing requirements under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1(a). Graham v. State, 239 Ga. App. 429, 521 S.E.2d 249 (1999).

Sentence not excessive. — Sentence of defendant who was convicted of a single count of child molestation to 14 years confinement to serve seven years and the remainder probated was not excessive. Jones v. State, 247 Ga. App. 43, 543 S.E.2d 72 (2000).

Trial court's imposition of a 10-year probated sentence on a count of aggravated child molestation was null and void; O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(d)(1) imposed a 10-year minimum sentence for the offense, and under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1(b), because the offense was a serious violent felony, no portion of the 10-year sentence was to be probated. Priest v. State, 281 Ga. App. 89, 635 S.E.2d 377 (2006).

Increased sentence on retrial was not vindictive. — Defendant's increased sentence after a retrial for child molestation was not vindictive because the sentencing court's rationale, which was the defendant's additional convictions of child molestation in a similar pattern of aligning himself with a young girl's mother, rebutted any presumption of vindictiveness, and the sentence was within the allowable range pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b)(1). Frazier v. State, 302 Ga. App. 346, 691 S.E.2d 247 (2010).

Crimes involving different conduct did not merge for sentencing. — Crimes contained in counts one and two did not merge for sentencing purposes because they involved different conduct, specifically, count one required proof that defendant kissed and sucked on the victim's neck, while count two required proof that defendant wrestled with the victim on a bed and removed the victim's underwear. Lunsford v. State, 260 Ga. App. 818, 581 S.E.2d 638 (2003).

Probation condition vague and overly broad. — Probation condition requiring defendant not to be in the presence of a child under the age of 18 without the immediate presence of a supervisor could be applied to prohibit the defendant from shopping at any store without an approved supervisor, and as written could be applied in ways not related to sentencing objectives and therefore that condition of probation is vacated. Tyler v. State, 279 Ga. App. 809, 632 S.E.2d 716 (2006), cert. denied, 2006 Ga. LEXIS 810 (Ga. 2006); overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Failure to advise defendant of requirement to register as sex offender.

— Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea to two counts of child molestation because the defendant's trial counsel failed to advise the defendant that entering a plea of guilty to child molestation would necessitate that the defendant comply with the requirements of the state's sex offender registry statute, O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12; the defendant was subject to the sex offender registration requirements at the time that the defendant entered into defendant's plea, the terms of the sex offender registry statute were succinct, clear, and explicit in setting forth the consequences of defendant's guilty plea, and defendant's trial counsel could have readily determined that defendant was required to register and conveyed that information to the defendant. Taylor v. State, 304 Ga. App. 878, 698 S.E.2d 384 (2010).

Good cause shown for extended period of supervised probation. — Trial court did not err in sentencing the defendant to more than two years' supervised probation after a jury convicted the defendant of child molestation because the defendant's sentence to an extended period of supervised probation was pronounced after notice and hearing and for good cause shown as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-10-1(a)(2); the "good cause shown" was to protect children. O'Neal v. State, 304 Ga. App. 548, 696 S.E.2d 490 (2010).

Sentences were well within statutory limits of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b), and there was no reversible error because defendant voluntarily pled guilty to three counts of child molestation and there was no evidence that the trial court considered a presentence report or a medical exam in aggravation of punishment. Lynn v. State, 270 Ga. App. 867, 608 S.E.2d 542 (2004).

Motion for new trial properly denied.

— On appeal from two child molestation convictions, the defendant was properly denied a new trial because the admission of privileged testimony was not erroneous, and trial counsel was not ineffective by: (a) ignoring a consent order barring the state from introducing any written or oral admissions or statements the defendant made before and after a polygraph examination; (b) failing to assert the attorney-client privilege with respect to a polygraph expert's testimony; and (c) failing to adequately prepare a second polygraph expert who testified for the defense at trial; in fact, (1) counsel neither ignored the consent order nor performed deficiently when stipulating to the admission of the polygraph results; and (2) even assuming that counsel was deficient in failing to consult the defendant regarding the attorney-client privilege, the defendant failed to show a reasonable probability that the result would have been different in the absence of the second expert's cumulative testimony. Adesida v. State, 280 Ga. App. 764, 634 S.E.2d 880 (2006).

On retrial on one count of child molestation and two counts of aggravated child molestation, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial on grounds that trial counsel was ineffective in admitting notes generated by a forensic evaluator who interviewed the child victim as the defendant had previously been found guilty in the first trial in which the notes were not introduced. Mewborn v. State, 285 Ga. App. 187, 645 S.E.2d 669 (2007).

On appeal from a conviction for two counts of aggravated child molestation, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant a new trial as no abuse of discretion resulted in excluding evidence that one of the victims made prior false accusations of sexual abuse against an older cousin because such presented a credibility issue for the trial court to resolve in analyzing whether there was a reasonable probability of falsity in the accusation. Roberts v. State, 286 Ga. App. 346, 648 S.E.2d 783 (2007).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial on appeal from the defendant's convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation because: (1) venue was adequately shown by the testimony of a single witness; (2) the defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective by failing to prepare for trial, investigate the case, subpoena important documents, interview key witnesses, and object to damaging testimony; and (3) the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for counsel's alleged shortcomings. Brooks v. State, 286 Ga. App. 209, 648 S.E.2d 724 (2007).

Admission of challenged evidence deemed harmless error. — In a prosecution against the defendant for child molestation, enticing a child for indecent purposes, and exhibiting pornography to a minor, even if the appeals court assumed that the word "catheter" should have been redacted from what the defendant apparently conceded was an otherwise relevant list of items found in a search, the trial court's failure to do so was harmless error because it was highly improbable that such failure contributed to the verdict given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt. Goldey v. State, 289 Ga. App. 198, 656 S.E.2d 549 (2008).

In a child molestation prosecution, the victim's therapist testified that a caseworker told the therapist that the victim had made an outcry alleging sexual abuse by the defendant and that the victim's sibling may also have been abused. If admission of this testimony was error, the admission was harmless because the evidence was cumulative of evidence that had been properly admitted. Ortiz v. State, 295 Ga. App. 546, 672 S.E.2d 507 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0803, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 269 (Ga. 2009).

Expert Testimony

Error in admitting social worker's opinion not harmless. — It was error to allow a social service worker to testify as to the social worker's opinion that the child had been molested, and such error could not be said to be harmless, where weight of evidence was not overwhelming and did not include medical or psychological testimony, and where charges were not made until long after the alleged incident and were then raised in the context of an acrimonious divorce action. Putnam v. State, 231 Ga. App. 190, 498 S.E.2d 340 (1998).

Doctor may testify on "ultimate issue". — Even if a doctor who had examined victim and testifies as an expert expresses an opinion on the "ultimate issue," i.e., the molestation of the child, such an opinion is appropriate in child molestation cases and there is no constitutional error which is reviewable, absent contemporaneous objection. Pegg v. State, 183 Ga. App. 668, 359 S.E.2d 678 (1987).

Psychologist's testimony regarding victim's credibility. — Trial court properly admitted testimony from a psychologist who treated an 11-year-old child after the child told several people that the victim's step-parent had molested the victim despite the child's previous episodes of lying. Horne v. State, 262 Ga. App. 604, 586 S.E.2d 13 (2003).

Unlicensed psychologist. — Testimony by an unlicensed psychologist was not rendered inadmissible in a prosecution for child molestation and attempted child molestation, based solely on a witness's lack of licensure, as Georgia law carved out an exception to the licensing requirements for those witnesses who, like the state's expert, were practicing under supervision in order to obtain a license. Nelson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 859, 632 S.E.2d 749 (2006).

Registered nurse. — In a prosecution on charges of both child molestation and aggravated child molestation, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in allowing an examining registered nurse to give an opinion that a child sex abuse victim's injuries were consistent with ones caused by penetration by a finger when, prior to testifying, the nurse outlined the relevant background, completion of a sexual assault nurse examiner's program and advanced pediatric training under the supervision of a doctor involved in child abuse cases, and training and experience in performing numerous pelvic examinations on child abuse victims. Rodriguez v. State, 281 Ga. App. 129, 635 S.E.2d 402 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion in limine to exclude a nurse's testimony, stating that the victim's normal physical examination was consistent with claims of molestation, as the nurse simply testified that the victim's physical examination results were consistent with the allegations, and as such was a permissible expression of the expert's opinion. Noe v. State, 287 Ga. App. 728, 652 S.E.2d 620 (2007).

Expert testimony regarding child sexual abuse accommodation syndrome is properly admissible in appropriate cases. However, the state may not utilize the child sexual abuse profile as an affirmative weapon unless the defendant has placed defendant's own character in issue or raised some defense to which the syndrome is relevant. Allison v. State, 179 Ga. App. 303, 346 S.E.2d 380 (1986), rev'd on other grounds, 256 Ga. 851, 353 S.E.2d 805 (1987).

Testimony concerning the "child sexual abuse accommodation syndrome" was properly admitted, even though the existence of such a syndrome had not been established to a verifiable scientific certainty, since testimony concerning this syndrome has been permitted in numerous other child abuse cases in this state. Rolader v. State, 202 Ga. App. 134, 413 S.E.2d 752 (1991), cert. denied, 202 Ga. App. 907, 413 S.E.2d 752 (1992).

Ineffective assistance in failure to object to psychologist's testimony. — Defense counsel's failure to object to a psychologist's testimony that the psychologist's evaluation strongly suggested that the victim was sexually abused as alleged was ineffective assistance because, considered in context, the testimony improperly amounted to a factual conclusion regarding whether the child was sexually abused and whether the defendant was the abuser; the expert's opinion was not superfluous, but usurped the jury's authority. It was highly probable that the failure to object to this testimony contributed to the guilty verdict. Pointer v. State, 299 Ga. App. 249, 682 S.E.2d 362 (2009).

Counsel not ineffective for failing to object to child therapist's testimony. — Defendant did not establish that defendant's trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to a child therapist's testimony on the ground that the testimony bolstered the child molestation victim's accusations because the therapist never expressly stated that the therapist believed the victim had been abused; although the defendant argued that the therapist's testimony was subject to that interpretation, the testimony the defendant cited did not address the ultimate issue before the jury or bolster the victim's credibility. O'Neal v. State, 304 Ga. App. 548, 696 S.E.2d 490 (2010).

Merging With Other Offenses

Relation to rape and aggravated sodomy. — Jury's verdict of not guilty of rape was not repugnant to and inconsistent with the verdicts of guilty for aggravated sodomy and child molestation. The elements of each of the three crimes charged are different, and the conduct related to each, as evidenced in this case, was also different, distinct, and separate. Hill v. State, 183 Ga. App. 654, 360 S.E.2d 4 (1987).

Not lesser included offense of aggravated sodomy. — Child molestation is not a lesser included offense of aggravated sodomy, either as a matter of law, under either O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(2) or O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a), or as a matter of fact. Hill v. State, 183 Ga. App. 654, 360 S.E.2d 4 (1987).

Defendant convicted on child molestation despite sodomy acquittal. — Defendant's acquittal on a separate charge of aggravated sodomy did not require that defendant should also have been acquitted on an aggravated child molestation charge. Because there was evidence of physical injury to support the aggravated molestation charge, it was not necessary to prove sodomy to maintain the aggravated child molestation conviction. Baker v. State, 228 Ga. App. 32, 491 S.E.2d 78 (1997).

Offense of aggravated sodomy did not factually merge into the offense of child molestation, when one of the offenses was established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to prove the other. LeGallienne v. State, 180 Ga. App. 108, 348 S.E.2d 471 (1986).

Merging With Other Offenses (Cont'd)

Child molestation in connection with the fondling of the victim's vagina did not merge with aggravated sodomy charges based on two acts of oral sex, where the acts of sodomy were not used to establish the child molestation charge. Pressley v. State, 197 Ga. App. 270, 398 S.E.2d 268 (1990).

Child molestation and aggravated sodomy are legally distinct and when the indictment for each offense is based on separate and distinct acts, the offenses do not merge. Vest v. State, 211 Ga. App. 882, 440 S.E.2d 765 (1994).

Charge of two crimes for same described act. — When the evidence showed that, at least as to two of the three victims, the defendant committed the illegal act charged in each pair of counts aggravated sodomy and aggravated child molestation on more than one occasion, but the indictment did not charge the defendant with separate and distinct acts but merely charged the defendant with two different crimes for the same described act, the defendant should have been sentenced for only one of the two offenses for which the defendant was convicted as to each of the three victims. This case is distinguishable from those cases in which the court has upheld the conviction and sentencing for separate crimes and rejected the defendant's claim of merger because the indictment charged the defendant with multiple, distinct offenses. Lewis v. State, 205 Ga. App. 29, 421 S.E.2d 339 (1992).

Defendant's aggravated child molestation charge merged with the aggravated sodomy charge, as both were based on the same act of sodomy; while defendant committed multiple acts of anal sodomy against one of the victims, the indictment did not charge defendant with separate and distinct acts but merely charged defendant with two different crimes for the same described act. Wilkerston v. State, 267 Ga. App. 585, 600 S.E.2d 677 (2004).

Aggravated sodomy count of the indictment in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2 should have merged into the aggravated child molestation count in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 as both alleged that the defendant had the victim perform oral sex on the defendant. Howard v. State, 281 Ga. App. 797, 637 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Child molestation and sexual battery. — Even though the facts in an indictment for child molestation were sufficient to charge the lesser offense of sexual battery, where the evidence presented demanded a finding of child molestation or nothing, the trial court did not err by refusing to charge on sexual battery. Strickland v. State, 223 Ga. App. 772, 479 S.E.2d 125 (1996).

Sexual battery can be a lesser included offense of child molestation in particular cases where the facts alleged in the indictment for child molestation also include all of the elements of sexual battery. Strickland v. State, 223 Ga. App. 772, 479 S.E.2d 125 (1996).

When the jury by the jury's verdict finds the defendant guilty of multiple offenses arising from the same conduct, the court does not err in convicting and sentencing the defendant for the greater offense after merging the lesser offenses into it. Conviction of both sexual battery and child molestation justified the merger of the battery offense into the molestation offense because the molestation offense was the greater offense; a defendant was properly sentenced as defendant's sentence was within the maximum prescribed for a first offense of child molestation. Dorsey v. State, 265 Ga. App. 597, 595 S.E.2d 106 (2004).

Because the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of either sexual battery, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), or child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, the trial court was authorized to merge the lesser offense of sexual battery into the greater offense of child molestation. Webb v. State, 270 Ga. App. 817, 608 S.E.2d 241 (2004).

Since the question whether defendant committed sexual battery was not posed by the evidence presented, the trial court did not err when the court refused to charge the jury on sexual battery as a lesser included offense of child molestation. Walker v. State, 279 Ga. App. 749, 632 S.E.2d 482 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery by touching the victim's genital area merged with the defendant's conviction for child molestation by touching the victim's vagina, and the defendant's conviction for sexual battery by touching the victim's breast merged with the defendant's conviction for child molestation by touching the victim's breast. Therefore, the trial court erred in imposing a separate sentence on the jury's verdicts on these sexual battery counts. Gunn v. State, 300 Ga. App. 229, 684 S.E.2d 380 (2009).

Trial court properly declined to merge a sexual battery offense, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), into a child molestation offense under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. The sexual battery was established by evidence that the defendant touched the 15-year-old victim's breasts, and the child molestation proof included evidence of the separate act of touching the victim's stomach. Haynes v. State, 302 Ga. App. 296, 690 S.E.2d 925 (2010).

Child molestation and aggravated sexual battery. — Even though the defendant could be properly prosecuted for either crime, where the evidence shows a single act, the trial court erred in failing to merge the offenses for sentencing purposes. Shamsuddeen v. State, 255 Ga. App. 326, 565 S.E.2d 544 (2002).

Trial court properly refused to merge, for sentencing purposes, defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual battery and child molestation since the charged offense of aggravated sexual battery required proof of penetration, whereas the charged offense of child molestation did not. As a result, the separate acts were neither factually nor legally contained in the other respective count and, therefore, the offenses did not merge. Daniel v. State, 292 Ga. App. 560, 665 S.E.2d 696 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 891 (Ga. 2008).

Simple battery not lesser included offense. — Simple battery, as defined in O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23, is not a lesser crime included in the crime of child molestation as defined in O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. State v.

Stonaker, 236 Ga. 1, 222 S.E.2d 354, cert. denied, 429 U.S. 833, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 98 (1976).

Trial court's refusal to charge on simple battery as a lesser included offense of child molestation was not error, where the victim testified to defendant's commission of acts of fondling which, if believed by the jury, would clearly show that defendant had committed the crime of child molestation. Brooks v. State, 197 Ga. App. 194, 397 S.E.2d 622 (1990).

Child molestation and enticing child for indecent purposes. — When the appellant stands convicted under a two-count indictment charging the appellant with enticing a child for indecent purposes under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5 and child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, one crime is not included within the other as a matter of law. Williams v. State, 156 Ga. App. 481, 274 S.E.2d 826 (1980).

Child molestation and enticement are separate offenses, and the combination of attempt with child molestation does not bring it within the purview of enticement. Wittschien v. State, 259 Ga. 448, 383 S.E.2d 885 (1989).

Child molestation and enticement counts merged as a matter of fact where the enticement counts of the indictment specifically alleged that defendant enticed the child for the purpose of child molestation and, thus, in order to prove the enticement counts, the prosecution had to prove all the facts used to prove the child molestation counts. Wells v. State, 222 Ga. App. 587, 474 S.E.2d 764 (1996).

Child molestation and enticement are distinct and separate offenses that are not included within each other as a matter of law, as the offense of enticement has an element of asportation not found in the offense of child molestation. Veasey v. State, 234 Ga. App. 795, 507 S.E.2d 799 (1998).

Charges of child molestation and enticement did not merge as a matter of fact under the circumstances of the case since the acts which constituted enticement were separate from and completed before the acts which constituted molestation. Leon v. State, 237 Ga. App. 99, 513 S.E.2d 227 (1999).

Merging With Other Offenses (Cont'd)

State was not required to charge a defendant with child molestation in order to obtain a conviction for enticing a child for indecent purposes as those are two separate crimes involving different elements, and generally, enticement is completed before child molestation occurs. Jackson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 26, 619 S.E.2d 294 (2005).

Charges on lesser offenses of public indecency and contributing to delinquency of minor are not required where the uncontradicted evidence shows completion of the greater offense, child molestation. Morton v. State, 168 Ga. App. 18, 308 S.E.2d 41 (1983).

Child molestation as lesser included offense of rape. — Court's refusal to give defendant's requested charge on child molestation as a lesser included offense of rape was error requiring reversal of defendant's conviction for rape. Pruitt v. State, 258 Ga. 583, 373 S.E.2d 192 (1988), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1093, 110 S. Ct. 1170, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1072 (1990).

When the jury was only authorized to find defendant either guilty or not guilty of the rape charges and there was no evidence authorizing the jury to return a guilty verdict on child molestation as a lesser included offense of rape, the trial court did not err in refusing to give defendant's requested jury charge. Bailey v. State, 209 Ga. App. 390, 433 S.E.2d 610 (1993).

Child molestation and statutory rape offenses did not merge where they were separate legal offenses, and because the victim reported at least two separate acts of sexual intercourse with the victim's step-parent. McMillian v. State, 263 Ga. App. 782, 589 S.E.2d 335 (2003).

No merger if separate occasions. — When the defendant sexually assaulted the two-year old victim on at least two separate occasions, there were two separate legal offenses that did not merge as a matter of law for sentencing purposes. James v. State, 268 Ga. App. 851, 602 S.E.2d 854 (2004).

Defendant's conviction for child molestation by touching a child's anus with defendant's genitals and aggravated child molestation by placing defendant's genitals in the child's anus did not merge as the child testified that defendant put the defendant's "private" in the child's anus on four occasions. Neal v. State, 271 Ga. App. 283, 609 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Trial court properly refused to merge a defendant's convictions as the offenses of aggravated child molestation and sexual exploitation of children were separate legal offenses and did not merge as a matter of law; the offenses did not merge as a matter of fact as: (1) the defendant was charged with five separate acts of aggravated child molestation, each of which was based on different facts; (2) the 35 convictions of sexual exploitation of children were based on the distinct actions of the defendant creating 32 separate sexually explicit photographic or video images and distributing three other sexually explicit images over the Internet; and (3) the defendant's creation of sexually explicit images of several of the sex acts that constituted the basis for the aggravated child molestation charges were separate actions warranting a separate charge and conviction, as the offenses of aggravated child molestation were completed separately and independently of the defendant photographing or videotaping the acts. Walhall v. State, 281 Ga. App. 434, 636 S.E.2d 126 (2006).

Because the record contained sufficient evidence of multiple acts committed against the victim by the defendant for the trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of both aggravated child molestation and aggravated sodomy, the offenses did not merge as a matter of law or fact; thus, the evidence supporting one count was not "used up" in proving the other count. Forbes v. State, 284 Ga. App. 520, 644 S.E.2d 345 (2007).

Molestation counts did not factually merge. — Merger was not appropriate on counts eight, nine, and ten in the defendant's child molestation case: count eight accused the defendant of placing the defendant's penis against the genital area of the victim; count nine accused the defendant of having the victim lick the defendant's buttocks; and count ten accused the defendant of placing the defendant's hand on the genital area of the victim. The evidence in the record established that each of these counts were separate and distinct crimes that were completed before the defendant perpetrated the next, and therefore, the crimes did not factually merge. Sarratt v. State, 299 Ga. App. 568, 683 S.E.2d 10 (2009).

Lesser offense of cruelty to children did not merge into the greater offenses of rape and aggravated child molestation, where the facts that the victim was threatened and terrorized, that she screamed in pain, and that she continued to experience pain and discomfort and would suffer from the venereal diseases she contracted from defendant forever were not needed to prove the elements of rape and aggravated child molestation. Ranalli v. State, 197 Ga. App. 360, 398 S.E.2d 420 (1990).

Child molestation and attempted statutory rape. — Trial court did not err in merging an attempted statutory rape charge into a child molestation charge, instead of merging the child molestation counts into the attempted statutory rape count; the evidence establishing that defendant fondled the victim's breasts was not used up in proving that the defendant removed their clothing and attempted penetration; accordingly, three child molestation charges were not subject to merger with the attempted statutory rape count. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Trial court did not err in merging an attempted statutory rape charge into a child molestation charge as the state was required to prove the commission of an immoral or indecent act (removing the victim's and defendant's clothing), the victim's age was less than 16, and defendant's intent to arouse or satisfy his own or the child's sexual desires; thus, the state used up the evidence that defendant committed attempted statutory rape in establishing that he committed child molestation. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Statutory rape. — Conviction for child molestation merges into the crime of statutory rape and when there is a conviction for both the conviction and sentence for the former crime must be reversed. Coker v. State, 164 Ga. App. 493, 297 S.E.2d 68 (1982).

Trial court did not err in instructing the jury that it could return a verdict on child molestation, where defendant had been indicted for statutory rape and the evidence showed that child molestation was a lesser included offense of statutory rape as a matter of fact. Burgess v. State, 189 Ga. App. 790, 377 S.E.2d 543 (1989), aff'd, 194 Ga. App. 179, 390 S.E.2d 92 (1990).

Double jeopardy was not involved by a jury verdict finding the defendant guilty of rape and child molestation based on the same conduct where the trial court merged the two counts and entered a judgment of conviction and a sentence only on the rape count. Mackey v. State, 235 Ga. App. 209, 509 S.E.2d 68 (1998).

Trial court erred when it convicted defendant of child molestation because facts which were used to prove child molestation were the same facts which proved statutory rape, and the court should have merged the child molestation conviction with the statutory rape conviction. Dorsey v. State, 265 Ga. App. 404, 593 S.E.2d 945 (2004).

Guilty verdict entered against a defendant on a charge of statutory rape, and a not guilty verdict against that same defendant on a charge of child molestation, stemming from the same act of intercourse with the victim, were not mutually exclusive or inconsistent, as the fact that the jury acquitted defendant of the child molestation charge did not make the evidence of statutory rape any less sufficient; further, even if the acquittal was inconsistent with the conviction, the inconsistency could not be used as an avenue to challenge the conviction, since the inconsistent-verdict rule was abolished in Georgia. Perez-Hurtado v. State, 275 Ga. App. 162, 620 S.E.2d 435 (2005).

Defendant's conviction of aggravated child molestation was not based on the same conduct that would have supported a conviction for statutory rape, so the rule of lenity was inapplicable. Wilson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 459, 631 S.E.2d 391 (2006), cert. denied, 2006 Ga. LEXIS 1036 (Ga. 2006).

While an indictment did not charge the defendant with statutory rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3, the allegations of the indictment notified the defendant that statutory rape could have been considered a lesser included offense of the indicted crime of child molestation; since the defendant admitted that the defendant tried to place the defendant's genitals in the victim's genitals, and since the victim testified that "it hurt," a jury instruction on statutory rape as a lesser included offense of child molestation was proper. Stulb v. State, 279 Ga. App. 547, 631 S.E.2d 765 (2006).

Trial court properly denied defendant's request to have defendant's convictions for statutory rape and aggravated child molestation merged for sentencing purposes as the crimes were distinct offenses with different elements; testimony of the victim also authorized the jury to find that the crimes occurred on different occasions over a period of months, and therefore the crimes did not merge as a matter of either law or fact. Williams v. State, 291 Ga. App. 173, 661 S.E.2d 601 (2008).

Trial court did not err in refusing to merge a child molestation count with a statutory rape count because the evidence showed that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim on multiple occasions, and since the victim reported at least two separate acts of sexual intercourse, it could not be said that the convictions were based on the same conduct; therefore, a conviction and sentence could be authorized on both the child molestation charge and the statutory rape charge. Wilder v. State, 304 Ga. App. 891, 698 S.E.2d 374 (2010).

Child molestation and incest. — Defendant's child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, and incest in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 charges did not merge as a matter of law or fact because they were separate legal offenses and because the victim's testimony and other evidence showed that the victim suffered well over two separate acts of sexual intercourse and additional instances involving oral and anal sex with the defendant.

Allen v. State, 281 Ga. App. 294, 635 S.E.2d 884 (2006).

Appellant was not convicted twice for same conduct as matter of fact when the appellant was convicted of violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4 and 16-6-5. Williams v. State, 156 Ga. App. 481, 274 S.E.2d 826 (1980).

Jury Issues and Instructions

Whether touching is of sexual nature is a question for the jury. — When the defendant teacher's evidence was that the defendant's touching of minor students was not of a sexual nature, the issue was one for the jury to decide. Walsh v. State, 236 Ga. App. 558, 512 S.E.2d 408 (1999).

No claim of remaining juror confusion. — In a child molestation case, where the jury was only to convict for conduct in the way and manner alleged in the indictment, which was an act with intent to arouse the defendant, not the child, but the statute covers both alternatives, the jury was not permitted to convict defendant on the child's sexual desires where the jury was recharged on the law, the jury election not to return to the courtroom with further questions, as it was told it could do, undercut any claim of remaining juror confusion. Branan v. State, 204 Ga. App. 205, 419 S.E.2d 86 (1992).

Questions requiring prejudgment of case. — Trial court abused the court's discretion by prohibiting defense counsel from asking prospective jurors whether the prospective jurors had strong feelings about child molestation, and if those feelings would impair their judgment or make it difficult for the prospective jurors to judge the case; but, this error was harmless given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt regarding the numerous acts of sodomy that the defendant engaged in with the defendant's child, the scientific evidence which linked the defendant's DNA to the semen found in the victim's mouth, and the defendant's attempt to allude the authorities until the defendant was apprehended in Tennessee. Meeks v. State, 269 Ga. App. 836, 605 S.E.2d 428 (2004).

Charge to jury. — It was error for the court to charge the jury on O.C.G.A.

§ 16-6-4 in the statute's entirety since the indictment charged the defendant only with committing aggravated child molestation by committing sodomy. Perguson v. State, 221 Ga. App. 212, 470 S.E.2d 909 (1996).

Trial court did not err in reciting O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) in its entirety to the jury since the jury was informed of the exact offenses for which defendant had been charged and the court instructed the jury that defendant's guilt must be based upon the offenses as set forth in the indictment. Buice v. State, 239 Ga. App. 52, 520 S.E.2d 258 (1999), aff'd, 528 S.E.2d 788 (2000).

Because the trial court read the indictment to the jury, so that the jury was aware that the state alleged defendant caused physical injury to the victim, the court properly charged the jury by reading the portion of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 that applied in the case: causing physical injury to the child. Ceasar v. State, 239 Ga. App. 752, 521 S.E.2d 866 (1999).

Trial court properly limited the elements of the crime of child molestation to those charged in the indictment since it charged the jury with the text of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, read the indictment, and instructed that the jury must find that defendant committed the specific acts alleged in the indictment. Roberson v. State, 241 Ga. App. 226, 526 S.E.2d 428 (1999).

Contention that the trial court erred in charging a jury on the entire definition of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), including that the offense could be committed through child molestation causing physical injury, when the indictment did not allege aggravated child molestation resulting from a sexual act that physically harmed the child, was rejected because sufficient limiting instructions were given to the jury, and thus, no danger existed that the charge might have misled the jury to believe that it could convict the defendant of aggravated child molestation based on facts not charged in the indictment. Holloway v. State, 278 Ga. App. 709, 629 S.E.2d 447 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation and the sentence imposed thereon was vacated because the record showed that the trial court did not instruct the jury that physical harm to the victim was an essential element of the crime of aggravated child molestation as indicted; consequently, the trial court's charge was harmful as a matter of law because the charge authorized a conviction for aggravated child molestation upon proof of only the elements of child molestation. Pitts v. State, 287 Ga. App. 540, 652 S.E.2d 181 (2007).

Given that the exact date the charged child molestation offense was alleged to have been committed was not stated as a material allegation in the indictment, the trial court did not erroneously instruct the jury that the indicted offenses could be proven to have occurred at any time within the statute of limitations as the defendant failed to show either the deprivation of an alibi defense or a right to a fair trial resulted by issuing the instruction. Brown v. State, 287 Ga. App. 857, 652 S.E.2d 807 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 154 (Ga. 2008).

Because a child molestation indictment properly charged conjunctively that defendant's acts were taken with the intent to arouse and satisfy the sexual desires of the accused and the child, and the state proved one such method, the trial court's charge in the disjunctive pursuant to the language of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) was not error. Martin v. State, 299 Ga. App. 845, 683 S.E.2d 896 (2009).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a limiting instruction specifying the state's burden to prove that the child molestation against the victim occurred in the manner alleged in the indictment because the trial court's jury instructions, as a whole, properly distinguished the acts upon which the child molestation offense was based and limited the jury's determination of the child molestation offense to those acts set forth in that count of the indictment. Boatright v. State, 308 Ga. App. 266, 707 S.E.2d 158 (2011).

Instruction on indictment for aggravated child molestation. — Defendant, who was indicted for aggravated child molestation, was not convicted of a crime in a manner not charged in defendant's indictment on the basis that the trial court, after charging the jury with the relevant method, i.e., aggravated child molestation based on an act of sodomy, also gave a charge defining child molestation, which tracked the statutory language of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a); the giving of this definitional charge was proper and there could be no error since the defendant was not indicted on a charge of child molestation or convicted thereof and was instead convicted of aggravated child molestation. Robinson v. State, 272 Ga. 752, 533 S.E.2d 718 (2000).

Testimony that the defendant's genitals touched the victim's "back private," although it never entered in the victim's anus, showed completion only of the greater offense of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) and sodomy which was defined under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a) as any sexual act involving the sex organs of one person and the mouth or anus of another; therefore, the trial court did not err in refusing to charge the jury on child molestation as a lesser included offense of aggravated child molestation. Wright v. State, 259 Ga. App. 74, 576 S.E.2d 64 (2003).

After charging a jury with the presumption of innocence and the state's burden of proof, a trial judge properly limited the charge by stating that if it believed defendant committed aggravated child molestation "as alleged in the indictment," it was authorized to find defendant guilty; as a result, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a new trial. James v. State, 268 Ga. App. 851, 602 S.E.2d 854 (2004).

Because an erroneous jury instruction on an offense of aggravated child molestation violated an inmate's due process rights by allowing the jury to convict in a manner not charged in the indictment, and the inmate's trial counsel was ineffective in failing to object to the instruction, the inmate was properly granted habeas relief. Hall v. Wheeling, 282 Ga. 86, 646 S.E.2d 236 (2007).

Jury instruction on the definition of sodomy was necessary, even though sodomy was not one of the offenses charged in the indictment, since sodomy was an element of the offenses of aggravated child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a), for which defendant was on trial. Ramirez v. State, 265 Ga. App. 808, 595 S.E.2d 630 (2004).

Charge based on O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c). — When the indictment charged the defendant only with aggravated child molestation by committing sodomy, an instruction based upon O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) in its entirety did not have the effect of allowing the jury to convict the defendant of the offense based upon acts of molestation that physically injured the victim. Hilliard v. State, 226 Ga. App. 478, 487 S.E.2d 81 (1997).

Erroneous instruction. — Child molestation and aggravated sodomy are legally distinct, and when the indictment for each offense is based on separate and distinct acts, the offenses do not merge. Howard v. State, 200 Ga. App. 188, 407 S.E.2d 769, cert. denied, 200 Ga. App. 896, 407 S.E.2d 769 (1991).

When the defendant was charged with aggravated child molestation by causing physical injury and one count of sodomy, it was reversible error to read O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) to the jury in the statute's entirety since the statute allowed the jury to convict the defendant for aggravated child molestation involving an act of sodomy instead of the method charged in the indictment. Linson v. State, 221 Ga. App. 691, 472 S.E.2d 690 (1996).

Without a limiting instruction directing the jury to consider only whether defendant committed aggravated child molestation in the manner specified in the indictment, a charge on the entire O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) violated due process and the error could not be deemed harmless. Skillern v. State, 240 Ga. App. 34, 521 S.E.2d 844 (1999).

Trial court erred in defining aggravated child molestation by instructing the jury that the defendant could be convicted of violating O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) if the defendant either sodomized or injured the victim, because the indictment alleged only an act of sodomy; the error was harmless, however, as evidence of both sodomy and injury was presented, and the final charge cured any defect in the challenged instruction. Robertson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 376, 629 S.E.2d 79 (2006).

Trial court's instruction of the jury on the entirety of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) when the aggravated child molestation charge was based on physical injury to a child was not a substantial error under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-24(c); the indictment was read to the jury, the indictment was sent with the jury for deliberations, and the jury was instructed that the state's burden was to prove every material allegation in the indictment and every essential element of each crime beyond a reasonable doubt. Anderson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 58, 637 S.E.2d 790 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Good character charge erroneous. — In a prosecution for child molestation, a good character charge was erroneous as: 1) the charge failed to inform the jury that the defendant's good character was a substantive fact, and that evidence of good character had to be considered in connection with all other evidence; and 2) the charge failed to instruct the jury that good character in and of itself could be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to guilt. Hobbs v. State, 299 Ga. App. 521, 682 S.E.2d 697 (2009).

Instructions sufficient to inform jury of specific intent. — In a prosecution under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to request a jury instruction on specific intent or in objecting to the trial court's failure to give such an instruction; the jury was adequately instructed on the specific intent of the crime of child molestation, as the trial court informed the jury that child molestation was a crime of specific intent by reading the indictment to the jury and by instructing the jury on the statutory definition of child molestation, the trial court charged the jury that intent was an essential element of the crime that the state had to prove beyond a reasonable doubt, and the trial court stated that the jury would have to acquit if the jury found that the subject incident occurred as a result of accident. Malone v. State, 277 Ga. App. 694, 627 S.E.2d 378 (2006).

Failure to charge jury on statutory definition of child molestation in the absence of a request was not reversible error because the jury was charged on the statutory definition of enticing a child for indecent purposes; although the two crimes had different elements, a common element of each crime was that the defendant committed an "indecent act" to the victim or in the victim's presence. Jackson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 26, 619 S.E.2d 294 (2005).

Withdrawn charge request properly not honored. — Trial court did not err by failing to charge the jury that child molestation was a lesser included offense of rape since the defendant subsequently withdrew a written request for such a charge. Brady v. State, 206 Ga. App. 497, 426 S.E.2d 15 (1992).

Erroneous charge in indictment of aggravated child molestation did not mean that the jury could not convict defendant of child molestation as charged by the trial court. Perry v. State, 216 Ga. App. 661, 455 S.E.2d 607 (1995).

Failure to charge definition of sodomy. — Trial court's failure to charge, without written request, on the definition of "sodomy" was not reversible error, where the indictment specified the manner in which the alleged acts of sodomy had been committed and the evidence disclosed that defendant performed the acts of sodomy. Floyd v. State, 193 Ga. App. 17, 387 S.E.2d 16 (1989).

Charge on delinquency of a minor. — When the defendant allegedly had intercourse with a 14-year-old, the trial court did not err in failing to give a lesser included offense instruction regarding delinquency of a minor in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-12-1(b)(1) in addition to the court's instructions on child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Delinquency of a minor was not a lesser included offense of child molestation as proof of one offense would not have served to prevent a conviction on the other pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6 because the offenses shared no essential elements and were directed to different acts. Slack v. State, 265 Ga. App. 306, 593 S.E.2d 664 (2004).

Charge tracking entire statute not error. — Charge on a code section in the statute's entirety is not error when a part thereof is applicable and it does not appear that the inapplicable part misled the jury or erroneously affected the verdict, such that the trial judge's charging of the jury with the definition of child molestation as contained within O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 with a subsequent instruction charging that the defendant's guilt must be based upon the offenses set forth in the indictment was not reversible error. Potts v. State, 207 Ga. App. 863, 429 S.E.2d 526 (1993).

When the indicted act of child molestation was defendant's placing of his mouth on the penis of the victim, the giving of the entire section on aggravated child molestation did not mislead the jury or violate defendant's due process rights. Rice v. State, 243 Ga. App. 143, 531 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

Instruction on lesser included offenses. — Sexual battery was not a lesser included offense of statutory rape as a matter of law, and because the indictment charging defendant with statutory rape was narrowly drawn and the evidence did not support instructions allowing the jury to find defendant guilty of sexual battery or simple battery, the trial court did not err when it denied defendant's request to instruct the jury that sexual battery and simple battery were lesser included offenses of statutory rape. Neal v. State, 264 Ga. App. 311, 590 S.E.2d 168 (2003).

In a trial on a charge of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), the trial court did not err by refusing to instruct the jury on sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), as a lesser included offense, because under the facts of the case, which alleged that the defendant sexually abused a six-year-old child, the evidence presented to the jury offered the choice between the completed crime of child molestation or no crime. Howell v. State, 278 Ga. App. 634, 629 S.E.2d 398 (2006).

There was no evidence warranting a charge of sexual battery in the defendant's sexual molestation case, and the defendant's strategy was to attack the credibility of the victim; because the evidence did not authorize a charge on sexual battery as a lesser included offense, the defendant was not prejudiced by counsel's failure to request a charge on the same. McGruder v. State, 279 Ga. App. 851, 632 S.E.2d 730 (2006).

Defendant was charged with child molestation and aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4; the defendant denied having any sexual contact with the child and defense counsel argued that the charges were fabricated by the child's parent. As the evidence showed either the commission of the indicted crimes or no crimes at all, the defendant was not entitled to a charge on the lesser included offense of sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b). Linto v. State, 292 Ga. App. 482, 664 S.E.2d 856 (2008).

As the evidence in the defendant's criminal trial, if believed, would have supported defendant's conviction for the charged offense of aggravated child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c), and the defendant denied that the incident occurred, there was no cause to instruct the jury on the lesser included offense of sexual battery; the evidence either showed a completed offense or no offense. Lucas v. State, 295 Ga. App. 831, 673 S.E.2d 309 (2009).

While a defendant claimed that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to request a jury instruction on the lesser included offense of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) based on the defendant's denial of oral sodomy committed on the 14-year-old victim, trial counsel's all-or-nothing strategy regarding the prosecution for aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c) was not unreasonable; trial counsel had elicited testimony by the victim that the initial written police statement contained no express reference to sodomy but stated that the victim and the defendant had kissed and cuddled, had elicited testimony from a security guard on cross-examination that the guard had not seen the victim adjust the victim's skirt by pulling it down when the victim stepped out of the car although that was what the guard claimed in a police statement, and had demonstrated that the surveillance camera had not captured anything below the mid-chest level of the car seats of the car in which the incident allegedly occurred. Nguyen v. State, 296 Ga. App. 853, 676 S.E.2d 246 (2009).

Because the defendant denied any contact with the victim, the trial court did not err in not charging on sexual battery as a lesser included offense of child molestation. Hilliard v. State, 298 Ga. App. 473, 680 S.E.2d 541 (2009).

To the extent the defendant sought review under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-58(b) of the trial court's charge to the jury on the jury's consideration of child molestation, attempted child molestation, and indecent exposure, there was no error because the trial court explained that the jury needed to consider all three offenses at the same time and properly explained how the jury would record the jury's verdict. Machado v. State, 300 Ga. App. 459, 685 S.E.2d 428 (2009).

Videotape of interview between child victim and investigating officer.

— Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed the state to show the jury videotapes of interviews police made with children who accused defendant of touching their genitals, or when it allowed the children's parents to testify about statements their children made to them, and the appellate court held that evidence which showed that defendant touched the genitals of several children who were enrolled in tae kwon do classes defendant taught and that three children were sodomized was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions on 18 counts of child molestation and three counts of aggravated child molestation. Fiek v. State, 266 Ga. App. 523, 597 S.E.2d 585 (2004).

After a defendant molested a nine-year-old child, a videotape of the child's interview by a detective was properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 as a statement made by a child under the age of 14 years describing an act of sexual contact. Whether it also bolstered the child's trial testimony was immaterial. Whitaker v. State, 293 Ga. App. 427, 667 S.E.2d 202 (2008).

Evidence sufficient to support instruction. — Trial court's instruction to the jury on the statutory definition of aggravated child molestation was authorized by the evidence. Bryson v. State, 210 Ga. App. 642, 437 S.E.2d 352 (1993).

Failure to provide statutory notice of intent to seek life imprisonment. —

State's failure to provide statutory notice of their intent to seek life imprisonment with regard to a defendant charged with child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b) meant that the maximum penalty for defendant was 30 years imprisonment, not life imprisonment. Webb v. State, 270 Ga. App. 817, 608 S.E.2d 241 (2004).

Batson challenge. — Trial court properly overruled defendant's Batson challenge and allowed five jurors to remain on the panel, and not be stricken for cause, as: (1) the challenged African-American juror was not similarly situated to the remaining jurors; and (2) each of the challenged jurors testified unequivocally that their prior experiences would not hamper their ability to serve as impartial jurors. Cowan v. State, 279 Ga. App. 532, 631 S.E.2d 760 (2006).

Jury charge upheld. — There was no reversible error, despite the defendant's argument on appeal that the trial court's charge to the jury on DNA evidence was incomplete and prejudicial as a matter of law, because: (1) a review of the record showed that the charge given by the court tracked the language set forth in the pattern charge and was otherwise a correct statement of law with respect to the collection and testing of DNA; and (2) the defendant's proposed jury charge was argumentative and composed primarily of evidentiary matters that were not proper for a jury instruction. Moreover, there was no request for the additional charge the defendant asserted was erroneously omitted present in the record. Stanley v. State, 289 Ga. App. 373, 657 S.E.2d 305 (2008).

Based on the jury instructions in the defendant's trial for child molestation, the trial court made it clear that the instructions applied to each of the seven counts; no reasonable juror would have understood that it was required to decide the verdict in an all or nothing fashion or that he or she was precluded from finding the defendant guilty of one or more counts and not guilty of others. The jury was not misled or confused. Parker v. State, 295 Ga. App. 859, 673 S.E.2d 334 (2009).

There was no due process violation regarding the trial court's charge on child molestation because the instructions cured any complained of problem with the charge since the charge as a whole limited the jury's consideration to the specific manner of committing the crime alleged in the indictment; the trial court read the indictment to the jury, instructed the jury that the state had the burden of proving every material allegation in the indictment beyond a reasonable doubt, and sent the indictment out with the jury during the jury's deliberations. Machado v. State, 300 Ga. App. 459, 685 S.E.2d 428 (2009).

Jury charge on voluntary intoxication in child molestation case. — Trial court's charge on voluntary intoxication in a child molestation case was not an improper comment on the evidence under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57, given evidence from all three complainants that defendant was drinking Wild Turkey bourbon and the victim's testimony that the victim believed defendant was drunk. Bright v. State, 301 Ga. App. 204, 687 S.E.2d 208 (2009).

16-6-5. Enticing a child for indecent purposes.

(a) A person commits the offense of enticing a child for indecent purposes when he or she solicits, entices, or takes any child under the age of 16 years to any place whatsoever for the purpose of child molestation or indecent acts.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (c) of this Code section, a person convicted of the offense of enticing a child for indecent purposes shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 30 years. Any person convicted under this Code section of the offense of enticing a child for indecent purposes shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2.

(c) If the victim is at least 14 but less than 16 years of age and the person convicted of enticing a child for indecent purposes is 18 years of age or younger and is no more than four years older than the victim, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall not be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2. Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1992, p. 2131, § 2, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The amendment or repeal and reenactment of subsection (b) of Code Section 16-6-5 of the Official Code of Georgia Annotated by Section 1 of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any act which occurred prior to the effective date of this Act [April 17, 1992] nor shall the prosecution of such crime be affected by the enactment of this Act."

Ga. L. 1995, p. 957, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Child Protection Act of 1995'."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

The General Assembly further finds that the state has a compelling interest in protecting the public from sexual offenders and in protecting children from predatory sexual activity, and there is sufficient justification for requiring sexual offenders to register and for requiring community and public notification of the presence of sexual offenders. The General Assembly declares that in order to protect the public, it is necessary that the sexual offenders be registered and that members of the community and the public be notified of a sexual offender's presence. The designation of a person as a sexual offender is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from the conviction of certain crimes. Likewise, the designation of a person as a sexual predator is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from findings by the Sexual Offender Registration Review Board and a court if requested by a sexual offender."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Section not violative of due process. — Ga. L. 1953, Nov.-Dec. Sess., p. 408, § 2 (see now O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5) did not violate the due process clause of U.S. Const., amend. 14 or Ga. Const. 1976, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I) for failing to define in exact words what constitutes the conduct made punishable. Millhollan v. State, 221 Ga. 165, 143 S.E.2d 730 (1965).

Section not objectionable because of plurality of subject matter. — Since the subject of Ga. L. 1953, Nov.-Dec. Sess., p. 408, § 2 (see now O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5) is the taking or attempting to take immoral, improper, or indecent liberties with children, and all of the provisions of that section naturally connect and reasonably relate to that subject, it does not violate Ga. Const. 1976, Art. III, Sec. VII, Para. IV (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. V, Para. III). Millhollan v. State, 221 Ga. 165, 143 S.E.2d 730 (1965).

Statutory scheme to protect children under 14 (now 16). — Former Code 1933, §§ 26-2018 through 26-2020 provide a general statutory scheme giving protection to both male and female children under the age of 14 (now 16), regardless of the offender's gender, and thus are not invalid as depriving this defendant of equal protection of the law. Barnes v. State, 244 Ga. 302, 260 S.E.2d 40 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3 through 16-6-5).

Phrase "indecent acts" is not so vague as to violate due process. Howell v. State, 172 Ga. App. 805, 324 S.E.2d 754 (1984).

Consent irrelevant. — Child's consent would not vitiate a conviction for enticing a child for indecent purposes. Coker v. State, 164 Ga. App. 493, 297 S.E.2d 68 (1982).

Various ways to violate section may be joined in one count in same indictment. — Former Ga. L. 1953, Nov.-Dec. Sess., p. 408, § 2 (see now O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5) forbidding the taking of immoral or improper or indecent liberties with a child provides several ways in which it may be violated, not repugnant to each other, and they may be joined in one count in the same indictment. Millhollan v. State, 221 Ga. 165, 143 S.E.2d 730 (1965).

Sufficiency of indictment. — Trial court erred in granting the defendant's specific demurrer to an indictment charging the defendant with criminal attempt to entice a child for indecent purposes in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 and 16-6-5(a) because the indictment contained the elements of the crime, informed the defendant of the charges against the defendant, and was specific enough to protect the defendant from double jeopardy, and the language in the indictment tracked the legislative language used in and cited directly to § 16-6-5(a); the crime charged in and of itself alerted the defendant to the fact that the defendant was being accused of acting with the intent of engaging in illicit sexual conduct with a minor, and because the defendant was indicted with criminal attempt to commit the crime of enticing a child for indecent purposes, by definition, the defendant fell short of the crime's commission, and any evidence of defendant's criminal intent was necessarily implicit. State v. Marshall, 304 Ga. App. 865, 698 S.E.2d 337 (2010).

Motion to suppress. — Trial court erroneously suppressed the statements given by the defendant to law enforcement, because, given the totality of the circumstances apparent from the record, the defendant: (1) spoke clearly; (2) did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol or drugs; (3) appeared to understand what was read; (4) was not threatened or coerced in any way; (5) appeared very calm; (6) was not promised anything by police in exchange for defendant's cooperation; (7) did not appear to have any mental issues; (8) had only been detained for approximately 20 minutes before defendant was Mirandized; and (9) asked the investigator to come back to speak with defendant after a brief interruption in the interview; the mere fact that there was no written Miranda waiver or electronic recording of the same did not render said waiver involuntary. State v. Hardy, 281 Ga. App. 365, 636 S.E.2d 36 (2006).

Enticement and intended motivation must be shown. — Crime of enticing a child for indecent purposes requires the showing of a joint operation of the act of enticing a child and the intention to commit acts of indecency or child molestation. Lasseter v. State, 197 Ga. App. 498, 399 S.E.2d 85 (1990).

Although a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5 need not be based upon evidence that an act of indecency or child molestation was accomplished or even attempted, a conviction must nevertheless be based upon some evidence that an act of indecency or child molestation was the intended motivation for the enticement. Lasseter v. State, 197 Ga. App. 498, 399 S.E.2d 85 (1990).

Asportation an element. — Enticing a child for indecent purposes, unlike the offense of aggravated sodomy, includes an element of asportation. Dennis v. State, 158 Ga. App. 142, 279 S.E.2d 275 (1981); Thompson v. State, 186 Ga. App. 471, 367 S.E.2d 320 (1988).

After the defendant showed a pornographic film to children and threatened the children if the children left or attempted to leave during the movie, the requirement of asportation in the crime of enticing a child for indecent purposes was not satisfied since there was no evidence that the defendant caused the children to move towards the place where the children would view the movie. Bragg v. State, 217 Ga. App. 342, 457 S.E.2d 262 (1995).

Although the defendant merely attempted to pull a child towards the defendant, any asportation, however slight, was sufficient to show the taking element of enticing a child for indecent purposes. Hicks v. State, 254 Ga. App. 814, 563 S.E.2d 897 (2002).

Taking may involve force, enticement, or persuasion. — The "asportation" element of the offense is satisfied whether the "taking" involves physical force, enticement, or persuasion. Cimildoro v. State, 259 Ga. 788, 387 S.E.2d 335 (1990).

Evidence supporting the conclusion that defendant enticed, lured or convinced the victim to go with defendant across a tool shed and onto a board and later into a bedroom for indecent purposes was sufficient to satisfy the "taking" element of the offense. Cimildoro v. State, 259 Ga. 788, 387 S.E.2d 335 (1990).

When one of two victims testified that they were playing in a house, and it was defendant's idea to go to defendant's workshop and defendant personally testified that defendant told the victims to go to the workshop because defendant "didn't want any interruptions," the asportation element was proved. Smith v. State, 210 Ga. App. 634, 437 S.E.2d 333 (1993).

Asportation element of enticing a child for indecent purposes under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5(a) was met by the defendant's sending suggestive text messages to a 15-year-old friend of the defendant's daughter and offering the friend $50 to have sex with the defendant. The element of asportation was satisfied whether the taking involved physical force, enticement, or persuasion. Kelley v. State, 301 Ga. App. 43, 686 S.E.2d 810 (2009).

Evidence of asportation. — Requirement that evidence of asportation be proven was satisfied by the evidence that defendant chased the victim around the bus. Sims v. State, 212 Ga. App. 426, 442 S.E.2d 292 (1994).

Defendant's conviction for enticing a child for indecent purposes was supported by sufficient evidence as the evidence authorized the jury to find that defendant enticed the 15-year-old victim into an apartment under the false pretense that defendant needed to get something there but that the real reason was to engage in sexual contact based on defendant restraining the victim and attempting to engage in sexual contact. The evidence satisfied the element of asportation based on the evidence that defendant lured the victim to the apartment. Moore v. State, 291 Ga. App. 270, 661 S.E.2d 868 (2008).

When there is ample evidence of asportation, evidence of enticement is immaterial. — When there is ample evidence of defendant's taking the victim in defendant's motor vehicle to a place for purpose of indecent acts, it is immaterial whether there is also evidence of defendant's enticing, inviting, or persuading the victim to go with the defendant. Dennis v. State, 158 Ga. App. 142, 279 S.E.2d 275 (1981).

Pushing the victim a distance of approximately 65 paces was amply sufficient to satisfy the asportation element of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5. Morris v. State, 179 Ga. App. 228, 345 S.E.2d 686 (1986).

Inquiry into victim's past sexual experiences was properly refused, even where a physician testified that in examining the victim it was obvious the victim had been sexually active. Worth v. State, 183 Ga. App. 68, 358 S.E.2d 251 (1987).

Asking defendant about prior arrests. — Permitting the prosecutor to ask defendant if defendant had been arrested on a sex charge subsequent to the incident in question at defendant's trial for child molestation and enticing a child for indecent purposes was reversible error, where the sole issue in the case was the credibility of defendant and the alleged victim. Thomas v. State, 178 Ga. App. 674, 344 S.E.2d 496 (1986).

Evidence of similar prior incident admissible. — When defendant appealed defendant's conviction on multiple counts of violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3, 16-6-4, 16-6-5, and 16-6-5.1, defendant unsuccessfully argued that the trial court erred in admitting two similar transactions. As to the first similar transaction, defendant induced any alleged error in that defendant's own counsel was the first to elicit the testimony of that transaction, and as to the second transaction, the trial court did not clearly err in finding that, because it involved a sexual act by defendant in defendant's counseling office with a female whom defendant was counseling, it was sufficiently similar to one of the crimes at issue which alleged a sexual act by defendant in defendant's counseling office with a female. Evans v. State, 300 Ga. App. 180, 684 S.E.2d 311 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0215, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 304 (Ga. 2010).

Evidence of similar incident proper. — Evidence of similar transaction admissible where in both incidents defendant approached a young child on the street shortly after school hours and chased the victim when the victim withdrew. Sims v. State, 212 Ga. App. 426, 442 S.E.2d 292 (1994).

Child molestation and enticing child for indecent purposes as included offenses. — When the appellant stands convicted under a two-count indictment charging appellant with enticing a child for indecent purposes and child molestation, one crime is not included within the other as a matter of law. Williams v. State, 156 Ga. App. 481, 274 S.E.2d 826 (1980).

Child molestation and enticement are separate offenses, and the combination of attempt with child molestation does not bring it within the purview of enticement. Wittschne v. State, 259 Ga. 448, 383 S.E.2d 885 (1989).

Child molestation and enticement counts merged as a matter of fact where the enticement counts of the indictment specifically alleged that defendant enticed the child for the purpose of child molestation and, thus, in order to prove the enticement counts, the prosecution had to prove all the facts used to prove the child molestation counts. Wells v. State, 222 Ga. App. 587, 474 S.E.2d 764 (1996).

Child molestation and enticing a child for indecent purposes are distinct and separate offenses that are not included within each other as a matter of law, as the offense of enticement has an element of asportation not found in the offense of child molestation. Veasey v. State, 234 Ga. App. 795, 507 S.E.2d 799 (1998).

Charges of child molestation and enticement did not merge as a matter of fact under the circumstances of the case since the acts which constituted enticement were separate from and completed before the acts which constituted molestation. Leon v. State, 237 Ga. App. 99, 513 S.E.2d 227 (1999).

State was not required to charge a defendant with child molestation in order to obtain a conviction for enticing a child for indecent purposes as those are two separate crimes involving different elements, and generally, enticement is completed before child molestation occurs. Jackson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 26, 619 S.E.2d 294 (2005).

Enticing child for indecent purposes is not included in offense of aggravated sodomy. — Enticing a child for indecent purposes, is not included in offense of aggravated sodomy, as each of these offenses involves proof of distinct essential elements. Dennis v. State, 158 Ga. App. 142, 279 S.E.2d 275 (1981).

Attempt to entice child for immoral purposes. — Although an indictment for attempting to commit the offense of enticing a child for indecent purposes did not allege actual asportation, it did allege that defendant arranged to meet the victim for the purpose of committing indecent acts and, accordingly, did not fail to allege the taking of a substantial step toward the commission of the crime. Dennard v. State, 243 Ga. App. 868, 534 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

Crime of enticing is complete when the defendant asports the victim with the intent to commit an indecent act, regardless of whether the act is actually committed; when, however, the defendant attempts to entice a child but is unsuccessful with respect to the asportation element, the defendant is properly charged with criminal attempt. Dennard v. State, 243 Ga. App. 868, 534 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

Defendant was properly ordered to register as a sex offender because the convictions constituted criminal offenses against a victim who was a minor, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12(a)(9)(B), and because the attempt convictions, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-4-1, were covered within the registration requirement; defendant was convicted of criminal attempt to commit child molestation and criminal attempt to entice a child for indecent purposes, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4(a) and 16-6-5(a), respectively, as defendant communicated over the Internet with a police officer who was disguised as a 14-year-old child, and arranged to meet the alleged child, and the fact that an actual child was not involved did not negate the offense or the need for the registration as there was no impossibility defense. Spivey v. State, 274 Ga. App. 834, 619 S.E.2d 346 (2005).

Statutory rape. — The crime of enticing a child for indecent purposes is not included in the crime of statutory rape. Coker v. State, 164 Ga. App. 493, 297 S.E.2d 68 (1982).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — Evidence was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of enticing a child for indecent purposes. Sims v. State, 212 Ga. App. 426, 442 S.E.2d 292 (1994).

Aggravated child molestation, child molestation, enticing a child for indecent purposes, and aggravated sodomy convictions were all supported by sufficient evidence provided by the victims detailing the inappropriate touching and anal penetration committed by defendant, and confirmed by the examining experts. Wilkerson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 585, 600 S.E.2d 677 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for enticing a child for indecent purposes when the 10-year-old child victim testified that defendant called to the victim, asked for a hug, and then held the victim captive while rubbing the victim against the defendant's naked genitalia. Duncan v. State, 269 Ga. App. 4, 602 S.E.2d 908 (2004).

Evidence supported defendant's enticing a child for indecent purposes conviction as defendant picked up the 14-year-old victim and took the victim to the defendant's love interest's bedroom; the love interest observed defendant stroking and fondling the victim's neck and ears; the victim's testimony that nothing improper occurred did not render the evidence insufficient to support the conviction. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Evidence supported a conviction for enticing a child for indecent purposes where the defendant requested that the victim leave the victim's own home, took the victim to the defendant's home, physically carried the victim to the defendant's bedroom, and, among other acts, placed the defendant's mouth on the victim's breasts. Jackson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 26, 619 S.E.2d 294 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for enticing a child for indecent purposes and solicitation of sodomy for money with a child under 17, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-5 and 16-6-15, respectively, were supported by the evidence as the defendant invited two young victims to the defendant's home, had one of the victims watch a pornographic videotape and propositioned both of the victims by discussing the victims' sexual history and sexual acts; it was clear that the element of asportation was satisfied when the defendant invited the victims to the defendant's home in order to entice the victims to engage in sexual acts. Carolina v. State, 276 Ga. App. 298, 623 S.E.2d 151 (2005).

Sufficient evidence supported the convictions of enticing a child for indecent purposes under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5 and of three counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4; the victim and the victim's younger sister specifically testified that the defendant committed the acts described in the indictment, and other testimony corroborated this testimony. Mikell v. State, 281 Ga. App. 739, 637 S.E.2d 142 (2006).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of enticing a child for indecent purposes under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5(a) and kidnapping under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a); the victim testified that the defendant carried the victim into the defendant's bedroom and would not allow the victim to leave until the defendant had finished abusing the victim. Anderson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 58, 637 S.E.2d 790 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Sufficient identification evidence supported the defendant's convictions of four counts of aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(b), three counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), and two counts of enticing a child for indecent purposes under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5; the victim testified that the victim knew the defendant, that the defendant and the victim's mother lived together, and that the perpetrator's name was the defendant's first name. Clark v. State, 282 Ga. App. 248, 638 S.E.2d 397 (2006).

Because sufficient direct evidence was presented via the victim's testimony that the defendant improperly touched and digitally penetrated the victim's vagina, convictions upon charges of aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, and other crimes arising from that contact were upheld on appeal; further, any error related to the admission of the victim's videotaped statement was harmless as such statement would have been admissible as res gestae or to prove the defendant's lustful disposition. Morrow v. State, 284 Ga. App. 297, 643 S.E.2d 808 (2007).

Defendant retrieved victims from their homes after misleading their parents regarding the reason for doing so and took them to defendant's house, hog-tied the victims, taped the victims' eyes and mouth, tickled the victims, and inserted an object into the victims' mouths; thus, the evidence supported the conclusion that defendant took the victims to defendant's house with the present intent of either molesting the children or engaging in indecent acts. Ayers v. State, 286 Ga. App. 898, 650 S.E.2d 370 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 117 (Ga. 2008).

With regard to a defendant's convictions on one count of enticing a child for indecent purposes, ten counts of child molestation, one count of aggravated child molestation, and three counts of cruelty to children in the first degree, regarding actions the defendant took toward three children and what the children were forced to do to each other by gunpoint while the defendant was a babysitter for the children, the state proved the charged offenses beyond a reasonable doubt based on the testimony of the three victims and the victims' videotaped forensic interviews. It was within the province of the jury to disbelieve the defendant's testimony that the defendant did not commit the charged crimes. Sullivan v. State, 295 Ga. App. 145, 671 S.E.2d 180 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0624, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 215 (Ga. 2009).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation, aggravated assault, enticing a child for an indecent purpose, kidnapping, false imprisonment, cruelty to children, burglary, theft by taking, and striking an unattended vehicle were authorized because at trial the defendant was positively identified as the perpetrator of the crimes; a nurse and doctor testified that the victim had an injury that was consistent with the molestation allegation, and a videotape depicted the defendant driving a maintenance truck that the defendant did not have authority to take. Bearfield v. State, 305 Ga. App. 37, 699 S.E.2d 363 (2010).

Evidence that the defendant, age 35, met a girl online whom the defendant believed was 15, that the defendant made numerous comments about how the defendant could get in trouble or go to jail, that the defendant engaged in sexually explicit conversations and directed the child to pornography sites showing black men having sex with white women, that the defendant drove to an arranged meeting place, and, that, when officers appeared, the defendant fled, was sufficient to convict defendant of violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 (attempt), 16-6-4 (child molestation), 16-6-5 (enticement of a child), and 16-10-24 (obstruction). Smith v. State, 306 Ga. App. 301, 702 S.E.2d 211 (2010).

Evidence insufficient for conviction. — Defendant's convictions for enticing a minor child under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5 were reversed because there was no evidence that the defendant enticed, persuaded, or lured the child victims, the defendant's grandchildren, to the defendant's home or into any area of the house. Rather, the children were brought to the home voluntarily by their parents. Henderson v. State, 303 Ga. App. 531, 694 S.E.2d 185 (2010).

Appellant was not convicted twice for same conduct as matter of fact where convicted of violating former Code 1933, §§ 26-505 and 26-506. Williams v. State, 156 Ga. App. 481, 274 S.E.2d 826 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4 and 16-6-5).

Instructions did not cause prejudicial error. — Trial court's jury charge on defendant's charges of enticing a child for indecent purposes and solicitation of sodomy for money with a child under 17, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-5 and 16-6-15, respectively, was not prejudicial to defendant, although the indictment against defendant charged defendant with committing acts in the conjunctive and the jury instructions allowed the jury to convict defendant for committing any of the acts, which were stated in the disjunctive, as proof that the crimes were committed in any of the separate ways or methods alleged in the indictment was sufficient to sustain the convictions. Carolina v. State, 276 Ga. App. 298, 623 S.E.2d 151 (2005).

Admission of challenged evidence deemed harmless error. — In a prosecution against the defendant for child molestation, enticing a child for indecent purposes, and exhibiting pornography to a minor, even if the appeals court assumed that the word "catheter" should have been redacted from what the defendant apparently conceded was an otherwise relevant list of items found in a search, the trial court's failure to do so was harmless error because it was highly improbable that such failure contributed to the verdict given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt. Goldey v. State, 289 Ga. App. 198, 656 S.E.2d 549 (2008).

Venue. — There was sufficient evidence of venue to support convictions for enticing child where it was shown that the child was "enticed" in the county where the defendants were prosecuted, but the alleged act of indecency or child molestation occurred in another county. Abreu v. State, 206 Ga. App. 361, 425 S.E.2d 331 (1992).

Sentence. — There was no showing that the defendant's sentences for enticing a minor for indecent purposes, statutory rape, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor were vindictively enhanced in violation of Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 33.6(B) after the defendant was allowed to revoke a guilty plea because, inter alia, the trial judge found that an enhanced sentence was warranted based on material differences between the facts presented regarding the nature of the crimes during the plea hearing and the trial; the concurrent sentences of 15 years to serve for enticing a minor for indecent purposes and statutory rape, plus 12 concurrent months for contributing to the delinquency of a minor were within statutory limits and valid. There was no absolute constitutional bar to imposing a more severe sentence upon re-sentencing. Hawes v. State, 298 Ga. App. 461, 680 S.E.2d 513 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1769, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 15 (Ga. 2010).

16-6-5.1. Sexual assault by persons with supervisory or disciplinary authority; sexual assault by practitioner of psychotherapy against patient; consent not a defense; penalty upon conviction for sexual assault.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term:

- (1) "Actor" means a person accused of sexual assault.
- (2) "Intimate parts" means the genital area, groin, inner thighs, buttocks, or breasts of a person.
- (3) "Psychotherapy" means the professional treatment or counseling of a mental or emotional illness, symptom, or condition.
- (4) "Sexual contact" means any contact between the actor and a person not married to the actor involving the intimate parts of either person for the purpose of sexual gratification of the actor.
- (5) "School" means any educational program or institution instructing children at any level, pre-kindergarten through twelfth grade, or the equivalent thereof if grade divisions are not used.

(b) A person who has supervisory or disciplinary authority over another individual commits sexual assault when that person:

- (1) Is a teacher, principal, assistant principal, or other administrator of any school and engages in sexual contact with such other individual who the actor knew or should have known is enrolled at the same school; provided, however, that such contact shall not be prohibited when the actor is married to such other individual;
- (2) Is an employee or agent of any probation or parole office and engages in sexual contact with such other individual who the actor knew or should have known is a probationer or parolee under the supervision of the same probation or parole office;
- (3) Is an employee or agent of a law enforcement agency and engages in sexual contact with such other individual who the actor knew or should have known is being detained by or is in the custody of any law enforcement agency;
- (4) Is an employee or agent of a hospital and engages in sexual contact with such other individual who the actor knew or should have known is a patient or is being detained in the same hospital; or
- (5) Is an employee or agent of a correctional facility, juvenile detention facility, facility providing services to a person with a disability, as such term is defined in Code Section 37-1-1, or a facility providing child welfare and youth services, as such term is defined in Code Section 49-5-3, who engages in sexual contact with such other individual who the actor knew or should have known is in the custody of such facility.

(c) A person who is an actual or purported practitioner of psychotherapy commits sexual assault when he or she engages in sexual contact with another individual who the actor knew or should have known is the subject of the actor's actual or purported treatment or counseling or the actor uses the treatment or counseling relationship to facilitate sexual contact between the actor and such individual.

(d) A person who is an employee, agent, or volunteer at any facility licensed or required to be licensed under Code Section 31-7-3, 31-7-12, or 31-7-12.2 or who is required to be licensed pursuant to Code Section 31-7-151 or 31-7-173 commits sexual assault when he or she engages in sexual contact with another individual who the actor knew or should have known had been admitted to or is receiving services from such facility or the actor.

(e) Consent of the victim shall not be a defense to a prosecution under this Code section.

(f) A person convicted of sexual assault shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than 25 years or by a fine not to exceed $100,000.00, or both; provided, however, that:

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any person convicted of the offense of sexual assault of a child under the age of 16 years shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 25 nor more than 50 years and shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2; and

(2) If at the time of the offense the victim of the offense is at least 14 years of age but less than 16 years of age and the actor is 18 years of age or younger and is no more than four years older than the victim, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall not be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2. (Code 1981, § 16-6-5.1, enacted by Ga. L. 1983, p. 721, § 1; Ga. L. 1990, p. 1003, § 1; Ga. L. 1991, p. 1108, § 1; Ga. L. 1992, p. 6, § 16; Ga. L. 1992, p. 1940, § 1; Ga. L. 1999, p. 562, § 5; Ga. The 2010 amendment, effective May 20, 2010, added paragraph (a)(5); rewrote subsections (b) through (d); and added subsections (e) and (f).

The 2011 amendment, effective July 1, 2011, substituted "Code Section 31-7-3, 31-7-12, or 31-7-12.2" for "Code Section 31-7-3 or 31-7-12" near the beginning of subsection (d).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1999, p. 562, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Crimes Against Elderly Act of 1999'."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

"In custody" construed. — When a probationer was free to go about the probationer's normal activities subject to a court imposed curfew and the probationer's refraining from any illegal acts, the probationer was not a person "in custody" or "in the custody of the law," as contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1. Palmer v.

State, 260 Ga. 330, 393 S.E.2d 251 (1990) (decided prior to 1991 amendment).

"Probation officer" defined. — Indictment stating that defendant was a "Surveillance Officer working for a county probation office" who had "supervisory and disciplinary authority" over a probationer is sufficient to allege that defendant was a "probation officer" within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1. Belvin v. State, 221 Ga. App. 114, 470 S.E.2d 497 (1996).

"In school." — The 1990 Act amending subsection (b) to include a person "who is enrolled in a school" in the class of victims did not violate O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1. Randolph v. State, 269 Ga. 147, 496 S.E.2d 258 (1998).

Conduct of school officials. — O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1 was not void for vagueness as applied to an assistant principal of a high school charged with engaging in sexual contact with a student. Randolph v. State, 269 Ga. 147, 496 S.E.2d 258 (1998).

Trial court erred by denying petition for release from conduct of clergyman in Texas and requirement to register in Georgia. — Trial court erred by denying a defendant's petition for release from the requirement that the defendant register as a sexual offender, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12, since the defendant's Texas conviction involving the use of the defendant's position as a clergyman to sexually assault two victims was not similar enough to any Georgia criminal statute that would have found the defendant to have been convicted of committing a dangerous sexual offense as that term was defined in § 42-1-12(a)(10)(A). Sharma v. State, 294 Ga. App. 783, 670 S.E.2d 494 (2008).

Coerced statement. — In a prosecution under both O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-5.1 and 16-10-1, the trial court properly suppressed the oral and written statements made by the defendant, a public employee, during an internal investigation interview conducted by the Georgia Department of Corrections, and after the defendant was forbidden to seek the advice of counsel, as the defendant had an objective belief that a failure to cooperate with the investigation by taking part in the interview and signing a written document entitled "Notice of Interfering with On-Going Internal Investigation" would result in a loss of employment; thus, the defendant's right against self-incrimination was violated. State v. Aiken, 281 Ga. App. 415, 636 S.E.2d 156 (2006).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — Defendant's conviction of sexual assault against a person in custody, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1(c)(1)(A), was supported by sufficient evidence, because the evidence showed that defendant used defendant's position as a police officer to induce the victim to have sex with the defendant, and consent of the victim was not a defense to prosecution, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1(c)(3). Furthermore, although the trial court erred in admitting hearsay evidence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 to explain a detective's conduct in investigating the case, it was highly probable that the testimony did not contribute to the verdict. Krauss v. State, 263 Ga. App. 488, 588 S.E.2d 239 (2003).

Assault of counseling client. — When defendant appealed defendant's conviction on multiple counts of violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3, 16-6-4, 16-6-5, and 16-6-5.1, defendant unsuccessfully argued that the trial court erred in admitting two similar transactions. As to the first similar transaction, defendant induced any alleged error in that defendant's own counsel was the first to elicit the testimony of that transaction, and as to the second transaction, the trial court did not clearly err in finding that, because it involved a sexual act by defendant in defendant's counseling office with a female whom defendant was counseling, it was sufficiently similar to one of the crimes at issue which alleged a sexual act by defendant in defendant's counseling office with a female. Evans v. State, 300 Ga. App. 180, 684 S.E.2d 311 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0215, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 304 (Ga. 2010).

Consent of victim a defense when victim has reached the age of consent. — Because a student had reached the age of consent, the trial court erred in preventing defendant from presenting a consent defense at trial to a charge of sexual assault of a person enrolled in school under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1(b).

16-6-6. Bestiality.

(a) A person commits the offense of bestiality when he performs or submits to any sexual act with an animal involving the sex organs of the one and the mouth, anus, penis, or vagina of the other.

(b) A person convicted of the offense of bestiality shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years. (Laws 1833, Cobb's 1851 Digest, p. 787; Code 1863, §§ 4253, 4254; Code 1868, §§ 4288, 4289; Code 1873, §§ 4354, 4355; Ga. (a) A person commits the offense of necrophilia when he performs any sexual act with a dead human body involving the sex organs of the one and the mouth, anus, penis, or vagina of the other.

(b) A person convicted of the offense of necrophilia shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years. (Code 1933, § 26-2022, enacted by Ga. L. 1977, p. 315, § 1.)

16-6-8. Public indecency.

(a) A person commits the offense of public indecency when he or she performs any of the following acts in a public place:

(1) An act of sexual intercourse;

(2) A lewd exposure of the sexual organs;

(3) A lewd appearance in a state of partial or complete nudity; or

(4) A lewd caress or indecent fondling of the body of another person.

(b) A person convicted of the offense of public indecency as provided in subsection (a) of this Code section shall be punished as for a misdemeanor except as provided in subsection (c) of this Code section.

(c) Upon a third or subsequent conviction for public indecency for the violation of paragraph (2), (3), or (4) of subsection (a) of this Code section, a person shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years.

(d) For the purposes of this Code section only, "public place" shall include jails and penal and correctional institutions of the state and its political subdivisions.

(e) This Code section shall be cumulative to and shall not prohibit the enactment of any other general and local laws, rules, and regulations of state and local authorities or agencies and local ordinances prohibiting such activities which are more restrictive than this Code section. ## JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Offense of lewdness at common law was indecency referable especially to sexual matters, and it included any gross indecency which was sufficiently open and notorious as to tend to corrupt the morals of the community. United States ex rel. Huguley v. Martin, 325 F. Supp. 489 (N.D. Ga. 1971).

Motion to sever. — Defendant's motion to sever a public indecency charge from sexual battery charges was properly denied as there was sufficient evidence that the charges constituted a single scheme or plan to prey upon young victims and to satisfy the defendant's prurient desires since: (1) the sexual batteries and the public indecency all took place within a month's period of time and within a five-mile radius; (2) the three victims were between the ages of 20 and 29; (3) the defendant approached each victim in a public place and, after attempting to engage them in conversation of a sexual nature, behaved in a sexually aggressive manner; and (4) in one instance of sexual battery and in the public indecency incident, the defendant offered the victims money and fondled the defendant's person. Harmon v. State, 281 Ga. App. 35, 635 S.E.2d 348 (2006), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 137 (Ga. 2007).

Nudity emphasizing theatrical theme was not lewd and did not violate former Code 1933, § 26-2011. Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. City of Atlanta, 334 F. Supp. 634 (N.D. Ga. 1971) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-8).

Little difference in effect between lewd conduct in public areas and that in motion pictures. — There is little difference in the effect on the public between lewd conduct in public areas and lewd conduct explicitly performed on a motion picture screen for viewing by the public. Evans Theatre Corp. v. Slaton, 227 Ga. 377, 180 S.E.2d 712, cert. denied, 404 U.S. 950, 92 S. Ct. 281, 30 L. Ed. 2d 267 (1971).

Elements of lewd conduct. — When a little girl, playing in her backyard with her rabbit, hears a "thumping" or "tapping" and then turns to see the private genitals of her nude next-door neighbor, the test of "lewd" under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-8 is met. Collins v. State, 160 Ga. App. 680, 288 S.E.2d 43 (1981).

Shopping center parking lot is clearly a "public place" within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-8. State v. Chrisopoulos, 198 Ga. App. 876, 403 S.E.2d 460 (1991).

Exposure in front of window. — Evidence that the defendant would come home from work, pull off clothes and become exposed in front of the window "[j]ust to get a thrill" was sufficient to support conviction for public indecency although the act was committed in a private residence. Hester v. State, 164 Ga. App. 871, 298 S.E.2d 292 (1982).

Visible from outside apartment. — In prosecution for public indecency, although an apartment may come within definition of "public place," in such case, state must show that defendant was visible from outside of apartment. McGee v. State, 165 Ga. App. 423, 299 S.E.2d 573 (1983).

Evidence that defendant was observed masturbating in the television-viewing room in a correctional institution was sufficient to support conviction of public indecency. Minor v. State, 232 Ga. App. 246, 501 S.E.2d 576 (1998).

Masturbating without exposure of sexual organ. — Evidence that the defendant was observed masturbating with his hands inside his shorts but never exposed his penis to anyone was insufficient to convict him of indecent exposure. Akin v. State, 249 Ga. App. 412, 548 S.E.2d 655 (2001).

Exposure to babysitter in marital bedroom. — When the defendant appeared nude in the presence of a teenage female babysitter in the marital bedroom and bathroom at his home, the evidence indicated that the defendant by his own behavior converted his bedroom and bath from a private zone to a public place, where his nudity might reasonably be expected to be viewed by people other than members of his family or household, and thereby supports his conviction and sentence for public indecency. Greene v. State, 191 Ga. App. 149, 381 S.E.2d 310, cert. denied, 191 Ga. App. 922, 381 S.E.2d 310 (1989).

Single lewd act in presence of two witnesses as one crime. — When the defendant allegedly committed a single lewd act in the presence of two minors, but was charged with two separate counts of public indecency, the trial court correctly ordered that prosecution would proceed as to one count only since the two minors were not the victims of the alleged crime but were merely the witnesses through whom the state was prepared to prove the defendant's guilt of an affront to public decency. State v. Chrisopoulos, 198 Ga. App. 876, 403 S.E.2d 460 (1991).

Evidence of urinating on the ground in a shopping center parking lot is sufficient to support a conviction of making a lewd appearance in a state of partial nudity in a public place. Clark v. State, 169 Ga. App. 535, 313 S.E.2d 748 (1984).

Admissibility of evidence of previous offense. — Once identity of defendant as perpetrator of the former crime was proven, testimony concerning that crime was admissible to show identity and criminal bent of mind and to rebut defendant's statement that defendant had never exposed self to anyone before. Huckeba v. State, 157 Ga. App. 795, 278 S.E.2d 703 (1981).

Trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence to show a defendant's course of conduct and intent in the defendant's trial for public indecency and sexual battery as in each of the similar transactions, defendant approached someone previously unknown to the defendant in a public place, attempted to talk to the person, and then engaged in sexually inappropriate behavior; in the sexual battery incidents and one similar transaction, the defendant either bit or licked the victims on their buttocks while the victims were shopping and in the public indecency incident and two of the similar transactions, the defendant exposed the defendant's person. Harmon v. State, 281 Ga. App. 35, 635 S.E.2d 348 (2006), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 137 (Ga. 2007).

Two conditions precedent to admission of evidence relating to defendant's prior act of exposing self are: first, that witness positively identify defendant as perpetrator of crime; secondly, that there be sufficient similarity between former incident and latter incident that proof of former tends to prove latter. Huckeba v. State, 157 Ga. App. 795, 278 S.E.2d 703 (1981).

Evidence sufficient to support conviction. — See Collins v. State, 191 Ga. App. 289, 381 S.E.2d 430 (1989); Watkins v. State, 237 Ga. App. 94, 514 S.E.2d 244 (1999).

Witness's testimony that the witness awoke during the night and found that someone had removed a screen from the window of the witness's apartment, that the witness saw someone when the witness looked outside, that the witness was able to see defendant's face and noticed that the defendant was naked when the defendant moved near a neighbor's porch light, and that police apprehended defendant near the witness's residence a short time later and found that the defendant possessed property belonging to another person who had the screen outside that person's window removed was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions on charges of burglary with the intent to commit theft and public indecency. Heard v. State, 268 Ga. App. 718, 603 S.E.2d 69 (2004).

Guilty plea based on single incident waived challenge to sentence. — Because defendant pled guilty to four misdemeanor counts of public indecency, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-8, based on one lewd act witnessed by several school children, and willingly and knowingly accepted the specified sentences as to the four counts, the defendant waived any claim before the habeas court that there was in fact only one act and that the resulting sentences were void on double jeopardy grounds. Turner v. State, 284 Ga. 494, 668 S.E.2d 692 (2008).

Jury question. — Whether the act giving rise to a charge of public indecency was performed in a "public place" within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-8 was a question of fact which the trial court properly left for the jury's resolution. Collins v. State, 191 Ga. App. 289, 381 S.E.2d 430 (1989).

Felony sentence. — Defendant was properly convicted of a felony on a public indecency charge and sentenced to serve five years to serve on that charge as the defendant had two prior public indecency convictions; the trial court was required to sentence the defendant as a felon rather than a misdemeanant. Harmon v. State, 281 Ga. App. 35, 635 S.E.2d 348 (2006), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 137 (Ga. 2007).

Probation condition. — Probation condition stating that “Defendant will remain appropriately clothed when in public and when the potential for public view exists” imposed substantially the same requirements as those imposed by Georgia’s public indecency law, and was sufficiently specific and definite. Tyler v. State, 279 Ga. App. 809, 632 S.E.2d 716 (2006), cert. denied, 2006 Ga. LEXIS 810 (Ga. 2006); overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Merger of charges. — Appellant was not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus after serving four 12-month sentences of probation for four counts of public indecency under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-8 related to an incident in which the appellant began to masturbate while alongside a school bus as the appellant failed to show adverse collateral consequences as the appellant only made a bald claim that being sentenced on four counts of public indecency, as opposed to one, created more difficulty in finding employment; based on the plea agreement, the merger of the charges was expressly rejected by the appellant in order to effectuate the negotiated pleas to a misdemeanor. Turner v. State, 284 Ga. 494, 668 S.E.2d 692 (2008).

Registration for public indecency proper. — Offense of public indecency, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-8, was not a victimless crime and, therefore, a perpetrator thereof may have been required to register under O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12; the trial court did not err in requiring the defendant to register as a condition of the defendant’s sentence for public indecency. Brown v. State, 270 Ga. App. 176, 605 S.E.2d 885 (2004).

16-6-9. Prostitution.

A person commits the offense of prostitution when he or she performs or offers or consents to perform a sexual act, including but not limited to sexual intercourse or sodomy, for money or other items of value. (Code 1933, § 26-2012, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 2001, p. 92, § 3.)

for the financial benefit of third parties. The General Assembly enacts this law to express its abhorrence for these practices and to better protect children from sexual exploitation."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Editor's notes. — In light of the similarity of the issues involved, decisions under Ga. L. 1943, p. 568 (see O.C.G.A. § 44-7-18) are included in the annotations for this Code section.

Equal protection. — Application of section in Atlanta held not to deny equal protection to female prostitutes. State v. Gaither, 236 Ga. 497, 224 S.E.2d 378 (1976).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2012 was not void for vagueness. Moore v. State, 231 Ga. 218, 201 S.E.2d 146 (1973) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-9).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2012 was applicable only to "sellers" of sexual intercourse for money. State v. Gaither, 236 Ga. 497, 224 S.E.2d 378 (1976) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-9).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2012 did not provide that person had to accept money in order to commit offense, but that the proposed act of sexual intercourse be for a consideration of money. Moore v. State, 231 Ga. 218, 201 S.E.2d 146 (1973) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-9).

Acceptance of money and consummation of transaction not required. —

Person does not have to accept money to commit the offense of prostitution, nor does a person have to actually consummate the transaction; rather, to commit the crime the person need only offer to perform an act of sexual intercourse for money. Allen v. State, 170 Ga. App. 96, 316 S.E.2d 500 (1984).

Offense is defined in terms of commercialization: the sale, offer to sell or consent to sell physical intimacies for money. State v. Gaither, 236 Ga. 497, 224 S.E.2d 378 (1976).

When female becomes a prostitute. — Female becomes a prostitute once she has performed, offered, or consented to perform first act of sexual intercourse for money. Fluker v. State, 248 Ga. 290, 282 S.E.2d 112 (1981), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 1009, 102 S. Ct. 1699, 72 L. Ed. 2d 127 (1982).

Indiscriminate illegal intercourse with number of men not necessarily involved. — “Prostitution” as used in statute relating to solicitation of another for the purpose of prostitution does not necessarily involve indiscriminate illegal intercourse with a number of men. Price v. State, 76 Ga. App. 108, 45 S.E.2d 84 (1947) (decided under Ga. L. 1943, p. 568).

Definition of “sexual intercourse.” — Since “sexual intercourse” is a necessary element of both adultery and prostitution, it is logical to conclude that the definition of sexual intercourse should be uniform in both instances. Allen v. State, 170 Ga. App. 96, 316 S.E.2d 500 (1984).

Type of sexual intercourse need not be specified in an accusation for the offense of prostitution. State v. Kenney, 233 Ga. App. 298, 503 S.E.2d 585 (1998).

Solicitation of carnal intercourse in unnatural way. — Term “prostitution” as defined by the General Assembly does not mean solely sexual intercourse in the natural way, but includes solicitation of carnal intercourse in an unnatural way. Price v. State, 76 Ga. App. 108, 45 S.E.2d 84 (1947) (decided under Ga. L. 1943, p. 568).

Homosexual acts. — Person may commit the crime of prostitution by offering to engage in homosexual acts for money. Allen v. State, 170 Ga. App. 96, 316 S.E.2d 500 (1984).

Consensual sodomy has been merged into the offenses of fornication and adultery. Allen v. State, 170 Ga. App. 96, 316 S.E.2d 500 (1984).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2012 did not require state to allege or prove exact amount of money; statute required only that the defendant perform or offer to perform sexual intercourse for money. Anderson v. State, 149 Ga. App. 460, 254 S.E.2d 459 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-9).

Specifying who made the offer to perform sexual intercourse is not required in an accusation for the offense of prostitution. State v. Kenney, 233 Ga. App. 298, 503 S.E.2d 585 (1998).

Former Code 1933, § 26-2012 may be upheld as one to punish for attempt to commit prostitution. Moore v. State, 231 Ga. 218, 201 S.E.2d 146 (1973) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-9).

Conviction for committing or agreeing to commit prostitution. — Person may be convicted under former Code 1933, § 26-2012 not only if the person actually committed the act of prostitution but also if the person was a party to an agreement to do so. There is no constitutional prohibition against this feature. Moore v. State, 231 Ga. 218, 201 S.E.2d 146 (1973) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-9).

When allegation may be disregarded because surplusage. — When the accusation stated that the accused “did then and there unlawfully, and with force and arms, offer and consent to perform an act of sexual intercourse for money,” since “with force and arms” was not part of former Code 1933, § 26-2012 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-9) which makes prostitution a crime and the words are not required in the form prescribed for indictments under former Code 1933, § 27-501 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54), such an allegation is mere surplusage and may be disregarded. Anderson v. State, 149 Ga. App. 460, 254 S.E.2d 459 (1979); Hicks v. State, 149 Ga. App. 459, 254 S.E.2d 461 (1979).

Name of particular individual solicited for prostitution is not required in order to set forth one of the essential elements of the crime, and any variation in the proof of whom was solicited was immaterial. Shorter v. State, 155 Ga. App. 609, 271 S.E.2d 741 (1980).

Failure to name the person solicited was not a ground for sustaining a demurrer to the indictment. State v. Kenney, 233 Ga. App. 298, 503 S.E.2d 585 (1998).

Sufficient evidence to support guilty verdict. — In a prostitution prosecution where the arresting police officer testified that the officer began a conversation with the defendant and that during this conversation defendant offered to have sexual intercourse with the officer for $100.00, but the defendant denied having offered to perform sexual intercourse with the arresting officer for any money and presented evidence that defendant was incapable of having sexual intercourse at that time due to complications from recent surgery, the evidence was sufficient to support the jury verdict of guilty. Lemon v. State, 151 Ga. App. 709, 261 S.E.2d 447 (1979).

Given the statements made by a codefendant that the codefendant would have sex with an undercover police detective "as well," and evidence that the defendant accepted $150 after representing that the money constituted payment for straight sex and oral sex, the defendant's conviction for prostitution was upheld on appeal. Ford v. State, 285 Ga. App. 106, 645 S.E.2d 590 (2007).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for attempted prostitution, after the record showed that she worked for "escort services" listed under "massage parlors" in the telephone directory and a witness testified "the lady put a condom on me and put her mouth on my penis" while charging him about $300 therefor. Renz v. State, 183 Ga. App. 108, 357 S.E.2d 843 (1987).

When female disrobes and reclines on bed together with nude male, the reasonable expectation is that the ordinary and normal form of sexual intercourse is intended by the parties. Bailess v. State, 168 Ga. App. 56, 308 S.E.2d 61 (1983).

16-6-10. Keeping a place of prostitution.

A person having or exercising control over the use of any place or conveyance which would offer seclusion or shelter for the practice of prostitution commits the offense of keeping a place of prostitution when he knowingly grants or permits the use of such place for the purpose of prostitution. (Ga. L. 1943, p. 568, § 1; Code 1933, § 26-2014, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 1970, p. 236, § 3.)

Cross references. — Abatement of houses of prostitution, Ch. 3, T. 41. Inducing female person to enter roadhouse or similar establishment for purpose of prostitution or debauchery or other immoral purpose, § 43-21-61.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

To sustain indictment under former Code 1933, § 26-2014. it was necessary to show only that the accused contributed to or aided, directly or indirectly, in maintaining and keeping a lewd house. Shealy v. State, 142 Ga. App. 850, 237 S.E.2d 207 (1977) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-10).

Person cannot legally be convicted of maintaining lewd house unless the proof shows that the general reputation of the house or its inmates, or both, was that it was a lewd house, and also that fornication or adultery was actually committed in the house. Smith v. State, 88 Ga. App. 465, 76 S.E.2d 735 (1953) (decided under Ga. L. 1943, p. 568).

Not error for trial judge to permit state witness to give details of prostitution practiced. — When the charge is one for receiving another into any house, building, place, etc. for the purpose of prostitution or assignation, it was not error for the trial judge to permit a witness for the state to go into detail as to the type of prostitution and assignation practiced therein over the objection that such evidence unduly tended to inflame and prejudice the jury against the defendant. Saxe v. State, 112 Ga. App. 804, 146 S.E.2d 376 (1965) (decided under Ga. L. 1943, p. 568).

Evidence sufficient for conviction. — Defendant's conviction of keeping a place of prostitution was supported by sufficient evidence, including evidence that an undercover officer visited the establishment for a massage, that, acting as if in charge, the defendant greeted the officer and turned the officer over to a spa employee, that the employee touched the officer's genitals during the massage and offered masturbation and oral sex services for specified prices, that the defendant hired the employee to be a prostitute at the spa and that the employee had provided repeated prostitution services there, that the defendant was aware of these activities, including, among other things, that the two split the money received for the employee's sexual services, that others worked for the defendant as prostitutes on the premises, and, based on certified copies of documents, that defendant owned the business and its business license. Ahn v. State, 279 Ga. App. 501, 631 S.E.2d 711 (2006).

16-6-11. Pimping.

A person commits the offense of pimping when he or she performs any of the following acts:

- (1) Offers or agrees to procure a prostitute for another;
- (2) Offers or agrees to arrange a meeting of persons for the purpose of prostitution;
- (3) Directs or transports another person to a place when he or she knows or should know that the direction or transportation is for the purpose of prostitution;
- (4) Receives money or other thing of value from a prostitute, without lawful consideration, knowing it was earned in whole or in part from prostitution; or
- (5) Aids or abets, counsels, or commands another in the commission of prostitution or aids or assists in prostitution where the proceeds or profits derived therefrom are to be divided on a pro rata basis. ### JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Specifying the type of prostitution act offered is not required in accusation for pimping. State v. Kenney, 233 Ga. App. 298, 503 S.E.2d 585 (1998).

There was no error in trial court's denial of motion for directed verdict of acquittal based upon the assertion that the probata did not conform to the allegata, in that the original accusation charged that the defendant received money from a prostitute without lawful consideration on February 23, 1983, but the evidence at trial showed that the offense occurred on February 2, 1983, because time is not a material element of the offense of pimping and the state proved that the offense occurred within the statute of limitation prior to the return of the indictment. Angevine v. State, 171 Ga. App. 658, 320 S.E.2d 578 (1984).

Sufficient evidence supported conviction. — In addition to the substantive evidence of defendant's guilt, provided by the victim's prior inconsistent statements, evidence of women's sexy clothing found in defendant's hotel room, which the victim said that defendant had purchased, and information downloaded from an Internet site detailing the pimping lifestyle, was sufficient evidence to authorize a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation, statutory rape, and pimping. Lewis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 160, 628 S.E.2d 239 (2006).

Conviction for felony versus misdemeanor appropriate. — Trial court did not err by sentencing defendant for felony pimping, instead of only a misdemeanor count of pimping, since the defendant was charged with instructing a person to commit the act of prostitution and receiving money therefrom, which was a clear violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-11(4), and because the indictment alleged that the person whom defendant instructed was under the age of 18 years, the crime of pimping was elevated to a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-13(b). Burroughs v. State, 292 Ga. App. 580, 665 S.E.2d 4 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 930 (Ga. 2008).

16-6-12. Pandering.

A person commits the offense of pandering when he or she solicits a person to perform an act of prostitution in his or her own behalf or in behalf of a third person or when he or she knowingly assembles persons at a fixed place for the purpose of being solicited by others to perform an act of prostitution. (Code 1933, § 26-2016, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 1970, p. 236, § 5; Ga. L. 1988, p. 1797, § 1; Ga. L. 1998, p. 1301, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Editor's notes. — In light of the similarity of the issues involved, decisions under Ga. L. 1943, p. 568, (see O.C.G.A. § 44-7-18), are included in the annotations for this Code section.

Section is substantially related to achievement of important governmental objectives. — O.C.G.A. § 16-6-12 is one part of a broad statutory scheme that serves important governmental objectives, and is substantially related to achievement of these objectives. Fluker v. State, 248 Ga. 290, 282 S.E.2d 112 (1981), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 1009, 102 S. Ct. 1699, 72 L. Ed. 2d 127 (1982).

Equal protection. — Sex-based dis-crimatory language of section prior to 1988 amendment did not violate equal protection. Fluker v. State, 248 Ga. 290, 282 S.E.2d 112 (1981), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 1009, 102 S. Ct. 1699, 72 L. Ed. 2d 127 (1982).

Prostitution includes solicitation of carnal intercourse in unnatural way.

— Term "prostitution" as defined by the legislature does not mean solely sexual intercourse in the natural way, but includes solicitation of carnal intercourse in an unnatural way. Price v. State, 76 Ga. App. 108, 45 S.E.2d 84 (1947) (decided under Ga. L. 1943, p. 568).

Indiscriminate illegal intercourse with number of men not necessarily involved. — "Prostitution" as used in statute relating to solicitation of another for the purpose of prostitution does not necessarily involve indiscriminate illegal intercourse with a number of men. Price v. State, 76 Ga. App. 108, 45 S.E.2d 84 (1947) (decided under Ga. L. 1943, p. 568).

Evidence sufficient. — Defendant's solicitation of the victim to perform sexual acts, which did not expressly exclude sexual intercourse, supported conviction of offense of pandering. McGee v. State, 165 Ga. App. 423, 299 S.E.2d 573 (1983).

16-6-13. Penalties for violating Code Sections 16-6-9 through 16-6-12.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b) of this Code section, a person convicted of any of the offenses enumerated in Code Sections 16-6-10 through 16-6-12 shall be punished as for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature. A person convicted of the offense enumerated in Code Section 16-6-9 shall be punished as for a misdemeanor.

(b)(1) A person convicted of any of the offenses enumerated in Code Sections 16-6-10 through 16-6-12 when such offense involves the conduct of a person who is at least 16 but less than 18 years of age shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than five nor more than 20 years, a fine of not less than $2,500.00 nor more than $10,000.00, or both.

(2) A person convicted of any of the offenses enumerated in Code Sections 16-6-10 through 16-6-12 when such offense involves the conduct of a person under the age of 16 years shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than ten nor more than 30 years, a fine of not more than $100,000.00, or both.

(3) Adjudication of guilt or imposition of a sentence for a conviction of a second or subsequent offense pursuant to this subsection, including a plea of nolo contendere, shall not be suspended, probated, deferred, or withheld.

(c)(1) The clerk of the court in which a person is convicted of pandering shall cause to be published a notice of conviction for each such person convicted. Such notices of conviction shall be published in the manner of legal notices in the legal organ of the county in which such person resides or, in the case of nonresidents, in the legal organ of the county in which the person was convicted. Such notice of conviction shall be one column wide by two inches long and shall contain the photograph taken by the arresting law enforcement agency at the time of arrest, name, and address of the convicted person and the date, time, place of arrest, and disposition of the case and shall be published once in the legal organ of the appropriate county in the second week following such conviction or as soon thereafter as publication may be made.

(2) The convicted person for which a notice of conviction is published pursuant to this subsection shall be assessed the cost of publication of such notice and such assessment shall be imposed at the time of conviction in addition to any other fine imposed pursuant to this Code section.

(3) The clerk of the court, the publisher of any legal organ which publishes a notice of conviction, and any other person involved in the publication of an erroneous notice of conviction shall be immune from civil or criminal liability for such erroneous publication, provided such publication was made in good faith.

(d) In addition to any other penalty authorized under subsections (a) and (b) of this Code section, a person convicted of an offense enumerated in Code Sections 16-6-9 through 16-6-12 shall be fined $2,500.00 if such offense was committed within 1,000 feet of any school building, school grounds, public place of worship, or playground or recreation center which is used primarily by persons under the age of 17 years. (Code 1933, § 26-2015, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 1970, p. 236, § 4; Ga. L. 1988, p. 1797, § 2; Ga. L. 1992, p. 6, § 16; Ga. L. 1998, p. 1301, § 2; Ga. L. 2001, p. 92, § 4; Ga. L. 2003, p. 878, § 1.1; Ga. L. 2011, p. 217, § 2/HB 200.)

The 2011 amendment, effective July 1, 2011, redesignated former subsection (b) as present paragraphs (b)(1) and (b)(3); in paragraph (b)(1), substituted "A person convicted of any of the offenses enumerated in Code Sections 16-6-10 through 16-6-12 when such offense involves the conduct of a person who is at least 16 but less than 18 years of age" for "A person convicted of keeping a place of prostitution, pimping, or pandering when such offense involves keeping a place of prostitution for, the pimping for, or the solicitation of a person under the age of 18 years to perform an act of prostitution or the assembly of two or more persons under the age of 18 years at a fixed place for the purpose of being solicited by others to perform an act of prostitution" at the beginning, substituted "20 years, a fine of" for "20 years and such convicted person shall be fined" near the end, and added ", or both" at the end; added paragraph (b)(2); and deleted "when such offense involves keeping a place of prostitution for, the pimping for, or pandering of a person under the age of 18 years" following "second or subsequent offense" in the middle of paragraph (b)(3). children are increasingly induced, coerced, or compelled to perform sexual acts for the financial benefit of third parties. The General Assembly enacts this law to express its abhorrence for these practices and to better protect children from sexual exploitation."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Conviction for felony versus misdemeanor appropriate. — Trial court did not err by sentencing defendant for felony pimping, instead of only a misdemeanor count of pimping, as defendant was charged with instructing a person to commit the act of prostitution and receiving money therefrom, which was a clear violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-11(4), and because the indictment alleged that the person whom defendant instructed was under the age of 18 years, the crime of pimping was elevated to a felony under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-13(b). Burroughs v. State, 292 Ga. App. 580, 665 S.E.2d 4 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 930 (Ga. 2008).

16-6-13.1. Testing for sexually transmitted diseases required.

(a) Any term used in this Code section and defined in Code Section 31-22-9.1 shall have the meaning provided for such term in Code Section 31-22-9.1.

(b) Upon a verdict or plea of guilty or a plea of nolo contendere to the offense of pandering, the court in which that verdict is returned or plea entered shall as a condition of probation or a suspended sentence require the defendant in such case to submit to testing for sexually transmitted diseases within 45 days following the date of the verdict or plea and to consent to release of the test results to the defendant's spouse if the defendant is married; provided, however, that a defendant who is not a resident of this state shall, upon a verdict or plea of guilty or a plea of nolo contendere, be ordered by the court to undergo immediate testing for sexually transmitted diseases and shall remain in the custody of the court until such testing is completed. The clerk of the court, in the case of a defendant who is a resident of this state, shall mail, within three days following the date of that verdict or plea, a copy of that verdict or plea to the Department of Public Health. The tests for sexually transmitted diseases required under this subsection shall be limited to the eight most common sexually transmitted diseases as determined by the Department of Public Health.

(c) The Department of Public Health, within 30 days following the notification under subsection (b) of this Code section, shall arrange for the tests for the person required to submit thereto. Such person shall bear the costs of such tests.

(d) Any person required under this Code section to submit to testing for sexually transmitted diseases who fails or refuses to submit to the tests arranged pursuant to subsection (c) of this Code section shall be subject to such measures deemed necessary by the court in which the verdict was returned or plea entered to require voluntary submission to the tests. (Code 1981, § 16-6-13.1, enacted by Ga. L. 1998, p. 1301, § 3; Ga. L. 2009, p. 453, § 1-4/HB 228; Ga. L. 2011, p. 705, § 6-3/HB 214.)

The 2009 amendment, effective July 1, 2009, substituted “Department of Community Health” for “Department of Human Resources” in the last two sentences of subsection (b) and in the first sentence of subsection (c).

The 2011 amendment, effective July 1, 2011, substituted “Department of Public Health” for “Department of Community Health” in the last two sentences of subsection (b) and in the first sentence of subsection (c).

16-6-13.2. Defined terms; prosecution; forfeiture and seizure of property; in rem action; intervention; court authority; civil proceedings; liberal construction.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term:

(1) “Costs” means, but is not limited to:

(A) All expenses associated with the seizure, towing, storage, maintenance, custody, preservation, operation, or sale of the motor vehicle; and

(B) Satisfaction of any security interest or lien not subject to forfeiture under this Code section.

(2) “Court costs” means, but is not limited to:

(A) All court costs, including the costs of advertisement, transcripts, and court reporter fees; and

(B) Payment of receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees appointed by the court pursuant to this Code section.

(3) “Governmental agency” means any department, office, council, commission, committee, authority, board, bureau, or division of the executive, judicial, or legislative branch of a state, the United States, or any political subdivision thereof.

(4) "Interest holder" means a secured party within the meaning of Code Section 11-9-102 or the beneficiary of a perfected encumbrance pertaining to an interest in a motor vehicle.

(5) "Motor vehicle" or "vehicle" means any motor vehicle as defined in Code Section 40-1-1.

(6) "Owner" means a person, other than an interest holder, who has an interest in a motor vehicle and is in compliance with any statute requiring its recordation or reflection in public records in order to perfect the interest against a bona fide purchaser for value.

(7) "Proceeds" means property derived directly or indirectly from, maintained by, or realized through an act or omission and includes any benefit, interest, or property of any kind without reduction for expenses incurred for acquisition, maintenance, or any other purpose.

(b)(1) An action filed pursuant to this Code section shall be filed in the name of the State of Georgia and may be brought by the prosecuting attorney having jurisdiction over any offense which arose out of the same conduct which made the motor vehicle subject to forfeiture. Such prosecuting attorney may bring an action pursuant to this Code section in the superior court in the county where the motor vehicle was seized or in the county where conduct occurred which made the motor vehicle subject to forfeiture.

(2) Any action brought pursuant to this Code section may be compromised or settled in the same manner as other civil actions.

(c)(1) Any motor vehicle operated by a person to facilitate a violation of Code Section 16-6-11 where the offense involved the pimping of a person under the age of 18 years to perform an act of prostitution and involved a motor vehicle or operated by a person who has been convicted of or pleaded nolo contendere for two previous violations of Code Section 16-6-11 or 16-6-12 involving a motor vehicle within a five-year period and who is convicted or pleads nolo contendere to a third violation of Code Section 16-6-11 or 16-6-12 involving a motor vehicle within the same five-year period is declared to be contraband and subject to forfeiture to the state, as provided in this Code section.

(2) For the purpose of this subsection, a violation of Code Section 16-6-11 or 16-6-12 involving a motor vehicle shall mean a violation of Code Section 16-6-11 or 16-6-12 in which a motor vehicle is used to violate said Code section or in which the violation occurred.

(d) A property interest shall not be subject to forfeiture under this Code section if the owner of such interest or interest holder establishes that such owner or interest holder:

(1) Is not legally accountable for the conduct giving rise to its forfeiture, did not consent to it, and did not know of the conduct;

(2) Holds the motor vehicle jointly or in common with a person whose conduct gave rise to its forfeiture and such owner did not consent to such conduct and did not know of the conduct;

(3) Does not hold the motor vehicle for the benefit of or as nominee for any person whose conduct gave rise to its forfeiture, and, if the owner or interest holder acquired the interest through any such person, the owner or interest holder acquired it as a bona fide purchaser for value without knowingly taking part in an illegal transaction; or

(4) Acquired the interest:

(A) Before the conduct giving rise to its forfeiture, and the person whose conduct gave rise to its forfeiture did not have the authority to convey the interest to a bona fide purchaser for value at the time of the conduct; or

(B) After the completion of the conduct giving rise to its forfeiture:

(i) As a bona fide purchaser for value without knowingly taking part in an illegal transaction; and

(ii) At the time the interest was acquired, was reasonably without cause to believe that the motor vehicle was subject to forfeiture or likely to become subject to forfeiture under this Code section.

(e)(1) Upon learning of the address or phone number of the company which owns any rented or leased vehicle which is present at the scene of an arrest or other action taken pursuant to this Code section, the seizing law enforcement agency shall immediately contact the company to inform it that the vehicle is available for the company to take possession.

(2) In any case where a vehicle which is the only family vehicle is determined to be subject to forfeiture, the court may, if it determines that the financial hardship to the family as a result of the forfeiture and sale outweighs the benefit to the state from such forfeiture, order the title to the vehicle transferred to such other family member who is a duly licensed operator and who requires the use of such vehicle for employment or family transportation purposes. Such transfer shall be subject to any valid liens and shall be granted only once.

(f)(1) A motor vehicle which is subject to forfeiture under this Code section may be seized by any law enforcement officer of this state or of any political subdivision thereof who has power to make arrests or execute process or a search warrant issued by any court having jurisdiction over the motor vehicle. A search warrant authorizing seizure of a motor vehicle which is subject to forfeiture pursuant to this Code section may be issued on an affidavit demonstrating that probable cause exists for its forfeiture or that the motor vehicle has been the subject of a previous final judgment of forfeiture in the courts of this state. The court may order that the motor vehicle be seized on such terms and conditions as are reasonable.

(2) A motor vehicle which is subject to forfeiture under this Code section may be seized without process if there is probable cause to believe that the motor vehicle is subject to forfeiture under this Code section or the seizure is incident to an arrest or search pursuant to a search warrant or to an inspection under an inspection warrant.

(g)(1) When a motor vehicle is seized pursuant to this Code section, the sheriff or law enforcement officer seizing the same shall report the fact of seizure, in writing, within 20 days thereof to the prosecuting attorney of the county where the seizure was made.

(2) Within 30 days from the date of seizure, a complaint for forfeiture shall be initiated as provided for in subsection (l) or (m) of this Code section.

(3) If the state fails to initiate forfeiture proceedings against a motor vehicle seized for forfeiture by notice of pending forfeiture within the time limits specified in paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection, the motor vehicle must be released on the request of an owner or interest holder, pending further proceedings pursuant to this Code section, unless the motor vehicle is being held as evidence.

(h)(1) Seizure of a motor vehicle by a law enforcement officer constitutes notice of such seizure to any person who was present at the time of seizure who may assert an interest in the motor vehicle.

(2) When a motor vehicle is seized pursuant to this Code section, the prosecuting attorney, sheriff, or law enforcement officer seizing the same shall give notice of the seizure to any owner or interest holder who is not present at the time of seizure by personal service, publication, or the mailing of written notice:

(A) If the owner's or interest holder's name and current address are known, by either personal service or mailing a copy of the notice by certified mail or statutory overnight delivery to that address;

(B) If the owner's or interest holder's name and address are required by law to be on record with a government agency to perfect an interest in the motor vehicle but the owner's or interest holder's current address is not known, by mailing a copy of the notice by certified mail or statutory overnight delivery, return receipt requested, to any address on the record; or

(C) If the owner's or interest holder's address is not known and is not on record as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph or the owner's or interest holder's interest is not known, by publication in two consecutive issues of a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the seizure occurs.

(3) Notice of seizure must include a description of the motor vehicle, the date and place of seizure, the conduct giving rise to forfeiture, and the violation of law alleged.

(i) A motor vehicle taken or detained under this Code section is not subject to replevin, conveyance, sequestration, or attachment. The seizing law enforcement agency or the prosecuting attorney may authorize the release of the motor vehicle if the forfeiture or retention is unnecessary or may transfer the action to another agency or prosecuting attorney by discontinuing forfeiture proceedings in favor of forfeiture proceedings initiated by the other law enforcement agency or prosecuting attorney. An action under this Code section may be consolidated with any other action or proceeding under this title relating to the same motor vehicle on motion by an interest holder and must be so consolidated on motion by the prosecuting attorney in either proceeding or action. The motor vehicle is deemed to be in the custody of the State of Georgia subject only to the orders and decrees of the superior court having jurisdiction over the forfeiture proceedings.

(j) If a motor vehicle is seized under this Code section, the prosecuting attorney may:

(1) Remove the motor vehicle to a place designated by the superior court having jurisdiction over the forfeiture proceeding;

(2) Remove the motor vehicle to a storage area, within the jurisdiction of the court, for safekeeping;

(3) Provide for another governmental agency, a receiver appointed by the court pursuant to Chapter 8 of Title 9, an owner, or an interest holder to take custody of the motor vehicle and remove it to an appropriate location within the county where the motor vehicle was seized; or

(4) Require the sheriff or chief of police of the political subdivision where the motor vehicle was seized to take custody of the motor vehicle and remove it to an appropriate location for disposition in accordance with law.

(k) As soon as possible, but not more than 30 days after the seizure of a motor vehicle, the seizing law enforcement agency shall estimate the value of the motor vehicle seized.

(1) If the estimated value of the motor vehicle seized is $25,000.00 or less, the prosecuting attorney may elect to proceed under the provisions of this subsection in the following manner:

(1) Notice of the seizure of such motor vehicle shall be posted in a prominent location in the courthouse of the county in which the motor vehicle was seized. Such notice shall include a description of the motor vehicle, the date and place of seizure, the conduct giving rise to forfeiture, a statement that the owner of such motor vehicle has 30 days within which a claim must be filed, and the violation of law alleged;

(2) A copy of the notice, which shall include a statement that the owner of such motor vehicle has 30 days within which a claim must be filed, shall be served upon an owner, interest holder, or person in possession of the motor vehicle at the time of seizure as provided in subsection (h) of this Code section and shall be published for at least three successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county where the seizure was made;

(3) The owner or interest holder may file a claim within 30 days after the second publication of the notice of forfeiture by sending the claim to the seizing law enforcement agency and to the prosecuting attorney by certified mail or statutory overnight delivery, return receipt requested;

(4) The claim must be signed by the owner or interest holder under penalty of perjury and must set forth:

(A) The caption of the proceedings as set forth on the notice of pending forfeiture and the name of the claimant;

(B) The address at which the claimant will accept mail;

(C) The nature and extent of the claimant's interest in the motor vehicle;

(D) The date, identity of the transferor, and circumstances of the claimant's acquisition of the interest in the motor vehicle;

(E) The specific provision of this Code section relied on in asserting that the motor vehicle is not subject to forfeiture;

(F) All essential facts supporting each assertion; and

(G) The precise relief sought;

(5) If a claim is filed, the prosecuting attorney shall file a complaint for forfeiture as provided in subsection (m) of this Code section within 30 days of the actual receipt of the claim. A person who files a claim shall be joined as a party; and

(6) If no claim is filed within 30 days after the second publication of the notice of forfeiture, all right, title, and interest in the motor vehicle is forfeited to the state and the prosecuting attorney shall dispose of the motor vehicle as provided in subsection (s) of this Code section.

(m)(1) When a complaint is filed pursuant to this Code section, the motor vehicle which is the subject of the action shall be named as the defendant and the action shall be in rem. The complaint shall be verified on oath or affirmation by a duly authorized agent of the state in a manner required by the laws of this state. Such complaint shall describe the motor vehicle with reasonable particularity; state that it is located within the county or will be located within the county during the pendency of the action; state its present custodian; state the name of the owner or interest holder, if known; allege the essential elements of the violation which is claimed to exist; state the place of seizure, if the motor vehicle was seized; and conclude with a prayer of due process to enforce the forfeiture.

(2) A copy of the complaint and summons shall be served on any person known to be an owner or interest holder and any person who was in possession of the motor vehicle at the time of seizure:

(A) Service of the complaint and summons shall be as provided in subsections (a), (b), (c), and (d) of Code Section 9-11-4;

(B) If the owner, interest holder, or person who was in possession of the motor vehicle at the time of seizure is unknown or resides out of the state or departs the state or cannot after due diligence be found within the state or conceals himself or herself so as to avoid service, notice of the proceeding shall be published once a week for two successive weeks in the newspaper in which the sheriff's advertisements are published. Such publication shall be deemed notice to any and all persons having an interest in or right affected by such proceeding and from any sale of the motor vehicle resulting therefrom, but shall not constitute notice to an interest holder unless that person is unknown or resides out of the state or departs the state or cannot after due diligence be found within the state or conceals himself or herself to avoid service; and

(C) If a motor vehicle which has not been seized is the subject of the action, the court may order the sheriff or another law enforcement officer to take possession of the motor vehicle.

(3) An owner of or interest holder in the motor vehicle may file an answer asserting a claim against the motor vehicle in the action in rem. Any such answer shall be filed within 30 days after the service of the summons and complaint. Where service is made by publication and personal service has not been made, an owner or interest holder shall file an answer within 30 days of the date of final publication. An answer must be verified by the owner or interest holder under penalty of perjury. In addition to complying with the general rules applicable to an answer in civil actions, the answer must set forth:

- (A) The caption of the proceedings as set forth in the complaint and the name of the claimant;
- (B) The address at which the claimant will accept mail;
- (C) The nature and extent of the claimant's interest in the motor vehicle;
- (D) The date, identity of transferor, and circumstances of the claimant's acquisition of the interest in the motor vehicle;
- (E) The specific provision of this Code section relied on in asserting that the motor vehicle is not subject to forfeiture;
- (F) All essential facts supporting each assertion; and
- (G) The precise relief sought.

(4) If at the expiration of the period set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection no answer has been filed, the court shall order the disposition of the seized motor vehicle as provided for in this Code section.

(5) If an answer is filed, a hearing must be scheduled by the court to be held within 60 days after service of the complaint unless continued for good cause and must be held by the court without a jury.

(n) No person claiming an interest in a motor vehicle subject to forfeiture under this Code section may intervene in a trial or appeal of a criminal action.

(o) In conjunction with any civil or criminal action brought pursuant to this Code section:

(1) The court, on application of the prosecuting attorney, may enter any restraining order or injunction; require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds; appoint receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees; or take any action to seize, secure, maintain, or preserve the availability of a motor vehicle subject to forfeiture under this Code section, including issuing a warrant for its seizure and writ of attachment, whether before or after the filing of a complaint for forfeiture;

(2) A temporary restraining order under this Code section may be entered on application of the prosecuting attorney, without notice or an opportunity for a hearing, if the prosecuting attorney demonstrates that:

(A) There is probable cause to believe that the motor vehicle with respect to which the order is sought, in the event of final judgment or conviction, would be subject to forfeiture under this Code section; and

(B) Provision of notice would jeopardize the availability of the motor vehicle for forfeiture;

(3) Notice of the entry of a restraining order and an opportunity for a hearing must be afforded to persons known to have an interest in the motor vehicle. The hearing must be held at the earliest possible date consistent with the date set in subsection (b) of Code Section 9-11-65 and is limited to the issues of whether:

(A) There is a probability that the state will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the motor vehicle's being destroyed, conveyed, encumbered, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, concealed, or otherwise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

(B) The need to preserve the availability of the motor vehicle through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any owner or interest holder against whom the order is to be entered;

(4) If a motor vehicle is seized for forfeiture without a previous judicial determination of probable cause or order of forfeiture or a hearing under paragraph (2) of this subsection, the court, on an application filed by an owner or interest holder in the motor vehicle within 30 days after notice of its seizure or actual knowledge of such seizure, whichever is earlier, and complying with the requirements for an answer to an in rem complaint, and after five days' notice to the prosecuting attorney where the motor vehicle was seized, may issue an order to show cause to the seizing law enforcement agency for a hearing on the sole issue of whether probable cause for forfeiture of the motor vehicle then exists. The hearing must be held within 30 days unless continued for good cause on motion of either party. If the court finds that there is no probable cause for forfeiture of the motor vehicle, the motor vehicle must be released pending the outcome of a judicial proceeding which may be filed pursuant to this Code section; and

(5) The court may order a motor vehicle that has been seized for forfeiture to be sold to satisfy a specified interest of any interest holder, on motion of any party, and after notice and a hearing, on the conditions that:

(A) The interest holder has filed a proper claim and:

(i) Is authorized to do business in this state and is under the jurisdiction of a governmental agency of this state or of the United States which regulates financial institutions, securities, insurance, or real estate; or

(ii) Has an interest that the prosecuting attorney has stipulated is exempt from forfeiture;

(B) The interest holder must dispose of the motor vehicle by commercially reasonable public sale and apply the proceeds first to its interest and then to its reasonable expenses incurred in connection with the sale or disposal; and

(C) The balance of the proceeds, if any, must be returned to the actual or constructive custody of the court, in an interest-bearing account, subject to further proceedings under this Code section.

(p) A defendant convicted in any criminal proceeding is precluded from later denying the essential allegations of the criminal offense of which the defendant was convicted in any proceeding pursuant to this Code section, regardless of the pendency of an appeal from that conviction; however, evidence of the pendency of an appeal is admissible. For the purposes of this Code section, a conviction results from a verdict or plea of guilty, including a plea of nolo contendere.

(q) In hearings and determinations pursuant to this Code section:

(1) The court may receive and consider, in making any determination of probable cause or reasonable cause, all evidence admissible in determining probable cause at a preliminary hearing together with inferences therefrom;

(2) There is a rebuttable presumption that any motor vehicle of a person is subject to forfeiture under this Code section if the state establishes probable cause to believe that the person has engaged in conduct giving rise to forfeiture while using or operating said motor vehicle;

(3) In any contested proceeding to determine if a motor vehicle should be forfeited as provided in this Code section, the prosecuting attorney on behalf of the state must prove that the vehicle is subject to forfeiture pursuant to subsection (c) of this Code section by a preponderance of the evidence; and

(4) In any contested proceeding to determine if a motor vehicle should be forfeited as provided in this Code section, an owner of a property interest or interest holder must prove that the property is exempted from forfeiture pursuant to subsection (d) of this Code section by a preponderance of the evidence.

(r)(1) Any motor vehicle declared to be forfeited under this Code section vests in this state at the time of commission of the conduct giving rise to forfeiture together with the proceeds of the motor vehicle after that time. Any motor vehicle or proceeds transferred later to any person remain subject to forfeiture and thereafter must be ordered to be forfeited unless the transferee claims and establishes in a hearing under this Code section that the transferee is a bona fide purchaser for value and the transferee's interest is exempt under subsection (d) of this Code section.

(2) On entry of judgment for a person claiming an interest in the motor vehicle that is subject to proceedings to forfeit a motor vehicle under this Code section, the court shall order that the motor vehicle or interest in the motor vehicle be released or delivered promptly to that person.

(s)(1) When a motor vehicle is forfeited under this Code section, the court may:

(A) Order the motor vehicle to be sold, and the proceeds of such sale shall be used for payment of all expenses of the forfeiture and sale including, but not limited to, the expenses of seizure, towing, maintenance of custody, advertising, and court costs. The remainder of the proceeds of a sale of a forfeited motor vehicle, after payment of the expenses, shall be expended by the local governing authority for drug treatment, rehabilitation, prevention, or education or any other program which responds to problems created by drug or substance abuse; or

(B) Upon application of the seizing law enforcement agency or any other law enforcement agency of state, county, or municipal government permit the agency to retain the motor vehicle for official use in law enforcement work.

(2) Where a motor vehicle is to be sold pursuant to this subsection, the court may direct that such motor vehicle be sold by:

(A) Judicial sale as provided in Article 7 of Chapter 13 of Title 9; provided, however, that the court may establish a minimum acceptable price for such motor vehicle; or

(B) Any commercially feasible means.

(t) An acquittal or dismissal in a criminal proceeding shall preclude civil proceedings under this Code section.

(u) For good cause shown, the court may stay civil forfeiture proceedings during the pendency of a related criminal action resulting from a violation of this chapter.

(v) This Code section must be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes. (Code 1981, § 16-6-13.2, enacted by Ga. L. 1999, p. 472, § 1; Ga. L. 2000, p. 1589, § 3; Ga. L. 2001, p. 94, § 3; Ga. L. 2001, p. 362, § 29.)

16-6-13.3. Proceeds from pimping; forfeiture; distribution.

(a) Any proceeds or money which is used, intended for use, used in any manner to facilitate, or derived from a violation of Code Section 16-6-11, wherein any of the persons involved in performing an act of prostitution is under the age of 18, is contraband and forfeited to the state and no person shall have a property interest in it. Such proceeds or money may be seized or detained in the same manner as provided in Code Section 16-13-49 and shall not be subject to replevin, conveyance, sequestration, or attachment.

(b) Within 60 days of the date of the seizure of proceeds or money pursuant to this Code section, the district attorney shall initiate forfeiture or other proceedings as provided in Code Section 16-13-49. An owner or interest holder, as defined by subsection (a) of Code Section 16-13-49, may establish as a defense to the forfeiture of proceeds or money which is subject to forfeiture under this Code section the applicable provisions of subsection (e) or (f) of Code Section 16-13-49. Proceeds or money which is forfeited pursuant to this Code section shall be disposed of and distributed as provided in Code Section 16-13-49, provided that no less than 50 percent of the money and proceeds forfeited under this Code section shall be distributed to the local governing authority to be distributed to local or state-wide programs serving the child victims of the crime which are funded or operated by state or local governmental agencies.

(c) If the proceeds or money subject to forfeiture cannot be located; has been transferred or conveyed to, sold to, or deposited with a third party; is beyond the jurisdiction of the court; has been substantially diminished in value while not in the actual physical custody of a receiver or governmental agency directed to maintain custody of the proceeds or money; or has been commingled with other property that cannot be divided without difficulty, the court shall order the forfeiture of any proceeds or money of a claimant or defendant up to the value of proceeds or money found by the court to be subject to forfeiture under this Code section in accordance with the procedures set forth in subsection (x) of Code Section 16-13-49.

(d) The provisions of paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (x) and subsection (z) of Code Section 16-13-49 shall be applicable to any proceedings brought pursuant to this Code section. (Code 1981, § 16-6-13.3, enacted by Ga. L. 2001, p. 94, § 4; Ga. L. 2003, p. 140, § 16.)

16-6-14. Pandering by compulsion.

A person commits the offense of pandering by compulsion when he or she by duress or coercion causes a person to perform an act of prostitution and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years. ### 16-6-15. Solicitation of sodomy.

(a) A person commits the offense of solicitation of sodomy when he solicits another to perform or submit to an act of sodomy. Except as provided in subsection (b) of this Code section, a person convicted of solicitation of sodomy shall be punished as for a misdemeanor.

(b) A person convicted of solicitation of sodomy when such offense involves the solicitation of a person or persons under the age of 18 years to perform or submit to an act of sodomy for money shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than five nor more than 20 years and shall be fined not less than $2,500.00 nor more than $10,000.00. ### JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — Solicitation of sodomy is speech which advocates the commission of a crime and is not protected by the constitution. Christensen v. State, 266 Ga. 474, 468 S.E.2d 188 (1996).

Powell v. State, 270 Ga. 327, 510 S.E.2d 18 (1998), which struck down O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2, insofar as it applies to private, non-commercial acts between consenting adults, did not impliedly strike O.C.G.A. § 16-6-15. Howard v. State, 272 Ga. 242, 527 S.E.2d 194 (2000).

Instructions did not cause prejudicial error. — Trial court's jury charge on defendant's charges of enticing a child for indecent purposes and solicitation of sod-omy for money with a child under 17, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-5 and 16-6-15, respectively, was not prejudicial to defendant, although the indictment against defendant charged defendant with committing acts in the conjunctive and the jury instructions allowed the jury to convict defendant for committing any of the acts, which were stated in the disjunctive, as proof that the crimes were committed in any of the separate ways or methods alleged in the indictment was sufficient to sustain the convictions. Carolina v. State, 276 Ga. App. 298, 623 S.E.2d 151 (2005).

Language used to support conviction.

tion. — Term “blow job” is not too vague and lacking in definition to support a conviction of soliciting for sodomy. Anderson v. State, 142 Ga. App. 282, 235 S.E.2d 675 (1977).

Evidence sufficient for conviction.

— Defendant's convictions for enticing a child for indecent purposes and solicitation of sodomy for money with a child under 17, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-5 and 16-6-15, respectively, were supported by the evidence, as the defendant invited two young victims to defendant's home, had one of the victims watch a pornographic videotape and propositioned both of the victims by discussing their sexual history and sexual acts; it was clear that the element of asportation was satisfied when defendant invited the victims to defendant's home in order to entice the victims to engage in sexual acts. Carolina v. State, 276 Ga. App. 298, 623 S.E.2d 151 (2005).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — Charges that 13-year-old defendant violated the fornication statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-18, by having sexual intercourse with defendant's 17-year-old step-sibling did not violate Georgia's right to privacy since defendant did not have the legal capacity to decide whether to engage in sexual intercourse. In the Interest of L.A.N., 276 Ga. App. 477, 623 S.E.2d 682 (2005).

Crime of fornication necessarily involves idea of consent. While consent in some instances may be procured by force to a certain degree, where the force is used in the inception of the offense it must be at least shown that consent was finally induced thereby. Nephew v. State, 5 Ga. App. 841, 63 S.E. 930 (1909).

Fornication is not included in rape. Speer v. State, 60 Ga. 381 (1878).

Indictment for seduction will support conviction for fornication. A plea of not guilty to such an indictment puts in issue both offenses. Barton v. State, 53 Ga. App. 207, 185 S.E. 530 (1936).

Proof of fornication includes act of unmarried persons. — It is essential to the conviction of a man indicted for fornication for the state to prove that when the alleged offense was committed both he and the woman with whom the criminal intercourse took place were unmarried persons. Hopgood v. State, 76 Ga. App. 240, 45 S.E.2d 715 (1947).

Juvenile could be found delinquent based on the juvenile's commission of the delinquent act of fornication; the fact that consent is not a defense to statutory rape has no impact on whether a juvenile commits a delinquent act under the separate fornication statute by voluntarily having sex when unmarried. In re N.A., 246 Ga. App. 204, 539 S.E.2d 899 (2000).

Consent to sex by children 16 and over. — Right of privacy under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I prohibited the state from prosecuting defendant for fornication under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-18 since defendant and defendant's love interest, both age 16 and of legal age to consent to sex under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(a), engaged in private, unforced, non-commercial sex. In re J.M., 276 Ga. 88, 575 S.E.2d 441 (2003).

Civil suit for contracting venereal disease not barred. — An unmarried adult who engages in consensual sex in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-18 is not precluded from recovering in a civil action for injury suffered as a result of that criminal activity. Long v. Adams, 175 Ga. App. 538, 333 S.E.2d 852 (1985) (damages for partner's failure to disclose herpes condition).

Sexual intercourse is an element of the offense of fornication. Bridges v. Bridges, 197 Ga. App. 608, 398 S.E.2d 860 (1990).

When guilty verdict is contrary to evidence. — When an indictment charges unlawful sexual intercourse and alleges that both parties to the transaction were single at the time of the alleged act, the accused is charged with the offense of fornication only, and when the evidence under such an indictment shows that one of the parties to the transaction was married at the time of the alleged act, a verdict of guilty is contrary to the evidence. Hopgood v. State, 76 Ga. App. 240, 45 S.E.2d 715 (1947).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Sexual intercourse is element of offense. — Since "sexual intercourse" is a necessary element of both adultery and prostitution, it is logical to conclude that the definition of sexual intercourse should be uniform in both instances. Allen v. State, 170 Ga. App. 96, 316 S.E.2d 500 (1984).

Sexual intercourse is an element of the offense of adultery. Bridges v. Bridges, 197 Ga. App. 608, 398 S.E.2d 860 (1990).

Both extramarital homosexual and heterosexual relations constitute adultery. — A person commits adultery when he or she has sexual intercourse with a "person" other than his or her spouse. Therefore, both extramarital homosexual as well as heterosexual relations constitute adultery. Owens v. Owens, 247 Ga. 139, 274 S.E.2d 484 (1981).

Consensual sodomy has been merged into the offenses of fornication and adultery. Allen v. State, 170 Ga. App. 96, 316 S.E.2d 500 (1984).

Consequences in alimony suit. — Husbands have no vested right to commit adultery without suffering adverse civil consequences in alimony suit. Such right could not possibly exist, because in Georgia adultery is a crime. Bryan v. Bryan, 242 Ga. 826, 251 S.E.2d 566 (1979).

In a prosecution for malice murder, refusal to give an instruction on provocation caused by the victim's "adulterous conduct" was not error because defendant and the victim were not married and, in order to prove adultery, a marriage must be shown. Somchith v. State, 272 Ga. 261, 527 S.E.2d 546 (2000).

16-6-20. Bigamy.

(a) A person commits the offense of bigamy when he, being married and knowing that his lawful spouse is living, marries another person or carries on a bigamous cohabitation with another person.

(b) It shall be an affirmative defense that the prior spouse has been continually absent for a period of seven years, during which time the accused did not know the prior spouse to be alive, or that the accused reasonably believed he was eligible to remarry.

(c) A person convicted of the offense of bigamy shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years. ## JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Venue. — Under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-20(a), venue is proper for the offense of bigamy in the county where a person, being married and knowing the lawful spouse is living, carries on a bigamous cohabitation with another person. Edwards v. State, 188 Ga. App. 667, 374 S.E.2d 97 (1988).

Prima facie case. — In a prosecution for bigamy the state makes out a prima facie case by proving the first marriage, and that while the first spouse was living the defendant contracted a second marriage, knowing that the first marriage had not been dissolved by death or divorce. The knowledge need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be inferred from circumstances. Robinson v. State, 6 Ga. App. 696, 65 S.E. 792 (1909); Fanning v. State, 46 Ga. App. 716, 169 S.E. 60 (1933).

In a prosecution for bigamy the state makes out a prima facie case when it proves that the man accused married two different women at different times, and that when he married the second time he knew that his first wife was alive. Reikes v. State, 71 Ga. App. 324, 30 S.E.2d 806 (1944).

Burden on state to establish proof of first marriage. — Every essential element of the crime must be established, and, without proof of the first marriage, the state fails to establish the crime. Stebbins v. State, 78 Ga. App. 534, 51 S.E.2d 592 (1949).

Knowledge that lawful spouse is alive is essential element of the crime, and must be charged in the indictment. Herrin v. State, 27 Ga. App. 189, 107 S.E. 779 (1921).

Cohabitation with second woman not essential to crime. Nelms v. State, 84 Ga. 466, 10 S.E. 1087, 20 Am. St. R. 377 (1890) (decided under former Code 1882, § 4530); Pitts v. State, 147 Ga. 801, 95 S.E. 706 (1918).

Crime is completed upon second marriage. — Going through the form of marriage with knowledge that the former spouse is living constitutes the offense. The offense is completed upon the second marriage. Pitts v. State, 147 Ga. 801, 95 S.E. 706 (1918).

Where jury could infer there was no criminal intent. — In a prosecution for bigamy, if it appears to the satisfaction of the jury that the defendant honestly believed that the first marriage had been dissolved by a divorce obtained by the other spouse, and this belief was induced by reasonable diligence to ascertain the truth, the jury would be authorized to infer that there was no joint operation of act and intent to commit a crime. Robinson v. State, 6 Ga. App. 696, 65 S.E. 792 (1909).

If the defendant honestly believes to have a right to make the second marriage, and it appears this honest belief is the result of reasonable diligence to ascertain the truth, then the jury would have the right to infer that the defendant had no criminal intent, and was therefore not guilty of any crime; and where honest belief founded on reasonable diligence to ascertain the truth appears, the defendant should be acquitted, if the jury has a reasonable doubt as to whether or not there is criminal intent — a necessary ingredient of every crime. Reikes v. State, 71 Ga. App. 324, 30 S.E.2d 806 (1944).

16-6-21. Marrying a bigamist.

(a) An unmarried man or woman commits the offense of marrying a bigamist when he marries a person whom he knows to be the wife or husband of another.

(b) It shall be an affirmative defense that the prior spouse of the bigamist has been continually absent for a period of seven years, during which time the accused did not know the prior spouse of the bigamist to be alive, or that the accused reasonably believed the bigamist was eligible to remarry.

(c) A person convicted of the offense of marrying a bigamist shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years. #### 16-6-22. Incest.

(a) A person commits the offense of incest when such person engages in sexual intercourse or sodomy, as such term is defined in Code Section 16-6-2, with a person whom he or she knows he or she is related to either by blood or by marriage as follows:

- (1) Father and child or stepchild;
- (2) Mother and child or stepchild;
- (3) Siblings of the whole blood or of the half blood;
- (4) Grandparent and grandchild;
- (5) Aunt and niece or nephew; or
- (6) Uncle and niece or nephew.

(b) A person convicted of the offense of incest shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than 30 years; provided, however, that any person convicted of the offense of incest under this subsection with a child under the age of 14 years shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 25 nor more than 50 years. Any person convicted under this Code section of the offense of incest shall, in addition, be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2. (Laws 1833, Cobb's 1851 Digest, p. 814; Code 1863, § 4418; Code 1868, § 4459; Code 1873, § 4533; Code 1882, § 4533; Ga. L. 1886, p. 30, § 1; Penal Code 1895, § 380; Penal Code 1910, § 371; Ga. L. 1916, p. 51, § 1; Code 1933, § 26-5701; Code 1933, § 26-2006, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1; Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 14/HB 1059; Ga. L. 2010, p. 168, § 3/HB 571.)

The 2010 amendment, effective May 20, 2010, in subsection (a), in the introductory language, substituted "such person" for "the person", inserted "or sodomy, as such term is defined in Code Section 16-6-2,", deleted "to" following "a person", and inserted "to" near the end; in paragraph (a)(1), substituted "child or stepchild" for "daughter or stepdaughter"; in paragraph (a)(2), substituted "child or stepchild" for "son or stepson"; in paragraph (a)(3), substituted "Siblings" for "Brother and sister"; in paragraph (a)(5), inserted "niece or"; and, in paragraph (a)(6), inserted "or nephew".

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

ANALYSIS

RELATIONSHIPS

EVIDENCE

RELATIONSHIP WITH OTHER CRIMES

SENTENCE

General Consideration

Constitutionality. — O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 does not unconstitutionally infringe on the right of privacy because it bars intercourse with a non-blood-related, consenting adult. Benton v. State, 265 Ga. 648, 461 S.E.2d 202 (1995).

Because the class of individuals subject to punishment is not arbitrarily drawn, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 does not violate equal protection. Benton v. State, 265 Ga. 648, 461 S.E.2d 202 (1995).

Classification on the basis of step-parent and step-child bears a rational relationship to the governmental interest in protecting children and family unity and does not violate equal protection guarantees. Benton v. State, 265 Ga. 648, 461 S.E.2d 202 (1995).

Nature of the crime. — The unnatural crime, prohibited in former Code 1933, § 26-5701 is generally the act of a man upon a woman, over whom, by the natural ties of kindred, he has almost complete control, and generally he alone is to blame. There is a force used, which, while it cannot be said to be that violence which constitutes rape, is yet of a character that is almost as overpowering. Indeed, if it were necessary to make out a case of mutual consent as an element of such crime few cases of this crime would be punished. Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941) (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22).

Because children do not have the capacity to give consent to or resist a sexual act directed at them, acts such as incest, sodomy, and aggravated sodomy are, in law, forcible and against the will of the child. House v. State, 236 Ga. App. 405, 512 S.E.2d 287 (1999).

Incest not serious violent felony under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1(a). — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying a defendant's post-conviction motion for deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) testing because the defendant was barred from requesting DNA testing under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-41(c)(3) since the defendant's conviction for the crime of incest in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22(a)(3) was not defined as a serious violent felony under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1(a). Hunter v. State, 294 Ga. App. 583, 669 S.E.2d 533 (2008).

Slight penetration, including entry of the anterior of the organ, is sufficient to meet the intercourse element of incest. Raymond v. State, 232 Ga. App. 228, 501 S.E.2d 568 (1998); Alford v. State, 243 Ga. App. 212, 534 S.E.2d 81 (2000).

Variance between indictment and evidence not fatal. — Variance between the indictment, which stated that the victim was the defendant's daughter, and the evidence, which showed she was his step-daughter, was not fatal. Nichols v. State, 221 Ga. App. 600, 473 S.E.2d 491 (1996).

Cited in Cobb v. State, 125 Ga. App. 556, 188 S.E.2d 260 (1972); Rogers v. State, 139 Ga. App. 656, 229 S.E.2d 132 (1976); Andrews v. State, 144 Ga. App. 243, 240 S.E.2d 744 (1977); Ramsey v. State, 145 Ga. App. 60, 243 S.E.2d 555 (1978); Johnson v. State, 149 Ga. App. 544, 254 S.E.2d 757 (1979); Royals v. State, 155 Ga. App. 378, 270 S.E.2d 906 (1980); Love v. State, 190 Ga. App. 264, 378 S.E.2d 893 (1989); Richardson v. State, 194 Ga. App. 358, 390 S.E.2d 442 (1990); Adcock v. State, 194 Ga. App. 627, 391 S.E.2d 438 (1990); Loyd v. State, 202 Ga. App. 1, 413 S.E.2d 222 (1991); Smith v. State, 206 Ga. App. 557, 426 S.E.2d 23 (1992); Wiser v. State, 242 Ga. App. 593, 530 S.E.2d 278 (2000); Burk v. State, 253 Ga. App. 272, 558 S.E.2d 726 (2001).

Relationships

Uncle and niece. — Evidence that a defendant had sexual intercourse with his niece from age 14 to 17, touched her breasts and vagina with his mouth, touched her with sex toys, showed her pornography, and placed her mouth on his penis was sufficient to convict him of child molestation and incest in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4(a) and 16-6-22(a)(6). Stott v. State, 304 Ga. App. 560, 697 S.E.2d 257 (2010).

Stepgrandfather-stepgranddaughter relationship not included in statutory definition. — O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22, while prohibiting sexual relations between certain persons related only by affinity, does not include the stepgrandfather-stepgranddaughter relationship in its definition of incest. Glisson v. State, 188 Ga. App. 152, 372 S.E.2d 462, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 911, 372 S.E.2d 462 (1988).

Stepfather and stepdaughter. — The jury was authorized to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant and the victim were related by marriage as stepfather and stepdaughter, where there had been voluntary consent to and ratification of a de facto marriage relationship between defendant and the victim's mother for over seven years following a prior undissolved marriage with another woman. Argo v. State, 188 Ga. App. 102, 371 S.E.2d 922, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 911, 371 S.E.2d 922 (1988).

Although the defendant denied it on the witness stand, his stepdaughter testified that he had sexual intercourse with her while he was married to her mother; the evidence was sufficient for a trier of fact to have rationally found proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Johnson v. State, 195 Ga. App. 385, 393 S.E.2d 712 (1990).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for incest notwithstanding defendant's contention that his stepdaughter was an accomplice; since most, if not all, of the sexual encounters took place when the victim was between 10 and 14 years old, she could not be treated as an accomplice. Walker v. State, 234 Ga. App. 40, 506 S.E.2d 179 (1998).

Since it was undisputed that the victim was defendant's stepchild, and since the state established that defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim, the jury was authorized to find defendant guilty of incest. Reynolds v. State, 269 Ga. App. 268, 603 S.E.2d 779 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for incest because the victim testified that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim while the defendant was married to the victim's mother. Stephens v. State, 305 Ga. App. 339, 699 S.E.2d 558 (2010).

Brother and step-sister not included in statutory definition. — Trial court erred in convicting defendant of incest, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22. At a guilty plea hearing, the prosecutor alleged that defendant had sexual intercourse with the defendant's step-sibling; however, sexual intercourse between step-siblings was not included in the crime of incest under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22(a)(3). Further, defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel at the plea hearing pursuant to U.S. Const., amend. 6, because if counsel had informed defendant that the state could not as a matter of law prove the offense of incest because defendant's relationship to the victim was not included within the statutory scheme for such offense, defendant would not have pled guilty and would have insisted on going to trial. Shabazz v. State, 259 Ga. App. 339, 577 S.E.2d 45 (2003).

Incestuous conduct with stepdaughter after death of natural mother. — Defendant could be convicted of incestuous conduct with his stepdaughter after the death of the natural mother, where the victim's status as stepdaughter created by marriage had been perpetuated and confirmed by a court order granting defendant custody of his stepdaughter after the death of the girl's mother. Gish v. State, 181 Ga. App. 478, 352 S.E.2d 800 (1987).

Adopted child. — Although the state did not introduce documentary evidence of adoption, unrefuted testimony of the adoption by defendant, his wife, and the victim was sufficient to establish the relationship. Edmonson v. State, 219 Ga. App. 323, 464 S.E.2d 839 (1995), overruled on other grounds, Collins v. State, 229 Ga. App. 658, 495 S.E.2d 59 (1997).

Because adopted individuals "enjoy every right and privilege of a biological child," they are statutorily protected from incest. Edmonson v. State, 219 Ga. App. 323, 464 S.E.2d 839 (1995), overruled on other grounds, Collins v. State, 229 Ga. App. 658, 495 S.E.2d 59 (1997).

Evidence

Corroboration of incestuous acts is not required under the plain language of former Code 1933, § 26-2006. Baker v. State, 245 Ga. 657, 266 S.E.2d 477 (1980).

Corroboration is not required to warrant a conviction for the offenses of incest, sodomy, and child molestation, and trial court's failure to charge the jury that corroboration was required was not error. Scales v. State, 171 Ga. App. 924, 321 S.E.2d 764 (1984).

Absence of corroboration. — Absence of any corroborative evidence is not a ground for reversing a conviction for incest. Hall v. State, 186 Ga. App. 830, 368 S.E.2d 787 (1988).

Recanting of child victim's testimony. — Witnesses testified pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 that the defendant's stepchild, then 12, told the witnesses about being repeatedly raped and molested by the defendant. That the stepchild recanted these statements at trial did not render the hearsay inadmissible under § 24-3-16, and as the stepchild's credibility was for the jury to decide, the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for rape, incest, and child molestation. Harvey v. State, 295 Ga. App. 458, 671 S.E.2d 924 (2009).

Pattern of sexual exploitation shown. — When the evidence showed that the defendant first began having sexual relations with his stepdaughter when she was about 12 years of age and continued having sexual relations with her until she was in her seventeenth year, the pattern of sexual exploitation presented was, as a matter of law, forcible and against the will, because of the stepdaughter's age at onset, and because of her familial relationship with defendant, and the assertion that consensual sexual activity is protected by a right of privacy was inapplicable, as no consent was possible. Richardson v. State, 256 Ga. 746, 353 S.E.2d 342 (1987); Benton v. State, 265

Ga. 648, 461 S.E.2d 202 (1995).

Victim's prior inconsistent statement admissible. — State was allowed to use a victim's prior inconsistent statement as substantive evidence of the events, as it was the jury's role to determine what evidence to believe; the evidence presented to the jury, including the victim's prior statement that defendant placed the defendant's genitals on the victim's breast, was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for sexual battery. Brewster v. State, 261 Ga. App. 795, 584 S.E.2d 66 (2003).

Victim's testimony sufficient. — Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for incest in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 because the victim testified that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim while the defendant was married to the victim's mother. Stephens v. State, 305 Ga. App. 339, 699 S.E.2d 558 (2010).

Testimony of prior incidents. — In a trial for rape and incest, the trial court did not err in permitting the victim to testify as to two prior incidents in which defendant, her father, made sexual advances toward her. Hall v. State, 186 Ga. App. 830, 368 S.E.2d 787 (1988).

Similar transaction testimony properly admitted. — In a prosecution for incest with a stepdaughter, similar transaction testimony given by the defendant's two daughters from his former marriage, in relation to repeated sexual assaults under the same circumstances some 25 years previously, was properly admitted. Nichols v. State, 221 Ga. App. 600, 473 S.E.2d 491 (1996).

Evidence of victim's sexual activity admissible. — Given that the defendant was not charged with rape, evidence of the victim's sexual activity, and the fact that the victim was involved with someone, with whom the victim allegedly had sexual intercourse during the time of the alleged sexual abuse, should not have been excluded under either the 2004 or 2005 version of the Rape Shield statute, as: (1) said evidence acted as a possible explanation for the victim's physical trauma, placing the victim's credibility and the defendant's guilt into question; (2) the jury's split verdict supported the de-defendant's argument that even without the excluded testimony, the State's case was far less than overwhelming; and, (3) the appeals court could not determine what role the excluded evidence would have played in the jury's deliberations; hence, a new trial as to the charges of child molestation and incest was ordered. Gresham v. State, 281 Ga. App. 116, 635 S.E.2d 316 (2006).

Evidence held sufficient to convict. — When the victim, the defendant's 14-year-old child testified that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim, and the defendant denied doing so, but the testimony of the victim was corroborated by the victim's sibling and a medical doctor, the evidence was sufficient to meet the requisite standard of proof. Womble v. State, 183 Ga. App. 727, 360 S.E.2d 271 (1987).

When the defendant's niece testified that the defendant climbed on top of the victim and forced the defendant's genitals into the victim's genitals and the defendant admitted that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the defendant's niece, the evidence supported the defendant's conviction. Backey v. State, 234 Ga. App. 265, 506 S.E.2d 435 (1998).

Victim's testimony that the victim had sexual intercourse with defendant, that the defendant placed the defendant's finger in the victim's genitals, placed the defendant's hand on the victim's genitals, placed the defendant's mouth on the victim's breast, and placed the defendant's mouth on the victim's mouth, established the offenses of aggravated sexual battery pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2, incest pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22, and child molestation. Falak v. State, 261 Ga. App. 404, 583 S.E.2d 146 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for incest, as the evidence presented, including the victim's admission that the victim had sexual intercourse with defendant, was enough to allow a rational trier of fact to find the essential element of "sexual intercourse" so as to support defendant's conviction for incest. Furthermore, defendant's argument that the evidence introduced was not sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for incest had to be rejected, as defendant's reliance on rape cases to argue the defendant's point was in error; the rape statute required proof that penetration had occurred, whereas the incest statute, by contrast, only required proof that sexual intercourse had taken place and the state introduced such proof. Little v. State, 262 Ga. App. 377, 585 S.E.2d 677 (2003).

Victim's testimony, which was supported by statements the victim made to family, friends, and investigators regarding sexual acts the defendant committed upon the victim, together with the medical findings of the pediatrician who examined the victim were completely consistent with the victim's allegation of abuse by sexual intercourse; therefore, the evidence was more than sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of incest. Wilkins v. State, 264 Ga. App. 524, 591 S.E.2d 445 (2003).

Victim's testimony alone was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for incest and child molestation, and the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's statutory rape conviction as it was corroborated where the victim testified that defendant, the victim's stepparent, began to ask the victim to masturbate and use sex toys, including vibrators, dildos, and other objects, and would use them on the defendant and on the victim when the victim was eight or nine years old; defendant began having sexual intercourse with the victim when the victim was about 12, even though the victim told the defendant that it was not right and that the victim did not like it; after one of the final acts of intercourse with defendant, the victim wiped the victim with a sock and kept the sock until the day the victim ran away to a friend's home and told the victim's friend about defendant's conduct, the semen stains on the sock were consistent with defendant's semen, and the state's expert's opinion was that epithelial cells present on the sock came from the victim's genitals; and when the victim was in the ninth grade, the victim told a friend about defendant's behavior but made the friend promise not to tell anyone. Eley v.

State, 266 Ga. App. 45, 596 S.E.2d 660 (2004).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, statutory rape, and incest, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-4, 16-6-4(c), 16-6-3, and 16-6-22, respectively, because defendant's step-child gave detailed testimony as to the continuing sexual conduct that defendant inflicted on the child over a period of years, as the testimony from just that witness was sufficient to support the convictions, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8; further, there was corroborative testimony from a friend of the step-child who witnessed at least one incident, and from an aunt who testified that the older step-child had sat in defendant's lap and that the defendant rubbed the older step-child's legs, which was properly admitted for purposes of corroboration, bent of mind, lustful disposition toward children, and motive. Lewis v. State, 275 Ga. App. 41, 619 S.E.2d 699 (2005).

Testimony that the victim physically resisted the defendant's sexual advances to no avail was sufficient to support the defendant's rape and aggravated sodomy convictions; moreover, because sufficient evidence was presented that the defendant was the victim's biological and/or legal father, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's incest conviction as well. Williams v. State, 284 Ga. App. 255, 643 S.E.2d 749 (2007).

Rape, incest, child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sodomy convictions were all upheld on appeal, given that: (1) the elements of child molestation and aggravated child molestation, including venue, were supported by the female victim's testimony; and (2) the trial court's charge on the mandatory presumption of consent was proper. Forbes v. State, 284 Ga. App. 520, 644 S.E.2d 345 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for rape, incest, statutory rape, and child molestation against one of the defendant's children and a stepchild based on the defendant's repeated engagement in sexual intercourse with the children at various times while one was 12 to 16 years old and the other was 16 to 19 years old, and evidence of a letter threatening suicide on the defendant's part and apologizing for the actions against the children was also introduced against the defendant. However, the conviction on the charge of aggravated sexual battery against the stepchild was in error and required reversal since the state failed to introduce direct or circumstantial evidence sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant violated O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2 by penetrating that child's sexual organ with a replica penis. Connelly v. State, 295 Ga. App. 765, 673 S.E.2d 274 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0892, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 260 (Ga. 2009).

Sufficient evidence existed to support a defendant's convictions for incest and child molestation with regard to actions the defendant took toward the defendant's own children based on the children's recorded police interviews that were played for the jury; the testimony from a licensed clinical social worker who was admitted as an expert in child sexual abuse and abuse's effect on children; and the testimony of the pediatric nurse practitioner who examined the victims and stated that, although the victims' physical exams were normal, the results were consistent with their reports of sexual abuse. The victims' testimony, standing alone, would have been sufficient to support the convictions; therefore, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Hubert v. State, 297 Ga. App. 71, 676 S.E.2d 436 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of incest under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22(a) because the mother testified that she informed defendant that the victim was his daughter, DNA tests confirmed his parentage of the victim, and defendant legally adopted the victim, with whom he fathered five children. Pyburn v. State, 301 Ga. App. 372, 687 S.E.2d 909 (2009).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of rape and incest. — See Woodford v. State, 240 Ga. App. 875, 525 S.E.2d 408 (1999); McMillian v. State, 263 Ga. App. 782, 589 S.E.2d 335 (2003).

Evidence (Cont'd)

Trial court's order dismissing an indictment charging the defendant with rape, incest, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation on grounds that the state improperly failed to preserve lab samples taken from the victim was reversed because the defendant failed to show that the failure was the result of bad faith on the part of the state or the police, and the value of the sample to the defendant was only potentially exculpatory. State v. Brady, 287 Ga. App. 626, 653 S.E.2d 72 (2007).

Relationship With Other Crimes

Neither rape nor incest is included in the other as a matter of law. Kirby v. State, 187 Ga. App. 88, 369 S.E.2d 274 (1988).

Neither rape nor incestuous adultery includes the other. — Rape and incestuous adultery are different in the nature of the wrong done and in the facts which constitute them. Neither includes the other, and the defendant may be convicted of either, with or without allegation or proof of some fact essential to the other. Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941).

Carnal knowledge of the female is a fact common to both rape and incestuous adultery. If it is with force and against her will the crime is rape, whether the female be under or over the age of consent and whether she be the defendant's daughter or not. The fact that she is his daughter is immaterial. If she is his daughter and under the age of consent, and the force, if any, used by the defendant was mere authority or influence, the crime is incestuous adultery; and the fact that the force used cannot be said to be that violence which constitutes rape is immaterial. Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941).

On facts, incest is included offense of statutory rape. McCrannie v. State, 157 Ga. App. 110, 276 S.E.2d 263 (1981), overruled on other grounds by Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

Conviction for multiple offenses. — Evidence authorized the jury to find that more than one instance of sexual intercourse with the victim occurred, permitting conviction for each offense (rape and incest) based on separate occasions. Kirby v. State, 187 Ga. App. 88, 369 S.E.2d 274 (1988).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 in failing to argue at trial and on appeal that the inmate's statutory rape and incest convictions should have merged into the inmate's rape conviction as a matter of fact since all of the crimes arose out of the same incident as the crimes of statutory rape and incest were not established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to establish the crime of rape; the inmate's convictions of statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3 and incest under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 were not included pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(1) in the rape conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, as statutory rape, which required evidence as to the victim's age and that the victim was not the inmate's spouse, and incest, which required proof of the victim's relation to the inmate, had elements not required for rape. Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

No merger with child molestation. — Defendant's child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, and incest in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 charges did not merge as a matter of law or fact because they were separate legal offenses and because the victim's testimony and other evidence showed that the victim suffered well over two separate acts of sexual intercourse and additional instances involving oral and anal sex with the defendant. Allen v. State, 281 Ga. App. 294, 635 S.E.2d 884 (2006).

No merger with rape. — Contrary to the defendant's argument, the trial court did not err in failing to merge a conviction for incest, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22, in one count into a conviction for rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, in another count, despite the fact that both counts were based on the same act of sexual intercourse because the defendant's conduct established the commission of more than one crime; to establish the crime of rape, the state proved that the defendant had carnal knowledge of the victim, forcibly and against the victim's will, but to establish incest, it was also necessary to prove that the victim had a certain relation to the defendant. Thus, incest was not established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to establish proof of rape. Dew v. State, 292 Ga. App. 631, 665 S.E.2d 715 (2008).

Sentence

Sentence excessive. — Sentences of 25 years each imposed by the trial court on the crimes of incest under former O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22(b) and aggravated sexual battery under former O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(c) were void; the maximum sentence for each crime was 20 years at the time the crimes were committed.

Howard v. State, 281 Ga. App. 797, 637 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Registration as sex offender properly required. — Because the addendum to the defendant's sentence purported to impose restrictions upon the defendant's future parole, if granted, the sentence was a nullity; however, in light of the testimony and the nature of the offense of which the defendant was convicted, incest, the conditions of probation imposed were reasonable and were not vague or overly broad because several of the conditions imposed were specifically mandated by O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12, and even if the trial court had not specifically imposed sex offender registration as a condition of probation, the defendant was nonetheless required by statute to so register. Stephens v. State, 305 Ga. App. 339, 699 S.E.2d 558 (2010).

16-6-22.1. Sexual battery.

(a) For the purposes of this Code section, the term "intimate parts" means the primary genital area, anus, groin, inner thighs, or buttocks of a male or female and the breasts of a female.

(b) A person commits the offense of sexual battery when he or she intentionally makes physical contact with the intimate parts of the body of another person without the consent of that person.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in this Code section, a person convicted of the offense of sexual battery shall be punished as for a misdemeanor of a high and aggravated nature.

(d) A person convicted of the offense of sexual battery against any child under the age of 16 years shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years.

(e) Upon a second or subsequent conviction under subsection (b) of this Code section, a person shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned for not less than one nor more than five years and, in addition, shall be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Section 17-10-6.2. (Code 1981, § 16-6-22.1, enacted by Ga. L. 1990, p. 1003, § 2; Ga. L. 2003, p. 573, § 1.1; Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 15/HB 1059.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

APPLICATION

JURY INSTRUCTIONS

SENTENCE

General Consideration

Validity of accusation. — Although recitation of the statute may, in certain cases, be a sufficient, though not desirable, method of apprising a defendant of the charges against him, an accusation which did nothing more than reference the statute alleged to have been violated and recite some, but not all, of the elements of the crime of sexual battery was insufficient to constitute a valid accusation. D'Auria v. State, 270 Ga. 499, 512 S.E.2d 266 (1999).

Defendant waived any valid exception to the form of an indictment for sexual battery by failing to urge it in a timely written special demurrer. Haska v. State, 240 Ga. App. 527, 523 S.E.2d 589 (1999).

Skin to skin contact not required. — Evidence of skin-to-skin contact was not required to prove that a defendant touched a victim’s vagina or made physical contact with the victim’s genital area as alleged in the indictment charging child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b). Evidence of contact with the victim’s genital area through her panties was sufficient. Gunn v. State, 300 Ga. App. 229, 684 S.E.2d 380 (2009).

Application

Child molestation and sexual battery. — Even though the facts in an indictment for child molestation were sufficient to charge the lesser offense of sexual battery, when the evidence presented demanded a finding of child molestation or nothing, the trial court did not err by refusing to charge on sexual battery. Strickland v. State, 223 Ga. App. 772, 479 S.E.2d 125 (1996).

Sexual battery can be a lesser included offense of child molestation in particular cases where the facts alleged in the indictment for child molestation also include all of the elements of sexual battery. Strickland v. State, 223 Ga. App. 772, 479 S.E.2d 125 (1996).

When the jury by its verdict finds the defendant guilty of multiple offenses arising from the same conduct, the court does not err in convicting and sentencing the defendant for the greater offense after merging the lesser offenses into it. Conviction of both sexual battery and child molestation justified the merger of the battery offense into the molestation offense because the molestation offense was the greater offense; a defendant was properly sentenced as defendant’s sentence was within the maximum prescribed for a first offense of child molestation. Dorsey v. State, 265 Ga. App. 597, 595 S.E.2d 106 (2004).

Because the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of either sexual battery, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), or child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, the trial court was authorized to merge the lesser offense of sexual battery into the greater offense of child molestation. Webb v. State, 270 Ga. App. 817, 608 S.E.2d 241 (2004).

In a trial on a charge of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), the trial court did not err by refusing to instruct the jury on sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), as a lesser included offense, because under the facts of the case, which alleged that the defendant sexually abused a six-year-old child, the evidence presented to the jury offered the choice between the completed crime of child molestation or no crime. Howell v. State, 278 Ga. App. 634, 629 S.E.2d 398 (2006).

Since the question whether defendant committed sexual battery was not posed by the evidence presented, the trial court did not err when it refused to charge the jury on sexual battery as a lesser included offense of child molestation. Walker v. State, 279 Ga. App. 749, 632 S.E.2d 482 (2006).

There was no evidence warranting a charge of sexual battery in the defendant's sexual molestation case, and the defendant's strategy was to attack the credibility of the victim; because the evidence did not authorize a charge on sexual battery as a lesser included offense, the defendant was not prejudiced by counsel's failure to request a charge on the same. McGruder v. State, 279 Ga. App. 851, 632 S.E.2d 730 (2006).

Defendant's motion to sever a public indecency charge from sexual battery charges was properly denied as there was sufficient evidence that the charges constituted a single scheme or plan to prey upon young victims and to satisfy the defendant's prurient desires since: (1) the sexual batteries and the public indecency all took place within a month's period of time and within a five-mile radius; (2) the three victims were between the ages of 20 and 29; (3) the defendant approached each victim in a public place and, after attempting to engage them in conversation of a sexual nature, behaved in a sexually aggressive manner; and (4) in one instance of sexual battery and in the public indecency incident, the defendant offered the victim's money and fondled the defendant. Harmon v. State, 281 Ga. App. 35, 635 S.E.2d 348 (2006), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 137 (Ga. 2007).

Because the defendant denied any contact with the victim, the trial court did not err in not charging on sexual battery as a lesser included offense of child molestation. Hilliard v. State, 298 Ga. App. 473, 680 S.E.2d 541 (2009).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery by touching the victim's genital area merged with the defendant's conviction for child molestation by touching the victim's vagina, and defendant's conviction for sexual battery by touching the victim's breast merged with defendant's conviction for child molestation by touching the victim's breast. Therefore, the trial court erred in imposing a separate sentence on the jury's verdicts on these sexual battery counts. Gunn v. State, 300 Ga. App. 229, 684 S.E.2d 380 (2009).

Trial court properly declined to merge a sexual battery offense, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), into a child molestation offense under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. The sexual battery was established by evidence that the defendant touched the 15-year-old victim's breasts, and the child molestation proof included evidence of the separate act of touching the victim's stomach. Haynes v. State, 302 Ga. App. 296, 690 S.E.2d 925 (2010).

Lesser included offenses. — Sexual battery was not a lesser included offense of statutory rape as a matter of law, and because the indictment charging defendant with statutory rape was narrowly drawn and the evidence did not support instructions allowing the jury to find defendant guilty of sexual battery or simple battery, the trial court did not err when it denied defendant's request to instruct the jury that sexual battery and simple battery were lesser included offenses of statutory rape. Neal v. State, 264 Ga. App. 311, 590 S.E.2d 168 (2003).

As the defendant agreed at the charge conference, under the facts of the case, no evidence supported a charge on sexual battery as a lesser included offense of rape; the evidence concerning the rape was obviously conflicting as the first victim testified that the defendant raped the victim but the defendant testified that the defendant did nothing wrong, thus, a lesser included offense charge was not warranted. Quenga v. State, 270 Ga. App. 141, 605 S.E.2d 860 (2004).

When the defendant was charged with sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1, the trial court properly refused to instruct on simple battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-23(a) as a lesser included offense. The defendant claimed that the victim had placed the defendant's hand on the outside of her clothing over her vagina, and simple battery required intentional contact. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008).

Defendant was charged with child molestation and aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4; the defendant denied having any sexual contact with the child and defense counsel argued that the charges were fabricated by the child's parent. As the evidence showed either the commission of the indicted crimes or no crimes at all, the defendant was not entitled to a charge on the lesser included offense of sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b). Linto v. State, 292 Ga. App. 482, 664 S.E.2d 856 (2008).

No merger with rape. — Since the evidence established that both sexual battery and rape occurred, and evidence of neither offense was necessary to prove the other, there was no merger, and the trial court did not err in sentencing defendant for both convictions. Trotter v. State, 248 Ga. App. 156, 546 S.E.2d 286 (2001).

Similar transactions evidence properly admitted. — In a child molestation and aggravated sexual battery prosecution, evidence that before assaulting certain victims, defendant grabbed the victim by the back of the victim's hair or held the victim's neck, was properly admitted as "other transactions" evidence, since defendant used a similar method to control the child victim before sexually assaulting the child; this evidence was relevant to show defendant's course of conduct and rebut defendant's defense of fabrication. That the prior acts involved adults did not preclude their admission as similar transactions. Helton v. State, 268 Ga. App. 430, 602 S.E.2d 198 (2004).

Trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence to show a defendant's course of conduct and intent in the defendant's trial for public indecency and sexual battery as in each of the similar transactions, defendant approached someone previously unknown to the defendant in a public place, attempted to talk to the person, and then engaged in sexually inappropriate behavior; in the sexual battery incidents and one similar transaction, the defendant either bit or licked the victims on their buttocks while the victims were shopping and in the public indecency incident and two of the similar transactions, the defendant exposed the defendant's person. Harmon v. State, 281 Ga. App. 35, 635 S.E.2d 348 (2006), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 137 (Ga. 2007).

In a sexual battery case involving a 13-year-old victim, the trial court properly admitted evidence of a similar transaction regarding a 12-year-old girl. The trial court found that both incidents involved girls of a similar age who developed some sort of romantic relationship with the defendant and that the incidents occurred at the same residence and at about the same time. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008).

Anatomically correct description not required. — When the three-year-old victim stated to outcry witnesses that defendant touched the victim's private with defendant's finger, that defendant's finger "went in the hole thing," and that it hurt, this was evidence of penetration sufficient to cause pain and was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated sexual battery. The child victim's inability to anatomically describe the sexual acts would not inure to the benefit of the abuser. Helton v. State, 268 Ga. App. 430, 602 S.E.2d 198 (2004).

Evidence sufficient for conviction.

-- See Touchton v. State, 210 Ga. App. 700, 437 S.E.2d 370 (1993); Ouzts v. State, 216 Ga. App. 194, 453 S.E.2d 801 (1995); Green v. State, 218 Ga. App. 648, 463 S.E.2d 133 (1995); Lumsden v. State, 222 Ga. App. 635, 475 S.E.2d 681 (1996); McGriff v. State, 232 Ga. App. 546, 502 S.E.2d 482 (1998), overruled on other grounds, Wallace v. State, 275 Ga. 879, 572 S.E.2d 579 (2002); Thompson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 396, 537 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions of sexual battery and child molestation after the child victim indicated that the defendant had placed his mouth or tongue on her vagina, that the defendant had placed his penis in her mouth, and that the little girl had complained of physical pain and suffered apparent emotional distress. Clark v. State, 234 Ga. App. 503, 507 S.E.2d 241 (1998).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery and child molestation, even though the defendant was acquitted of rape, where the 13-year old victim testified that the defendant pulled off the victim's shorts and forced the defendant's genitals into the victim's genitals despite the victim's protests. The jury was entitled to believe the victim's testimony in whole or in part, and it could have concluded that the defendant placed the defendant's genitals on the victim's genitals (as alleged in the child molestation indictment), but that no penetration occurred, so there was no rape. Dorsey v. State, 265 Ga. App. 597, 595 S.E.2d 106 (2004).

Evidence in an initial trial that defendant fondled the victim's breasts and placed a finger inside the victim's genitals, both without the victim's consent, was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for sexual battery pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1, and aggravated sexual battery pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b); thus, double jeopardy did not prohibit a retrial granted on the ground that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel. Weldon v. State, 270 Ga. App. 574, 607 S.E.2d 175 (2004).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for rape and sexual battery as the victim testified that the victim was raped by someone who entered the victim's home while a friend was visiting and the friend identified defendant as the person who entered the home when the friend was visiting. Powell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 628, 612 S.E.2d 916 (2005).

Evidence sufficed to support a finding of delinquency for an act which would have been sexual battery had the act been committed by an adult, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b), since the victim's grandparent saw the victim, age 4, straddling the juvenile, age 12, and sweating as the juvenile held the victim and moved back and forth under the victim, despite the juvenile's claim that the victim voluntarily jumped into the juvenile's lap. In the Interest of Z.H., 278 Ga. App. 490, 629 S.E.2d 486 (2006).

Juvenile adjudication of sexual battery was supported by sufficient evidence that the victim was walking near the victim's home when the victim saw two young persons riding bicycles, that one of the youths ran up behind the victim, grabbed the victim's breasts, crotch, and buttocks, and tried to push the victim down, that the victim turned around and looked at the young person, whom the victim later identified as appellant, that the victim then screamed and ran home, that the victim immediately drove around the neighborhood with the victim's love interest looking for the attacker, that within two or three minutes of the attack, the victim saw the attacker riding a bicycle, that the victim yelled at the person, then followed the young person home, that the victim then contacted the police, who took the victim to the young person's home, where the victim identified appellant as the attacker. In the Interest of J.L.B., 280 Ga. App. 556, 634 S.E.2d 514 (2006).

Convictions for kidnapping, aggravated sexual battery, sexual battery, and attempted rape were all upheld on appeal as a photo lineup was not impermissibly suggestive, similar transaction evidence was properly admitted, the defendant had notice of the evidence, and the jury was authorized to find the victim credible and to accept the victim's testimony; hence, a rational trier of fact could have found from the evidence presented that the defendant committed the charged crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. Watley v. State, 281 Ga. App. 244, 635 S.E.2d 857 (2006).

There was sufficient evidence, including testimony by the victim and similar transaction evidence involving incidents that took place years before, to support a defendant's convictions of sexual battery, child molestation, and aggravated child molestation; the victim, who testified to various acts the defendant performed upon the victim, stated when confronted with inconsistencies in the victim's testimony that the victim had been on drugs during that period because the victim was trying to forget everything, and any inconsistencies in the victim's testimony were for the jury to resolve. Boynton v. State, 287 Ga. App. 778, 653 S.E.2d 110 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for rape, aggravated sodomy, kidnapping, burglary, and misdemeanor sexual battery based on the similar transaction evidence produced by the state, the fact that the defendant's DNA was found in the victims' beds, and that the defendant's identity was established, all of which sufficiently linked the defendant to the crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. Goolsby v. State, 299 Ga. App. 330, 682 S.E.2d 671 (2009).

Based on the facts, the jury was authorized to find the defendant guilty of sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1 because the victim, who was the defendant's nine-year-old neighbor, testified that the defendant touched the victim on the private part; the testimony of one witness was sufficient to sustain a verdict, and the victim's testimony was sufficient. Hamrick v. State, 304 Ga. App. 378, 696 S.E.2d 403 (2010).

Defendant was properly convicted of armed robbery, burglary, aggravated assault, and sexual battery because two co-defendants testified that the defendant participated in a home invasion and robbery, and that testimony was sufficient to convict the defendant. Martinez v. State, 306 Ga. App. 512, 702 S.E.2d 747 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, burglary, aggravated assault, criminal attempt to commit armed robbery, criminal attempt to commit burglary, and sexual battery because two defendant's testified that the defendant participated in the home invasion, and that testimony was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction for the crimes committed at the home. Martinez v. State, 306 Ga. App. 512, 702 S.E.2d 747 (2010).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), sexual battery, O.C.G.A.

§ 16-6-22.1(b), aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a), and assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-20(a)(1), because the victim's testimony that the defendant raped, sodomized, punched, burned, and threatened to kill the victim was sufficient to authorize the defendant's convictions. Harris v. State, 308 Ga. App. 523, 707 S.E.2d 908 (2011).

Right to privacy not violated. — Because the 13-year-old victim in a sexual battery case was under the age when the victim could legally consent to sexual conduct, prosecution of the defendant did not violate the defendant's right to privacy for consensual touching within the context of their boyfriend/girlfriend relationship. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008).

Evidence of victim's sexual activity admissible. — Defendant's convictions for child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) and sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b) were vacated because the trial court erred by applying O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(a) to the case and striking the testimony regarding the victim's previous alleged sexual conduct with the victim's brother based on the court's conclusion that the rape shield statute prohibited the defendant from presenting evidence regarding the victim's prior sexual history, and the error in excluding the evidence of the victim's prior sexual history could have contributed to the jury's verdict since the only direct evidence of the defendant's guilt was the victim's testimony that the defendant sexually abused the victim; O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, as the statute is currently written, does not apply to prosecutions for child molestation or sexual battery. Robinson v. State, 308 Ga. App. 562, 708 S.E.2d 303 (2011).

Counsel not ineffective for failure to call wife as witness. — On appeal from convictions on one count of aggravated sexual battery and two counts of sexual assault, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial as the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from counsel's failure to call the defendant's wife to testify for the defense, and the appeals court refused to speculate that the testimony would have led to an acquittal. Lee v. State, 286 Ga. App. 368, 650 S.E.2d 320 (2007).

Ineffective assistance of counsel warrants new trial. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in granting the defendant a new trial based on the ineffective assistance of trial counsel as: (1) counsel's pretrial investigation was deficient; (2) counsel made no effort to investigate or to obtain the criminal records of the state's similar transaction witness before trial, and did not ask for more time or a continuance upon learning that the defendant did not have the records; (3) the defendant pointed out that the jury had doubts about the victim's testimony based on their verdict of guilt to sexual battery, as a lesser-included offense of child molestation, the crime the defendant was charged with committing; (4) there was evidence that the victim had reason to lie; (5) the charged incident was not reported until after the defendant's wife hired a divorce lawyer, who then arranged the first interview between the victim and investigators; and (6) given that the evidence against the defendant was not overwhelming, this impeachment evidence was particularly crucial. State v. Lamb, 287 Ga. App. 389, 651 S.E.2d 504 (2007), overruled on other grounds, O'Neal v. State, 285 Ga. 361, 677 S.E.2d 90 (2009).

Jury Instructions

Erroneous charge on punitive consequences. — Trial court erred in instructing the jury of the misdemeanor rating of sexual battery as this introduced the impermissible factor of the potential severity of punishment into the deliberations. Green v. State, 206 Ga. App. 539, 426 S.E.2d 65 (1992).

Charge as to state's burden of proof. — Trial court correctly charged the jury as to the rape count of the indictment and its lesser included offenses of statutory rape and sexual battery and properly instructed the jury as to the state's burden to prove the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, substantially in accordance with the pattern charge because there was no objectionable summary of the reasonable doubt standard as an honest belief, and while the best practice would not have been to employ the word "believe" in the court's charge, the trial court did not improperly summarize the burden of proof or otherwise confuse the jury in doing so; the trial court made no attempt to summarize the court's reasonable doubt charge as an honestly held belief or to otherwise explain it, and twice after giving the charge, the trial court made reference to the court's reasonable doubt charge as initially given by instructing the jury that the jury could convict the defendant of rape and child molestation if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty thereof. Alexander v. State, 308 Ga. App. 245, 707 S.E.2d 156 (2011).

Instruction as to consent by person under 16. — In a sexual battery case involving a 13-year-old victim, the trial court properly instructed the jury that a person under the age of 16 years lacked the legal capacity to consent to sexual conduct. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008).

In a sexual battery case involving a 13-year-old victim, the defendant's sufficiency of the evidence argument failed as the argument was premised on the erroneous argument that the victim had the legal capacity to consent to the touching. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008).

State was not required to prove a lack of consent by a 15-year-old victim to prove sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1(b) because a person under 16 could not legally consent to a sexual act. Haynes v. State, 302 Ga. App. 296, 690 S.E.2d 925 (2010).

Sentence

Sentence was proper. — Defendant's sentence to 10 years for false imprisonment, 12 months for sexual battery, and 12 months for simple battery, to run concurrently, provided that upon service of four years in custody, defendant could serve the remaining six years on probation, was not void as it fell within the allowable sentencing ranges of no less than one nor more than 10 years for false imprisonment, and up to 12 months each for sexual battery and simple battery. Rehberger v. State, 267 Ga. App. 778, 600 S.E.2d 635 (2004).

Defendant was properly sentenced for felony sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(d) because any error from a lack of a specific factual finding as to the victim's age was harmless since the mother testified without challenge as to the victim's age and the jury viewed a videotaped interview of the five year old victim, which showed that the victim was younger than 16 years old. Hernandez v. State, 300 Ga. App. 792, 686 S.E.2d 373 (2009).

Probation condition overbroad and vague. — Upon convicting the defendant of sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1, special probation conditions 4, 5, and 6 were erroneously imposed as those conditions lacked reasonable specificity and encompassed groups and locations not rationally related to the sentencing objectives and failed to give the defendant notice of either the conduct or the groups the defendant must avoid. Grovenstein v. State, 282 Ga. App. 109, 637 S.E.2d 821 (2006).

Sentence improper when wrong version of section cited. — Defendant's sentence to five years imprisonment pursuant to the amended version of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1, with regard to defendant's conviction for sexual battery against a child under the age of 16 years, without specific jury finding that conduct for which defendant was convicted occurred after the amendment, was erroneous and required defendant's sentence to be vacated and remanded to the trial court for resentencing; the trial court should have required the special verdict form that addressed both defendant's pre-amendment and post-amendment conduct to avoid a potential ex post facto violation. Forde v. State, 289 Ga. App. 805, 658 S.E.2d 410 (2008).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Fingerprinting required for violation of Code section. — Violation of the offense defined by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1 is designated as an offense for which those charged with a violation are to be fingerprinted. 1990 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 90-22.

16-6-22.2. Aggravated sexual battery.

(a) For the purposes of this Code section, the term "foreign object" means any article or instrument other than the sexual organ of a person.

(b) A person commits the offense of aggravated sexual battery when he or she intentionally penetrates with a foreign object the sexual organ or anus of another person without the consent of that person.

(c) A person convicted of the offense of aggravated sexual battery shall be punished by imprisonment for life or by a split sentence that is a term of imprisonment for not less than 25 years and not exceeding life imprisonment, followed by probation for life, and shall be subject to the sentencing and punishment provisions of Code Sections 17-10-6.1 and 17-10-7. (Code 1981, § 16-6-22.2, enacted by Ga. L. 1990, p. 1003, § 2; Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 8; Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 16/HB 1059.)

Cross references. — Actions for childhood sexual abuse, § 9-3-33.1. Visitation with minors by convicted sexual offenders while imprisoned, § 42-5-56.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994'."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 2, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly declares and finds:

"(1) That persons who are convicted of certain serious violent felonies shall serve minimum terms of imprisonment which shall not be suspended, probated, stayed, deferred, or otherwise withheld by the sentencing judge; and

"(2) That sentences ordered by courts in cases of certain serious violent felonies shall be served in their entirety and shall not be reduced by parole or by any earned time, early release, work release, or other such sentence-reducing measures administered by the Department of Corrections."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 16, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall apply only to those offenses committed on or after the effective date of this Act; provided, however, that any conviction occurring prior to, on, or after the effective date of this Act shall be deemed a 'conviction' for the purposes of this Act and shall be counted in determining the appropriate sentence to be imposed for any offense committed on or after the effective date of this Act."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 17, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "In the event any section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase of this Act shall be declared or adjudged invalid or unconstitutional, such adjudication shall in no manner affect the other sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, or phrases of this Act, which shall remain of full force and effect as if the section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase so declared or adjudged invalid or unconstitutional were not originally a part hereof. The General Assembly declares that it would have passed the remaining parts of this Act if it had known that such part or parts hereof would be declared or adjudged invalid or unconstitutional."

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959, § 18, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall become effective on January 1, 1995, upon ratification by the voters of this state at the 1994 November general election of that proposed amendment to Article IV, Section II, Paragraph II of the Constitution authorizing the General Assembly to provide for mandatory minimum sentences and sentences of life without possibility of parole in certain cases and providing restrictions on the authority of the State Board of Pardons and Paroles to grant paroles...." That amendment was ratified by the voters on November 8, 1994, so the amendment to this Code section by this Act became effective on January 1, 1995.

Ga. L. 1998, p. 180, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly declares and finds:

"(1) That the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' approved April 20, 1994 (Ga. L. 1994, p. 1959), provided that persons convicted of one of seven serious violent felonies shall serve minimum mandatory terms of imprisonment which shall not otherwise be suspended, stayed, probated, deferred, or withheld by the sentencing court;

"(2) That in State v. Allmond, 225 Ga. App. 509 (1997), the Georgia Court of Appeals held, notwithstanding the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994,' that the provisions of the First Offender Act would still be available to the sentencing court, which would mean that a person who committed a serious violent felony could be sentenced to less than the minimum mandatory ten-year sentence; and

"(3) That, contrary to the decision in State v. Allmond, it is the expressed intent of the General Assembly that persons who commit a serious violent felony specified in the 'Sentence Reform Act of 1994' shall be sentenced to a mandatory term of imprisonment of not less than ten years and shall not be eligible for first offender treatment."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

The General Assembly further finds that the state has a compelling interest in protecting the public from sexual offenders and in protecting children from predatory sexual activity, and there is sufficient justification for requiring sexual offenders to register and for requiring community and public notification of the presence of sexual offenders. The General Assembly declares that in order to protect the public, it is necessary that the sexual offenders be registered and that members of the community and the public be notified of a sexual offender's presence. The designation of a person as a sexual offender is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from the conviction of certain crimes. Likewise, the designation of a person as a sexual predator is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from findings by the Sexual Offender Registration Review Board and a court if requested by a sexual offender."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

General Consideration

Proof of lack of consent not required for child under 16. — In a prosecution for sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), the state was not required to prove the victim's lack of consent to the incidents because the victim was 12 years old at the time, and the age of consent was 16. The defendant's knowledge of the victim's age was not a legal element of child molestation. Disabato v. State, 303 Ga. App. 68, 692 S.E.2d 701 (2010).

Finger as "foreign object." — Legislature clearly intended to include penetration by a finger in the conduct proscribed by O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2; to limit the definition of "foreign object" to inanimate articles or instruments, and exclude therefrom a human appendage such as a finger, would apply the statute illogically. Burke v. State, 208 Ga. App. 446, 430 S.E.2d 816 (1993).

Term "foreign object" includes not only inanimate instruments, but also a person's body parts, such as a finger. Hardeman v. State, 247 Ga. App. 503, 544 S.E.2d 481 (2001).

Element of "penetration." — Penetration, however slight, will suffice to satisfy the "penetration" element of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2. Hendrix v. State, 230 Ga. App. 604, 497 S.E.2d 236 (1998).

Digital penetration sufficient. — Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), where the victim's testimony, the victim's mother's testimony, and the doctor's testimony all established that defendant digitally penetrated the victim, causing physical injury. Gearin v. State, 255 Ga. App. 329, 565 S.E.2d 540 (2002).

Defendant's two convictions for aggravated sexual battery were upheld, as evidence supplied by the victim's testimony, that defendant penetrated the victim's genitals and the victim's anus with a foreign object, specifically, the defendant's finger, was sufficient to support the convictions. Cheek v. State, 265 Ga. App. 15, 593 S.E.2d 55 (2003).

An admission by the defendant, the testimony of a child, and the testimony of a witness as to the child's outcry established that the defendant's finger penetrated the child's sexual organ. As the defendant's finger was a "foreign object" for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2, the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated sexual battery. Inman v. State, 295 Ga. App. 461, 671 S.E.2d 921 (2009).

Victim's testimony that defendant penetrated her sexual organ with his finger was alone sufficient to prove defendant guilty of child molestation (O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)) and aggravated child molestation (O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b)), pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. The testimony of the victim's cousin, two school friends, and the interviewing detective was admissible as substantive evidence under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Vaughn v. State, 301 Ga. App. 391, 687 S.E.2d 651 (2009).

Insufficient evidence of venue. — Absent sufficient proof establishing venue, the defendant's aggravated sexual battery and aggravated sodomy convictions were reversed; but, given that sufficient evidence otherwise existed to support the former charge, retrial on the charge would not violate the defendant's double jeopardy rights. Melton v. State, 282 Ga. App. 685, 639 S.E.2d 411 (2006).

Constitutional challenge held untimely. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal as to the aggravated sexual battery charge, which specifically alleged that O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2 (b) violated the Equal Protection Clause of both the Georgia and U.S. Constitutions as the defendant did not move for the same until filing a second motion for a new trial, which was considered untimely. Phillips v. State, 284 Ga. App. 224, 644 S.E.2d 153 (2007).

Application

Admissibility of evidence of similar offenses. — In a prosecution for aggravated sexual battery and aggravated child molestation involving a 12-year-old child, evidence that the defendant had sexual intercourse with a 15-year-old child shortly before committing the charged crimes was properly admitted as the evidence was relevant to show bent of mind, course of conduct, and to corroborate the victim's testimony; the prejudicial effect of the evidence did not outweigh the probative value. Martin v. State, 294 Ga. App. 117, 668 S.E.2d 549 (2008).

No evidence that defendant was conducting medical treatment or procedure. — Trial court did not err in convicting defendant of aggravated sexual battery because the evidence authorized a jury to find that a defendant digitally penetrated the victim's vagina without her consent; the evidence did not demand a finding that defendant touched the victim's genitals as part of a medical treatment or procedure but authorized the jury to find that the defendant penetrated the victim's vagina for some other reason because defendant was not a licensed physician at the time of the act of aggravated sexual battery. Lee v. State, 300 Ga. App. 214, 684 S.E.2d 348 (2009).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of aggravated sexual battery. Ouzts v. State, 216 Ga. App. 194, 453 S.E.2d 801 (1995); Hardeman v. State, 247 Ga. App. 503, 544 S.E.2d 481 (2001).

Evidence was sufficient to support an aggravated sexual battery conviction when the defendant's eight year old step-child testified that defendant "put his private in my private," that the defendant moved the defendant's body while inside the victim, that the defendant hurt the victim's "private," when the victim circled the appropriate places on anatomically correct drawings which were admitted into evidence, testified that the defendant put the defendant's "private" in the victim's mouth on more than one occasion, when eventually the victim told the victim's parent, the victim's babysitter, and the victim's doctor about these events, and when a physical examination revealed redness and swelling around the victim's genitals, which, the physician testified, could have been caused by trauma. Torres v. State, 262 Ga. App. 309, 585 S.E.2d 228 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to uphold the defendant's conviction because, while there was evidence that the defendant did "pull" on the victim's private body part and cause the victim injury, those actions were not material to the crime; the state was not required to prove an unnecessary fact alleged in an indictment. Vanwinkle

v. State, 263 Ga. App. 19, 587 S.E.2d 142 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of aggravated sexual battery even when the evidence consisted primarily of the victim's testimony and the statements of the victim's sister; the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact, and the jury clearly resolved the conflicts against the defendant. McGhee v. State, 263 Ga. App. 762, 589 S.E.2d 333 (2003).

Trial court correctly allowed three adults to testify about out-of-court statements which a four-year-old child made to them even though the child was unresponsive when the child was asked questions in court, and the appellate court found that the child's statements alleging that defendant placed the defendant's finger inside the victim's genitals, when considered with evidence that the child had gonorrhea, and transactional evidence that defendant molested the defendant's own child, was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for child molestation and aggravated sexual battery. Bell v. State, 263 Ga. App. 894, 589 S.E.2d 653 (2003).

Evidence of the victim alone was sufficient to authorize a guilty verdict in a child molestation case; there was no requirement that the victim's testimony be corroborated, and defendant's convictions of child molestation, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sexual battery, and cruelty to children were affirmed. McKinney v. State, 269 Ga. App. 12, 602 S.E.2d 904 (2004).

Evidence in an initial trial that defendant fondled the victim's breasts and placed the defendant's finger inside the victim's genitals, both without the victim's consent, was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for sexual battery pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.1, and aggravated sexual battery pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b); thus, double jeopardy did not prohibit a retrial granted on the ground that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel. Weldon v. State, 270 Ga. App. 574, 607 S.E.2d 175 (2004).

Motion for a judgment of acquittal on charges of aggravated sexual battery, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation was properly denied as the defendant's testimony that the defendant blacked out during the incident did not demand a finding that the defendant lacked the requisite criminal intent; the victim testified that the defendant began rubbing the victim's legs, touched the victim's "private part" through the victim's clothing, pulled down the defendant's pants as well as the victim's pants, picked the victim up, and began rubbing the victim up and down against the defendant's "private part." Ward v. State, 274 Ga. App. 511, 618 S.E.2d 154 (2005).

As the victim testified that defendant entered the victim's bedroom and, without the victim's consent, inserted the defendant's finger and genitals into the victim's genitals, this testimony established forcible penetration; moreover, the examining sexual assault specialist concluded that the victim's wounds were consistent with the victim's story of sexual assault and indicated forced penetration by the finger and the genitals; the evidence was sufficient for the jury to find the defendant guilty of rape and aggravated sexual battery, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-1(a)(1) and 16-6-22.2(b). Duran v. State, 274 Ga. App. 876, 619 S.E.2d 388 (2005).

Evidence presented at defendant's trial was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual battery, as the evidence showed that defendant pulled down the victim's underwear and stuck defendant's fingers in the victim's genitals; accordingly, the evidence showed that defendant penetrated the victim with a foreign object. Aaron v. State, 275 Ga. App. 269, 620 S.E.2d 499 (2005).

Evidence supported the defendant's conviction for aggravated child molestation and aggravated sexual battery because: (1) the 11-year-old victim testified that the defendant put the defendant's hand on the victim's private part, put the defendant's finger in the victim's private part, put the defendant's mouth on the victim's private part, and put the victim's mouth on the defendant's private part, and that when the victim put the victim's mouth on the defendant's private part, "he came, whatever you call it," (2) when the prosecutor asked the victim whether by that the victim meant that "stuff came out of his private part," the victim responded yes, and (3) in a videotaped pretrial interview, the victim explained that the victim was using the term "private part" to mean penis or vagina. Maddox v. State, 275 Ga. App. 869, 622 S.E.2d 80 (2005).

Aggravated sexual battery conviction was upheld on appeal as was the trial court's order denying defendant a directed verdict of acquittal because: (1) the victim's testimony sufficiently demonstrated that defendant put defendant's hand inside the victim's genitals; (2) the victim's testimony authorized the jury to conclude that the defendant penetrated the victim's sexual organ with a foreign object; (3) similar transaction evidence was properly admitted to prove the defendant's bent of mind and motive; (4) each similar transaction witness positively identified the defendant as the person who committed the independent act, and the proof of one of the incidents tended to prove the offense at trial, which also involved digital penetration in a hospital setting; and (5) three other similar transaction incidents, while not involving an actual touching, were properly admitted as evidence that defendant offered a female money or clothing in exchange for a sexual favor of some sort; finally, because the defendant failed to object that testimony from these witnesses was cumulative, the defendant waived this claim of error for purposes of appeal. Enurah v. State, 279 Ga. App. 883, 633 S.E.2d 52 (2006).

Convictions for kidnapping, aggravated sexual battery, sexual battery, and attempted rape were all upheld on appeal as a photo lineup was not impermissibly suggestive, similar transaction evidence was properly admitted, the defendant had notice of the same, and the jury was authorized to find that the victim was credible and to accept the victim's testimony; hence, a rational trier of fact could have found from the evidence presented that the defendant committed the charged crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. Watley v. State, 281 Ga. App. 244, 635 S.E.2d 857 (2006).

Despite the defendant's correct assertion that the trial court erred in charging the jury that one of the factors to be considered in assessing the reliability of identification testimony was the level of certainty shown by the witness about her identification, because there was evidence other than the victim's identification of the defendant which connected the defendant to the offenses of burglary, aggravated sodomy, and aggravated sexual battery, the error was harmless and the convictions for those offenses were upheld. Bharadia v. State, 282 Ga. App. 556, 639 S.E.2d 545 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0522, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2007).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and aggravated sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2; the testimony of the victim and the defendant conflicted, but the testimony of the victim, alone was sufficient to authorize the jury to find the defendant guilty. Goldstein v. State, 283 Ga. App. 1, 640 S.E.2d 599 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 338 (April 24, 2007).

Because sufficient evidence was supplied via the testimony from the child victim and the witnesses who corroborated that testimony to support the defendant's aggravated sexual battery and child molestation convictions, despite any alleged inconsistencies, the convictions were upheld as was the denial of the defendant's motions for an acquittal and a new trial. Lilly v. State, 285 Ga. App. 427, 646 S.E.2d 512 (2007).

Because the state presented sufficient evidence via the victim's testimony describing how the defendant placed a finger in the victim's vagina without the victim's consent, and the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting a similar transaction in which the defendant also victimized a female jogger, the defendant's aggravated sexual battery conviction was upheld on appeal. Coleman v. State, 284 Ga. App. 811, 644 S.E.2d 910 (2007).

Because sufficient direct evidence was presented via the victim's testimony that the defendant improperly touched and digitally penetrated the victim's vagina, convictions upon charges of aggravated sodomy, aggravated child molestation, and other crimes arising from that contact were upheld on appeal; further, any error related to the admission of the victim's videotaped statement was harmless as such statement would have been admissible as res gestae or to prove the defendant's lustful disposition. Morrow v. State, 284 Ga. App. 297, 643 S.E.2d 808 (2007).

Despite the defendant's claim that the victim's testimony was too uncertain to support a conviction for aggravated sexual battery, the conviction was upheld on appeal as: (1) it was not for the appeals court to determine or question how the jury resolved any apparent conflicts or uncertainties in the evidence; (2) in general, the testimony of the victim was sufficient to establish a fact; and (3) corroboration was not required, and if corroboration were, the bite mark on the defendant's shoulder, which was testified to by the victim, provided sufficient corroboration. Boyt v. State, 286 Ga. App. 460, 649 S.E.2d 589 (2007).

Victim's testimony and the fact that she had bruises consistent with the rape and battery she described were sufficient to support defendant's conviction for violating O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-1(a)(1) and 16-6-22.2(b); that no semen was found on the victim did not undercut the conviction, and any discrepancies between the victim's testimony and the testimony of two occupants of defendant's house, who stated that the victim was bruised before the assault, were properly resolved by the jury as the trier of fact. Duran v. Walker, No. 06-15758, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 7489 (11th Cir. Mar. 29, 2007) (Unpublished).

Evidence was sufficient to support a defendant's convictions of child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sexual battery after the five-year-old victim stated that the defendant had made her perform an oral act on his penis, that he had put his mouth on her vagina, and that he had stuck his finger in her vagina and anus; furthermore, the victim's seven-year-old sibling reported that the defendant had been lying on a bed in the same room as the victim, that the defendant had chased the sibling into the sibling's room and told the sibling to stay in bed until that night, and that the sibling saw "something bad" happen to the victim. Herring v. State, 288 Ga. App. 169, 653 S.E.2d 494 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 205 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence supported the defendant's convictions of rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(2), aggravated sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2, and two counts of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) with regard to his daughter, who was seven at the time. The victim testified that the defendant touched her vagina with his hand and insisted that she touch his penis with her hand; a detective testified that the victim told him that the defendant touched her on her vagina with his hands, fingers, and penis and that he asked her to touch his penis; another detective, who conducted a videotaped interview with the victim, testified that the victim told her that she had sex with the defendant on multiple occasions; in the interview, the victim stated that the defendant pulled her pants down and put his penis inside her vagina and that he put his hand inside her vagina; and the victim's mother and grandmother testified to similar statements by the victim. Osborne v. State, 291 Ga. App. 711, 662 S.E.2d 792 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 783 (Ga. 2008).

Defendant's own admission that the defendant digitally penetrated a 15-year-old victim's vagina while masturbating was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), and child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Driggers v. State, 291 Ga. App. 841, 662 S.E.2d 872 (2008).

Testimony by a victim that the defendant and an accomplice, armed with handguns, forcibly entered the victim's apartment, raped and sodomized the victim, struck the victim with a gun, stole jewelry, bound the victim, and escaped in a car owned by the victim's prospective spouse, and evidence that 24 fingerprints lifted from the apartment and car matched the defendant's fingerprints was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated sexual battery. Crawford v. State, 292 Ga. App. 463, 664 S.E.2d 820 (2008).

Conviction of the defendant for aggravated sexual battery was supported by sufficient evidence since the victim of the defendant's inappropriate sexual conduct informed her mother and police about the defendant's conduct, and the defendant's answers to polygraph questions appeared deceptive. Colton v. State, 297 Ga. App. 795, 678 S.E.2d 521 (2009).

As a 14-year-old's testimony about the defendant's digitally penetrating the victim's genitals was sufficient, standing alone, to support the defendant's conviction of aggravated sexual battery, even assuming that testimony about the content of text messages between the defendant and the victim was improperly admitted hearsay, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial. Hollie v. State, 298 Ga. App. 1, 679 S.E.2d 47 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 389, 696 S.E.2d 642 (2010).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's convictions of armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), rape, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1), aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), and aggravated sodomy, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-2(a)(2) involving four different victims on three separate dates; both the husband and the wife, the victims in the first criminal incident, identified the defendant in court as the perpetrator of the crimes. Two separate DNA analyses testified to by two forensic biologists showed that the defendant's sperm was present in the vaginas of the other two female victims. Robins v. State, 298 Ga. App. 70, 679 S.E.2d 92 (2009).

Trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for directed verdict was proper because there was some evidence establishing the defendant's commission of aggravated sexual battery; the testimony of a nurse practitioner that the victim had disclosed in her medical examination that the defendant had "put his fingers in her private part" during one of the sexual encounters established the offense, and although the victim had recanted her allegations during the initial investigations and testified at trial that she could not recall whether the defendant had penetrated her with his finger, such inconsistencies and conflicting evidence only created a question of credibility for the jury's resolution. Pearce v. State, 300 Ga. App. 777, 686 S.E.2d 392 (2009).

Circumstantial evidence that a defendant chastised the defendant's two-year-old child for soiling a diaper by poking the child's anus with a stick, resulting in perineal lacerations, was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b). Viers v. State, 303 Ga. App. 387, 693 S.E.2d 526 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of child molestation and aggravated child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 and of aggravated sexual battery under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b) because the state provided testimony corroborating the victim's statements that when the defendant was supposed to babysit the victim after school, defendant regularly abused the victim at the victim's home, in the defendant's car, in a park, in a vacant house, and two motels by touching the victim, making the victim perform oral sex on the defendant, by sodomizing the victim, by making the victim wear thong underwear, and by taking cellular telephone photographs of the victim naked. Woods v. State, 304 Ga. App. 403, 696 S.E.2d 411 (2010).

Victim, who was age eighteen at the time of trial, testified that between the ages of seven and fourteen, the defendant molested her, putting his hand and his penis into her vagina and touching her all over her body. This evidence supported the defendant's convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sexual battery. Wilson v. State, 304 Ga. App. 623, 697 S.E.2d 275 (2010).

Evidence that, after attempting to talk a 13-year-old babysitter into having sex with the defendant, the defendant threw her on the bed, straddled her, put the defendant's hand inside her underwear and inserted two fingers into her vagina was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-2-22.1. A prior similar incident that occurred when the defendant was 12 years old was properly admitted to show the defendant's course of conduct and bent of mind. Lee v. State, 306 Ga. App. 144, 701 S.E.2d 582 (2010).

Force is not an element. — Defendant's argument that there was insufficient evidence of force to convict defendant of aggravated sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b) failed; force was not an element of aggravated sexual battery, and the daughter's testimony that defendant had placed a vibrator in the daughter's vagina and that it hurt badly was sufficient to sustain the conviction. Zepp v. State, 276 Ga. App. 466, 623 S.E.2d 569 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Insufficient evidence for conviction. — There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for rape, incest, statutory rape, and child molestation against one of the defendant's children and a stepchild based on the defendant's repeated engagement in sexual intercourse with the children at various times while one was 12 to 16 years old and the other was 16 to 19 years old, and evidence of a letter threatening suicide on the defendant's part and apologizing for the actions against the children was also introduced against the defendant. However, the conviction on the charge of aggravated sexual battery against the stepchild was in error and required reversal since the state failed to introduce direct or circumstantial evidence sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant violated O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2 by penetrating that child's sexual organ with a replica penis. Connelly v. State, 295 Ga. App. 765, 673 S.E.2d 274 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0892, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 260 (Ga. 2009).

Resentencing did not violate double jeopardy. — Because defendant's original sentence upon conviction for aggravated sexual battery was not in compliance with the minimum sentence requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1, resentencing did not violate double jeopardy. Bryant v. State, 229 Ga. App. 534, 494 S.E.2d 353 (1998).

Sexual battery and kidnapping. — Jury's verdict finding the defendant not guilty of aggravated sexual battery was not necessarily logically inconsistent with the verdict finding the defendant guilty of kidnapping with bodily injury, where the evidence was that the victim suffered bodily injury during a kidnapping when one of the persons involved sexually assaulted the victim, but the victim could not identify which of the three persons it was. Kimble v. State, 236 Ga. App. 391, 512 S.E.2d 306 (1999).

Victim's testimony that the victim had sexual intercourse with defendant, that the defendant placed the defendant's finger in the victim's genitals, placed the defendant's hand on the victim's genitals, placed the defendant's mouth on the victim's breast, and placed the defendant's mouth on the victim's mouth, established the offenses of aggravated sexual battery pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2, incest pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22, and child molestation. Falak v. State, 261 Ga. App. 404, 583 S.E.2d 146 (2003).

Child molestation and aggravated sexual battery counts did not merge. — Trial court properly refused to merge, for sentencing purposes, defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual battery and child molestation since the charged offense of aggravated sexual battery required proof of penetration, whereas the charged offense of child molestation did not. As a result, the separate acts were neither factually nor legally contained in the other respective count and, therefore, the offenses did not merge. Daniel v. State, 292 Ga. App. 560, 665 S.E.2d 696 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 891 (Ga. 2008).

Questions requiring prejudgment of case. — Trial court abused its discretion by prohibiting defense counsel asking prospective jurors whether they had strong feelings about child molestation, and if those feelings would impair their judgment or make it difficult for them to judge the case; but, this error was harmless given the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt regarding the numerous acts of sodomy that defendant engaged in with the defendant's child, the scientific evidence which linked his DNA to the semen found in the victim's mouth, and defendant's attempt to allude the author-ties until the defendant was apprehended in Tennessee. Meeks v. State, 269 Ga. App. 836, 605 S.E.2d 428 (2004).

No reversible error in admitting character evidence via defendant's drug use. — Defendant's convictions for various sexual offenses against a child were upheld on appeal because no reversible error occurred by the trial court allowing evidence of defendant's character as relevant via a police detective testifying that when the detective arrested the defendant, the detective pulled from the defendant's pocket a suspected methamphetamine glass pipe containing methamphetamine residue; the reviewing court found that the challenged evidence was cumulative since the victim, the victim's mother, and another witness all testified to the defendant's drug usage. Quarles v. State, 285 Ga. App. 758, 647 S.E.2d 415 (2007).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim did not warrant new trial. — On appeal from convictions on two counts of child molestation and one count of aggravated sexual battery, the trial court properly found that the defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on allegations of the ineffective assistance of defense counsel because: (1) the manner in which counsel handled alleged exculpatory evidence pertaining to a similar transaction witness and the cross-examination of that witness was part of counsel's reasonable trial strategy; (2) the defendant's reciprocal discovery or due process rights were not violated; and (3) the existence of the information sought was known to the defendant, which could have been obtained with due diligence. Ellis v. State, 289 Ga. App. 452, 657 S.E.2d 562 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual battery, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a new trial, which was based on the defendant's allegations that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel, because the defendant failed to establish any deficient performance on the part of trial counsel and, even if any action was arguably deficient, the defendant failed to establish any prejudice to the defense. Specifically, the state's opening statement that the victims were coming to court seeking justice, safety, and protection were not improper comments on the defendant's punishment or future dangerousness; thus, it was not ineffectiveness for trial counsel to have failed to object to the comments, and with regard to objecting to certain testimony from a father of one of the victims, the court found that trial counsel did not err by failing to renew a mistrial motion and relying upon the trial court giving a curative instruction to disregard the improper comments instead. Murray v. State, 297 Ga. App. 571, 677 S.E.2d 745 (2009).

Counsel not ineffective for failure to call wife as witness. — On appeal from convictions on one count of aggravated sexual battery and two counts of sexual assault, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial as the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from counsel's failure to call the defendant's wife to testify for the defense, and the appeals court refused to speculate that the testimony would have led to an acquittal. Lee v. State, 286 Ga. App. 368, 650 S.E.2d 320 (2007).

Directed verdict of acquittal unwarranted as: (1) the credibility of the child victim and any conflicts in the trial testimony were matters solely within the province of the jury to decide; (2) physical findings were not required to corroborate the charges of child molestation, aggravated sexual battery, and aggravated child molestation; and (3) the victim's testimony alone was sufficient to authorize the jury to find the defendant guilty of the crimes charged under the standard of Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307 (1979). Hutchinson v. State, 287 Ga. App. 415, 651 S.E.2d 523 (2007).

Severance of offenses. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to sever the offenses of child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1), aggravated sexual battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), tattooing the body of a minor, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-71(a), and the defendant's motion for new trial on that basis because all of the sex offenses were similar and showed the defendant's common motive, plan, scheme, or bent of mind to satisfy the defendant's sexual desires, and the circumstances surrounding the tattooing offenses would have been admissible at the trial of the sex offenses to show the defendant's lustful disposition and bent of mind; the case was not so complex as to impair the jury's ability to distinguish the evidence and apply the law intelligently as to each offense. Boatright v. State, 308 Ga. App. 266, 707 S.E.2d 158 (2011).

Jury Instructions

Jury charge proper. — While the trial court did not specify that a hand constituted a foreign object, the jury charge as a whole and as adjusted to the evidence would not have misled a jury of ordinary understanding and thus could not have caused defendant to be convicted of aggravated sexual battery in a manner not alleged by the indictment. Vanwinkle v. State, 263 Ga. App. 19, 587 S.E.2d 142 (2003).

When the trial court's jury instructions were viewed as a whole and as adjusted to the evidence in the trial, there was no error in the instructions on a charge of aggravated sexual battery, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b), as the instructions would not have misled a jury of ordinary intelligence and could not have caused the defendant to have been convicted of the crime in a manner not alleged in the indictment; the trial court had omitted the words "or anus" from the statutory definition of the offense. Lester v. State, 278 Ga. App. 247, 628 S.E.2d 674 (2006).

Good character charge erroneous. — In a prosecution for aggravated sexual battery, a good character charge was erroneous as: 1) the charge failed to inform the jury that the defendant's good character was a substantive fact, and that evidence of good character had to be considered in connection with all other evidence; and 2) the charge failed to instruct the jury that good character in and of itself could be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to guilt. Hobbs v. State, 299 Ga. App. 521, 682 S.E.2d 697 (2009).

Sentence

Sentence excessive. — Sentences of 25 years each imposed by the trial court on the crimes of incest under former O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22(b) and aggravated sexual battery under former O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(c) were void; the maximum sentence for each crime was 20 years at the time the crimes were committed. Howard v. State, 281 Ga. App. 797, 637 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Sentence not excessive. — Claim by the defendant that a sentence pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-22.2(b) and 17-10-6.1(b)(2) constituted cruel and unusual punishment because the sentence was grossly out of proportion to the severity of the crime, and that the sentence was overly severe under the circumstances was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Georgia Supreme Court when the claim challenged the constitutionality of the statutes themselves as the sentence was legally authorized and within statutory limits; thus, the sentence was upheld. Colton v. State, 297 Ga. App. 795, 678 S.E.2d 521 (2009).

16-6-23. Publication of name or identity of female raped or assaulted with intent to commit rape.

(a) It shall be unlawful for any news media or any other person to print and publish, broadcast, televise, or disseminate through any other medium of public dissemination or cause to be printed and published, broadcast, televised, or disseminated in any newspaper, magazine, periodical, or other publication published in this state or through any radio or television broadcast originating in the state the name or identity of any female who may have been raped or upon whom an assault with intent to commit the offense of rape may have been made.

(b) This Code section does not apply to truthful information disclosed in public court documents open to public inspection.

(c) Any person or corporation violating this Code section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. (Ga. L. 1911, p. 179, §§ 1, 2; Code 1933, § 26-2105; Code 1933, § 26-9901, enacted by Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Limited application. — O.C.G.A. § 16-6-23 protects only the name and identity of a victim of rape or sexual assault with intent to rape and it does so only up to the point where the name or identity appears in an open court record. Doe v. Board of Regents, 215 Ga. App. 684, 452 S.E.2d 776 (1994).

Publication of an article containing a rape victim's name, age, and street address, and stating, not that she was raped, but that she was "assaulted and robbed," was not a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-23. State v. Brannan, 267 Ga. 315, 477 S.E.2d 575 (1996).

Right to privacy outweighed by legitimate public interest. — Victim of a sexual assault could not recover damages a from a newspaper for invasion of privacy since, when the victim shot and killed the perpetrator of the assault, the victim became the object of legitimate public interest and the newspaper had the right under the United States and Georgia Constitutions to accurately report facts regarding the incident, including the victim's name. Macon Tel. Publishing Co. v. Tatum, 263 Ga. 677, 436 S.E.2d 655 (1993).

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-23 contravened the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution. Dye v. Wallace, 274 Ga. 257, 553 S.E.2d 561 (2001).

Construction of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-23 is not to be rendered meaningless but must be construed so as to achieve the humane and crime-reporting purposes which prompted its passage. Doe v. Board of Regents, 215 Ga. App. 684, 452 S.E.2d 776 (1994).

Legislative intent. — By passing the Rape Shield Statute, the legislature has stated as a matter of public policy that, where the crime involved is rape, sexual assault, or attempted sexual assault, the legitimate public interest in the identity of the victim does not outweigh the victim's privacy interest. Macon Tel. Publishing Co. v. Tatum, 208 Ga. App. 111, 430 S.E.2d 18 (1993).

State has a legitimate interest in protecting the privacy of a sexual assault victim. Doe v. Board of Regents, 215 Ga. App. 684, 452 S.E.2d 776 (1994).

Establishment of truth of rape charge not required. — Since a victim's claim that she was raped was a part of university police reports concerning the incident, the fact that she had initially misrepresented the circumstances of the attack did not alter the assertion of rape which must be accepted as true for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-23. It was not required that the matter be established as true in order for the identity of the victim to be protected and she was entitled to an injunction against disclosure of her name and identity. Doe v. Board of Regents, 215 Ga. App. 684, 452 S.E.2d 776 (1994).

Truthful information in public court documents excepted. — States may not impose sanctions on publication of truthful information contained in official court records open to public inspection. Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn, 420 U.S. 469, 95 S. Ct. 1029, 43 L. Ed. 2d 328 (1975), for comment, see 24 Emory L.J. 1205 (1975).

Applicability of Open Records Act. — Pursuant to the Open Records Act, a campus newspaper was entitled to university police reports concerning an incident of alleged rape, but, in accordance with the rape victim confidentiality statute, with the victim's name and identifying information redacted. Doe v. Board of Regents, 215 Ga. App. 684, 452 S.E.2d 776 (1994).

Imposition of civil liability based on a newspaper's publication of a rape victim's name, in violation of a criminal Rape Shield Statute, was permissible under the holding of Florida Star v. B.J.F., 491 U.S. 524, 109 S. Ct. 2603, 105 L.Ed.2d 443 (1989). Macon Tel. Publishing Co. v. Tatum, 208 Ga. App. 111, 430 S.E.2d 18 (1993).

Nothing contained in this chapter shall prevent any county or municipality from adopting ordinances which proscribe loitering or related activities in public for the purpose of procuring others to engage in any sexual acts for hire. (Code 1933, § 26-2023, enacted by Ga. L. 1979, p. 131, § 1.)

16-6-25. Harboring, concealing, or withholding information concerning a sexual offender; penalties.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term "law enforcement unit" means any agency, organ, or department of this state, or a subdivision or municipality thereof, whose primary functions include the enforcement of criminal or traffic laws; the preservation of public order; the protection of life and property; or the prevention, detection, or investigation of crime. Such term shall also include the Department of Corrections and the State Board of Pardons and Paroles.

(b) Any person who knows or reasonably believes that a sexual offender, as defined in Code Section 42-1-12, is not complying, or has not complied, with the requirements of Code Section 42-1-12 and who, with the intent to assist such sexual offender in eluding a law enforcement unit that is seeking such sexual offender to question him or her about, or to arrest him or her for, his or her noncompliance with the requirements of Code Section 42-1-12:

- (1) Harbors, attempts to harbor, or assists another person in harboring or attempting to harbor such sexual offender;
- (2) Conceals, attempts to conceal, or assists another person in concealing or attempting to conceal such sexual offender; or
- (3) Provides information to the law enforcement unit regarding such sexual offender which the person knows to be false information commits a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than 20 years. (Code 1981, § 16-6-25, enacted by Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 17/HB 1059; Ga. L. 2007, p. 47, § 16/SB 103.)

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c), not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Indictment insufficient. — Because the indictment filed against both the defendants failed to allege that the defendants knew or reasonably believed that the person listed therein was an unregistered sexual offender, the trial court erred in denying the defendants' demurrer to the indictment as both defendants could admit to every allegation contained therein and still be innocent of the offense charged. Harris v. State, 290 Ga. App. 500, 659 S.E.2d 870 (2008).
